Dublin.—The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday, Mr. Loughnan in the chair.—Mr. O'CONNELL referred to the news from Armagh respecting the celebration of the 12th July. He was compelled to say, and he did so with the deepest sorrow, that the Catholics were in the wrong (as he was informed), and had commenced the attack. The Orangemen, it is true, were walking through a part of the town exclusively inhabited by Catholics; but that made no excuse for them. From Repealers they should have neither support nor sympathy. It was right to say that he had received a letter which charged the Orangemen with greatly irritating the Catholics by insulting the Pope, &c., and actually firing at the people in the first instance. Between these conflicting accounts he did not pretend to decide: he would leave the facts to be investigated by due course of law. He also read a letter giving an account of the homicide of a man by the police at Stradone, and stated his belief to be that the police were justified in firing on that occasion. Several sums of money having been handed in, Mr. O'CONNELL again rose for the purpose of discharging an arrear of reply to various calumnies and mistakes which had been put in circulation respecting him since the late controversy in Parliament on the subject of the fate of Galileo. It was stated and believed in England that Galileo was imprisoned, nay tortured, for sustaining, and using his exertions to spread a knowledge of the Copernican system, and in his opinion, nothing could so strongly demonstrate the gullibility of the English people as their belief of the absurdities which were circulated in connexion with Galileo. The propositions which he (Mr. O'Connell) should lay down as indisputable were, that Galileo was only three entire days in prison; that he was not tortured; that he was treated with lenity, being allowed to go to his country-house at the end of the three days, and, finally, that he was not confined in the Inquisition for advocating the Copernican system. His offence consisted in the assertion that the motion of the earth round the sun could be proved out of scripture; in other words that it was a scriptural and revealed fact, and not a mere astronomical doctrine or theory. Mr. O'Connell read an extract from an article headed "Galileo; the Roman Inquisition," which appeared in the Dublin Review for July 1838, in which the writer asserts that the motion of the earth round the sun was recognised at the Court of Rome as an astronomical fact in the pontificate of Pope Paul III. He further states that that Pope was the patron and protector of Copernicus, and by sanctioning his system, procured for it a period of 80 years' tranquillity—a period sufficient to enable it to take root in the mind of the astronomical world; that in the year 1536, which was the first of Paul's pontificate, Cardinal Schomberg charged himself with the expense of publishing the great work of Copernicus, the means of the philosopher himself being inadequate; but Schomberg unfortunately dying, the work was brought to a successful issue, and first saw the light, under the auspices of Gisio, Bishop of Ermeland, bearing also on its title-page an announcement of the sanction of the Sovereign Pontiff. "It thus appeared," concluded Mr. O'Connell, "that the exposition of the system of Copernicus was printed through the instrumentality of a Pope, Cardinal, and Bishop of Rome; and he trusted that for the future the assertion that Galileo was imprisoned for believing in the correctness of that system would meet with credence from no one possessed of common sense." Mr. O'Connell then proceeded to repeat the objections, so often before urged by him, against the new scheme of academical education, and concluded by proposing a series of resolutions embodying those objections, which were adopted. The rent for the week was 318*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.*

ROLLS COURT.—Crosskill v. Tuxford.—This was a motion for an injunction to restrain the defendants, Messrs. Tuxford and Co., of Boston, in the county of Lincoln, agricultural implement makers, their agents, workmen, and servants, from making or selling a land-rolling and clod-breaking machine, which the plaintiff alleged was similar to a machine for the same purpose for which he had a patent. The patented machine consists of a number of separate wheels moving side by side, and independently of each other, on a common axis, and provided with teeth on the circumference of each wheel not in the direction of the radius, but inclined so that as the wheels revolved in their course over the field, the teeth might descend on the clods perpendicularly, and thereby break them more effectually. There were also side-teeth on the wheels, which had the effect, jointly with the other teeth, of tearing as well as crushing the earth; but this part of the patent was not infringed. The patent was taken out in 1841, and in 1842 it was infringed by a Mr. Groundsell. The plaintiff filed a bill in 1843 to restrain him, and a trial at law was directed. On the 31st August, 1844, the trial took place at Liverpool, and the plaintiff succeeded in all the five pleas put in by the defendant, and Mr. Justice Cresswell, before whom the trial took place, certified that the validity of the patent came in question. A motion was made for a new trial and refused, and an injunction granted. The plaintiff, therefore, considered the patent established. In February last, however, the plaintiff heard that Messrs. Tuxford and Co. had made some machines which he believed to be an infringement of his patent, and accordingly on the 5th March he sent to make the necessary inquiries, and found that the defendants had constructed a machine, consisting of wheels revolving on a common axis, and with teeth on the circumference, and differing from his own only in the particular of having the wheels, which in his were quite separate and independent, joined together in bundles of four, five or six, but the bundles themselves moving separately and independent of each other. This being a violation of his patent in principle, he filed his bill and now moved for an injunction. Mr. Kindersley and Mr. Metcalfe, for the motion, read a great many affidavits filed on both sides. The defendants, endeavouring to impugn the novelty of the invention, stated that there were several machines constructed on the same principle before the plaintiff took out his patent. They first mentioned the Norfolk and Suffolk drill, as being prior and made with a serrated surface, but it was denied that any such instrument ever existed, and it was given up. They then mentioned a machine made for a Mr. Lee, consisting of two distinct rollers having fluted indentations running longitudinally, over the whole length of surface, but having no teeth. Another instrument made for Mr. Mayfield was considered strictly analogous, viz., a machine consisting of a large cylinder of wood of 2½ feet diameter, with iron rings attached to it by fastenings, and provided with teeth. This it was said, if the fastenings did not exist, would be exactly the plaintiff's machine, except that it had no side teeth. The evidence of several persons acquainted with machines was read. The motion stood over till the 2d inst. for Mr. Turner to be heard against it. Mr. Cairns, in the absence of Mr. Turner, then contended that defendant's machine was not an infringement of the patent, and if it was, that the patent itself was bad, inasmuch as it was not new. The reason of the separate rings being joined together by a bolt, as was represented, was because they were of cast iron, and the wooden model could not be placed in the sand which was necessary to make the mould except in pieces. But though the wheels or rings thus joined together revolved on a common axis, and the teeth on the surface were not in the radial direction, yet, as the plaintiff's specification did not claim the separate parts, only the combination, and as there were only some of the parts used in the defendant's machine, it was no infringement of the patent. But even if it were the patent was not new. The fluted rolling machine, consisting of a cylinder, with longitudinal indentations running along the surface, made by the defendants so long ago as 1837, was the very same, except that, instead of teeth, there was what, with a file, might be made into a series of teeth in a line. And, in July, 1841, just before the plaintiff's patent was taken out (in September, 1841), they had made another machine, consisting of a wooden cylinder, with serrated rings placed parallel along its surface, which were secured by two bars of iron running along the face of the cylinder. At the first trial of this the securing rod broke, also at the second trial, and then it was used afterwards with the rings loose, which was the same as the plaintiff's machine.—Mr. Kindersley was heard in reply, and the Master of the Rolls thought that there must be a trial; and, though there had been an action brought against another defendant, by which the plaintiff succeeded, that did not bind the present defendants. In the mean time an account must be kept by the defendants.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—The Romford Bank.—On Wednesday Mr. Commissioner Goulburn delivered judgment on the application for a certificate by the elder Mr. Johnson, that of his partner, Mr. Mann, having been already granted without opposition. After hearing counsel for the bankrupt at great length, the Commissioner said it was a most melancholy case, from whatever point it was viewed. Here was the bankrupt, an aged gentleman, applying for his certificate, which must, at his advanced time of life, be rather regarded as of value as a testimony of his good conduct in business, than for the purpose of re-entering trade. His Honour then proceeded to comment on the features of the case disclosed in the evidence, and laid great stress on the conduct of the bankrupt in his character of banker. His Honour next alluded to the large dealings of the bankrupt, from a bank which was a losing concern; but while this was the case, he was bound in justice to the bankrupt to say, that he did not think he had made a purse for himself, but was poor penniless, an object of commiseration; but nothing that could be urged would, in his opinion, palliate the conduct of the bankrupt. While in a state of hopeless insolvency, he had received the moneys of his customers, and instead of rendering them due payment, had applied them to his own speculation and uses. It was painful for him (the commissioner) to enter thus into circumstances weighing against his character and integrity, and he could have well spared the task of adjudicating this certificate; but his duty to the public, who must be protected, made it imperative that he should act clearly, and without prejudice. After much consideration, it was his opinion that the failure of the bankrupt in this case could not be called the result of misfortune, or of circumstances over which he had no control, but rather that it arose from years of misconduct, as a trader in a branch of business which of all others required the greatest care and vigilance; and, therefore, the judgment of the court was that the certificate must be refused.

Miscellaneous.

The Portland Vase.—Mr. Doubleday has at length completed his labours upon the Portland vase, and has accomplished his undertaking in so masterly a manner, that it would defy even the most critical to discover where the vase had been injured. It is said to be the intention of the Trustees of the Museum, in order to preserve the vase from future attacks, to keep it in a separate apartment, accessible only by tickets.

Dr. Wolff.—We mentioned in a recent paragraph, that Sir Benjamin Brodie had commenced the process of extracting the Bokhara worm, termed rishta, from Dr. Wolff's wrist, by winding it round a piece of paper. Great skill was displayed in this operation. After no less than eight visits, Sir Benjamin succeeded in extracting the worm entire, and it measured more than 3 feet in length. As Dr. Wolff has no church in England, he intends, at least for the present, to reside abroad, and will leave London on the 15th inst. for Bruges.—Standard.

Fate of a Pseudo King.—Monsieur Thierry, who attempted to establish himself as an independent sovereign in New Zealand, having disappointed or given umbrage to his barbarous subjects, was recently killed, cooked, and eaten by them at a solemn public banquet. —Edinburgh Advertiser.

French Warfare in 1510.—The following extract from Sismondi affords a striking parallel to the accounts of the late atrocity in Algiers:—"A party of citizens and of inhabitants of the neighbouring plains had chosen another place of refuge. In the mountains, at whose base Vicenza is situated, is a vast cave, named the Grotto of Massano, or Longara. . . . . This cave having a narrow entrance is easy of defence, and in the preceding campaign it had served as a refuge for the neighbouring people. 6000 unfortunate beings had retired there with all their goods; the women and children were at the back of the grotto, and the men guarded its entrance. A captain of French adventurers, named L'Hérisson, discovered this retreat, and with his troop made vain efforts to penetrate into it; but foiled by its obscurity and its windings, he resolved to suffocate all within it. He filled with faggots the part he had occupied, and set fire to them. Some nobles of Vicenza, who were among the refugees, now intreated the French to make an exception in their favour, and to let them ransom themselves, their wives, and children, and all of noble blood. But the peasants, their companions in misfortune, exclaimed that they should all perish or be saved together. The whole cavern was now in flames, and its entrance resembled the mouth of a furnace. The adventurers waited till the fire had finished its terrible ravages, to enter the cave and withdraw the booty which they had purchased by such horrible cruelty. All had perished by suffocation, except one young man, who had placed himself near a chink through which a little air had reached him. None of the bodies were disfigured by the fire; but their attitudes sufficiently indicated the agonies they had undergone before death. Several women were delivered in these torments, and their infants died with them. When the adventurers brought back their booty to the camp, and recounted the mode of their obtaining it, they excited universal indignation. The Chevalier Bayard went himself to the cavern with the Provost Marshal, and caused him to hang in his presence, and in the midst of this scene of horror, two of the wretches who had kindled the fire. But this punishment was not sufficient to efface from the minds of the Italians the memory of so great a barbarity."—Sismondi, Hist. Rep. Ital., vol. XIV., p. 47.

Aeronautics in Turkey.—The aeronaut Comaschi, who ascended from Constantinople in a balloon, in honour and on the occasion of the marriage of the Sultan's sister, has not been since heard of, although, by the latest accounts, 13 days had elapsed. Messengers despatched in the direction in which, from the way the wind blew at the time, it was supposed he would have been carried, have returned without any tidings of him. A report, requiring confirmation, had, however, got abroad that a body of an individual answering to his description, and the remnants of a balloon, had been picked up on the Danube. Some, who have the misfortune to be the creditors of M. Comaschi, and to whom the balloon had been specially hypothecated as a security, go the length of asserting that he has purposely steered a wide course to elude payment of his debts, especially as he increased these latter on the eve of his ascent, and took measures for providing himself with passports and firmans to secure assistance wherever he might effect his descent.

New Clocks.—The public may ere long expect to experience an immense saving in furnishing themselves with that indispensable necessary—a clock—and one, too, of a superior description. For the ingenious discovery they will be indebted to Mr. Andrew Symington, watchmaker, Kettle, and to Mr. A. Temple, gardener to O. Tyndal Bruce, Esq., Falkland. The simplicity of the principle is truly wonderful, the machinery required being nothing more than the crown-wheel, and the propelling power applied to the axle of the wheel keeps the pendulum in motion, with the most perfect exactness; it requires no winding up. A model has been constructed, and the experiments have proved completely successful. It is at present going in an apartment of Falkland House, and Mr. Bruce, who generously patronised the invention, has expressed himself as to its merits in terms highly gratifying to the inventors.—Edinburgh Courant.

Statistics of European Capitals.—The capital of Great Britain has a population estimated at 2,000,000 of souls, exclusive of strangers. Strange to say, and we could hardly credit the fact, if it was not credibly demonstrated, the number of beds in the London hospitals is not in proportion with that of the other capitals of Europe, comparatively to their respective populations. The London hospitals only contain 5000 beds. Its mortality amounts yearly to 45,000 inhabitants, or to 123 daily. In 1800 the population of that metropolis was only 1,200,000 souls, the mortality 22,000, and the number of beds 4350. Thus, whilst the population and mortality increased, in the last 45 years, by nearly one-half, the number of beds in the hospitals augmented by one-seventh. There exist, it is true, in London a number of charitable institutions, and many manufactories have infirmaries, in which the workmen, who have not the means of being attended at home, or who dislike entering hospitals, find medical relief. The population of Paris now exceeds 900,000. The number of beds in the hospitals is 10,000, and the mortality, as compared with that of London, nearly the same, or 60 per day. The population of Vienna is 330,000 souls; the number of beds in the hospitals 5700, and the annual mortality 17,000. At Berlin the population is 365,000 inhabitants; the number of beds 3000, and the annual mortality 9000. At St. Petersburg, the population is 476,000 inhabitants; the number of beds in the hospitals 6000; and the annual mortality 11,000. At Warsaw, the population is 150,000; and the number of beds in the hospitals 4000. It results from those returns that Paris is, after London, the capital offering the smallest proportion of beds in the hospitals. —Courrier Français.

The Lives of Sailors saved by Sharks.—A few weeks since particulars were received of the upsetting of the slave schooner, Felicidade, on board which the massacre of a prize crew (for which the criminals have been lately prosecuted at Plymouth,) had been perpetrated. That vessel was recaptured by the Star, and sent to Sierra Leone, in charge of Lieut. Wilson and nine men. Whilst on the passage, during a heavy squall, the schooner went over, filled and sank, so as only to leave part of her bowrail above water. When the squall passed, the whole of the crew were found clinging to the bowrail. Some expert divers attempted to extract provisions from the vessel, but without success; and nothing but death stared them in the face, as the schooner was gradually sinking. Lieut. Wilson ascertained that there were three common knives among the party, and it was resolved to make a raft of the mainboom and gaff, and such other floating materials as remained above water. These they secured by such ropes as could be cut and unrove from the rigging, and a small quantity of cordage was retained to make good any defects they might sustain by the working of the spars; a small top-gallant studding-sail was obtained for a sail, and upon this miserable float the 10 persons made sail for the coast of Africa, distant 200 miles, without rudder, oar, compass, provisions, or water. Being almost naked, and washed by every wave, their sufferings were very great. Famished for food and drink, scorched by a burning sun during the day, and chilled with cold during the night, they thus remained 20 days. Delirium and death relieved the raft of part of its load of misery, two blacks were the first to sink under their sufferings. The question naturally suggests itself—how did the survivors support life? Some persons would be almost afraid either to put the question or hear the answer. There is nothing however to wound our feelings, but much to admire in the admirable conduct of Lieut. Wilson and his men during these melancholy and miserable 20 days. Showers of rain occasionally fell; they caught some water in their little sail, which they drank, and put some into a small keg that had floated out of the vessel. The sea was almost always breaking over the spars of the raft, which was surrounded by voracious sharks. The famishing sailors actually caught with a bowling knot a shark 8 ft. in length with their bare hands, and hauled it upon the raft; they killed it, drank the blood, and ate part of the flesh, husbanding the remainder. In this way three other sharks were taken, and upon these sharks the poor fellows managed to prolong their lives till picked up (in sight of the land), in what may be termed the very zero of living misery. Lieut. Wilson and four seamen survived and recovered their strength. Order and discipline were maintained upon the raft; fortitude, forethought, a reliance upon divine Providence, and good conduct, enabled these Englishmen to surmount such horrible sufferings, whilst the Kroomen and Portuguese sank under them. As a matter of course Lieut. Wilson will be promoted, and we trust the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty will not fail to bestow some mark of special favour upon the men, whose conduct appears to have been above all praise.—Times.

The advantages of this Office among others, are:—

1. A participation septennially in two-thirds of the Profits, which may be applied either in reduction of the Premium, or to augment the sum Assured.

The following BONUSES have been assigned to all Policies, of at least three years' standing, effected for the whole duration of Life:—

FIRST DIVISION, IN 1832.

From 18*s.* to 21. 12*s.* per cent. per annum on the sums assured, varying with the age, being equivalent, on the average, to 26½ per cent. on the Premiums paid.

SECOND DIVISION, IN 1839.

From upwards of 1*l.* to upwards of 3*l.* per cent. per annum on the sums assured, or, on the average, 33 per cent. on the Premiums paid for the preceding Seven Years.

2. Premiums may be paid in a limited number of annual sums, instead of by annual payments for the whole of life: the Policy continuing to participate in profits after the payment of such Premiums has ceased.

3. The Assurance or Premium Fund is not subject to any charge for Interest to Proprietors.

4. Permission to pass to Continental Ports between Brest and the Elbe inclusive.

5. Parties (including Officers of the Army, Navy, East India Company, and Merchant Service) may be assured to reside in or proceed to all parts of the World, at Premiums calculated on real data.

6. Claims to be paid within three months.

7. The Assured may dispose of their Policies to the Company.

8. No charge but for Policy Stamps.

The Prospectus, Tables of Rates, &c., to be had at the Office in London, or of the Company's Agents.

ECONOMIC LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 6, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, London. Established 1823. Empowered by Act of Parliament, 3 Will. IV.

Chairman—The Right Hon. THOMAS FRANKLAND LEWIS.

Deputy Chairman—HENRY FREDERICK STEPHENSON, Esq.

The following are among the advantages offered by this Society:—Lower Rates of Premium than those of any other Office, which entitle the assured to participate in the profits, and considerably lower than those of any other Mutual Assurance Society. No Proprietary participate in the profits, the whole being divisible among the Assured. The first Bonus, in 1834, averaged 16*l.* per cent. on the Premiums paid; the second Do., in 1839, averaged 31*l.* per cent. since the first division; and the third Do., in 1844, averaged 36*l.* per cent. since the second division. Prospectuses and full particulars may be obtained on application to CAMPBELL JAMES DOWNER, Secretary.

THE ATTENTION OF ASSURERS is particularly directed to the detailed Prospectuses of this Company. Assurances can be effected on a profit or non-profit scale, and for short periods, at a very moderate rate. When on the life of another, the Policy may be rendered secure, notwithstanding the life assured may go out of the limits of Europe without the necessary permission of the Directors having been previously obtained—this plan makes a Policy an absolute security.

Credit of half the premiums for the first five years allowed on Policies effected for the whole term of life.

Advances are made to Assurers on real or undoubted personal security, for terms of years, repayable by instalments.

WILLIAM RATRAY, Actuary and Secretary.

THE BRITISH MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY entertains proposals of any description involving the contingency of human life, and offers the following advantages to its members.

A bonus annually (in shape of low premiums) equal to those of other offices granted every 3, 5, or 7 years, and the prospect of a larger bonus than can possibly be obtained at those offices, in the peculiarly beneficial mode adopted in the distribution of the surplus.

Prospectuses and every information may be obtained on application at the Office, 17, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

News of the Week.

THE question of Parliamentary Privilege has been again the subject of discussion in consequence of an attack made in the House of Commons by Mr. Fitzstephen French upon Lord Brougham, for the course which his Lordship had pursued in the committee of inquiry into the Dublin and Galway Railway Bill. This breach of privilege at first threatened to bring the two Houses of Parliament into collision; but Mr. French on Wednesday having made an ample apology, Lord Brougham declared himself satisfied, and the main question at issue has consequently been set at rest. The subject, however, which gave rise to the discussion, has created a more lasting interest; and coming as they do so closely upon the late disclosures in connection with the railway jobbing of public officers, the facts brought to light by the committee on the Dublin and Galway Bill, and stated in their Report in another column, may not be without a salutary effect on the public at large. On Monday the Duke of Richmond brought before the House the claims of the officers who had served in the Peninsular campaigns to some honorary decoration for their services. His Grace presented a petition from those officers, praying the House to recommend Her Majesty to place them on the same footing as their more fortunate brethren who fought at Waterloo, in India, and in China, and who had received medals for their services. The petition was opposed by the Duke of Wellington for various reasons, and especially on the ground that their lordships could not interfere in a matter which was constitutionally the prerogative of the Crown alone; and, after a brief discussion, it was ordered to lie on the table.—On the motion for the second reading of the Irish Colleges Bill, the Earl of Carnarvon deprecated the measure as the severest blow ever struck at the Protestant religion, and moved as an amendment that it be read a second time that day three months. The amendment was negatived on a division, and on Tuesday the Bill passed through committee, after an intimation from Lord Stanley that Government intend to perfect the new colleges at some future time, by connecting them with an University for conferring degrees. In the House of Commons on Friday, Capt. Berkeley moved an address to the Crown in order to grant further recompense to the troops and seamen engaged in the Chinese war. The motion was opposed by ministers, and negatived on a division by 68 to 27. On Monday, on the motion for the third reading of the Scotch Poor-law Amendment Bill, Mr. Hastie moved that it be read a third time that day six months. This amendment was negatived by 33 to 7, and the Bill was then passed. On the same day, Mr. C. Buller brought forward his motion on the affairs of New Zealand, directing his arguments chiefly to the necessity of a change in Lord Stanley's policy towards the New Zealand Company. An adjourned debate ensued, during which the recent disasters in the colony were the chief topics of discussion. Sir R. Peel defended Lord Stanley's policy, and contended that the present difficulties of government had been produced by founding their claims to the land, not on the right of discovery, but on the right of cession. He considered that the public faith had been unwisely pledged to the native chiefs, but he would not consent to break that faith by violating the treaty of Waitangi even to gain the concert and co-operation of the Company. Lord J. Russell condemned Sir R. Peel's speech, because it gave no hope of a change of policy. His lordship attributed all the grievances of the colony to the conduct of Capt. Fitzroy, who had made such unwise concessions to the natives that they now believed they could destroy the sovereignty of the Queen. The debate did not terminate till Wednesday, when Mr. Buller's amendment was negatived by 155 to 89. On Tuesday Mr. Ewart brought forward his motion for the reduction of the duties on butter and cheese, which was opposed by Ministers on financial grounds, and negatived by 136 to 38. On Thursday the Scotch Turnpike Roads Bill was thrown out by a majority of 26.

From France we learn that the Chambers were prorogued on Monday by Royal ordinance. Considerable sensation was caused a few days previously, by a speech of Marshal Soult, in which he justified the massacre of the Dahra. The surprise occasioned by this circumstance has since been increased by the appearance of an article in the official Journal of Algiers, stating that Colonel Pelissier had only used the means recommended by the Governor-General, in case of extreme urgency. It is clear, therefore, that the responsibility of the massacre rests upon Marshal Bugeaud.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, and the Princesses, left town on Saturday for Osborne House, travelling to Gosport by a special train on the South Western Railway. On the previous day the Queen held a Court at Buckingham Palace, to receive Sami Pacha, the new Ambassador from the Ottoman Porte; and Prince Albert on the same day attended a meeting of the Fine Arts Commission. On Sunday morning, Her Majesty and the Prince, with the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal, walked on the beach, subsequently returning to Osborne House, where prayers were read by the Rev. C. L. Courtenay. In the afternoon the royal party attended Divine service at Whippenham Church. During the week the Queen and the infant royal family have taken daily exercise on the beach or in the grounds of Osborne House. It is stated that Her Majesty will remain at Osborne until the prorogation of Parliament, immediately after which the Court leaves for Germany. During Her Majesty's absence on the Continent the royal children will remain at Osborne House. The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Hon. Anne Napier to be one of the Maids of Honour in Ordinary to Her Majesty, in the room of the Hon. Georgiana Liddell, resigned.

ARRIVAL OF THE KING OF HOLLAND.—His Majesty the King of Holland, accompanied by a limited suite, arrived off Woolwich dockyard, on Thursday afternoon, in the Dutch Government steamer Cyclops. The Lords of the Admiralty, the Netherlands Minister, and the heads of the naval and military establishments at Woolwich were assembled to receive the King. On the Cyclops steamer being made fast to moorings in the river, Lord Bloomfield, Sir F. Collier, and M. Dedel, his Majesty's minister, proceeded in the barge of the William and Mary yacht to the Cyclops, and went on board to welcome his Majesty, who in a few minutes afterwards was brought on shore, the barge being steered by Sir F. Collier. As the King stepped on shore he was received by the Earl of Haddington, the Earl of Morton, and the Hon. Capt. Hood, each of whom was successively introduced to his Majesty by his Excellency M. Dedel. The King looked remarkably well, and, after acknowledging with the greatest affability the attention shown to him, he walked to the parade, where the Earl of Haddington presented Sir G. Cockburn and Sir W. Gage to his Majesty. All the principal officers of the dockyard were in attendance to receive the King, who appeared much gratified with his reception. As the King passed through the line formed by the guard of honour the troops saluted his Majesty, the band playing the national anthem. Before entering the carriage his Majesty shook hands very cordially with the Earl of Haddington, Sir F. Collier, and Lord Bloomfield, saying to the latter, with much earnestness:—"I am very sorry to have given you all this trouble; my intention was to have come quite privately among you." His Majesty, during his progress from the stairs to his carriage, recognised those present of whom he had some previous knowledge. Among them was a young officer of the Marines, with whom his Majesty shook hands very cordially, expressing at the same time the pleasure he felt at meeting him. His Majesty having entered his carriage, at a quarter past 2 o'clock, left the dockyard for Mivart's Hotel. Within a brief interval of His Majesty's arrival in Brook-street, he was waited on by the Earl of Aberdeen, who had the honour of an interview with His Majesty. The Earl of Jersey, Viscount Hawarden, and Lord Fitzroy Somerset were also honoured with interviews with the King during the afternoon. At 5 o'clock His Majesty left the hotel alone in a brougham, and drove to Beaufort House, for the purpose of honouring with a visit the Duke of Beaufort, who was a fellow collegian with His Majesty at Christ Church, Oxford, and subsequently joint Aide-de-Camp to the Duke of Wellington in the Peninsula. His Grace was absent from home when the King called, having gone to Cashiobury, the seat of the Earl and Countess of Essex, who gave a public breakfast at that beautiful seat on Thursday. His Majesty subsequently paid several visits to other members of the nobility, and after taking a drive round Hyde-park, where, from the unostentatious manner in which he appeared, his presence was not observed by one individual in a thousand, he returned to his hotel. His Majesty, attended by the members of his suite, then left Brook-street for the residence of the Legation in Wilton-crescent, for the purpose of honouring his Excellency M. Dedel with his company at dinner. The only additions to the royal suite and members of the Legation present at the banquet were His Grace the Duke of Beaufort and Lord Fitzroy Somerset. In the evening His Majesty and the other members of the party honoured the Italian Opera with their presence. His Majesty left town yesterday afternoon for the Isle of Wight, on a visit to Her Majesty and Prince Albert. Arrangements have been made for the occupation of Norris Castle by His Majesty, during his stay in the island, which, we believe, will not extend beyond this day (Saturday), His Majesty's sojourn in this country being limited, it is said, to 10 days.

Parliamentary Movements.—A vacancy has occurred in the representation of the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, by the death of Mr. Alexander Murray, which took place suddenly at Killybegs, Donegal, on the 16th inst. A vacancy has also occurred in the representation of Hereford, by the death of Mr. E. Bolton Clive, which took place on Tuesday at his son's seat, near Croydon. The death of Earl Grey, and the consequent accession of Lord Howick to the peerage, has caused a vacancy in the representation of Sunderland, for which Col. Thompson is a candidate on the Free-trade interest, and Mr. Hudson, the railway capitalist, on the Conservative interest. Mr. Bagshaw, who had come forward as the Whig candidate, retired on Wednesday, in order that he might not divide the Liberal interest.

Official Appointments.—It is stated that Captain A'Court, member for Tamworth, will succeed Captain Boldero as clerk of the Ordnance; and that Captain Sir Thomas Hastings will succeed Mr. Bonham as storekeeper of the Ordnance. The superintendence of the Royal Naval College at Portsmouth, together with the command of the Excellent gunnery ship, vacant by the appointment of Captain Sir Thomas Hastings to the Ordnance, will be conferred, it is said, upon Commodore Chads, of the Cambrian, now on his way home from the China station.

Death of Earl Grey.—We regret to announce the death of this distinguished nobleman, which took place on Thursday, the 17th inst., at Howick Hall, Northumberland. The health of the noble earl, who was in his 82d year, had been for some time feeble. A serious attack of illness in the course of last year gave rise to the worst apprehensions, but the strength of his constitution enabled him to rally, and he continued better until about 10 days back, when a second attack of paralysis renewed the fears of his family. He sunk gradually, awaiting the approach of death with calm composure, and at length expired, almost without pain, in the presence of his wife and son. The occurrence of this event naturally brings before us Earl Grey's distinguished public career, extending over more than half a century. The following is an imperfect summary of the facts of Earl Grey's public life, up to the passing of the Reform Bill, a period of which even the briefest sketch would fill a volume, and which, perhaps, is yet too recent to be impartially exhibited. The late Earl Grey was born March 13, 1764; he received his education first at Eton, and subsequently at King's College, Cambridge. At the age of 18 he passed over to the Continent, with a view of making the tour of Europe, and returned to England in 1786. A vacancy in the representation of his native county having occurred, Mr. Grey, though not then of age, was invited to fill the vacancy. He consented, and was returned without opposition, but did not take his seat until he had reached the age required by law. His maiden speech was delivered Feb. 21, 1787, on the subject of Mr. Pitt's commercial treaty with France. In 1792 Mr. Grey took part in the formation of the association known as the "Friends of the People;" and was commissioned by that body to be the organ in the House of Commons of its views of Parliamentary reform. These he supported in the speech in which, on the 6th May, 1793, he moved to refer the petition of that association to a committee. This speech contained a detailed view of the history of Parliamentary reform, and a forcible statement of the grounds which he alleged rendered its adoption necessary. After an adjourned debate the motion was negatived by 282 to 41. It was not until May, 1797, that Mr. Grey again brought forward the subject of Parliamentary reform and propounded his own plan. The plan is remarkable for the large measures of change which the Whig leaders at that time urged. He proposed the division of the country into electoral districts of pretty nearly equal extent, returning only one member each, with household suffrage, and triennial Parliaments. The motion for leave to bring in a Bill embodying this plan, was rejected by a majority of 165. In 1801, during the winter of which year his father was raised to the peerage as Lord Grey of Howick, Mr. Grey distinguished himself in Parliament by his opposition to the union with Ireland. In 1806, when by the elevation of his father to an earldom, he became Lord Howick, he first took office as a member of the Ministry, which was formed by the coalition of Mr. Fox and Lord Grenville. He was made First Lord of the Admiralty; and on the death of Mr. Fox, in the autumn of the same year, succeeded him as Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and leader of the House of Commons. On the breaking up of this short-lived Cabinet, Parliament was dissolved, and Lord Howick, not choosing to contest the county of Northumberland, took his seat for Appleby. The death of his father, which took place shortly after, removed him to the House of Peers. His lordship now took the title of Earl Grey, by which appellation he has been known to the present generation. For several years after his succession to the peerage, Earl Grey took no very prominent part in public affairs. The retirement of Lord Liverpool in 1827, placed Mr. Canning at the helm of affairs. It was a matter of surprise and regret to the members of his own party that Lord Grey declined to support that statesman against the combined hostility of the Tory party. His lordship after the death of Mr. Canning, in a speech on the second reading of the Catholic Relief Bill, in 1829, justified himself for having declined to extend his support to the deceased statesman's administration. Earl Grey took a prominent part in the trial of Queen Caroline before the House of Peers, and distinguished himself in the debates upon that occasion; from which period his life was passed principally in the bosom of his family, until the sudden termination of the Wellington Administration, in 1830, brought him forth from his retirement to assume the reins of Government as the chief of the Reform Cabinet. On the 22d Nov., 1830, he kissed hands as First Lord of the Treasury, and on the 9th July, 1834, he finally withdrew from the service of the Crown. He was, however, out of office for a short time in 1832, in consequence of the successive defeats on the subject of Reform which he sustained in the House of Lords; but the failure of all attempts to form a Conservative Ministry, and the clear understanding that the King was prepared to create as many Peers as would carry the Reform Bill, replaced Lord Grey in office. Mr. Ward's celebrated motion for appropriating the surplus revenues of the Church decided the fate of the Cabinet, and Lord Grey retired in July, 1834. His lordship for one or two years afterwards occasionally attended the House of Lords, but latterly he had withdrawn altogether from public life. The Noble Earl married, in 1794, the Hon. Mary Elizabeth Ponsonby, only daughter of the first Lord Ponsonby, an Irish Peer; and by this lady, who survives him, he leaves a numerous family. He is succeeded in the family honours and estates by Viscount Howick, M.P. for Sunderland, who was born in 1802, and married in 1832 the youngest daughter of the late Sir Joseph Copley, Bart. Lord Grey's character, both in public and private life, has had the rare distinction in these times of political and party violence of commanding respect from all classes of society. The Times describes him as "by principle, character, and temper, distinguished as a man of spotless honour and integrity—a gentleman of the highest order—a member of society the most respected and esteemed—in domestic life the most unblemished and exemplary—in public life more eminent by station, position, and opportunity, than personally or individually what deserves to go down to after times as in himself a great man—the most rare of God's gifts to human nature." The Globe gives the following as a description of the personal appearance of Earl Grey, in the vigour of his days:—"His port and bearing were strikingly dignified. The volto sciolto which men almost instinctively associate with high birth, was legible in every lineament of his features, and his whole exterior was decidedly patrician. The expression of his countenance when in repose was somewhat penserose and meditative—the forehead lofty and well developed, as beseemed 'a temple sacred to noble thoughts.' His figure was stately and commanding, his action graceful and animated; and his voice, strong, flexible, sonorous. As an orator, he was ready and correct—his style classically pure, and void of affectation—his delivery such as to fix and even fascinate the attention; while his arguments were couched in diction which evinced the well educated and well disciplined mind." The present Earl Grey was under-Secretary for the Colonies from 1830 to 1833; Under-Secretary for the Home Department in 1834, and Secretary at War in 1839. His lordship represented Winchilsea in the Parliament of 1826, Higham Ferrers in that of 1830, and the Northern Division of Northumberland from 1831 to 1841, when he was returned for Sunderland. His lordship is a Privy Councillor, in politics a Liberal, and on recent occasions he has advocated the total repeal of the Corn Laws.

Death of Lord Canterbury.—Viscount Canterbury expired on Monday afternoon, at his son's residence in Southwick-crescent, Hyde-park. The immediate cause of death was an attack of apoplexy, which he experienced on Saturday on the Great Western Railway, in coming to town from Devonshire, when he lost all power of speech and consciousness up to the moment of his death. His lordship was eldest son of Charles Manners Sutton, the late Archbishop of Canterbury. He was born in 1780, and was therefore in his 66th year. His lordship was twice married, first in 1811, to the eldest daughter of John Denison, Esq., of Denbies, Surrey; and secondly, in 1828, to Ellen, daughter of Mr. Edmund Power, relict of Mr. John Hume Purvis, and sister of Lady Blessington. By his first marriage he leaves issue the Hon. Charles John Manners Sutton (now Viscount Canterbury), Registrar of the Faculty Office, born 1812; the Hon. Henry Manners Sutton, M.P., Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, born 1814; and the Hon. Charlotte Matilda, born 1814, and married to Mr. Sanderson, M.P. By his second marriage he leaves an only daughter, the Hon. Frances Diana, born 1829. The late Viscount sat for Scarborough for 25 years, and on the passing of the Reform Bill was returned for the University of Cambridge. His lordship was Speaker of the House of Commons from 1817 to 1834, when his re-election was opposed by Mr. Abercromby (now Lord Dunfermline), who was brought forward by the Whig party, and after one of the largest divisions on record the numbers were, for Mr. Abercromby, 316; Sir C. Manners Sutton, 306. Immediately after his defeat for the Speaker's chair, he was appointed by King William IV. to perform the important office of Commissioner for adjusting the claims of Canada; but he resigned without entering on its duties. The deceased was created a Viscount of the United Kingdom in 1835. He was a Civil Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, a Governor of the Charterhouse, and a Commissioner of the Land-tax and for building churches. His Lordship enjoyed a pension of 4000*l.* a year, which is continued to his successor.

Death of Lord Bateman.—We have to record the decease of a third member of the Upper House of Parliament within the short space of as many days. Lord Bateman expired on Tuesday morning, at his mansion in Portman-square, after a very brief illness. His lordship left town on Saturday week for Kelmarsh, the family seat in Northamptonshire, travelling by the Birmingham railway. While in the train his lordship was attacked with indisposition, but rallying before he reached the end of his journey, he remained throughout the week at Kelmarsh. Finding himself no better, his lordship returned to London on Saturday last, but was not so seriously indisposed as to create the least apprehension for his recovery. On Sunday his disorder assumed a more alarming character, and on Monday he gradually became worse. The deceased, Baron Bateman, of Shobdon, Herefordshire, in the peerage of the United Kingdom, was eldest son of Mr. William Hanbury, of Kelmarsh. He was born in 1780, and was consequently in his 66th year. His lordship, then Mr. Hanbury, married, in 1822, Elizabeth, second daughter of Lord Spencer S. Chichester, brother of the late Marquis of Donegal, by whom he leaves issue three sons and four daughters, his eldest son, the Hon. William Bateman Hanbury (now Lord Bateman) being in his 20th year. The late lord represented Northampton in several parliaments preceding the passing of the Reform Bill; and, in 1832 and 1835, he contested the representation of the county, but without success. In 1837 he was created a peer by Lord Melbourne's Government. His lordship, on the death of his second cousin, the last Viscount Bateman, whose estates he inherited, took the additional arms and surname of Bateman. On the death of Earl Somers, in 1841, he was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Herefordshire, now at the disposal of the Premier.

Foreign

FRANCE.—The French Chambers were formally prorogued on Monday by Royal ordinance, amidst loud cries of Vive le Roi. It is however generally believed that a dissolution will shortly take place, and that the new elections will commence in September. The proceedings of the Chamber of Peers for the few days previous to the prorogation present few topics of general interest. The budget of expenditure for 1846 was voted by a majority of 87 to 27. The discussion was in general of little importance; but Admiral Mackau stated in the course of it, that nothing had yet been settled with respect to the Pritchard indemnity, and that nothing could be done till such time as the Government should receive the report of Admiral Hamelin, who had been ordered to make inquiries on the spot into the truth of the alleged facts. On Friday the Tours and Nantes and the Paris and Strasbourg Railway Bills were passed, and the business of the session closed by the adoption of the entire budget, by a majority of 103 to 2. The proceedings in the Chamber on the previous Wednesday were made interesting by the explanations given by Marshal Soult, in respect to the deplorable massacre of the Arabs in the caverns of the Dahra. In answer to some remarks from the Marquis de Boissy, who expressed his regret that a member of the Government should have been so hasty as to disavow the conduct of the officer in command of the troops which attacked the Dahra, without knowing whether he had not committed the act under some pressing necessity, Marshal Soult said :—

"As to the affair of the Dahra, I pray the Chamber to believe that in the explanations which I have already given, I referred only to the act itself. One of the most honourable officers in the army, Colonel Pelissier, whose eulogium I shall always willingly make, was placed in a most painful and embarrassing position. He had to bring into subjection certain insurgents, who had a few days before most basely assassinated our soldiers ; and it was, besides, the third or fourth time that this population, who always take refuge in caverns, had perpetrated similar acts. In 1842, when Marshal Bugeaud was proceeding through the valley of the Chelif, to pacify the tribes on the right bank of the river, he sent detachments to this same spot, and several of our soldiers who presented themselves at the entry of the grottoes to speak of peace were received with a discharge of musketry, and the greater number killed or wounded. The next day, when Marshal Bugeaud sent a detachment to ascertain what had become of these men, they were found to be all dreadfully mutilated. Last year, General Cavaignac, being in the midst of the same tribe, met with similar bad fortune, and his column, being constantly attacked by this tribe, suffered heavy loss. I confess that if I happened to be in the same position, I should, perhaps, have done something exceedingly severe, for it must not be forgotten that the men under Colonel Pelissier's command were the same that in 1842 had seen their comrades so cruelly mutilated. Is it to be supposed that in such a position men are capable of enough generosity to forget past offences ? Frenchmen are too often guilty of exaggerating facts, without paying attention to the circumstances that cause them to leave their habitual circle. In Europe such an act as that alluded to would be frightful ; in Algeria it finds its explanation ; and you can never impose on an officer the obligation of not repaying the wrongs which he may have received. There are certain reflections which it would be prudent to abstain from making, for they always produce a bad effect in the army. The army, and the generals and superior officers commanding it, have duties sufficiently difficult to fulfil, to render it just to estimate fairly their devotedness and their efforts ; and as to the acts of discipline alluded to, my solicitude as Minister of War ought to be trusted to, particularly as I never let any infraction pass without severely punishing it." The Marquis De Boissy, in his reply, regretted that the Minister of War had thus pronounced a sort of approbation of the conduct of the officer in command.

Upon the speech of Marshal Soult, and upon the horrible transaction to which it refers, nearly the whole of the Paris opposition journals comment with a severity that does them honour, and vindicates the French Press and the nation from the disgrace of this crime. Marshal Soult, however, has adopted it : and by the last advices from Algiers we find that Colonel Pelissier "had only used the means recommended to him by the Governor-General !" This startling announcement is contained in the Moniteur Algérien, the official organ of Marshal Bugeaud, to whose pen the article in question is attributed. Although this article avows the main features of the horrible scene, it abstains from noticing many of its hideous details, of which but too much evidence has already been obtained. After stating that the unfortunate tribe had rejected the proposals of the burning or suffocating column under Colonel Pelissier, the Moniteur Algérien says :—

"Was Colonel Pelissier to retire in consequence of this obstinacy, and give up the contest ? If he had done so, the troops and officers would have seriously blamed him. The political consequences of such a determination would have been disastrous, for the confidence of the Arabs in the security of these caverns would have increased. Should he have attacked them with his troops ? That would have been nearly impossible, and in all cases a great loss of men on our side would have taken place in this subterranean war, which would not have been much more satisfactory in a humane point of view. To have adopted a simple blockade, which might have lasted a fortnight, would have been to lose time, most valuable as connected with the submission of the Dahra, and to fail to give his assistance to the movement of Colonel de St. Arnaud. After weighing these different questions, he decided on using the means recommended by the Governor-General in case of extreme urgency. Numerous faggots were placed before the entrance of the caverns, and fire thrown on them. At 1 in the morning Colonel Pelissier, moved by feelings of pity, put a stop to the proceedings ; but it was too late, the catastrophe had taken place. This cruel event, which afflicts us all, takes our judgment by surprise, from its novelty in war ; but it is not in reality more barbarous than many other things which have been practised at different periods in Europe, and against which no outcry has been raised, because they were regarded as indispensable evils. War, policy, and even humanity, allow the use of almost all means, however energetic they may be, to promptly attain a desired end. It is also desirable, in the interest of philanthropy, for the wars which are prolonged by less vigorous measures being adopted, are those which ruin nations and multiply victims. These incontestible principles being laid down, we ask—whether the siege of the caverns is more cruel than the bombardment and famine to which cities and their inhabitants have been subjected in Europe ? At sea, also, is not a vessel fired at, and are not endeavours made to sink or blow her up, unless she strikes her flag ? All those things are parallel cases ; it is war with its necessary consequences. If philanthropists do not wish to witness such scenes, let them inspire people and Governments with sentiments of eternal peace. Fears are entertained as to what may hereafter be the consequence of the deep hatred which may be inspired in every mind by the catastrophe of the Ouled Rhia. Doubtless, much hatred of the French will be felt by the Arabs ; that feeling has long existed, and will long be felt. This event can scarcely increase it, but it will tend to inspire a salutary terror, which will not be less favourable to the conquered than to the conqueror."

Such is the defence put forward by the official organ of Marshal Bugeaud for the massacre of the Dahra, which is the more important, as it shows that that dreadful tragedy was not the act of an individual officer, who momentarily forgot his feelings of humanity in his anxiety to subdue an enemy, but the deliberate plan laid down by the head of the Government. The Government papers publish this article without comment, but the Opposition papers censure it with great severity, more particularly as the massacre is admitted to have been planned by Marshal Bugeaud, whose shooting of M. Dulong, nephew of the popular M. Dupont de l'Eure, and whose presidence over the massacre of the Rue Transnonain, Paris, in 1834, when the entire of the inhabitants of the house No. 14 in that street were—men, women, and children—butchered by the ruthless 35th regiment acting under his orders, have never been forgotten.—The Moniteur contains several laws, among which is that authorising the Minister of Public Works to adjudicate the concession —first, of the railroad from Paris to the frontier of Belgium, with embranchments from Lille to Calais and Dunkirk ; second, of the railroad from Creil to St. Quentin ; and third, of the railroad from Fampoux to Hazebrouck. The duration of the lease of the former is not to exceed 41 years ; and the maximum of that of the Creil and St. Quentin and Fampoux and Hazebrouck lines is fixed at 75 years. No company is to be admitted to bid for the concession of those roads unless it shall have been previously approved by the Minister of Public Works, and deposited the required securities. The other laws published by the Moniteur are, that for the re-organisation of the Council of State ; the law relative to the police of railroads, and others, appropriating credits of 2,650,000f. for the restoration of the cathedral of Paris, and of 7,461,000f. for the construction of an hotel for the Foreign Department, and of buildings for the Stamp-office and registry, and the archives of the Court of Accounts.—We learn from Bourges that Don Carlos and the Princess de Beira, his wife, left that town on the morning of the 17th, for the baths of Gréoulx. A troop of 20 dragoons, with a captain at their head, escorted their royal highnesses to the boundary of the department. There the Prince of Asturias took leave of his parents, and returned to Bourges. The other party arrived at Moulins in the course of the day, in the evening visited the monuments of the town, and proceeded on their journey next day.

SPAIN.—Our accounts from Madrid are of the 15th inst. The Queen's visit to the Basque provinces is said to have been abandoned, and Her Majesty will return by Saragossa to Madrid. The question of Her Majesty's marriage continued to be discussed by the organs of the press, the most influential of which support the pretensions of Prince Don Enrico, son of the Infant Don Francisco de Paula, to the hand of the Queen. The Gazette publishes several dispatches relative to the occurrences in Catalonia, but they contain nothing of general interest except the fact that the insurrection caused by the conscription is completely put down. Great excitement has been caused by the publication of a new edict against the press. This document, dated Barcelona, the 6th inst., consists of 26 articles. It abolishes the trial by jury, and directs that offences committed by the press shall be tried by a special tribunal, composed of five judges, and a president. The accused would be allowed the right of challenge, but would be obliged to make known his objections two days after the names of the members of the tribunal should be communicated to him. The tribunal would decide upon them after a delay of three days, and of ten days if proof or evidence should be required. The trial to be public, unless "one of the parties" should demand that it should take place with closed doors. At least four of the judges out of six must agree in condemning an accused, or he must be declared acquitted. The judges composing the tribunal are to be entitled to no fees or emoluments, even in case of a condemnation, but those who should not belong to the court would be allowed travelling expenses. A meeting of the editors of newspapers had been held, to take into consideration what was to be done in consequence of these severe measures, but the result was just what might be expected. The editors of all the Government papers absented themselves, and the others could not come to any resolution.

GERMANY.—Letters from Berlin state that the King of Prussia intends giving in honour of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, during her stay in the Rhenish provinces, various festivals, at which will be executed several celebrated old and modern compositions of German authors, which are little known in England ; among them are mentioned the Ascension, by Emmanuel Bach ; the Death of Jesus, an oratorio of Grun's ; Cosi fan Tutte, of Mozart ; Il Crociatto in Egetto, of Meyerbeer ; and the overture and choruses of the Abbe Vogler's Hermann von Unna. The King has addressed an autograph letter to Meyerbeer, wherein the King entrusts that celebrated composer with the direction of the festivals, and invites him to follow him to the Rhenish provinces. Already has M. Mendelssohn left Berlin for Coblentz, in order to superintend the rehearsal of the choruses of the great works forming part of the programme.

SWITZERLAND.—During the sitting of the 17th the Helvetic Diet discussed the question relative to the revision of the federal compact. A majority of 8 against the expediency of discussion caused it to be put off till next year. The principle of a total revision of the compact, had, therefore, only gained the concurrence of the five most radical cantons—Berne, Argovia, Basle (country), Glaris, and Vaud.

ITALY.—The Courrier François announces that the suppression of the Jesuits in France had caused considerable sensation in Italy. At Parma, where the order was restored two years ago, some demonstrations took place against them, and a number of persons were arrested. Disturbances had likewise occurred at Modena, and the lectures of the medical faculty had been suspended. Several carabineers had been killed in the legation of Ravenna, in a collision with some young men of Castel Bolognese.

TURKEY, SYRIA, AND EGYPT.—Letters from Constantinople of the 2d inst., state that the Grand Duke Constantine was about to leave, and the Duc de Montpensier was about to arrive in, that capital. The visits of these royal personages to the East seem to be considered rival visits. The Grand Duke having shown himself to the Greeks, and having become their hero, the French Prince, by appearing among the papal Catholics of that part of the world, is supposed to be anxious to captivate their enthusiasm. This at least is the popular construction that is put upon the visit he is about to make. But it is said that he can hardly expect to excite anything like the sensation that has accompanied the Grand Duke in all his movements, or to leave behind him the deep impression which the Russian Prince in a few days appears to have made on the Raya population of Constantinople and its environs. The Duc de Montpensier arrived at Alexandria from Tunis on the 30th ult., in the Gomer steam-frigate, and at the departure of the mail was on his way to Cairo, after having been sumptuously entertained by the Pacha.—Accounts from Malta of the 14th inst., state that the Hecla, which arrived on the 13th, conveyed accounts of another awful calamity by fire, exceeding even those which it has of late been our lot to notice. On the 3d, at about 6 P.M., a fire broke out in a cook's shop at Smyrna, which, aided by the high wind that prevailed, lasted 17 hours, was not extinguished until it had reduced to ashes as many as 7000 houses, embracing the whole of the Greek and Armenian quarter, and the Dutch consulate ; and it is reckoned that the loss of property will amount to 300,000*l.* sterling. 5000 souls are thrown out of their habitations, and the misery that prevails is beyond all conception. Entire families, from a state of affluence, have been reduced to abject misery and destitution. Up to the 9th the charitable had come forward with aid to the extent of 1000*l.*, and this amount would, it was hoped, be trebled by the evening of the 10th, but still it will not go far towards alleviating the misery that prevails.—Letters from Beyrout, of the 29th June, mention that intelligence had just arrived there of a general rising of the Greeks in Crete, but no particulars are given.

INDIA AND CHINA.—A Calcutta mail has brought journals and letters from that city of the 2d June, with letters of an equally recent date from Bombay, by way of Madras. This gives us 12 days later intelligence than that brought by the last mail. But the events which have occurred in this short lapse of time do not offer much novelty. It appears that preparations are in progress for the renewal of hostilities in the Ferozepore district after the rainy season. Military stores in great abundance were being conveyed to Jumna. From Lahore the news is that the Queen-mother has abandoned Gholab Singh, and to have appointed Jowahir Singh, her own brother, as the Wuzeer. The troops are quietly looking on, but they seem to be brooding mischief. Nothing, however, was said of hostile movements against the British, and it was probable that so long as Jowahir Singh remained at the head of affairs, and his sister possessed the rather remarkable power she had for some time exercised over the army, no more would be heard of the threatened invasion. Peshora Singh had taken possession of several villages, which he expressed his determination to retain. It was stated that they yield a revenue of 60,000 rupees.—According to the accounts we have received from Affghanistan, the Ameer had given up his intention of seizing Peshawur, moved thereto by his wish to leave the Seikhs unembarrassed in their threatened conflict with the British, whom he would not like as neighbours settled in the Punjab. By the latest reports, however, it would appear that, even if Dost Mahomed had given up his hostile designs, his son and Wuzeer, Akhbar Khan, was still bent on the attack. Sir C. Napier's recent advance against the robber tribes in Upper Scinde seemed to have greatly alarmed the chiefs of Candahar, who imagined he was about to pay them a visit. One of them, it was said, hastened to Cabul to request the Ameer's intercession with the British Government. There had been a counter-revolution in Nepaul. The famous chief Matabur Singh, whose influence enabled the old king's son to force his father to abdicate in his favour, had been assassinated. He was admitted to a private audience with the old king, and shot dead in the royal presence. Deprived of this powerful friend and supporter, the young man had become a mere cipher ; the father had resumed the government, and affairs had reverted to their former position.—At Bombay hot weather had prevailed, and to a fearful extent, during the last few days before the departure of the mail. There is no appearance of the rains setting in. The cholera has begun its ravages at Bombay, at Panwell, and at Poona, and all through the country, and great apprehensions are entertained of its extension, unless the monsoon comes to cool the atmosphere, and to afford a supply of good water, which is much wanted in the island. Among the Europeans who have been carried off by cholera is Lieut.-Col. Macdonald, Deputy Adjutant-General.—The intelligence from China, which comes down to the 12th April, is somewhat more important than for some time back. Piracy and robberies of the most daring kind were constant around Canton and the islands adjacent. At Canton an attack had been lately made upon Mr. Montgomery Martin, Mr. Jackson, the Vice-Consul, and the Rev. Mr. Staunton, colonial chaplain, by a body of Chinese pelting them with stones, and using the most insulting threats and language. Mr. Jackson, who was a little behind the others, had his arms pinioned, his clothes torn, and a gold chain taken from his neck ; and Mr. Martin, with Mr. Staunton, coming to his assistance, were likewise assailed—the former narrowly escaping the thrust of a dagger aimed at his breast while the latter was robbed of everything he had about him. The mob soon increased, and even unroofed a house for the purpose of affording them missiles; fortunately, however, the three fell in with a guide, who conducted them in safety to the factories. This case has been strongly brought to the notice of the Imperial Commissioner. At Victoria, likewise, a riot had occurred, which has fortunately not been attended with any serious result. About 50 Chinese had collected at the west of the town armed with boat-hooks, axes, &c., bent upon some mischief—these gradually increased in numbers, and the affair, beginning to assume a rather dangerous form, the authorities deemed it proper at once to interfere. Thirteen of the principals were taken—some put into confinement for five and six months, while others were severely flogged. Similar scenes had been of frequent occurrence at Ningpo and other places. At Amoy, strange though it appears, so general is the Chinese hatred towards the English residents, that it has been requisite to dispatch the Vixen steamer, in order to quell the disturbances which are expected to arise; but particulars of these have not yet come to hand. Governor Davis seems to be generally run down, and the strongest comparisons are drawn between his administration of affairs with that of Sir H. Pottinger. A translation of Ke-Ying's memorial on the subject of the Christian religion has been published in the Friend of China, from which it appears that the measure for tolerating Christianity was brought to the Emperor's attention, at the request of the French Plenipotentiary, M. Lagrené, and that it extends only to the five ports open for foreign trade—the prohibition against proselytising in the interior being still as much in force as ever.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Cape papers to the 28th May have come to hand, which give further details of the state of affairs on the north-eastern boundary. No military movement of importance has taken place since the date of the last accounts. The Artillery, under Capt. Shepherd, crossed the Orange River on the 3d May, reached Philippolis on the 4th, and were to move forward to Colonel Richardson's camp at Swart Kops on the 5th. One troop of the 7th Dragoon Guards, under Captain Campbell, remains at Colesberg; the rest of the squadron have crossed the river, and joined the main body under Colonel Richardson, who had been actively engaged in visiting different points of the country in which his camp is situate, but no armed bodies or camps of Boers have been found, and all was in a state of tranquillity. A rumour was abroad that a strong intrenched camp had been formed by the Boers on the Modder River; but much importance is not attached to this report, and it is generally thought that by the rapid and decisive movement of Colonel Richardson, the peace of that country has been effectually secured.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE presented a petition from certain magistrates of the county of Leitrim, praying the Government to take some decisive steps to tranquillise that part of Ireland. He also inquired if Mr. Watson had been rebuked or dismissed from the commission of the peace for having presided over a meeting of different Orange lodges, held at Lisburn in June last, and for having assisted in the reorganisation of the Orange societies.—Lord STANLEY replied that the conduct of Mr. Watson had not escaped the notice of Government, and that he had been called on to explain his proceedings. He could not conceal from the noble Marquis, nor from their lordships, that Government had seen with the deepest regret, and with no inconsiderable disappointment, that throughout a considerable portion of the north of Ireland the Orange societies had been so ill-judged, so imprudent, and so reckless, as to neglect the caution which had been given by the Government in withdrawing the Procession Act, and the remonstrance which had been addressed to them by those amongst them who had the greatest claim to their confidence and esteem. He thought that it was a melancholy picture of the present state of Ireland that so large a portion of the population, or rather, he should say, the two factions that now distracted Ireland, should appear to be bent on nothing so much as to embitter that hostility which it had been the object of this as well as the preceding Governments to palliate and mitigate; and as long as both parties continued to regard each other with feelings of dislike, it was hopeless for any Government or any statesman to attempt to materially improve the condition of a country which was so torn to pieces by the unhappy violence of its own inhabitants.—Lord Brougham's Bill to provide recognizances in Railway Bills passed through committee.—Lord BEAUMONT moved for papers relative to late events in Syria, and questioned Lord Aberdeen as to the exclusive protectorate reported to have been claimed by France in the Levant, and as to the intentions of Government in reference to that claim.—The Earl of ABERDEEN replied that he thought he might safely say that there was no sort of foundation for the statement that the French Government intended to withdraw itself from alliance with the other Powers on the Eastern question. Their lordships knew that five great Powers were acting together, by their Ambassadors at Constantinople, and by their Consuls in the province of Syria. In such an alliance different opinions would be entertained, and temporary difficulties might prevail, but generally, he was glad to state, that there had been the most cordial concord between all the Powers with regard to the affairs of the East, and that to that good understanding France had been a willing party. He attributed the disturbances in Syria mainly to the apathy of the Turkish Government, and stated a particular instance in which our consul at Beyrout, Colonel Rose, had, at much risk and exertion, rescued a body of 600 Maronites, men, women, and children. The agents of other Powers might write glowing despatches, but he was satisfied when the agents of England quietly and energetically acted. He agreed to the production of the documents, as they had already been ordered by the House of Commons.—Lord STANLEY, in moving the second reading of the Australian Waste Lands Bill, stated the nature of its provisions, which are intended to alter the system hitherto pursued, so far as to adapt it to the different circumstances of our Australian colonies. The general rule was the sale of waste lands, in order to create an emigration fund, the object being the concentration of capital and labour. But this was not applicable to New South Wales, which is mainly pastoral, and where vast districts, beyond the limits of the settlements, are occupied by the flock-masters, called squatters, under licence from the colonial government. The emigration fund is also rendered unnecessary in Van Diemen's Land, which is now become the penal colony (transportation to New South Wales having ceased), into which there are poured annually about 4000 male convicts, the refuse of our population. The noble lord went into detail on the Bill, which, after a brief discussion, was read a second time.—On the motion of Lord STANLEY, the Foreign Lotteries Bill was read a third time, and the noble lord intimated that it was the intention of the Stamp-office rigidly to prosecute newspapers and periodicals for the publication of advertisements having reference to foreign lotteries.—On the motion of the Duke of RICHMOND, the High Constables Bill was read a third time, and the Field Gardens Bill passed its second reading.

Monday.—The royal assent was given by commission to 93 public and private Bills, viz.:—Sir H. Pottinger's Annuity Bill, Assessed Taxes Composition Bill, Timber Ships Bill, Oaths Dispensation Bill, West India Islands Bill, Seal-office Abolition Bill, Public Museums of Art Bill, Canal Companies Carriers Bill, Dog Stealing Bill, Railway Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Bill, Infeoftment (Scotland) Bill, Banking (Scotland) Bill, Statute Labour (Scotland) Bill, Arrestment of Wages (Scotland) Bill, Schoolmasters (Scotland) Bill, Banking (Ireland) Bill, Constables Public Works (Ireland) Bill, Glossop Gas Bill, Glasgow Bridges Bill, Totness Markets and Waterworks Bill, Wolverhampton Waterworks Bill, Lyme Regis Improvement Market and Waterworks Bill, Dundee Waterworks Bill, Hartlepool Pier and Port Bill, Kendal Waterworks Bill, Manchester Improvement Bill, Chester Improvement Bill, Agricultural and Commercial Bank of Ireland Bill, Queenborough Borough Bill, Forth and Clyde Navigation and Canal Bill, Manchester Court of Record Bill, Reversionary Interest Society Bill, Keyingham Drainage Bill, Shipley-lane-head and Barnsley-road Bill, Harwell and Streatley Road Bill, Warwick Rectory Bill, Lady Sandys' (or Turner's) Estate Bill, Kidwelly Inclosure Bill; and the following Railway Bills:—London and Greenwich, Belfast and Ballymena, North British, Lancaster and Carlisle, York and North Midland (Harrowgate branch), North Woolwich, Guildford Junction, Waterford and Kilkenny, Exeter and Crediton, Bridgewater Navigation, Sheffield and Rotherham, Edinburgh and Glasgow, Newcastle and Darlington (Brandling Junction), Southampton and Dorchester, Eastern Union; Glasgow, Paisley, Kilmarnock, and Ayr; Dundalk and Enniskillen, Eastern Union (Bury St. Edmund's), Londonderry and Enniskillen, Chester and Birkenhead, Whitehaven and Furness, Manchester, Bury, and Rossendale, Great North of England and Richmond, Blackburn and Preston, Leeds and Thirsk, Huddersfield and Manchester, North Wales, Taw Vale and Dock Bill, Manchester and Birmingham (Ashton branch), Ashton, Staleybridge, and Liverpool; Eastern Counties (Ely branch), Manchester South Junction, Trent Valley, London and Brighton (Horsham branch), Ulster Extension, North Wales Mineral, St. Helen's Canal, Great North of England (Hartlepool branch), Great Western (Ireland, Dublin to Mullingar), Cockermouth and Workington, Richmond (Surrey), Cork and Bandon, Liverpool and Manchester, Great Southern and Western (Ireland), Preston and Wyre, Lynn and Dereham, Middlesborough and Redcar, Dublin and Drogheda, Newry and Enniskillen, Dublin and Belfast, Waterford and Limerick.—The Duke of RICHMOND presented a petition signed by the veteran officers who had served in the Peninsular campaigns, praying their lordships to recommend to Her Majesty to bestow on them some consideration for their military services. The noble Duke, having briefly referred to the eminent and gallant achievements of the Peninsular army, entreated the House to recommend to the Sovereign to place these veteran soldiers on the same footing as their gallant and more fortunate brethren in arms who fought at Waterloo, in India, or in China, and who had received medals for their distinguished services.—The Duke of WELLINGTON, while fully admitting the brilliant and most important services of the Peninsular army, deprecated the interference of their Lordships in a matter which constitutionally was the prerogative of the Crown alone. He recapitulated the various rewards the Peninsular army had received. They had obtained the thanks of both Houses of Parliament 16 times; they had medals struck in their honour on 19 occasions, and distributed, according to the rules of the services, to not less than 1300 officers; they had received special brevets, followed by many advantages and privileges; they had seven peerages conferred on the most distinguished; and they had not less than 400 of the different classes of the Order of the Bath distributed amongst them. The Battle of Waterloo was an unexampled victory, and therefore medals were struck and given to every individual who was present at that action; the army which were in Northern India had retrieved the glory and honour of the country after it had suffered a disaster almost unparalleled in our history, and in that case too a medal was distributed to every officer and soldier; the operations in China were most rapid, extraordinary, and successful; and in that case likewise a general medal was given. But these were all particular cases, which could not be reckoned as precedents, and which stood alone. The Peninsular army had been highly distinguished, and the prayer of the officers who petitioned the House could not be granted without, as a matter of equal justice, likewise granting medals to every sailor and soldier who fought during the French revolutionary war.—After a few words from the Marquis of LONDONDERRY, disapproving of the petition, and censuring the Duke of Richmond for presenting it, the petition was ordered to lie on the table.—Lord STANLEY then moved the second reading of the Irish Colleges Bill. After the very lengthened consideration which the measure had undergone in the other House, it was not necessary to waste words on the advantages which it contemplated. Their lordships were now called on to legislate for the education of the middle class in Ireland, which, from the peculiar circumstances of the country, was in this respect at present wholly unprovided for. While Scotland had five universities open to all classes, Ireland, if the institution at Belfast was excepted, had only one, Trinity College, which was almost solely devoted to the highest classes. As it was absolutely necessary to educate the Roman Catholic people of Ireland, what was to be done? Were you to unprotestantise Trinity College? To that Government would never consent. Or were you to establish in Dublin three or four colleges for separate creeds? To this they were equally averse, as such an arrangement would only produce rivalry. There was only one other alternative, and that was to establish separate provincial colleges for the laity, in which no religious test would be insisted on. The Bill had been stigmatised as a "gigantic scheme of godless education," but this stigma he entirely repudiated, and those who adduced it seemed to forget that it would apply equally to the London University, and to those of Scotland. After entering at length into the details of the Bill, Lord Stanley concluded by entreating the House to permit the youth of Ireland to be educated in common in those branches of learning which could not affect their religious opinions.—The Earl of SHREWSBURY could not give his sanction to a measure disapproved of by the whole Roman Catholic clergy of Ireland. It was, in fact, rightly termed a scheme of "godless education," and one framed to conciliate the fanatical prejudices of England. Government must make up their minds to rule Ireland as a Catholic people, or they would never win the affections of the Irish.—Lord BROUGHAM said that he did not think he was endangering his Protestantism in supporting this Bill, which was one of the best measures ever brought before Parliament. It would be impossible to unite all classes in Ireland in one academical system so long as any religious test was imposed. The objection that this was a "godless education" was most absurd, and a large class who used the words only meant by them a "priestless" education. Another class of objectors said, the Maynooth grant and the present bill were paving the way for the endowment of the Roman Catholic clergy in Ireland; he did not see the connexion between the measures, but, even if there were any, it was not, in his opinion, a very formidable objection, for a liberal endowment of that clergy would be the only effectual cure for the evils of that unhappy country. The noble Lord concluded by passing an eloquent panegyric on Earl Grey, who had deserved well of Ireland for his efforts in furthering Catholic emancipation, and one of whose darling projects had been the endowment of the Catholic clergy.—The Earl of CARNARVON deprecated the severing of religious and secular instruction, and thought the present measure the severest blow ever struck at the Protestant religion. The noble Earl concluded by moving, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day three months.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said the bill contained three principles; first, the necessity of educating the people at large; secondly, the duty of so proportioning that education as to suit the condition of all classes of the community; and, thirdly, the establishment of such a system of education as would render it acceptable to persons of all religions. In his opinion the measure would be of no use at all to Ireland if it were confined exclusively to one form of religious belief, and though he objected to some of its details, he should vote for the second reading.—Lords CLIFFORD and BEAUMONT expressed their unqualified approbation of the bill.—The Bishop of NORWICH said that he had come down to the House quite undecided, and not at all pleased with the bill, but that Lord Stanley's noble arguments and eloquent speech had removed all his scruples. He, therefore, was ready to give it his unqualified support.—The Duke of NEWCASTLE entered his strong protest against a measure, which he regretted should have been introduced by any Christian Government.—The amendment was then put and lost, after which the bill was read a second time.

Tuesday.—The Art Unions Bill, the Waste Lands (Australia) Bill, and the Unlawful Oaths (Ireland) Bill passed through committee.—Lord BROUGHAM called attention to an attack reported by the Times as having been made on him by Mr. Fitzstephen French, in the House of Commons, on the previous night. In the conversational debate which had taken place on the case of Messrs. Boldero and Bonham, Mr. F. French was alleged to have charged Lord Brougham as having, in the committee of inquiry into the allegations of fraudulent transactions in the Dublin and Galway Railway Company, been guilty of the suppression of exculpatory evidence, with holding secret communication with hostile parties, and accompanying these charges with strong personal reflections on his lordship. The noble lord termed the reported charges foul, libellous, slanderous, and a gross breach of the privileges of the House. He entered into an explanation of the course which he had pursued on the committee of inquiry. It appeared that the Standing Orders Committee of the House of Commons had reported against the Dublin and Galway, but Mr. French, doubtless animated by patriotic feelings, induced the House to rescind the resolution of the committee, and permit the railway Bill to be proceeded with. But it afterwards appeared that Mr. French was one of the directors of the contemplated company, the board trafficking in shares, realising considerable sums, and doubtless gratifying their patriotic feelings at the same time. But on the petition of a Mr. Pym an inquiry had been instituted in a committee of their lordships' House, from which it appeared that out of 970 applications for shares in the Dublin and Galway, only 111 had been accompanied by references as to character and solvency, and inquiry having been made into 29 of these 111 references, no less than 14 were found to be false or fraudulent, on which, on the principle, doubtless, that if they went farther they would find worse, farther search into the remainder was abandoned. He gave one or two instances of the character of individuals to whom shares were allotted. One, who was held to be "respectable" because she lived at "Lower Tooting, Surrey," turned out to be an old female pauper, who could neither read nor write. The exculpatory evidence which he was charged with suppressing was that of Mr. Parkes, the well-known attorney, who however, was only generally acquainted with the practices pursued by railway companies, while the witness whom he had suggested, the Secretary of the London and York, proved that the practice pursued by the Dublin and Galway was perfectly the reverse of that adopted on his line. He contrasted the severe and pharisaical course adopted towards Messrs. Boldero and Bonham with that general laxity which tolerated such practices as those he had exposed. Reverting to the attack of Mr. French, he was bound to believe it a gross fabrication, for other morning papers reported the honourable member as having been inaudible, and his respect and veneration for the House of Commons forbade him from entertaining the supposition that, if the reported words had been heard, they would have passed unnoticed so gross a breach of privilege as the ribaldry said to have been uttered against a peer of Parliament, for the exercise of his duty on a secret committee of their lordship's House. Warning members of the House of Commons that privilege would not protect them in printing their speeches, and newspapers that the law would punish them for publishing slanderous attacks, even though spoken in Parliament, he left the matter in the hands of the House.—The Earl of WICKLOW suggested that the printer and reporter of the Times should be ordered to attend at the bar.—The Duke of WELLINGTON pointed out the inconvenience of that course, as they could only ask such questions of the printer and reporter as would amount to asking them if they were guilty of a breach of privilege by publishing anything that was spoken in Parliament.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said that the witnesses might be asked from what source they derived the words which had been printed.—The further consideration of the subject was postponed to Thursday, in order to give time to decide on the course most advisable to adopt.—The House resolved itself into committee on the Irish Colleges Bill, and Lord STANLEY intimated the intention of Government to perfect the new colleges at some future time by connecting them with an university for conferring degrees. This statement was warmly approved by the Marquises of CLANRICARDE and LANSDOWNE, and Lord MONTEAGLE; and after a few words from the Earl of ELLENBOROUGH, the Bill passed through committee, and was reported without amendment. The Apprehension of Offenders Bill, the Turnpike-roads Bill, and the Bail in Error Bill were read a third time and passed.

Thursday.—Earl BATHURST reported for the committee on the Dublin and Galway Railway Bill, that the most systematic frauds had been practised in fabricating a subscription list; that a petition had been presented to the House of Commons from which it appeared that two sums of 150*l.* and 500*l.* had been offered to be paid in the event of the Bill passing through committee in that House; and that they deemed it unnecessary to proceed further in their investigation without further directions from their lordships.—The Earl of BROUGHAM then intimated that he would next day move that the Bill be not proceeded with during the present session.—Lord BROUGHAM then reverted to the case of privilege raised by the reported attack of Mr. Fitzstephen French on himself. Finding that Mr. French had apologised, and retracted whatever might have given pain, he recommended that their lordships should proceed no farther. This, however, did not debar him from his remedy at law against the Morning Chronicle and the Times, in both which papers the report had appeared. The Morning Chronicle, by way, as he supposed, of mending the matter, had, that morning, while giving him credit for performing a public benefit, charged him with having prejudged the question, as to the merits of the scheme. Now, for anything these slanderers knew, he might be an advocate of the Bill. He was not a member of the committee on the Bill; the only part he had taken was as a member of the committee which had been appointed to inquire into the allegations of fraud and forgery. After a few words from the Earl of WICKLOW, the matter dropped.—Lord BROUGHAM moved an address to the Crown, praying that means might be taken to enable their lordships to be accommodated in the new House of Parliament by next session.—Lord WHARNCLIFFE did not think that any advantage would be gained by hurrying their lordships into the new Houses before the Commons' Chamber was completed. Amongst other disadvantages, they would be surrounded by workmen, the noise of whose operations would prove a serious inconvenience.—The Duke of WELLINGTON reminded their lordships that it was necessary that a convenient communication should be kept up between the two Houses on such occasions as the opening or the prorogation of Parliament by Her Majesty.—After a brief debate shared in by Lord CAMPBELL and the Earl of WICKLOW, Lord Brougham's motion was rejected by 40 to 16.—The Pauper Lunatics and Lunatic Asylums Bill was read a second time; and then it was discovered that the Bill introduced into their lordships' House was not a correct copy of the Bill as it passed the Commons. After a reference to precedents, all the proceedings taken in the Bill before their lordships were vacated, and a correct Bill was introduced instead, and read a first time. The Commons Inclosure Bill, the Merchant Seamen's Bill, and the Drainage (Ireland) Bill, were read a second time. The Colleges (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

Friday.—The Earl of BESBOROUGH moved that, in order to mark their lordship's reprobation of the Dublin and Galway Railway Company, their Bill be further considered that day three months.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE thought it desirable that the evidence should be first printed, and moved that the debate be adjourned.—Lords MONTEAGLE and WHARNCLIFFE concurred, and after a short discussion the debate was adjourned till Monday. [Left sitting.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday.—At an early sitting, the Ecclesiastical Patronage (Ireland) Bill was read a third time.—The Jurors Book (Ireland) Bill, the Highways Bill, and the Valuation (Ireland) Bill passed through committee.—At the evening sitting, on the motion of the SOLICITOR-GENERAL, the Small Debts Bill was committed pro formâ, for the purpose of having several clauses added, and amendments made in it.—Sir J. GRAHAM, in reply to a question from Mr. T. DUNCOMBE, and in reference to a case which had lately occurred in Staffordshire, stated that he had written to the Lord-Lieutenant of the county, and had pointed out to him the reprehensibility of the practice of handcuffing and chaining prisoners committed on light charges, and the necessity of directing the magistrates to change the practice, which he regretted to say prevailed about Wolverhampton.—In reply to the Earl of ARUNDEL and SURREY, Sir J. GRAHAM stated that Government intended to amend the Charitable Bequests (Ireland) Bill. In one point the Act had operated differently from what they had intended. Government had not intended that what were termed the regular clergy should be affected one way or the other by the Act; but he feared that in its working it had placed them in a worse position than before.—In answer to a question put by Mr. WAKLEY, Mr. SIDNEY HERBERT explained the cause of a military flogging which took place lately at Windsor. The men had refused to be surgically examined for a disease prevalent in the battalion stationed at Windsor, and had subsequently committed very grave military offences, by refusing to obey their officers; for these latter offences they had received a hundred lashes. The Secretary at War added that the report of a mutinous spirit existing in the battalion was wholly without foundation.—On going into Committee of Supply, Captain BERKELEY called attention to the importance of recompensing suitably the officers, seamen, soldiers, and marines engaged in the operations against the Chinese empire in 1840, 1841, and 1842. Enlarging on the necessity of paying due regard to both services, especially the navy, and affirming that the parsimonious conduct of Government drove the best of our sailors in disgust to America, he stated that the amount of prize money awarded to the troops engaged in the operations against China was 420,000*l.*, which was only 4*l.* a head. Had the amount of the prizes taken been awarded, they would have been entitled to a much larger sum. He concluded by moving an address to the Crown, in order to grant further recompense to the troops engaged in the Chinese war.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER opposed the motion, on the ground that the operations against China were not a regular war, but were for a special object—satisfaction for injuries inflicted on our commerce. The regular rule as to prize money could not therefore be acted on, though if all the prizes taken had been awarded, they would have yielded a much less sum than that which Government had awarded.—Sir C. NAPIER contended that the 20,000,000 dollars of ransom should have been included in the amount of prize money. The war preceding the peace of Amiens, the siege of Algiers, the battle of Navarino, and the operations in 1840 on the coast of Syria, nay, even the battle of Waterloo itself, were all parallel cases to the war with China, for none of them had been preceded by a declaration of war; and in all these the full amount of prize money had been awarded. He warmly advocated the claims of the troops to a full and fair award.—After some remarks from Mr. J. A. SMITH and Capt. PECHELL, Sir R. PEEL complained that professional men always considered that a Government should act liberally to all claimants, without regard to the public interests or purse. Had the amount of the prizes taken been awarded, there would only have been 117,000*l.* to distribute, instead of the 420,000*l.* actually awarded. At Algiers the sum awarded was 100,000*l.*; at Navarino 60,000*l.* Admitting the full merits of the troops engaged in the Chinese war, he hoped that the House would abstain from interfering with the legitimate functions of the Crown.—Mr. WILLIAMS hoped that Capt. Berkeley would not press his motion to a division.—Lord PALMERSTON recounted some of the leading incidents connected with the Chinese war, and told the House that, on the last interview he had with Sir Henry Pottinger, on the day he left England for China, he asked him how much he expected to obtain from the Emperor of China. To which Sir Henry replied, that, as the Emperor was a rich old gentleman, he would expect five millions sterling. The sum of 420,000*l.* was no doubt large, but then it must be viewed comparatively, in relation to the amount per man. Lauding the skill and valour of the troops engaged in the Chinese war, he expressed a hope that Government would reconsider their decision, and award them a more suitable recompense.—After remarks from Captains HARRIS and PLUMRIDGE, and Sir J. DUKE, the House divided, when the motion was rejected by 68 to 27.—Mr. E. DENISON called attention to the mode of sale of Church property adopted by the Irish Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and to the disposition made of the funds so acquired. He complained that by their conversion of leases into freehold, at the low rate of three years' purchase, a very large sum had been needlessly sacrificed, and that the sum actually obtained had been expended in annual charges and outgoings.—Sir J. GRAHAM said he could not concur that the conversions had been made in a wasteful or extravagant manner, but he did concur in saying that the commissioners had pursued a very imprudent course in employing the capital of this property for the annual expenses of the commission. Should it be found necessary to introduce a measure for the purpose of remedying any defects in the Act of Parliament, he should feel it his duty to bring forward a remedial measure next session. But, after what had occurred, he hoped there would be no necessity for any such measure, as whatever past errors had been committed were in course of correction.—The House went into a committee of supply, and several votes were taken. The Slave-trade (Brazil) Treaty Bill was read a second time.—The Joint Stock Companies Bill, the Municipal Districts (Ireland) Bill, the Jewish Disabilities Removal Bill, the Drainage (Ireland) Bill, the Land Revenues Act Amendment Bill, and the Merchant Seamen Bill, were read a third time and passed.

Monday.—The Games and Wagers Bill was read a second time. The Railways (Selling or Leasing) Bill, the Darby Court (Westminster) Bill, and the Militia Bill, passed through committee. The Grand Jury Presentments (Ireland) Bill, the Fisheries (Ireland) Bill, the Drainage of Lands Bill, the Masters and Workmen Bill, and the Excise Duties on Spirits (Channel Islands) Bill were read a third time and passed.—The LORD ADVOCATE moved the third reading of the Poor Law Amendment (Scotland) Bill.—Mr. HASTIE moved that it be read a third time that day six months.—After a discussion, in which Mr. WAKLEY, Mr. LOCKHART, Mr. B. ESCOTT, Mr. R. YORKE, and Mr. HENLEY joined, the amendment was negatived by a majority of 33 to 7. The Bill was then passed. In the evening sitting, Mr. HAWES asked whether Government had taken any steps in reference to the parties named in the report of the Committee on the South-Eastern Railway petition; and, if so, whether it was prepared to state what those steps were?—Sir R. PEEL intimated, that shortly after the presentation of the report Mr. Bonham and Capt. Boldero had signified to him their wish to tender their resignation of their several offices, and that it had been his painful duty to advise Her Majesty to accept their resignation. With respect to Mr. Wray, Sir J. Graham had addressed a communication to that gentleman, seriously animadverting upon his proceedings; and with respect to Mr. Hignett, the Master-General of the Ordnance had dismissed him from his situation as solicitor to that Board.—Captain BOLDERO made a statement to the House, in which he contended that the committee, on the evidence before it, had given an entire exculpation both of Mr. Bonham and himself. He then entered into an explanation of his motives in holding and selling his shares. He bowed to the decision of the committee, and, though he complained of the extreme severity of one paragraph in its report, did not intend to reflect on any member of it. He then stated that he had placed in the hands of Sir R. Peel the resignation of his office as Clerk of the Ordnance. In doing that he thought it his duty to state to the Right Hon. Baronet that it was with reference solely to the impaired degree of usefulness to the public service which might arise from the temporary impression made by recent proceedings that he so acted, having a clear conviction of the utter groundlessness of any imputation thrown upon his character, either in his private or public capacity.—Mr. HAWES, Mr. ROEBUCK, and Lord J. RUSSELL complained of the leniency extended to Mr. Wray. From the evidence given before the committee, Mr. Wray appeared equally culpable with Mr. Bonham in regard to the transactions of 1836, and the same course ought to be adopted towards both.—Mr. WARD urged in extenuation of Mr. Bonham's conduct the general disgraceful practices of many Members, at the time referred to, in respect to canvassing for private Bills.—Sir J. GRAHAM explained that, as the report of the committee set forth that Mr. Wray's conduct was deserving of "serious animadversion," he thought he had sufficiently complied with the words of the report and the justice of the case by putting on record a letter addressed to Mr. Wray, strongly animadverting on his conduct in 1836, and cautioning him as to his future proceedings. This letter he proposed to lay before the House, and called on them to suspend their judgment until they should have perused it.—Col. SIBTHORP announced his intention of calling on the House to investigate the conduct of every hon. Member in regard to railways. He himself had nothing to do with railways, but it was quite plain that the House, instead of having been pacified by references, was more in the dirt and mud than ever.—Mr. FRENCH moved for the production of all the papers connected with these proceedings, which was agreed to.—On the motion for going into committee of supply, Mr. C. BULLER drew attention to the present state of New Zealand. He recounted the events connected with the destruction of Kororaika, in the Bay of Islands; awarded Heki his due meed of praise for the chivalrous conduct he had exhibited in his warfare, and pictured the dangerous condition of the settlers, from the excited feelings of the natives, flushed by the plunder (upwards of 40,000*l.*), they had acquired, and animated by their easy victory. The settlement of Wellington, with from 4000 to 6000 colonists, who had taken out with them property to the extent of 2,000,000*l.*, was surrounded by at least 8000 natives, who were kept in check by only 50 soldiers—the rest being drawn off to protect Auckland. He threw the responsibility of this state of things on the Government; for Lord Stanley had brought about that calamity, a war of races. It was no satisfaction that Capt. Fitzroy was recalled, unless they had the positive assurance of a change of system. In the recent debate, Sir R. Peel had promised so exceedingly fair, that several members of the House blamed him for proceeding to a division against a Government so evidently disposed to what was right. Lord Stanley had, however, dashed all these pleasing anticipations, by reiterating in the House of Lords that all the difficulties of New Zealand had arisen from the conflict of the claims of the Company with the conditions entered into with the natives by the treaty of Waitangi—which treaty he declared the determination of the Government religiously to fulfil, though perfectly conscious that this "religious" observance was coupled with the proposition of a land-tax, the real object of which was the confiscation of the land of the natives. He would not call this conduct "thimble-rigging," but it was analogous to the old trick of "ring-dropping," not unfamiliar to the readers of "Roderick Random." Entering into detail on the differences between the New Zealand Company and the Government, or rather Lord Stanley, he contended that the spirit which still animated the Colonial-office was inimical to the peace, prosperity, and security of a colony so important as the one in question: and after urging that he could not possibly have any party object in view, he concluded by moving "That this House regards with regret and apprehension the state of affairs in New Zealand; and that those feelings are greatly aggravated by the want of any sufficient evidence of a change in the policy which has led to such disastrous results."—Mr. HOPE (Under-Secretary for the Colonies) went into minute particulars, in order to show that Lord Stanley was not open to the charge of deceit or unfair dealing in his intercourse with the directors of the New Zealand Company, and read extracts from letters, to show that the arrival of troops from Sydney had inspired confidence in Auckland, a portion of these reinforcements having been despatched for the protection of Wellington. The most recent intelligence led them to believe that a general combination of the native tribes was exceedingly improbable. He contended that the instructions of Lord J. Russell, when he was in the Colonial-office, recognised the native title to their lands, which was subsequently carried out by the treaty of Waitangi, and the object of Lord Stanley, who could not possibly have any hostility towards the Company, was to maintain good faith with the natives, and from this he was not to be driven in order to adopt a policy of confiscation and spoliation.—Mr. ROEBUCK pointed out that Britain had foregone its rights over New Zealand, acquired by discovery, and had, both by tacit assent and actual declaration, vested voluntarily the sovereignty over the country in its chiefs. In this independent and foreign country the New Zealand Company had acquired land, in the same way as if they had done so in France, and when this country subsequently took the sovereignty, we had no right to look into the Company's titles. Our sending out Capt. Hobson with consular power was in itself a recognition of the sovereign authority. He would not say whether or not this recognition was a wise act: but out of it came the treaty of Waitangi, the procuring means of which it was easy to understand, when it was recollected what savages were, and that for rum, powder, muskets, and blankets they would assign anything. He traced the origin of the pretended concern for the natives, by which the treaty was obtained and maintained, to selfish and interested motives. Having emancipated the blacks, there was found to be a mass of agitating power disposable; and it was a fact that it was gravely discussed to what it should be directed, a home or a colonial object. The aborigines were selected; a member of that House was allowed to ride his hobby, and get a committee, the report of which, fished up and acted on, was the cause of all their difficulties. But the missionaries profited by it, for the missionary influence ruled the Colonial-office, and no good would be effected until they wholly changed the system by which our colonies are controlled. At present Lord Stanley was governed by Mr. Stephen, and Mr. Stephen was governed by the missionaries. A year had not elapsed since we had nearly gone to war with France for the sake of Tahiti—and why? For the sake of the missionaries. Go where they would, they did no good for anybody but themselves. It was within the territories of the missionaries—those men of peace—that the first insurrection against the Queen's authority in New Zealand broke out. He did not blame either the present Government or the late Government for the calamities which had recently occurred in New Zealand, but he blamed the system of our Colonial Government. All the colonies should be placed under the direct control of the Administration at home, but with charters constituting popular governments within their limits. If some such plan were not adopted, the time of the House would be perpetually taken up by these colonial turmoils.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL regretted that, after the protracted discussion which this question underwent for three nights on a former occasion, Mr. C. Buller should have again thought proper to renew it. With regard to the land question between the Government and the New Zealand Company, he pointed out the position in which the Government was placed by the treaty of Waitangi; and contended that if the Government violated that treaty, it would be justly chargeable with all the lamentable consequences which might ensue from it.—Mr. LABOUCHERE could not allow this question to be treated as a question between the New Zealand Company and Lord Stanley. The question was whether we should preserve to the British Crown an important colony which was on the point of being wrested from it, and whether we should save the unfortunate colonists from ruin by interfering with the very unsatisfactory policy of Government. He defended Mr. Stephen from the unjustifiable attack made upon him by Mr. Roebuck, and passed a high eulogium on the great talents and intelligence of that gentleman. He insisted that Government had not given any assurances upon this subject which were at all satisfactory.—Sir R. INGLIS defended the missionaries from the attack which had been made upon them by Mr. Roebuck. The animus of the New Zealand Company, as exhibited that evening by Mr. Roebuck, and on a former evening by Mr. Aglionby, was anything but favourable to that Company. They had told the House, though not in express words, that the late occurrences in New Zealand had taken place either by the direction or by the neglect of those reverend personages. He called on the House to reflect on the condition of New Zealand before the missionaries entered it, and contrasted the conduct of John Heki after the late battle with our settlers with that of Colonel Pelissier in Africa. He joined in the eulogium passed on Mr. Stephen by Mr. Labouchere, and observed, that a more intelligent and self-denying servant no Government ever possessed. He should continue to Government the same confidence which he had hitherto given to it on this question.—Mr. AGLIONBY complained of the gross misrepresentations of the Attorney-General, and passed a severe censure on the conduct of Mr. Dandeson Coates and the missionaries in New Zealand.—After a few words in explanation from Mr. HOPE, the debate was adjourned.—The Real Property (No. 2) Bill, the Turnpike Roads (Scotland) Bill, and the Unions (Ireland) Bill, were read a second time.—The Valuation (Ireland) Bill, the Slave Trade (Brazil) Bill, the Stamp Duties Bill, and the Taxing Master Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill passed through committee.—On the motion for the third reading of the Jewish Disabilities Bill, Sir R. INGLIS moved, as an amendment, that it be read a third time that day three months.—Colonel SIBTHORP seconded the motion.—On a division there were—For the third reading, 43; Against it, 11; Majority, 32.—The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

Tuesday.—At its early sitting, the Highways Bill and the Railways Letting or Leasing Bill were read a third time and passed. The Municipal Districts (Ireland) Bill, and the Small Debts Bill went through committee. The Lunatics Bill was read a third time, several provisoes having been moved, and some of them agreed to. At the afternoon sitting an attempt was made to obtain precedence of the notices of motion for the resumption of the adjourned debate on New Zealand. This, however, was ineffectual, and therefore Mr. HUME, whose motion stood first on the list, moved "An humble address to Her Majesty, to direct inquiry into the alleged charges against Pertaub Shean, late Rajah of Sattara; and against Ballajee Penil Natoo, who assisted Colonel Ovans at the Court of Sattara." Mr. Hume read the petition of the Rajah, and entered into a long account of the harsh and oppressive treatment which that Prince alleged that he had received from the East India Company.—Dr. BOWRING, in seconding the motion, complained of the absence of members on both sides whenever a discussion on Indian affairs took place.—Mr. E. TENNENT said that this question had been so often before both Houses of Parliament that he must take it for granted that every member was fully acquainted with the details of it. Both Houses had repeatedly decided that the treatment of the Rajah was compatible with justice, and no benefit could, therefore, be derived from re-opening the question. He should, therefore, meet the motion with a decided negative.—After a discussion, in which Mr. WILLIAMS, Sir E. COLEBROOKE, and Mr. WAKLEY supported the motion for inquiry, and Mr. HOGG and Mr. B. BARING opposed it, Mr. HUME intimated his desire of withdrawing his motion, leaving the responsibility of withholding inquiry upon the Government.—The House, however, refused leave to withdraw the motion, and it was in consequence negatived without a division.—Mr. HAWES withdrew, for this session, his motion touching Danish claims.—Mr. EWART then brought on his motion for the reduction of the duties on butter and cheese. He adduced the circulars of Messrs. Keeling and Hunt as a proof of the practical benefit which would be conferred by a reduction of the duty, which he also urged on the general principles of free-trade economy.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER protested against being called on to sacrifice 320,000*l.*, when the whole anticipated surplus of the current year was only 120,000*l.* He thought the Government had been liberal enough in reducing taxation this year, and at all events could not entertain the question before next budget day.—Sir R. PEEL resisted the motion on financial grounds. He anticipated the most favourable results from the remissions which he had made in the sugar, auction, and other duties, this year, and would not discuss the propriety of removing any other restrictions on trade until next year.—After a short debate, in which Mr. GIBSON, Mr. TOLLEMACHE, Mr. NEWDEGATE, Mr. COBDEN, Mr. T. EGERTON, and other members, took part, the House divided, when the motion was rejected by 136 to 38.—The LORD ADVOCATE obtained leave to introduce a Bill to alter and amend the law and practice in Scotland as to the Service of Heirs; and a Bill to alter and amend the practice in Scotland with regard to Crown Charters and Precepts from Chancery.—The Documentary Evidence Bill, the Real Property Bill, the Assignment of Leases Bill, the Granting of Leases Bill, and the Fees (Criminal Courts) Bill, were read a second time.—The Unions (Ireland) Bill was committed, the Jurors Books (Ireland) Bill was recommitted with amendments and passed, and the Taxing Master Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill was reported.

Wednesday.—At a morning sitting, Mr. MACKINNON, after an ineffectual attempt to carry his Smoke Prohibition Bill without serious mutilations, withdrew it, on the understanding that Government would take up the subject, and institute a scientific inquiry during the recess.—The Small Debts Bill (No. 3) passed through committee, and the Lunatics Bill was read a third time and passed. The Real Property Bill and the Customs Bills were read a second time.—Mr. B. DENISON reported, from the committee on the London and York Railway Bill, that, with the exception of two branches, to Wakefield and Sheffield, the consideration of which were postponed, the committee had declared that the whole Bill was proved. The hon. member moved for leave to divide the London and York Bill into two or more Bills, so as that part of the Bill which had been approved of might be separated from that which was still open to discussion.—After a discussion the motion was postponed.—At the evening sitting, Mr. FITZSTEPHEN FRENCH made the amende to Lord Brougham for the speech written if not spoken by the hon. member. He admitted the accuracy of the speech reported in the Times, and declared that, after comparing it with his notes, he found it literally and wholly correct. Having thus avowed the speech as his own, Mr. French, in the amplest manner, apologised for having made it, stating that having in a moment of excitement made use of strong expressions respecting Lord Brougham, he withdrew every one of them which reflected personally on his lordship. He regretted the use of any expressions which had given pain either to Lord Brougham, or to any other individual.—After a few words from Mr. CLIVE, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER expressed a hope that the observations which had just fallen from Mr. F. French would allay the feelings of irritation entertained by Lord Brougham. He suggested to hon. members, in consequence of what had just occurred, the propriety of not violating in future that rule of the House which prohibited all comment on the conduct of individual members of the House of Lords, either in their political or judicial character.—The County Rates Bill then passed through committee.—The adjourned debate on New Zealand was resumed by Capt. ROUS, who said that he had charged the New Zealand Company on a former occasion with having sold 120,000*l.* worth of land when they had not a single acre in their possession, and with having induced a number of labouring men to go to New Zealand in their employment, with whom they had subsequently broken faith most grossly. He repeated those charges now; and, furthermore, he wanted to know what equivalent had been received for 1,600 shares of 25*l.* each, or for 40,000*l.* which the directors had reserved for themselves, and for which they had never accounted? He contended that by their misconduct they had placed their charter in abeyance. He expressed a hope that it would never be renewed, for no Governor of New Zealand could perform his duty faithfully to the country or to Her Majesty so long as an imperium in imperio was permitted to exist. He then made an attack upon the conduct of the missionaries in New Zealand, whose object had been to get rid of all Europeans from the island, in order that they might exercise authority over it themselves. If the Government would allow him to advise them, he would tell them to send out at once a thousand soldiers in two of those ships of the line which were now cruising in the Channel; to deprive the New Zealand Company of their charter, paying them a reasonable remuneration for the loss of it; to guarantee to the British settlers the right of title to their lands; to put an end to the protectors of the natives, and to give more protectors to the British settlers.—Mr. WARD replied to the attack of Capt. Rous. The sum of 40,000*l.* which the Company had received for 1,600 shares had been paid away for land, which had since been transferred to the Government, to a pre-existing company in New Zealand. Capt. Rous also accused the directors of having sold land of which they did not possess a single acre. Now, if New Zealand were an independent country, as Capt. Rous contended, the directors of this company were at perfect liberty to purchase territory from the native chiefs. They had purchased it from them, they had it in their possession, and therefore they had a right to sell it. He likewise denied that the directors had broken faith with the labourers whom they had carried out to New Zealand. Those labourers had left their native country to get rid of the pressure which they endured at home, and until the blight of this misunderstanding with the Colonial-office fell upon them, nothing could be more prosperous than their condition in their new country. It was unfortunate that the government of a colony like New Zealand should have been intrusted to two such men as Captain Hobson and Captain Fitzroy, of whom the first was paralysed by illness, and the latter had a mind deranged by the responsibility of his position. He urged on Sir R. Peel the necessity of following out his own expressed convictions on the subject, and disregarding the feelings, the obstinacy, or the petulance of Lord Stanley, to bestow on a colony, comprising 10,000 English settlers, and 100,000 brave and active aborigines, the benefit of a government by which all questions in dispute would be equitably settled, and an important colony be rescued from anarchy by the application of the ordinary principles of justice.—Mr. G. PALMER, Lord INGESTRE, and Mr. HAWES, followed on behalf of the company.—Sir C. NAPIER said, that Lord Stanley's neglect to punish the authors of the massacre at Wairoa had led to the late melancholy catastrophe at Russell, which was foreseen by every man who had the least acquaintance with the affairs of New Zealand. He recommended Commander Robertson to the patronage of the Admiralty. Had all the officers upon that station been animated by the same gallant spirit, the Bay of Islands would still have been in our possession.—Sir R. PEEL, after defending Mr. Stephen from some imputations that had been cast upon him in the course of the debate, eulogised the gallant conduct of Commander Robertson, which he publicly announced should be rewarded immediately with promotion. He then directed his attention to the motion before the House, and contended that great responsibility rested on the heads of those who had again brought it forward. The only ground assigned for doing so was that the language held by Sir J. Graham and himself during the last debate was at variance with the course subsequently pursued by Government. He should make no criminatory attack upon the New Zealand Company. He still thought that, if it could be brought to act in harmony with Government, it would be an useful instrument in promoting colonisation. He would not supersede Lord Stanley in the control of the Colonial Office. He believed that Lord Stanley was animated by a desire to promote the interests of the New Zealand Company so far as he could do so consistently with his duty to the Crown and with good faith to others. He had nothing to do now with the miserable controversies of 1842 and 1843. The only question before the House was, whether the correspondence which had passed between Lord Stanley and the New Zealand Company was in conformity with the assurances which he had given in his speech, not on his own part personally, but after full deliberation and concert on the part of the Cabinet. He then read an extract from the instructions of Capt. Grey, for the purpose of showing the conciliatory spirit in which they were couched to the Company; and proceeded to show that he had made no declarations with respect to the future government of New Zealand which Lord Stanley had not endeavoured to carry out. He had said that in his opinion representative Government was the best mode of governing distant colonies. He had said further, that in the present state of New Zealand, looking at the dispersion of its scanty population, it would be difficult to give effect to any system of representative government; but he had likewise added, that under existing circumstances the best plan would be to form municipal institutions with extensive powers of local taxation for local purposes. He had further expressed a hope that these municipal institutions would form a germ for a future representative system. He then showed that Lord Stanley's instructions to Capt. Grey contained precisely similar declarations. Lord Stanley expressly declared that the principle of representative government was a good one, but regretted that the circumstances of New Zealand prevented its application. He next asserted that he had made no declaration on the land question and on the relations of the Company with the Government inconsistent with the instructions drawn up by Lord Stanley. After all the controversies upon this subject the real question involved in this debate was, "shall the Government in this country guarantee in certain localities in New Zealand certain rights over land to the New Zealand Company?" He thought that the claims of that company should be liberally met on the part of the Government; but he said distinctly that the Government would not do this—the Government would not undertake here, in the absence of all surveys and of all information as to the validity of the claims of the natives, to assign to the New Zealand Company 1,000,000 of acres, and it would not undertake by the sword to dispossess the natives of that quantity of land. He then argued that the Government had been plunged into its present difficulties with respect to New Zealand by acting on the principles contained in the report on the aborigines, and by founding its claims to the land, not on the right of discovery, which was indisputable, but on the right of cession, which was very questionable. If the House was about to censure Lord Stanley because he would not violate the treaty of Waitangi, it was about to do as great an injustice to Lord Stanley as to the natives themselves. Not even to gain the concert and co-operation of the New Zealand Company would he break the public faith, which had been unwisely pledged to the native chiefs of that colony.—Mr. ROEBUCK gave a brief explanation of the remarks which he had made on a former evening upon the conduct of Mr. Stephen.—Lord J. RUSSELL commenced his speech like Sir R. Peel, by an eloquent tribute to the great merits of Mr. Stephen as Under Secretary of the Colonies. He then complained that this had been made too much a question between the New Zealand Company and Lord Stanley. He denied that any responsibility rested on Mr. C. Buller for bringing this motion forward a second time at the present advanced period of the session; on the contrary he took blame to himself that he had not earlier taken the sense of the House on the misgovernment of New Zealand, which even then he saw must end in some disaster. Putting out of view, however, the interests of the Company, and the true meaning of the agreement which he had made with it, there was this great question still to be decided by the House—"Does the state of New Zealand create apprehension, and does it create apprehension because there has been no change in the policy which occasioned it?" That was a question on which the House of Commons ought to give its opinion. The present lamentable state of affairs in New Zealand was to be attributed to the Governor appointed by Lord Stanley, whose repeated concessions to the natives had led them to believe that they could destroy the sovereignty of the Queen in New Zealand. He denied that the recall of Capt. Fitzroy relieved the Government from its responsibility, for there was no pledge given that the policy of the Government would be changed. The speech of Sir R. Peel gave no indication of a change of policy. His speech was less satisfactory than that which he had made before, for the former was the result of his own reflections, and the present of his combination with Lord Stanley. Lord J. Russell then commented at great length upon Sir R. Peel's arguments on the subject of the representative Government of New Zealand and of the settlement of the land claims; and afterwards proceeded to say that if this were a question affecting New Zealand alone, and if the House were to act independently of party, it would decide that the policy which had been pursued in New Zealand was erroneous and must be altered. But when Sir R. Peel identified himself with his party, and with Lord Stanley, it was quite evident that the interests of New Zealand would be sacrificed, and those of party would be triumphant. The Government, however, would be obliged to alter its policy in New Zealand, as it had altered the policy of Lord Stanley in a country nearer home. The time would come when Sir R. Peel, discarding the pride, pique, and obstinacy of his colleague, would determine to do justice to New Zealand; but in the mean time the colony would be exposed to great risk, until the colonists were treated as the sons, and not as the enemies, of the country.—The amendment of Mr. Buller was then negatived by a majority of 155 to 89.

Thursday.—At an early sitting the Compensation Bill and the Coal-trade (Port of London) Bill were read a third time and passed; and the Church Buildings Act Amendment Bill passed through committee.—At the evening sitting several Railway Bills were forwarded.—On the motion of Sir J. GRAHAM, the Apprehension of Offenders Bill was read a first time.—On the motion for the second reading of the Stock-in-Trade Bill, Sir R. INGLIS protested against perpetuating, by this annual Renewal Bill, a most unfair way of rating tithe as compared with other property.—Lord J. MANNERS suggested that Government should, if not prepared with a new Bill on the subject, bring forward this annual renewal Bill at an early period next session, so as to give time to discuss properly the knotty questions involved in it.—The Bill was read a second time.—On going into committee on the Slave-trade (Brazil) Bill Mr. M. GIBSON objected to the Bill as a penal Act against a friendly foreign power. He thought that the Brazilian Government had passed laws, made concessions, and done as much as had been done by other countries similarly circumstanced to put down the slave-trade.—Lord PALMERSTON supported the Bill as the only mode by which the object Government had in view could be effected. The noble lord claimed credit to himself for having first suggested the policy which Government were pursuing. The Bill passed through committee.—The Removal of Paupers Bill, the Taxing Master Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill, the Turnpike Roads (Ireland) Bill, the Assignment of Terms, the Real Property Bills, and the Granting of Leases Bill, passed through committee.—On the motion for going into committee on the Turnpike Roads (Scotland) Bill, Mr. SCOTT moved as an amendment that the Bill be committed that day three months. On a division there were:—For going into committee, 16; against it, 42. Majority against the Bill, 26.—Mr. B. ESCOTT withdrew his Fees (Criminal Courts) Bill, upon Sir J. GRAHAM's giving notice that he should move, next day, for leave to bring in a Bill to abolish fees in pleading and acquittal of criminal cases.—The Earl of LINCOLN obtained leave to bring in a Bill for the improvement of the sewerage and drainage of towns and populous districts, and for making provision for an ample supply of water, and for otherwise promoting the health and convenience of the inhabitants.

Friday.—The Bolton and Leigh, Kenyon and Leigh Junction, North Union, Liverpool, and Manchester, and Grand Junction Railway Companies Amalgamation Bill, after some discussion, were read a third time and passed.—On the motion of Lord COURTENAY it was agreed, that, in the case of the Cambridge and Huntingdon Railway Bill, the chairman of the Select Committee on Group X. be empowered to bring up the report forthwith. [Left sitting.]

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Pavilion at Buckingham Palace.—A very striking exhibition is now afforded by the decorations just completed in the interior of the Pavilion, erected on a mount, in the gardens of Buckingham Palace. The favour of a private admission, granted a few days ago, has enabled the daily papers to give a brief description of it, and we condense the following from a long account in the Times. It is known that within the last few years the attention of artists has been directed to the combination of decorative painting with architecture, after the examples of the great Italian masters of the cinque-cento school, whilst the introduction of fresco-painting, towards the accomplishment of that end, was generally talked of. Her Majesty and Prince Albert resolved to try the experiment on a small scale, so as to adorn a summer-house in the gardens of the Palace, and at the same time to offer to British artists an opportunity for the trial of their powers in the old method. The "Garden Pavilion" is a small Swiss-looking edifice, on the summit of an artificial eminence, overlooking the spacious lawn and piece of water in the gardens of Buckingham Palace, which is seen in the distance. The external appearance of the Pavilion is picturesque and fantastic, without any regular style of architecture. The interior consists of three rooms and a kitchen. The principal apartment is an octagon, 15 feet 8 inches by 15 feet 9 inches; and from the floor to the centre of the vaulted ceiling, 14 feet 11 inches in height. This room opens on each side into another of smaller size, 8 feet 10 inches by 9 feet 7 inches, and 12 feet in height. The central room is the octagon; of the eight sides five are occupied by windows and the glazed entrance; three others by the doors opening on the two side-rooms, and by the fireplace, over which is a large mirror, reflecting the whole. The roof rises into a dome, sustained and divided by eight ribs; and in each compartment is a circular opening, with a sky background. A rich cornice runs round the room, and below the cornice are the eight lunettes, containing the frescos, by eight different painters. Each lunette is 6 feet by 3 feet; and over each is a tablet, on which is inscribed, in gilt letters, on a brownish-red ground, the particular passage of the poem which has suggested the subject of the painting below. The subject of all these frescos is Milton's masque of Comus—a work perfectly adapted to the object in view. The artists selected to try their talent were Messrs. Stanfield, Uwins, Leslie, Sir William Ross, Eastlake, Maclise, Landseer, and Etty, but the fresco of the last-mentioned gentleman was subsequently removed, and one by Mr. Dyce substituted in its place. "We shall not," says the Times, "at present enter into any minute criticism on these works of art. We can only afford to be general. It may, therefore, suffice to say that hardly one of the artists has 'come up' to the design of the poet. The various figures of Comus are good; that of Mr. Leslie we deem the best ideal of the character. 'The Lady' is made very little of—a sad burlesque, in most instances, on the high-souled, virtuous, dignified, creation of Milton. Sir William Ross makes her a young lady of 'modern accomplishments'—pale and sentimental—whilst Mr. Leslie represents her as an innocent girl, hardly arrived at the age of puberty. With Mr. Eastlake she is a Madonna, and rather stupid-looking into the bargain. Perhaps Mr. Uwins has given the best impersonation of this sublime and noble character. Mr. Maclise's design is that of a very beautiful woman, but freezingly cold and marble-like, far more so than the subject demands." The room on the left has been decorated in what may be called the romantic style. The subjects are taken from the works of Sir Walter Scott. The walls of this room, to the height of 12 feet, are painted in imitation of gray marble, with such taste and fidelity as to deceive the most practised eye. Above this wainscotting, which has a very chaste and cool effect, runs a decorated frieze, in 12 compartments, three on each side; of these the central compartment is formed of a bas-relief, in white stucco, on a dark-blue ground; and to the right and left are festoons of flowers richly coloured, and surrounding small landscapes in frames, illustrative of the scenery of the novels. The ceiling is coved, at the summit of which is a square opening representing sky. Small statues of children sustain the spandrils, and stand on brackets decorated with the thistle, which is also introduced in the border of the pavement. The room on the right of the octagon-room is decorated in the Pompeian style; all the ornaments, friezes, and panels being suggested by, or accurately copied from, existing remains, except the coved ceiling, which is entirely invented by M. Aglio. It is considered a very perfect and genuine example of classical domestic decoration, such as is found in the buildings of Pompeii—a style totally distinct from that of the baths of Titus, which suggested to Raphael, and his school, the rich arabesque and ornaments in painting and in relief, which prevailed in the 16th century, and which have been chiefly followed in the other two rooms."

The College of Surgeons.—The Medical Gazette states "upon good authority," that there is some prospect of the College of Surgeons throwing open the fellowship, under certain restrictions, to members of 20 years' standing without examination; and henceforth to give individuals the option of acquiring it by seniority, or at an earlier period by examination. The plan is not yet matured; but it is said that it will meet with the approbation of a majority of the fellows, as well as of the members of the college.

Merchant Tailors' School.—The Rev. James Augustus

Hessey, B.D., Fellow and Dean of St. John's College, Oxford, has been elected head master of this school, in the room of the Rev. J. W. Bellamy, B.D., resigned.

Important Metropolitan Improvement.—It is stated by a weekly paper that the commissioners for the improvement of London have it in contemplation to open an important street from the West-end of the town to the City, with the view of relieving the traffic of Holborn and the Strand. This new street is to continue the line opened from Coventry-street through Leicester-square to Long-acre, from the corner of Bow-street obliquely across Drury-lane to Carey-street, on the south side of Lincoln's Inn-fields; thence across Chancery-lane through the Rolls property, midway between Holborn and Fleet-street, to Farringdon-street, and passing under an arch to the wide part of the Old Bailey. This opening is again to be intersected by a wide street extending from the north side of St. Clement's Church, known as Pickett-place, into the centre of Lincoln's Inn-fields, across which the street will go directly into Holborn, to join Red Lion-street, and thence to the Foundling Hospital, thus opening an avenue long wanted from the north to the south side of London. There is also reason to believe that the long required establishment of the Courts of Law in a central part of the metropolis will be accomplished. Surveyors have been engaged during the past week in measuring the new site, which is to extend from Boswell-court, Carey-street, to Bell-yard, Temple-bar, extending back towards the Strand, thus bringing the Courts close to Lincoln's Inn and the Temple. The plan will be carried out by Mr. Barry.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending July 19:—West Districts, 124; Northern, 142; Central, 179; Eastern, 185; Southern, 237; Total, 867; males, 456; females, 411. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1306; males, 671; females, 635.

Provincial.

Bridgewater.—The Rev. J. M. Capes, now of Prior Park, Bath, who lately seceded to Rome from the Church of England, has published a statement, denying that he intends devoting to the purposes of the Roman Catholic Church the church which he lately built and endowed near this town.

Bury St. Edmund's.—Last week a full bench of magistrates attended at the Shire Hall, pursuant to a resolution of the previous week, to consider the application of Lieut. Smith to the Bench, that they would be pleased to inquire into the cause of his dismissal from the office of superintendent of the county police, and inquire into the conduct of Major Griffith, the chief constable. It was alleged on the part of Lieut. Smith that he had been dismissed because he would not act as a spy at the desire of the chief constable, and had refused to obey his orders on the ground that they were improper. After a long discussion on the competency of the magistrates to interfere, it was unanimously resolved that Major Griffith was justified in dismissing Lieut. Smith, and that the orders given by the chief constable were correctly given, though some of the expressions were not discreet.

Carlisle.—It will be remembered that about a month ago two important inquests were held at Carlisle, by several adjournments, on the bodies of Mr. John Graham, a respectable yeoman of the village of Grinsdale, and Margaret Graham, of Kirk Andrews, his daughter-in-law, who were suspected of having died from the effects of poison. Mr. John Graham, of Kirk Andrews, farmer, the son of the former, and the husband of the latter, was the person on whom suspicion fell as being the guilty person. The jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against John Graham for the murder of his father by poison, but with respect to the charge laid against him as to his wife he was acquitted. He is now a prisoner in Carlisle gaol, and the daily papers have this week stated that since his commitment a quantity of arsenic had been found in the pockets of his clothes, and that he had made a full confession that he was the murderer of his father and wife. It appears, however, by a letter from his soliciter, that this statement is entirely without foundation.

Liverpool.—On Saturday evening, the first stone of the Wallasey Docks, on the north side of the pool, was laid by Mr. Rendall, the engineer of the docks, on the Seacombe beach. Several of the dock commissioners were present, and between two and three hundred inhabitants of Seacombe.

Nottingham.—A fire broke out on Saturday night last, at Leuton House, two miles from this town. The house was undergoing repair, and Captain Layard, M.P., for Carlow, was to take up his residence in it in a few days. How the fire originated is not known, but it was discovered in time to be extinguished, with assistance from the neighbouring villagers. On removing considerable portions of the floors, and the batting from the walls, it was found that the fire had extended into the attic adjoining the roof, and also into several other rooms. No furniture and no inhabitants were in the house.—In March last we noticed the proceedings of a person calling himself the Rev. Dr. Berrington, who had contrived to obtain goods from various tradesmen in Hertfordshire, to the amount of several hundred pounds, on the pretence that he was about to establish a school of a superior class, and who absconded as soon as his real character was discovered. We learn that the same personage, who has lately been living in London, in lodgings, in Hunter-street, Brunswick-square, has been making an attempt to swindle the inhabitants of Nottingham, which was prevented by a lucky discovery. For several weeks an advertisement had appeared in the Nottingham papers, drawn up in the most high-flown language, announcing that a married clergyman of some standing and considerable experience as a tutor, had come to reside in Nottingham for the purpose of opening a boarding-school—that he had taken a large house in Castle-gate, formerly occupied by the late Dr. Mitchell Davidson, which he intended to open as an academy on the 4th of August—that the plan of education to be adopted would be based on strictly religious principles—lectures would be delivered to qualify the pupils for their duties as Christians, scholars, and gentlemen, and that the advertiser would be happy to meet with clerical duty in the neighbourhood. No name was attached to the advertisement, but a well-dressed man in black, with white neckerchief, who represented himself to be the Rev. Dr. Berrington, and that he had taken the house above-named as a school, called on various tradesmen in the town. He represented himself as desirous of furnishing the mansion—referred to a Mr. Welchman, of 77, Cornhill, London, who he stated was a wealthy East India Merchant—and from Mr. Jones, upholsterer, procured upwards of 200*l.* worth of furniture, which was duly delivered and placed in order—from Mr. Hurst, china merchant, an unlimited supply of china—boots from Mr. Parnham—ironmongery from Mr. Astell—wine and porter from Mr. Whetnull—and, in short, from a door-plate engraving and printing circulars, to a Brussels carpet and rosewood table, he procured all he desired. The clergy of the neighbourhood, however, suspected him, and one of that body having procured a copy of the Hertford Reformer newspaper, showed it to Mr. Jones, wherein was a statement of the same Dr. Berrington having taken a house at Graveley, in Hertfordshire, and carried on the same tricks upon tradesmen to an immense amount. Mr. Jones sent for Dr. Berrington, on pretence of showing him some piece of furniture at his shop, and while the Doctor was conversing with him, twenty men were busy at work, clearing the house of all the property which he had so artfully obtained. The Doctor, who had previously obtained lodgings in the town, took refuge in them, and was there joined by his wife, who had come from London in a most destitute state, and was near her confinement. They left on Monday, and have not since been heard of.

Portsmouth.—The Hibernia, 100, Captain Richards, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir William Parker, Bart., was mustered and inspected, and her crew paid advance, last week at Spithead. On Wednesday evening the gallant admiral arrived from London, and proceeded, with his family and attendants, to the Hibernia, when his flag (blue at the fore) was hoisted, and saluted with 15 guns by the Victory, the Hibernia having previously saluted Sir Charles Rowley's flag with 17 guns. The admiral was to have sailed on Friday, to relieve Vice-Admiral Sir E. W. C. R. Owen of the chief command in the Mediterranean, but he remained in consequence of a rumour that the Queen would inspect the ship on her arrival at Portsmouth on Saturday. The admiral had prepared her for the royal inspection; the companion was handsomely decorated, and every other feature connected with the decoration of the ship attended to, but the yacht steamed on. In reference to Her Majesty's visit, we may mention that when the royal party embarked in the yacht, it was dead low water, with a spring tide (when the water runs lowest), consequently it was not considered safe to venture out of harbour until the tide had risen somewhat. In about 40 minutes sufficient water had flowed, and the yacht got under weigh. The royal party were all on deck, and on nearing the Victory, Her Majesty and Prince Albert held the royal children up on the port side of the vessel to the view of the seamen, who responded to the gratifying act by a thundering cheer, during which time Prince Albert remained uncovered. The Fairy screw-tender followed the royal yacht, which, on passing the Hibernia at Spithead, made signal to her small consort to "get up her steam—full power," and try her rate of speed with the Victoria and Albert, which was accordingly done, and a trial of speed between the two vessels commenced, but the Fairy did not draw upon her larger consort, and from the time the signal was made up to the end of the voyage, the Fairy had lost full a mile.

Railways.

The Committee of the House of Commons on the Northern Group, after sitting for many weeks, and hearing evidence at great length, decided on Wednesday that the preamble of the London and York is proved, omitting the branches to Wakefield and to Sheffield, which they thought it right to postpone in consequence of there being other plans which may be considered as competing lines before them. The committee room, and every avenue leading to it, was densely crowded by persons anxious and impatient to hear the issue of this important inquiry; and the announcement of the decision was received with vehement cheering, which it was impossible to repress. The committee are now engaged in going through the clauses of the London and York Bill; the preamble of the Cambridge and Huntingdon having been declared proved on Thursday. The Committee on the Eastern Group have negatived the preamble of the Bury and Thetford, and Eastern Counties, Cambridge, and Bury Extension.—The Lords' Committees have passed the preamble of the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, and the Oxford and Rugby, thus deciding in favour of the Great Western, or broad gauge. They have also passed the preamble of the South Wales, the Londonderry and Coleraine, the London and South Western Metropolitan Extension, and the Wakefield, Pontefract and Goole, on the understanding that there should be a suspension of the works for the line between Pontefract and Wakefield until next session of Parliament. They have also passed the preamble of the Erewash Valley, the Tunbridge and Tunbridge Wells; the Glasgow, Barrhead, and Neilston; the London and Portsmouth Atmospheric Direct; the Brighton and Chichester; the Guildford, Chichester, and Portsmouth; the Monmouth and Hereford; the Gravesend and Rochester; and the South Eastern (Greenwich Extension). They have negatived the preamble of the Runcorn and Preston Brook. The Committee on the Cornwall Group have decided that the construction of a railway from Plymouth to Falmouth, with a branch to Bodmin, would be of great public advantage; but without a further and more accurate survey, with the view to procure gradients of a more favourable character, and to avoid, if possible, the crossing of the Hamoaze, the Bill should not now be further proceeded with. The Committee on the Irish Great Western (Dublin to Galway), whose proceedings have caused so much discussion in Parliament, have made the following report to the House of Lords, after examining 49 witnesses, and sitting four days to receive their evidence, which fills 101 folio pages:—"The committee have met, and considered the subject matter to them referred, and have examined several witnesses on the allegation of forged and fictitious names having been placed on the contract deed, but have not thought it expedient to examine into the other allegations, which may be more properly inquired into by referring the Bill back to the standing orders committee, or before the select committee, if the Bill should be opposed. The committee find, however, that it has not been the practice of the directors of this company to require references to the characters of the parties applying for shares, and that allotments have been made to persons under feigned and fictitious names, to paupers, and to persons who would not have been allowed under their real names to obtain shares, and who could have no means of paying from their own resources even the deposit. That the letters addressed to those persons were by some means obtained before their delivery by the post. That all the transactions of the company appear to have been carried on in an unsatisfactory and careless manner; that out of 974 applications 865 had no reference whatever, and 111 had references, of which however only 29 appear to have been marked as inquired into, and that out of that number 14 were reported as void. That the committee have no means of ascertaining how many of the persons whose names are attached to the contract deed are solvent persons, that they cannot conclude their report without observing that the system adopted is one which tends to defeat the intention of the Legislature, by passing a fraudulent and fictitious contract deed through the standing order committee, and by this means substituting a list of shareholders, who in case of a failure of the undertaking, would have no means of making good the amount for which they appear to be responsible; and they beg leave to express their opinion, that the reduction made in the last session of the amount of deposit previously required by Parliament has had the effect of facilitating the commission of frauds of the nature of those adverted to in this report."—The Standing Orders Committee have passed the South Eastern (Tunbridge and Tunbridge Wells), and have recommended that notwithstanding the standing orders, with respect to some of the plans and sections of the South Wales, had not been complied with, the bill should be allowed to proceed.—An arrangement is in progress and approaching completion, for the purpose of transferring the whole property of the Kennet and Avon Canal navigation to the Great Western Railway Company. The question of transforming the canal into a railway has for some time been under discussion; but at a general meeting of the Kennet and Avon Company last week, it was resolved unanimously that an offer of the canal be made to the Railway Company. The Great Western Company will thus monopolise the whole carrying traffic from Bristol to London, through a double line of country.—Six new schemes, "provisionally registered," have made their appearance during the past week. The London and South Essex proposes to run from the Blackwall line to Burnham, with branches to Grays, Tilbury, and Southend, at a cost of 900,000*l.* Mr. Locke is the engineer. The line is 42 miles up the country; has for one of its objects the shortening by two hours the voyage from London to Sheerness, Herne Bay, Margate, Ramsgate, Dover, and the continental ports. The Rugby and Huntingdon is projected to complete the chain of lines from east to west, and to connect the East Anglian counties with Birmingham and the north, by a length of 50 miles. The Staffordshire Potteries and Liverpool and Manchester Direct is intended to supply the Potteries, and connect them with Crewe, Manchester, and Liverpool. The London and Birmingham Extension, and Northampton, Daventry, Leamington, and Warwick line is to be 30 miles long and 15 shorter than any existing lines between the same termini, linking the eastern and midland districts, and supplying a population of 63,000. Leamington, Norwich, Banbury, Buckingham, Winslow, Aylesbury, Wendover, Missenden, Chesham, and Amersham are to be placed in contiguity to the London and Birmingham by a line called the Buckinghamshire and Warwickshire Central, and the mineral and agricultural wealth of Banffshire is to be developed by a line from Dufftown to Keith, Fochaber, and Port Gordon. A new proposal for three railways to Windsor upon the atmospheric principle has just been projected. The first is laid down direct from Windsor, through Staines, and Brentford, to Knightsbridge, the Windsor terminus being at a point between Windsor and Runnymede, about a mile from the town, and a short distance from Frogmore. A branch from the Great Western, commencing at or near the Slough station, passing near Eton, and crossing the Thames about half a mile above Windsor-bridge, and thus enabling a terminus to be close to the town, and in the neighbourhood of Clarence-crescent and the new church, is also mentioned. The other project, which appears to be the most desired by the inhabitants, is the London and Windsor Direct, to connect Kensington, Hammersmith, Brentford, Hounslow, and Colnbrook with Windsor. The terminus to be at Datchet, less than a mile from the town, across the Home Park.

Ireland.

Dublin.—A project of considerable importance was brought before Sir R. Peel on Saturday last, by an Irish deputation, who sought the aid of Government in carrying into effect the recommendations of the Drainage Commission for connecting the river Shannon with Lough Erne, and thus uniting, by inland navigation, the provinces of Munster and Ulster. It is stated that this arrangement would afford facilities for the drainage of not less than 4,000,000 of acres.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday in Conciliation Hall, Mr. Magennis in the chair.—While the preliminary business was proceeding, Mr. Steele, the "Head Pacificator," made his appearance, and was warmly greeted on his return in safety from amongst the Orangemen of the north.—Mr. O'CONNELL acknowledged the receipt of 12*l.* from New York, and read a letter accompanying the remittance, which animadverted upon certain expressions uttered by Mr. O'Connell on a late occasion, to the effect that if England rendered justice to Ireland, she might calculate on the assistance of Irishmen in enabling her "to humble the proud eagle of America." What he (Mr. O'Connell), said on the occasion referred to was, that if England did render justice, full and ample justice, to Ireland, she would be in such a position, through the co-operation of Irishmen, as to defy all the nations of civilized Europe, and would be even able to pull down the flag of America itself. Such was the sentiment he uttered, and he believed such was the sentiment of Ireland also. It was in consequence of the blustering of Mr. Polk with regard to the Oregon territory, a blustering which had since ceased, that he had been drawn into the observations complained of. Mr. Polk calculated on a diversion in his favour in Ireland, should a rupture take place between England and America. Mr. O'Connell then said as that was the last opportunity he should have for some time of addressing the Association, he considered it advisable to lay the present state of Ireland before the public. He wished it, however, to be understood that he did not intend to be idle; on the contrary, he had cut out a considerable quantity of work for himself, which would occupy him during his sojourn in the country. Mr. Fitzroy Kelly, Her Majesty's Solicitor-General, in his late address to the electors of Cambridge, had stated that agitation and agrarian disturbances had ceased in Ireland; but, as a proof of his accuracy in the affairs of Ireland, he had to state, that he expected to have the pleasure of addressing 150,000 men of the county of Wexford on the next Wednesday, and an equal number in Galway during the ensuing week. That was no sign that the agitation was subsiding; and lest the Government should forget that there were such people as the Irish, it was determined upon to hold two monster meetings during each month. The ministry had certainly altered their tone with regard to Ireland, and Sir James Graham had retracted his expression "that concession to Ireland had reached its limits," but he would never rest satisfied till Ireland was placed on a footing of perfect equality with England. The spirit of agrarian insurrection was now unfortunately rife in the country. And, meanwhile, what was Parliament, what was Government doing? The session of Parliament was now nearly expired, and what had they done? Absolutely nothing. It was true that they had passed the Maynooth Bill; but though that was a good Bill, yet the passing of it had exhibited the inherent bigotry of the great mass of the English people, and their intense hatred of the people of Ireland and their religion. He would not dwell upon the useless—the worse than useless institution of godless colleges. He would call attention to the Charitable Bequests Bill, and the shameful way in which the Catholic prelates had been trifled with, with respect to the amendments which they required, and which were promised them on that measure. He would repeat that nothing had been done for Ireland this session. He next adverted to the affray at Ballinhassig, and denounced the homicides there as horrible murderers. He next passed to the processions in the north, and eulogised the Catholics for their admirable conduct throughout. He condemned the carrying of deadly weapons on such occasions, and was happy that the jury who had investigated the homicide at Armagh had brought in a verdict of murder against the Orangeman; for such was the purport and effect of their finding. He next apprised the meeting that during the absence from the hall which he now contemplated, he would employ himself in drawing up a variety of Bills, to be introduced into Parliament in due time. They were 11 in number. The first was to be introduced into the British Parliament, and would authorise her Majesty to convene a Parliament in Ireland. The other Bills were all to be introduced into the Irish Parliament. One would impose an absentee tax, another would abolish the Poor-laws, another would put all religions on a perfect equality, and prohibit the Parliament of Ireland from giving ascendancy in any shape to any one in particular; another would put the relation of landlord and tenant on a new footing. He announced in detail all these different Bills and their provisions, and concluded by commenting on the beauties of Ireland, and her fitness for independent legislation and self-government.—Mr. STEELE next rose, and gave an account of his mission to the north.—The rent for the week was 319*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.*

Cavan.—The Lord Lieutenant and Council of Ireland have published a proclamation, extending the provisions of the Peace Preservation Act to the county of Cavan, which is declared to be in a state of disturbance, and requiring an increased establishment of police. The jury at the inquest on Thomas Tierney, shot by the police at Lavey, in this county, on the 12th inst, have brought in a verdict virtually for murder, having found that there was no provocation given, and the constable has accordingly been committed for trial.

SUMMER ASSIZES.—HOME CIRCUIT, CHELMSFORD.—The Incendiary Fires at Braintree.—Alfred Coote, 16, carpenter, and Isaiah Fish, 18, bricklayer, were indicted for wilfully and maliciously setting fire to three barns, two granaries, and other buildings, the property of the Earl of Essex, in the occupation of Richard Baynes; and also with setting fire to two stacks of wheat, the property of Richard Baynes. Mr. Marsh stated the case for the prosecution, and said that the principal evidence against the prisoners was the testimony of a young man who stood in the position of an accomplice; but as the prisoners had themselves made a statement almost amounting to a confession, he apprehended that the jury, notwithstanding the nature of the evidence in support of the prosecution, would entertain no doubt of the guilt of the prisoners. Mr. Richard Baynes, the prosecutor, deposed that he occupied a farm called Rayne Lodge, in the parish of Rayne, near Braintree, which was the property of the Earl of Essex. A fire took place on his premises on Saturday night, 16th March, 1844, and three large barns, two large wheat stacks, and five cattle sheds were completely consumed. The barns were full of grain—wheat, beans, and oats, and the value of the property destroyed was 1500*l.* He added that he was only insured to the amount of 800*l.*, and he received that sum from the insurance office. Cross-examined: He knew nothing of the prisoners. The family were sitting at supper at about a quarter past nine o'clock, when the first alarm of the fire was given. William Wade, the approver, a lad of 18, deposed that he was a silk weaver, and lived at Braintree, and knew both prisoners. He remembered the day of the fire at Mr. Baynes's, and was with both prisoners between two and three o'clock on that day, and they all walked together to Mr. Baynes's spring, where Fish told him and Coote to stop, and he would go and see what sort of a place it was to have a fire. After they had waited about five minutes, Fish came back and said it was as good a place as any to have a fire, for there were plenty of stacks and barns. They then all returned to the town, and met again at night at the Crown and Anchor beer shop, from which place they again went to the prosecutor's farm, and proceeded through a gap in the hedge to the barns, and stood by the side of one of them, in which there was a hole large enough for a man's fist to go through. Fish said that the hole was a good place for the fire to be put in, and Coote gave him two lucifer matches, which he tried to set on fire, but could not do so. Coote then gave him two more matches, which he also tried to light; but none of them would ignite, and upon this they all went back to the Star beer shop at Braintree, when Coote was sent by Fish to purchase a box of lucifers. While witness was alone with Fish, he persuaded him not to set fire to the place, and told him that if he did so he would be sure to be found out some day or other. When Coote returned with the lucifers, Fish told him that he (witness) would not go, and he added, "Come on, I'll go if you do: death or glory, I'll go and light it." At this time Coote had the box of matches in his hand, and they both went away together towards the residence of the prosecutor, which was about three-quarters of a mile off. This was between 8 and 9 o'clock in the evening. He (witness) remained behind at Braintree, and in about half an hour after the prisoner had left him he heard the alarm of fire in the direction from Rayne, and he shortly after ascertained that the fire was at the prosecutor's. Witness afterwards went to the fire and saw the prisoner Coote there, and he said to him, "This is a good one, an't it?" There was another fire in the village on the following Monday, and witness saw both the prisoners the day afterwards assisting in removing some furniture from a field, where it had been removed from the fire. Coote asked him to help him, and at the same time said, "This was a rare flare up last night, but it was not so good as the one I lit on Saturday night at Baynes's." Fish was by at the time this was said, and he added, "We went up to Baynes's on Saturday night, and I shoved my hand through the hole in the barn, and Coote then put a light to it." Coote afterwards said, "That when they had set the place on fire, they ran away and hid in the wood until they saw the people come to the fire." The witness then said that Fish afterwards told him the same story, and that he (witness) was subsequently taken into custody upon the charge of being concerned in the fire, but was afterwards admitted to give evidence. Cross-examined: Witness was 18 years old. He now came from gaol to give evidence. He was not taken into custody upon this charge until a twelvemonth after the fire happened, and he did not tell the story he had just narrated until after he was in custody. He was not told that he was to be admitted Queen's evidence until last Friday, and he then stated all he knew. He was at present under the charge of committing another fire himself, and had not been tried. John Andrews deposed that he knew the prisoners. He remembered the fires that took place at the prosecutor's, and at Mr. Seale's and Mr. Lacey's, and while in company with the prisoners he remarked that "it was a curious job about the fires," and Coote said "We did them, only you must not say anything about it." Cross-examined: He was himself charged with two fires. He had been seven or eight weeks in gaol, and he did not tell this story until last Friday. William Bradford, a person in the service of the prosecutor, proved that he remembered having observed such a hole as the one spoken of by the approver Wade in one of the barns, and that inside the barn, close to the hole, there was a quantity of dry barley, which could, of course, have been easily ignited. He likewise stated that when he first heard the alarm of fire, the flames appeared to proceed from that portion of the barn where the hole was. John Dunn, one of the Essex constabulary, deposed that he apprehended the prisoner Fish on the 23d May, and told him that he took him for the fires at Braintree in 1844. He replied, "I dare say I shall be sent out of the country for those fires, and if I am I cannot be sent to a much worse country than this." Everett, another constable, proved that he apprehended Coote on the 12th May last, and while he was in custody he told him that he was always dreaming about the fires, and that he had jumped up in the night and was unable to get any sleep for them, and when he was in London he always thought that he, witness, was after him. He likewise said that he, Wade, and Fish, had done all the fires at Braintree. Witness subsequently took down his statement in writing. The statement was put in and read. It went to confirm in all material particulars the evidence of the approver Wade. This was the case for the prosecution. The counsel having addressed the jury for the prisoners, Lord Chief Justice Tindal summed up, and the jury almost immediately returned a verdict of guilty. The prisoners were directly called up for judgment, and sentenced to be transported for 15 years. It was stated that they had confessed to having committed 15 distinct fires, there being an entire absence, in every case, of any feeling of malice towards the owner of the property, and it appearing that they were merely actuated by a desire for mischief.

TONIC MILK OF ORANGE, A DELICIOUS CORDIAL, AND SWEETENER OF THE BREATH (Patronised by the Royal Family and the Nobility).

The MILK OF ORANGE (warranted to be extracted from Fruit) Warms the Stomach, Creates an Appetite, Digests the Food, Strengthens the Lungs, Clears and improves the Voice for SINGING, enlivens the Spirits, dispels Nervous Debility, Clears the Blood, and combines with these admirable properties the inestimable advantage of being the most efficacious agent yet offered to the Public for purifying and Perfuming the Breath.

It should be taken in the proportion of a wine glassful twice a day, and is particularly recommended to GENTLEMEN on leaving home in the morning or after smoking a Cigar, while to LADIES it will be equally grateful on going to a party or a ball, for its invigorating influence on the mind and spirits, and its refreshing effect on the organs of health. It may be added, that as a lively but gentle stimulant wholly unmixed with spirituous ingredients, it will prove extremely grateful to that numerous class of persons, who, on principles of abstinence, refrain from all intoxicating drinks.

News of the Week.

The annexation of Texas to the United States, which has passed both branches of the Texan Congress in spite of the recent predictions and assertions to the contrary, is the leading topic of our political news. This important resolution was passed unanimously by both branches of Congress, and required only the formal confirmation of the Texan Convention, which was summoned for the 21st July; so that there is no doubt that Texas is by this time the thirtieth state of the American Union. The correspondence which preceded this consummation of the policy of Mr. Polk will be read with interest even in the condensed form which it was necessary to adopt in order to make it suitable for our columns. It will be seen from the letters of the United States' Minister, that he has pledged his Government to make war for Texas as soon as she is threatened by Mexico or by any other power, and has declared that any intervention of France or England with Mexico will in no wise alter the views of the Government of the United States, nor deter it from defending Texas if necessary. In accordance with these engagements, American troops have been marched to the Texan frontier, and the naval force in the Gulf of Mexico has been augmented. What course the Mexican Government will pursue, under these circumstances, it is difficult to foresee; but recent commotions within her own capital, added to fresh revolutions in California and Tabasco, will no doubt render it impossible for Mexico to make any effectual resistance. The facts however are important, not only to Mexico, but to Great Britain and to France; and after the recent declarations of Sir R. Peel and M. Guizot, the public of both countries will look with some anxiety for an indication of the policy which the two Governments may pursue in the present altered position of affairs.

At home, the visit of the King of Holland is the principal topic of interest, the proceedings in Parliament being mostly of a routine character. In the House of Peers, the Dublin and Galway Railway Bill has been rejected for the present session, as a punishment for the frauds substantiated by the evidence taken before two committees. In the Commons on Friday, Mr Stewart induced an animated conversation on the Free Church of Scotland, and obtained from Sir J. Graham, on the part of Government, an expression of opinion that there is no longer any hope of arresting the secession, and that this circumstance will probably induce the proprietors to concede the sites for chapels which they at first refused. On Monday, Mr. Ewart moved a series of resolutions in reference to Education, but did not press them to a division, as Sir R. Peel admitted the importance of the questions they involved, and promised to consider, during the recess, the expediency of having an official statement on national education made by some Minister of the Crown in moving the educational estimates for the year. On Wednesday, Lord Palmerston called attention to the inadequate condition of our national defences, and was answered by Sir R Peel, who contended that the country was never in a condition to make a more formidable demonstration of her energies. On Thursday, on the motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer the House unanimously agreed to an address to the Queen, praying that Her Majesty will direct the grant of 2,000*l.* for the relief of the sufferers by the late calamitous fires at Quebec.—The visit of the King of Holland, the sixth European Sovereign who has visited this country since the accession of Her Majesty, is by no means the least acceptable of these royal visits to the public at large.—the cordiality with which the King has been received by all classes being the best proof of his popularity. Indeed it could hardly have been otherwise, seeing that His Majesty in his younger days fought and bled under the British flag in the great battles of the Peninsula, and in the "crowning victory" of Waterloo. The Queen has conferred upon our illustrious guest the rank of a field marshal in the British army, and we are sure that the public will admit that the distinction was never more worthily bestowed.

Home News.

Court.—The Queen and Prince Albert, with the infant royal family, continue at Osborne House. During the week Her Majesty and Prince Albert have made excursions to different parts of the Isle of Wight, visiting Newport, Appuldercombe, Steephill Castle, Ventnor, Shanklin, and other places. On Saturday Her Majesty, accompanied by the King of the Netherlands, made a short excursion in the Victoria and Albert steam-yacht to Calshot Castle, &c. It is said that Her Majesty and Prince Albert will leave England on their German tour at the end of next week.

The King of Holland.—On Friday the King of Holland left town on a visit to Her Majesty at Osborne House, travelling to Gosport by a special train of the South Western Railway. At the Royal Clarence Victualling Yard the King was met by Prince Albert, and escorted to the royal yacht amidst the cheers of many hundreds of persons. The forts of the garrison fired a royal salute on His Majesty's arrival, and when the royal party were on board the yacht the Dutch standard was hoisted, and salutes were fired from the Victory and Excellent, and the Victory manned her yards. His Majesty and Prince Albert, and some of the noble personages accompanying them, were conveyed on board the royal yacht in Admiral Sir C. Rowley's barge, the rest of the suite following in other barges. As the steamer, with the Dutch and English standards at the mast head, proceeded on her course to the mouth of the harbour, the men who were manning the Victory's yards gave three cheers, which His Majesty acknowledged in the most gracious manner. The shore on either side was thronged with the inhabitants of the garrison, who also cheered His Majesty as he passed out of the harbour. The royal party arrived at Cowes at [illegible]. As the steamer neared Cowes-roads salutes were fired from West Cowes Castle and from the royal squadron anchored. Several of the yachts belonging to the royal yacht squadron also saluted His Majesty. Carriages were in waiting at the landing-place, in which the royal party were conveyed to Osborne House, where the meeting between Her Majesty and the King took place. The King dined with Her Majesty at Osborne, and slept at Norris Castle, with his suite. On Saturday morning, after taking a short cruise with Her Majesty in the royal yacht, the King took leave of Her Majesty, and, accompanied by Prince Albert, proceeded to Gosport in the Fairy, to join the railway train. The King was received with the usual honours from the troops, and with royal salutes from the men-of-war and batteries at Portsmouth. His Majesty, on his arrival in town, honoured the Earl and Countess of Jersey with his company, and in the evening was present at the Italian Opera. On Sunday the King paid a visit to the Queen Dowager at Bushy Park, and in the evening dined with the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge. On Monday His Majesty went to Kensington, and visited the Princess Sophia. The King also paid visits to the Duchess of Gloucester, and the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge. His Majesty afterwards honoured Messrs. Storr and Mortimer's establishment in New Bond-street with a visit, and remained upwards of an hour. His Majesty was pleased to express his gratification at the splendid display of plate and jewellery, and ordered one of Count D'Orsay's statuettes of the Duke of Wellington in silver. In the evening the King honoured the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk with his company at dinner, at their residence in St. James's-square. On Tuesday His Majesty held a diplomatic levee, and received a deputation of the consistory of the Dutch Church, who waited upon His Majesty to present an address of congratulation. His Majesty afterwards inspected Buckingham Palace, and dined in the evening with the Duchess of Gloucester. On Wednesday His Majesty left London for Goodwood, to honour the Duke and Duchess of Richmond with a visit. His Majesty remained the guest of the noble Duke during Thursday, returning to town yesterday to honour the Duke and Duchess of Beaufort with his company at Beaufort house. This day His Majesty will be present at a grand review in Hyde-park, and will also honour Sir Robert and Lady Peel with his company at a dinner to be given by the right hon. baronet at Whitehall gardens. To-morrow the King will dine with the Duke of Wellington, and it is probable that His Majesty, if his other engagements will admit, will honour the Duke and Duchess of Buckingham by a visit at Stowe; and the Earl and Countess of Jersey have the promise of His Majesty's presence at an entertainment in the course of next week. His Majesty's sojourn in England, it is understood, will be protracted to the close of next week, as invitations have poured on His Majesty's attention, which he is desirous to accept. We may here notice an announcement in last night's Gazette that the Queen has appointed the King of Holland a field-marshal in the British army, as an honour due to a monarch, who in his younger days fought and bled under our national flag against a common enemy. This is an act in every respect becoming to the nation, and one which will give the greatest satisfaction to the army. The King, as is no doubt known to the majority of our readers, is a general in the army, being next in seniority to Gen. Sir George Nugent, and five years senior to Gen. T. Grosvenor and the Marquis of Anglesey. His commission in the British service is dated as follows:—Lieutenant-Colonel, 11th June, 1811; Colonel, 17th October, 1811; Major-General, 13th December, 1813; Lieutenant-General, 8th July, 1814; and General, the 27th July, 1814. His Majesty served in the Peninsula from 1811 to the end of that war in 1814, being during the principal part of that period extra Aide de-Camp to the Duke of Wellington. He was present at the sieges of Ciudad Rodrigo and Badajoz, the battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, and Nivelle, for which His Majesty received a cross and two clasps. His Majesty commanded the Dutch troops in the campaign of 1815, and the first corps d'armee of the Duke of Wellington's forces at the battle of Waterloo, and was shot through the left shoulder at the close of that action, having also been present in the preceding engagements.

Irish Peerage.—The Earl of Erne has been elected one of the Representative Peers of Ireland, in the room of the late Lord Carbery.

Parliamentary Movements.—It is now understood that Parliament will be prorogued either on Thursday or Friday of next week. The former is said to be the more probable; and Her Majesty will then leave England on the following day. Sir Robert Price was a candidate for Hereford on the Whig interest, in the room of the late Mr. Clive; and as Mr. Seymour Fitzgerald who had come forward on the Conservative interest, having declared going to the poll, Sir Robert Price was consequently returned without opposition. Mr. M. C. Maxwell, of Terregles, is a candidate on the Liberal interest for Kircudbright, in the room of the late Mr. Murray.

Official Appointments.—It is understood that Lord Mahon will succeed Mr Emerson Tennent as one of the Secretaries to the Board of Control. Mr. E. Tennent will visit Egypt on his way to Ceylon, in the hope of being able to conclude the postal treaty with the Pacha.—The Queen has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting to Capt. Sir Thos. Hastings the office of Storekeeper of the Ordnance, in the room of Mr. Bonham; and the Master-General has appointed Mr. Thomas Clarke, of the firm of Clarke, Fynmore, and Fladgate, to the office of solicitor to that department, in the room of Mr. Hignett.—It is reported that Prince George of Cambridge, who has lately been promoted to the rank of Major-General in the army, is to succeed Sir Hercules Pakenham as Lieutenant-Governor of Portsmouth, and in the command of the South-western district at the end of the year. Mr. Colville, of the Chancery Bar, has been appointed Advocate-General at Calcutta, vacant by the death of Mr. Lyall.

The Church.—The Rev. Hugh M'Neil and the Rev. Hugh Stowell have been appointed honorary canons of Chester Cathedral by the Lord Bishop of the diocese.

The Experimental Squadron.—The squadron which lately left Portsmouth, is cruising on the coast of Spain. A letter from St. Sebastian states that it had made its appearance off that port; and that from the Chateau de la Mota, the crew on board might be distinctly seen.

Foreign

France.—The Paris journals of this week supply but little intelligence. Their columns are chiefly taken up with extenuating accounts of the Dahra massacre, with narratives of the Duke de Nemours' progress to the south of France; and with most contradictory statements and conjectures as to the cause of the death of M. Leu, of Lucerne, the particulars of which are given in our Swiss news. The Journal des Débats has also a long and exulting article on an official return of the commerce of France in 1844, just published by the Administration of the Customs, which certainly shows the growing prosperity of the country in a very remarkable manner. The following is its résumé:—

"Thus, the commerce of France has not ceased to develope itself; it now represents, in value, two-thirds of that of England; it is near twice more extensive than that of the United States, which may be reckoned at 1,200,000,000f.; and, at least, twice more extensive than the trade of the whole German Association. It reaches the triple of the exchanges effected by the Low Countries, Austria, and Russia, which are reckoned for each of those countries at 700,000,000 or 750,000,000f., it exceeds fourfold the commerce of Belgium, or 515,000,000; it represents eight times, at least, that of Spain (250,000,000) and nine or ten times the ensemble of the transactions effected by the Italian peninsula. We shall some day revert to this developed comparison of the commercial strength of nations; let us just now confine ourselves to recording the fact that our external commerce is worthy of the exalted destinies of our country: that we are reaping the fruit of a prudent and moderate, but at the same time firm policy, which, although it has not violently deserted the past, and completely overthrown, as some adventurous opinions wished it, the commercial system on which interests both numerous and lawful rest, has not the less introduced into the economical régime of the country great and useful improvements; thus gradually realising commercial freedom without any commotion, and advancing towards its object with constancy and firmness. These certainly are not hazardous experiments of mere theories, but the policy of good sense, order, and progress."

The celebration of the 15th anniversary of the revolution of 1830 commenced in Paris on Sunday. The fêtes, however, were sadly marred by the deplorably wet weather that had occurred. It rained throughout Monday, Monday night, and Tuesday, up to 12 o'clock, when the sun made its appearance. On Monday funeral services were performed in all the churches in the capital and neighbourhood, in honour of the victims who fell during the struggle. In the church of St. Paul, in which parish the column of July is placed, a special service was celebrated, which was attended by the prefect of the Seine, the Commandant of the National Guard and his staff, General Sebastiani, the Commandant of the First Military Division, General Aussick, the Commandant of Paris, with the higher officers of the whole garrison of Paris. The column of July was hung with crape, and the flags on the public offices were all hung half-mast high during the day. Tuesday was the day of rejoicing. The Champs Elysées and the Barriere du Trone were filled with a miscellaneous collection of all imaginable shows, booths, bands of music, and noise. The whole finished with a concert in the garden of the Tuileries, an illumination, and fireworks. In consequence of the fêtes, the Bourse and public offices were closed.—M. Guizot left Paris on Monday for Val Richer, his seat in Normandy. M. Duchatel supplies the place of M. Guizot at the Foreign-office during the absence of the latter, having returned to Paris from Ems on Sunday.—The Duke and Duchess of Nemours have been received with great distinction in all the towns through which they passed in their way to the camp at Bourdeaux, where they are to arrive on the 5th August, and to make an excursion into Spain. The Presse says that it is at Bilboa that their royal highnesses are to have an interview with the Queen and royal family of Spain. Count Bresson, the French ambassador at the Spanish Court, is to repair to Bilboa for the occasion. Don Carlos and his consort left Lyons on the morning of Wednesday before last, by the steamboat for Avignon, whence they were to proceed to the Greoulx waters.

Spain.—Accounts from Barcelona of the 22d, announce that the Queen, accompanied by her mother and sister, left that city for Saragossa on the morning of the 21st. It was rumoured that Her Majesty would proceed thence to the Basque provinces, but it was generally believed that the journey was not yet determined upon, and would be discussed in council at Saragossa, where all the Ministers were to be assembled on the 24th. General Concha, the Captain-General, was to accompany the Royal Family to the confines of Catalonia, and had intrusted the government in his absence to General Cotoner. The troops which had been sent to Barcelona to perform duty in that city during the residence of the Court, and which had already commenced their march for New Castile, had been ordered to remain in Catalonia. The Chamber of Commerce of Barcelona was preparing to address all the chambers of commerce in the kingdom, calling on them to petition the Cortes relative to the admission of Cuba sugars into the English markets. Should England persist in excluding them, the Barcelona merchants recommend recourse to reprisals, and propose to prohibit the importation into Spain, Cuba, and other Spanish colonies, of various articles of English manufacture, such as linens, cloth, hardware, muslin, machinery, &c.

Switzerland.—The Swiss journals of the 21st inst. announce the murder of M. Josef Leu, of Ebersol, Member of the Grand Council of Lucerne. This event took place at his country house, on the night of the 19th, but whether the act has been caused from private revenge or from political feelings, or whether it was committed by his hand, has not yet been ascertained. M. Leu had long taken a leading part in the affairs of the country, and his conduct in the Jesuit question had excited great resentment against him. In the late struggles on that subject, he forwarded the designs of that society, and created at Lucerne that violent feeling which spread through the whole federal republic. M. Leu, had, from his position, his fortune, and his manner of living, acquired great influence over the peasants in the neighbourhood of his residence. He was member of the Government, and was the most rigid in the treatment of the Liberals both before and after their late defeat. M. Leu resided at Ebersol, three leagues from Lucerne. Here he was found killed by a pistol shot, in bed, on the night of the 19th. The Liberals assert that he committed suicide. But the Government has declared in the Gazette that he was assassinated, and a reward of 6000 francs is offered for the discovery of the assassin. The house was full of domestics, and Madame Leu hearing the shot they rushed to the spot; but up to the present time no light has been thrown on the real character of the occurrence. The mysterious event is likely to rekindle all the fury of religious parties in Switzerland. The organs of the Jesuits persist in throwing the blame of the assassination upon the Liberals, but without giving any proof, or even giving probable evidence of the truth of the accusation. The Liberal papers, on the contrary, state that there is every probability that M. Leu died by his own hand. The Paris papers are filled with speculations upon these points. The Debats contends that so good a Catholic as M. Leu, a man of so much energy and firmness, and so warmly attached to his religion as to carry it even to fanaticism would not commit suicide. The Presse also takes the same view:—"Some persons," it says, "would wish to have it believed that the death of M. Leu is to be attributed to suicide caused by remorse, and the radical journals of Switzerland just received endeavour to procure credit for the same hypothesis. Such a supposition, however, can scarcely impose on the most credulous. Not only is such an idea contradicted by the facts which we yesterday published, but it is, in a moral point of view, most improbable. M. Leu might have been wrong, but he could never have felt remorse, for he acted on a deep and sincere conviction." The Courrier Francais remarks briefly that "the different versions of M. Leu's death only prove that the truth is yet to be ascertained. For the honour of Switzerland, we trust that no party can be upbraided with so odious a crime. However, this may be, whoever may be the criminal, we consider this event to be of a nature to add to the party differences already existing in Switzerland." The France and Univers assign a political character to the late event, and the Quotidienne contends that all the facts indicate an act of political vengeance, for M. Leu was without personal enemies, being both benevolent and popular. The National and the Constitutionnel on the other hand consider his death to have proceeded from suicide. After describing the position of the bedroom, and summing up the circumstances under which the deceased was placed at his last moment, the National declares it to be impossible that a murder could have been committed, and says that the Jesuits are unwilling that the truth should be known.—The Zurich correspondent of the Constitutionnel writes on the 20th inst., that the Diet had partly terminated its labours, and that the questions relative to the Jesuits and the convents would be left to the last, lest the irritation they were calculated to produce should interfere with the despatch of the ordinary business of the session. M. Siegwart Muller, the first deputy for Lucerne, not deeming his life in safety at Zurich, had returned to Lucerne, having narrowly escaped being murdered in the night of the 19th.

Germany.—If we are to believe the Augsburg Gazette, there will be a complete diplomatic congress on the occasion of the meeting between the Queen of England and the King of Prussia, on the Rhine, as France, Russia, and Austria, will send representatives there. The Archduke Frederick has been charged by the Emperor of Austria to congratulate Her Majesty on her arrival in Germany.

Italy.—Letters from Rome state that the health of the Pope is such as to cause very great alarm. He suffers much from a cancer in the nose, with which he has been for some time afflicted. The disease has been latterly somewhat checked, but within the last few weeks has again acquired fresh virulence. Gregory XVI., was appointed cardinal in 1825, and raised to the apostolic chair on February 2, 1831. He was born in 1765, and is consequently nearly 80 years of age.

Greece.—Accounts have been received from Athens to the 10th ult. Robberies and assassinations in all parts of the country appear to be daily increasing, and the Government is utterly unable to put them down. M. de Petsali, the father of the celebrated advocate of that name, has been assassinated at his country residence, at Negropont, while walking on the terrace of his own house and talking to some peasants who have land on his property. The outrage was committed at 8 o'clock in the evening. A gun was discharged at him, and several balls were lodged in his body. The [illegible] escaped. The house of the receiver-general [illegible] has been broken open by a regularly [illegible] of robbers, who succeeded in carrying [illegible] drachmas of the public money. Some of the [illegible] have been taken, and are to be brought to trial. The papers are full of accounts of similar outrages committed openly in the streets of Athens. The Council of Ministers, appointed to inquire into the circumstances of the intended duel between Generals Grivas and [illegible], had presented its report to the Minister of War on which they declared the conduct of the latter to have been irreproachable.

India and China.—By the arrival of the Iberia at Malta we have intelligence from Bombay to the 29th June; Calcutta, 9th; Madras, 11th; and from China to the 6th of May. Cholera has been very prevalent in Bombay and Poonah, and it has raged in Lahore to a fearful extent. The letters from Lahore report the announcement of the appointment of the Sadar Jowahir Singh to be the Prime Minister, and the retirement of Gholab Singh to his fortress of Jumoo. Prince Peshora Singh is stated to be in rebellion against the authorities at Lahore. The attack on Peshawur has been abandoned by Dost Mahomed and his son. The Governor-General remained in Calcutta, but it was expected he would proceed in October to the north-west provinces to reduce the Sikhs to order.—From China we learn that a riot had taken place at Victoria, and had been suppressed without much difficulty. The British troops had been withdrawn from Kolungsoo, in accordance with the terms of our treaty on the 23d March, and the Chinese took possession. An English merchant having built a vessel of 70 tons, gave the command of it to a Chinese named Fowqua, to enable him to levy a species of black mail on the native smuggling boats engaged in the opium trade. Suspicions were excited. Fowqua was seized, tortured, and denounced a hundred persons as being implicated in the transaction. The mate and gunner of the Ariel, having on board upwards of 100,000 dollars, had conspired to seize her, but were ultimately defeated. The mate was killed, and the gunner wounded.

United States and Texas.—The Royal mail steamer Acadia arrived at Liverpool on Tuesday, bringing the Hon. L. M'Lane, United States Minister, to St. James's, several members of his family, and a large number of passengers. The annexation of Texas to the United States, it will be seen, has been agreed to by the Texan Congress, but the question as to the course Mexico will adopt is yet problematical. The papers contain copies of the lengthy communications relative to annexation that have taken place between the Hon. A. J. Donelson chargé d'affaires of the United States in Texas, and the Hon. E. Allen, the Texan Secretary of State, during the absence of the Hon. A. Smith, now in this country. The correspondence was first published in the Washington Union, the organ of the United States Government, whence it was of course speedily copied into the other journals. Mr. Donelson, on the part of the United States, in the first place communicates to Mr. Allen the fact of the passing of the annexation resolutions in the United States Congress on the 3d March, and which were approved by the President. This is done under date of March 31. The usual arguments in favour of the measure are of course made use of, and Mr. Donelson endeavours to make it appear plainly for the interests of both countries, especially that of Texas, that annexation should be immediately consummated. Mr. Allen in reply states, that in consequence of the receipt of Mr. Donelson's communication, the Texan President had it in contemplation to convene Congress at an early day, which fact is acknowledged, with thanks for the President's promptitude, in a second letter from Mr. Donelson. On the 10th May, Mr. Allen having heard that the Mexican Minister to the United States, had demanded his passports, writes to say, that as in his opinion Mexico will immediately attack Texas, he would wish to know whether, in case of such an emergency, the United States Government would assist the Texans? He asks whether, "under such circumstances, calculated to excite the apprehensions of the people of Texas, and especially to disturb the tranquillity of the settlements along her western frontiers, it would not be alike proper and consistent for the United States to extend its protection to this republic?" He says he considers it the duty of the United States so to do, and adds, that the passage of their troops to the frontier would be welcomed and facilitated by the Texans. Mr. Donelson, under date May 24, states that the United States Government are preparing for such an emergency, and that he has no doubt but that all necessary help will be accorded. On the 11th June, the United States Government, through Mr. Donelson, pledges itself to make war for Texas immediately that she is threatened by any power, and in a long letter furnishes justification for such a course being resolved upon, and concludes by informing the Texan government that any intervention of France and England with Mexico to bring about independence, imposes no obligations upon Texas, and would in no wise alter the views of the government of the United States, nor deter it from defending Texas, if necessary. On the 13th June, Mr. Donelson again writes to Mr. Allen, to say that if there are any clauses in the annexation resolutions as proposed by the United States Congress, which are objectionable to Texas, the objections shall be removed upon their accepting the measure, and he desires that no slight flaws may prevent the annexation taking place, as they can easily be rectified hereafter. He points out difficulties that Texas would have to encounter as an independent republic, and concludes by referring once more to the advantages that would accrue to her as part of the United States. The annexation resolutions were accepted by both branches of the Texan Congress, on the 21st June, so that there is no doubt that the revolted province is by this time the thirtieth state of the Union, as the voice of the Texan Convention on the 4th July, was all that was then necessary. Indeed, all the New York papers speak of Texas as being without doubt "a state," and the only anxiety, at the time the steamer left, was whether Mexico would undertake any hostile measures or not. The New Orleans papers state that some bodies of United States troops had received instructions to proceed to the Texan frontier, and the naval force of the United States government in the Gulf of Mexico had been somewhat augmented. These preparations were no doubt intended to awe the Mexicans out of any idea they might entertain of commencing hostilities. In the meantime the annexation of Texas has been hailed with joy in all parts of the Union, and several political writers consider that it is but "the beginning of the end" the end being an annexation of other provinces of Mexico, or, in the event of that power declaring war, a probable subjugation or annexation of the whole country, and an extension of the United States republic over all America. Such, at least, is deemed the natural tendency of that new principle in national and international law—annexation; and such is the idea that now prevails in the States. As for Mexico, she appears to be crumbling to pieces. California may be considered as virtually gone from her for ever; and before long the great question in that country will be, whether California shall be an independent republic, or be annexed to the United States? A revolution has been again attempted in the Mexican province of Tabasco, which has resulted in the overthrow of the central system. Another revolution broke out in the city of Mexico on the 6th ult. The authorities were imprisoned by the insurgents, but at length released by the troops. The revolt was not suppressed until a colonel and 30 men had been killed. In the midst of these difficulties, outrages on the French Ambassador and other French citizens have occurred, which threaten to lead to serious consequences.—Letters from Washington refer to the prevalence of the rumour that Mr. Buchanan, on the part of the United States, and Mr. Pakenham on that of Great Britain, had settled upon the 49th degree of north latitude as the highest point of the northern boundary of the territory of the United States west of the Rocky Mountains.—On the 28th of June a second great fire broke out at Quebec, which destroyed 1315 houses, and and left 6000 people without a home. There are strong reasons to believe that it was caused by incendiaries, and the authorities are actively engaged in sifting the matter to the bottom. The destruction of that part of Quebec had been prophesied for some time by an insane person, who is now in custody. No other arrest has yet been made. Great numbers of those burnt out have gone up to Montreal in search of employment. The insurance offices will lose by this last fire 380,000 dollars. The public buildings destroyed are the Fabrique School-house, the Protestant Chapel, Wesleyan Chapels, Artillery-street; the large school-house, Orphan Asylum, Roman Catholic Chapel, &c. The loss is estimated at 1,250,000*l*. Only one or two lives are mentioned as having been lost. Although it was in the night, most of the inhabitants, warned by the rapid progress of the fire of the 28th May, made their escape in time with a part of their moveables.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday.—Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition from a solicitor named James Thomas Russell, complaining of certain false and slanderous statements respecting him, which appeared in the evidence taken by the gaming committee, and praying for an opportunity of refuting the evidence. Lord Brougham gave notice that he should, next session, move that the petition be referred to a committee.—The consideration of the Dublin and Galway Railway Bill was postponed.—On the motion of Lord WHARNCLIFFE, the Pauper Lunatics and Lunatic Asylums Bill was read a second time.—On the motion that it be committed in the usual way, Lord BEAUMONT moved as an amendment that it be referred to a select committee, but on a division the original motion was carried by 37 to 11.—The LORD CHANCELLOR laid on the table the 8th report of the criminal law commissioners, and paid them a high compliment on the result of their labours.—The Scotch Poor Law Bill was read a second time.—The Rothwell Prison Bill, the Spirits (Ireland) Bill, and the Excise Duties on Spirits (Channel Islands) Bill passed through the committee.—The Australian Waste Lands Bill was read a third time and passed.

Monday.—Lord CAMPBELL, in moving the rescinding of the standing order prohibiting the publication of the lives or letters of deceased peers, gave some account of the circumstances under which it originated. In 1735, the peers were startled from their propriety by an advertisement in the Postboy, intimating that the famous Curll was about to publish a volume containing Pope's correspondence for 30 years with Halifax, and other noble personages. Whereupon the Black Rod was ordered to bring all the copies of the book he could find, and the publisher himself before them; and the standing order was enacted, and was still standing a dead letter on their journals. He moved that it be rescinded, which was agreed to, without remark.—The Commons Enclosure Bill passed through committee, and was reported.—The Scotch Poor-law Bill also went through committee, in spite of the opposition of Lord CAMPBELL who proposed that the measure should stand over for another year, and was ordered to be read a third time on Tuesday.

Tuesday.—The Earl of BESBOROUGH moved the resumption of the adjourned debate on the Dublin and Galway Railway Bill; the question before the House being that the further consideration of the Bill be postponed to that day three months.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE exculpated the promoters of this scheme, on the ground that though gross frauds had been committed in making up the share list, other companies had been guilty of similar practices. They would have a renewed cry for Repeal of the Union should they do "injustice to Ireland" by throwing out this Bill.—The Earl of ST. GERMANS recommended that the Bill should be sent back to the committee. He could not make up his mind to reject it altogether.—Lord BEAUMONT felt also inclined to advise that course.—The Duke of CLEVELAND and Lord REDESDALE thought it impossible, having due regard to the standing orders of the House, to permit the Bill, after such flagrant frauds had been substantiated, to be passed. To the argument, that because other railway companies had perpetrated frauds, this should be allowed to pass scot free, Lord REDESDALE answered, that no person would be punished if such an argument were to be deemed valid. The pickpocket who was caught in the act of stealing would only have to say, "'Tis a hardship to punish me, because if you inquire you will find that twenty others have been playing at the same trick."—The Earl of WICKLOW, Lord MONTEAGLE, and the Duke of WELLINGTON, urged the impossibility of allowing such wholesale frauds to go unpunished.—The Earl of DEVON thought the frauds might be overlooked in consideration of the utility of the scheme.—Their lordships divided, when the Bill was thrown out by 35 to 8.—On the suggestion of the LORD CHANCELLOR, the consideration of the course advisable to adopt in regard to the perjured parties connected with this railway was postponed to Thursday.—The Poor-law Amendment (Scotland) Bill was read a third time and passed, after having the 17th clause expunged. This clause affected a locality in the neighbourhood of Edinburgh, and Lord COTTENHAM moved its omission, on the ground of injustice, and its reversing the decisions of the supreme courts of Scotland, and, on appeal, the confirmatory decision of the House of Lords.—The Duke of BUCCLEUCH and the Earl of DALHOUSIE defended the retention of the clause; but Lord CAMPBELL, who had been counsel in the appeal case, appealed to the woolsack, and the LORD CHANCELLOR declared his opinion judicially against the clause, as being a violation of contract.

The Duke of WELLINGTON felt it impossible to resist this, and recommended the withdrawal of the clause, which was acceded to, though the Duke of BUCCLEUCH expressed his fears that the amendment might cause the Commons to reject the Bill.—The Pauper Lunatics Bill, and the Bill for the Care and Treatment of Lunatics, passed through committee. The Lunatics Asylum (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

Thursday.—The Royal assent was given by commission to the Spirit Duties (Guernsey and Jersey) Bill, Stock and Unclaimed Dividends Bill, Church Building Act Bill, Militia Enrolment Bill, an Act for the Relief of Jews elected to Municipal Offices, an Act to Amend the Law of Libel, an Act to stay Execution for Misdemeanours upon giving Bail in Error, an Act to extend the Indemnity of Members of Art-Unions against certain Penalties, an Act to facilitate the completion of a Geological Survey of Great Britain and Ireland under the direction of the Woods and Forests, the Loan Societies Bill, a Bill to prevent the Advertising of Foreign and other Illegal Lotteries, and to discontinue certain Actions commenced under the provisions of a late Bill; the Turnpike-roads Bill, Highways (England) Bill, Shrewsbury and Holyhead Roads Bill, Rothwell Gaol Bill, Turnpike Acts Bill, Turnpike Trusts Consolidation (South Wales) Bill, Drainage Bill, Colleges (Ireland) Bill, Archbishops and Bishops (Ireland) Bill, Unlawful Oaths (Ireland) Bill, Jurors' Books (Ireland) Bill, Spirits (Ireland) Bill, Union and Division of Parishes (Ireland) Bill, Thames and Medway Canal Bill, Falmouth Harbour Bill, Cromford Canal Bill, Sheffield Waterworks Bill, St. Helen's Improvement Bill, Bermondsey Improvement Bill, Westminster Improvement Bill, Tacumshin Lake Bill, St. Matthew's (Bethnal-green) Rectory Bill, Morden College Bill, Hawkins's Estate Bill, Mainwaring's Estate Bill, Lord Monson's Estate Bill, Gildart's Estate Bill, Heaviside's Divorce Bill, and the following Railway Bills: Wear Valley; Aberdeen; Norwich, Brandon, and East Dereham; Bristol and Exeter Extension, London and Birmingham Leasing of the West London, South Western Extension, Dundee and Perth, Edinburgh and Northern, Aberdare, Clydesdale Junction, Scottish Central, Caledonian, Newcastle and Berwick, Hawick and Roxburgh; Liverpool, Wigan, Bolton, and Bury; South-eastern (Tunbridge Wells Branch), Newport and Pontypool, Perth and Forfar, Manchester and Leeds Extension, Manchester, Leeds, Wakefield, Pontefract, and Goole.—The Earl of BESBOROUGH read extracts from the sworn evidence given by John Stinton before the Dublin and Galway committee, and moved that the Attorney-General be ordered to prosecute the said John Stinton for perjury.—Lord CAMPBELL feared that, though it was evident the fellow had lied abominably, it would be difficult to substantiate an indictment for perjury on the evidence given by him. Morally speaking it was gross prevarication, but would not amount to "legal perjury."—The Lord CHANCELLOR having expressed a similar apprehension, a committee was appointed to consider the evidence given by Stinton, and to advise the House as to the best steps to pursue in order the most effectually to punish him.—Lord BEAUMONT, having referred to the position of Greece, asked whether Government had received any information respecting the state of the frontier between Turkey and Greece: and if so, whether they had taken any means to prevent the excesses which were known to take place there: and also whether they had sent instructions to Sir E. Lyons to obtain from the Greek Government the dismissal of Valasa, who commanded the Greek forces on the frontier; and, if such instructions had been sent, whether they had been complied with?—The Earl of ABERDEEN replied, that the excesses which really took place on the frontiers of Greece were grossly exaggerated in the reports which reached this country: though it was true that the Greek provinces were inhabited by a robber population, who frequently committed outrages on the Turkish borders. The Greek Government, however, could not be accused of encouraging these depredations. His lordship having at considerable length described the actual state of affairs in Greece, said, that neither counsel nor representations had been spared by the representative of England at the Greek Court, with the view of preserving general tranquillity and maintaining the independence of both Greece and Turkey. Lord Aberdeen emphatically denied that British influence had in the least declined in Athens.—The Coal Trade (Port of London) Bill was read a second time, after a remonstrance from the Marquis of LONDONDERRY against the imposition of an additional penny tax for the improvement of the city of London.—The Lunatics Bill, the Bonded Corn Bill, the Leasing and Selling of Railways Bills, the Real Property Bill, the Fisheries (Ireland) Bill, the Testamentary Disposition Bill, and the Master and Workmen Bill, were read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday.—At an early sitting, the Customs Laws Repeal Bill, Customs Management Bill, Customs Duties Bill, Warehousing of Goods Bill, British Vessels Bill, Shipping and Navigation Bill, Trade of British Possessions Abroad Bill, Customs Bounties and Allowances Bill, Isle of Man Trade Bill, Smuggling Prevention Bill, Customs Regulation Bill, and the Stock in Trade Bill passed through committee.—At the evening sitting Mr. P. M. STEWART, on the order of the day for going into Committee of Supply, called attention to the petition of the Moderator of the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, complaining of the refusal of sites to congregations of that church. He stated that the Free Church of Scotland now included in its members one-third of the inhabitants of that country. It had 620 ministers and 800 congregations. 776,000*l*. had been subscribed for the general purposes of that church, and upwards of 300,000*l*. had been expended in building new churches. Though the members of the Free Church enjoyed all the rights of citizens, they complained that in certain districts, where the land was held in large estates by the proprietors, they had been prevented from purchasing sites for churches at a full and fair value. They had suffered in consequence great hardships, which he was instructed to bring under the notice of the House. He then stated several cases in which the congregations were obliged to worship in woods, on the high roads, and on mountain sides, in the most inclement weather; and others, in which they had been obliged to meet in canvass tents, set up by sufferance on private property. He trusted that, when these facts were duly considered, the Government and the proprietors of Scotland would help the people of Scotland in bringing about a better state of things. He wanted no law to enforce proprietors to sell their land for the sites of churches; but he trusted that this discussion would induce the proprietors, of their own accord, to apply a remedy to the grievances of which he complained.—Sir J. GRAHAM observed, that Mr. Stewart was not to blame for calling attention to this very painful subject. It was one, however, on which legislation could not take place; and the only remedy for the grievances of which Mr. Stewart complained was to be found in the formation of a better state of public opinion in Scotland. He knew not whether there was any exaggeration in the facts stated by Mr. Stewart; but he did think that the blame was not exclusively on one side. He had no doubt that sites had been refused originally in the hope that those who had seceded from the Established Church of Scotland would return to its pale; but that hope was daily diminishing, and that circumstance might, perhaps, lead to the concession of sites where they had been at first refused. The prayer of the petition appeared to him to be most reasonable; and he felt convinced that the proprietors of Scotland would not disregard it. If he were a Scotch proprietor he would certainly grant to the Free Church the liberty to purchase which they required. In many cases, however, the members of that church, out of rivalry to the church from which they had seceded, had sought to obtain sites from proprietors in the immediate proximity of the church which they had left. He would not acquiesce in any such claims; and yet he knew that in many cases such claims had been made and insisted on. He trusted that after this discussion, free toleration would again prevail in Scotland, and that every facility would be granted by the proprietors of that country to the erection of places of public worship for the congregations of the Free Church.—After a few remarks from Mr. HAWES, Mr. CARDWELL, Mr. HUME, and Mr. MACKENZIE, Mr. SHEIL recommended Government to attach the Free Church to the State by means of an endowment.—Mr. HINDLEY opposed this suggestion, contending that such an endowment would destroy all the zeal, energy, and spiritual efficacy of that church.—After a few words from Mr. P. BORTHWICK and Mr. P. M. STEWART, the discussion on this subject terminated.—On the motion for going into supply, Mr. HUME called the attention of the House to the loss sustained by light sovereigns, and moved an address to the Queen, praying her Majesty to direct that some offices should be appointed by Government to receive light gold at the intrinsic value, according to the number of grains deficient in the average weight, and not allow the loss of sixpence, more or less, to the holder of the coin, according to the will of the person who is to receive the coin.—Mr. SPOONER seconded the motion, and took a comprehensive review of the changes effected in the currency since the measure of 1797, which had been denounced by the Premier as a fatal measure. He referred to the work on the Currency by "Gemini," and fortified the opinions set forth in it by quoting corroborative opinions from Sir J. Graham's "Corn and Currency." The really fatal measure was the Act of 1819; for, though we were called upon to return to the old standard of value, we did not in point of fact return to the old standard, but to a standard at least 15 per cent. higher than it had been before in this country. Under the plea of keeping faith with the creditor, there was a breach of faith with the debtor, for he was called upon to pay in a higher standard than had ever existed before. But there was a greater breach of faith than that; for the language of the Legislature was, that gentlemen might proceed in their investments on the then standard, for it was impossible that Parliament would ever alter that standard; because, in point of fact, by their resolution regarding the pound note and the shilling they declared that they had never left the old standard of value. After tracing the effects of this Act through the several succeeding panics, Mr. Spooner said that in 1842 distress came again, and the right hon. baronet came forward with his Bill of 1844, admitting it to be a complement to his Bill of 1819. If the Bill of 1819 was right, the Bill of 1844 was necessary. But he doubted if it would work. Its object was to reduce the standard of value to the level of the Continent. But if it did that, it would only be by reducing the prices to the level of the Continent; and he called the attention of gentlemen connected with the landed interest to this subject. The hon. member, in conclusion, referred to a pamphlet recently published by Mr. Alison, the historian, and read an extract from it to show the fatal effects of the Currency Act of 1819 upon the country at large.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that, when he came down to the House that evening, he had not anticipated a discussion upon all the changes made in the currency since the year 1797 down to the present time, nor the proposition of a vote of censure, without notice, on Her Majesty's Government and himself for measures which they took two years ago, and of which their explanation had hitherto been deemed satisfactory. Declining to enter into the extensive subject on which Mr. Spooner had enlarged in so extraordinary a speech, he pointed out the difficulties which surrounded the institution of the district offices recommended by Mr. Hume, and justified the ministry for the proclamation calling in the light gold which it issued in 1842. He said, however, that all the Post-offices in the country were directed to take light sovereigns at the uniform rate of 3*d*. each.—Mr. WILLIAMS also declined to follow Mr. Spooner into his system of currency, which he was surprised to find revived again into that house after the demolishing onslaught made upon it a few years ago by Sir R. Peel in an immortal speech. He then proceeded to enforce the views of Mr. Hume, and to censure Government for not paying more attention to the interests of the poor, when it issued its proclamation calling in the light sovereigns.—Sir R. PEEL regretted that Mr. Spooner had not given notice of his intention to review the monetary system of the country from 1797 down to 1845. He had only heard a small portion of his very long speech; but he could assure Mr. Spooner that if he had known of his intention to hang it upon a motion which did not afford the slightest pretext for it, he would have made a point of being present during the delivery of the whole of it, from curiosity as well as from interest. By that speech he had added a fresh claim to those which he already had upon the gratitude of his constituents; for he had shown himself a very able disciple of the Birmingham school. He never knew who wrote the letters of "Gemini." Classical readers would refer them to Castor and Pollux; but Warwickshire men always attribute them to Attwood and Spooner. He was rather surprised that Mr. Spooner, after pointing out the evils of our present monetary system, had not described to the House the practical measure which he would introduce for the reform of them; and, above all, that he had not embodied his views in the corporeal form of a bill. Sir R. Peel then made the House very merry by reading several extracts from the pamphlet on the currency of the country just published by Mr. Alison, whom Mr. Spooner had eulogized in the course of his speech as the greatest practical philosopher in the country. Mr. Alison appeared to be a fit associate for the firm of Spooner and Attwood; for he was a stanch advocate for an unlimited issue of bank paper convertible into gold, at the market price of that article on the day of its presentation.—Mr. J. A. SMITH complained of the scarcity of silver at the present moment. There was the greatest difficulty in procuring it in sufficient quantities to pay wages. Perpetual complaints of the great want of it had been made without effect for the last 25 years.—Dr. BOWRING contended that Government was not justified in proposing arbitrary alterations in the currency and in making the poorer classes of the country suffer by them. He then made several observations on the recent alterations made in the currency of the island of Malta.—Mr. Newdegate maintained that the present system effected a compulsory exchange between labour and gold, and in this exchange the labourer was injured. He had a right to protection, in consequence of the severe burdens which ultimately fell upon him. The effect of this system was to impose upon the labourer the heavy charge of maintaining a currency the most expensive in the world, and of bearing a further burden of full 50 per cent. upon the National Debt for the purpose of supporting that bullion currency. The injurious effect of the system upon the agricultural interest was as clearly traceable. The Bank of England being obliged to keep a certain amount of bullion in its cellars, if the prices of bullion rose, the bank contracted its issues. The consequences were, an immediate fall in the value of other commodities; the master manufacturers reduced their men's wages; dissatisfaction ensued on the part of the latter, and then the right hon. Baronet came forward and told the agriculturists that it was necessary they should reduce their prices to meet the exigencies of the manufacturing classes. Mr. Newdegate enjoined hon. Members not to be deterred by the powers of ridicule exercised by the Premier, from pursuing their duty to their constituents. The effect of the present erroneous system might be faithfully represented by the words of a right hon. Baronet, a great authority in that House, viz., that "its evils were universally felt, from the Sovereign upon the throne down to the most abject pauper."—Mr. Muntz hoped that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would adopt some measures to prevent the deterioration of the gold coin, and the inconvenience resulting therefrom to the poor.—After a few words from Sir W. Clay the House divided, when there were 34 for Mr. Hume's amendment, and 64 against it.—Mr. Tufnell then called the attention of the House to the regulations lately issued with regard to the compulsory disposal of lands held in the island of Ceylon.—Mr. Hope replied, and after a short discussion, in which Lord Ebrington, Dr. Bowring, Mr. Aglionby, and Mr. C. Buller expressed their sympathy with the civil servants of Government in Ceylon, whom they thought harshly treated and unjustly aspersed, the matter dropped.—On the question that the Speaker leave the chair, another discussion was raised; but eventually the House resolved itself, pro formâ, into a Committee of Supply.—Mr. Bouverie moved the reception of the report of the Death by Accidents Compensation Bill.—The Attorney-General opposed it, and a division took place—For the report, 7; against it, 59; majority against the Bill, 52.—The Libel Bill passed through Committee, and the County Rates Bill was read a third time and passed.—Mr. S. Crawford obtained leave to bring in a Bill for granting compensation to Tenants in Ireland.—On the motion of Sir J. Graham, the Lords amendments to the Colleges (Ireland) Bill were agreed to.

Monday.—At an early sitting the removal of the Paupers Bill was reported.—The Real Property Bill, the Taxing Masters (Ireland) Bill, and the Church Building Acts Amendment Bill, were read a third time and passed.—The Games and Wagers Bill passed through committee.—Several unopposed Bills were forwarded a stage.—At the evening sitting—On going into Committee of Supply, Mr. Ewart called attention to the reports of the Inspectors on Education appointed by the Privy Council, and suggested that as the army, navy, and ordnance estimates were always introduced to the notice of Parliament by a speech from the Minister to whose department they belonged, the same practice should be adopted with regard to those estimates which referred to such educational establishments as were supported wholly or partially by Parliamentary grants. He was ashamed of the small sum voted for the purposes of education in England and Wales. This year it had been increased, but still it was only 75,000*l.* He also pressed on the House the expediency of encouraging the formation of public libraries freely open to the public; and stated it as his opinion that great public advantage would accrue from making the appointments to the subordinate offices of Government depend as far as possible on the examination of the merits of the candidates for such offices. He then moved a series of resolutions in conformity with his speech, and declared that it was his intention to take the sense of the House upon them.—Sir R. Peel admitted that the great importance of the subject justified Mr. Ewart in bringing it before the House, even at that late period of the session. Information as to the progress of education was presented to the House every year in a series of blue books, which were perhaps so full and comprehensive as to deter hon. members from perusing them. He thought that information might be made more practically useful, if a statement were made orally by some Minister of the Crown, of what had been intended and accomplished each year on the subject of education, when he brought forward the educational estimates; and during the recess he would take that suggestion into his consideration. He stated the amount of public money at present granted for the purposes of public education in England and Wales—explained how it was expended in detail—observed that it had been increased this year from 40,000*l.* to 75,000*l.*—and added, that he would consider whether it could not be still further usefully increased next session. He then replied, point by point, to the speech of Mr. Ewart on the subject of promoting schools for training masters. To elevate the status of the schoolmaster, a matter which he considered of very high importance, the Privy Council had recommended the erection of houses for their residence; and that recommendation was now in progress of adoption. He thought that the system now adopted in the public offices was superior to that recommended by Mr. Ewart for adoption in his fourth resolution. At present all candidates for employment in public offices were engaged for the first year only probationally; and he thought that the examination which Mr. Ewart suggested would not insure a fitting supply of trustworthy candidates. After this statement he trusted that Mr. Ewart would not press his resolutions to a division, but would be content with having a negative put upon them.—After a few words from Mr. Wyse, Mr. Hume, and Mr. Hawes, expressing their gratification at the statement made by Sir R. Peel, the resolutions were negatived without a division.—Mr. Williams moved for a select committee to inquire into the allegations contained in the petition of the senior students of the School of Design, in Somerset House, and into the general management and present state of that school.—Sir G. Clerk entered at considerable length into the foundation of these allegations, and into the cause of quarrel which had originated between the students and their master. He resisted the motion.—After a conversation, in which Mr. Wakley, Mr. Wyse, Mr. Ewart, and Mr. Hume, took part, the motion was negatived without a division.—Lord Clements brought forward the regulations of constabulary force in Ireland, some of which he complained of.—Sir T. Fremantle replied, and at length the House went into commitee of supply, and several votes were taken.—On the motion of Sir J. Graham, the Physic and Surgery Bills were committed pro formâ in order that they may be printed with alterations for consideration next session.

Tuesday.—The Court of Chancery Bill, the Stock in Trade Bill, the Removal of Paupers Bill, the Small Debts Bill, the Customs Regulation Bill, and several official Bills, were read a third time and passed. The Apprehension of Offenders Bill passed through committee, and the Joint-Stock Banks (Scotland and Ireland) Bill was recommitted.—Lord G. Somerset moved amendments in the standing orders relative to railways, to the effect:—That in future the deposits on railway Bills shall be 10 instead of 5 per cent. on the capital; that in Irish projects the notices to occupiers of land shall in future be deposited with the Clerks of the Unions instead of the Clerks of the Peace; that the railway business done this session, if up to the point required by the late resolution, shall be sustained as good for so far in the next session. These amended standing orders were, after some discussion, agreed to.—Mr. M. Gibson moved for a select committee to investigate the allegations of Col. Latour, respecting the granting of land in Western Australia, but after a reply from Mr. Hope, withdrew his motion.—On the motion of Sir J. Graham, the Fees in Criminal Proceedings Bill was read a second time.

Wednesday.—The House met at noon.—In reply to a question from Mr. C. Buller, Mr. Hope stated that means had been taken to re-organise the system of education established in Malta, and that Government were in daily expectation of a report on the subject.—Mr. Fielden then brought forward a motion relative to the treatment which he and others had received under the Income-tax Act. In the year 1844 three processes had been issued against him and his brothers out of the Court of Exchequer for the recovery of income-tax for profits on trade for the years 1839, 1840, and 1841, and for the years 1840, 1841, and 1842, when they had incurred a heavy loss in both periods. He complained that his goods had been taken and sold without his having an opportunity of appearing before the Court to prove the injustice of the demand. He complained that the conduct of those who were carrying the income-tax into execution was most arbitrary and unjust: and entered into the details of the proceedings against himself and brothers to prove the validity of his complaint. The flourishing revenue so much boasted of was made up in part of the fruits of such barefaced robbery as that of which he had been the victim. He thought that it ought to be made known to the public at once, that under the new law of taxation the Income-tax Commissioners and the Court of Exchequer together could assess and rob to any extent with perfect impunity. He brought this forward as a public question, believing that in Lancashire the income-tax had been exacted most unjustly and oppressively from thousands. He concluded by moving for a series of returns relative to his own case.—Mr. Williams seconded the motion, and stated that there were thousands of cases of similar oppression under the Income-tax Act.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer doubted the correctness of that assertion. He was sorry that Mr. Fielden had been subjected to any inconvenience or injury; but he was apprehensive that Mr. Fielden had not complied with the necessary conditions to obtain redress. The difficulty of which Mr. Fielden complained, would not have arisen, if he had shown a little less of that British virtue which led him to resist with more than ordinary firmness what he considered an improper intrusion on his private affairs. He then entered into a defence of the conduct of the local Commissioners and of their proceedings against Mr. Fielden in the Court of Exchequer.—Mr. Hawes hoped that no man would be prevented by the discouragement cast by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the "British virtue" of offering opposition to arbitrary measures, from stating any grievance which he might suffer under the income-tax. He asserted that Mr. Fielden's case was one of great hardship and of deep individual and public interest. It had received no answer except a general sermon on the necessity of obeying the law, and a sneer at what the Chancellor of the Exchequer called "British virtue."—Mr. Bernal called on Government to appoint some permanent board, with power to mitigate such evils as those of which Mr. Fielden had so properly and justly complained.—Mr. Hume said that the Commissioners had acted towards Mr. Fielden with extreme rigour, and in a manner which could only be explained upon the supposition that they entertained some political grudge against him.—Sir R. Peel explained the reasons which had induced the Government to select the Land-tax Commissioners for the purposes of the Income-tax. It would cause him very great regret to find that Mr. Fielden had any just cause to complain of the operation of this act.—After a short conversation, in which Mr. Brotherton and Capt. Pechell joined, Mr. Fielden declined to divide the House; but expressed a hope that the Government would grant him the correspondence between the Commissioners of the Court of Appeal and the Board of Stamps and Taxes.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer could not produce the correspondence because it was extra-official, but assented to the production of the other returns.—Mr. Bernal called the attention of Government to the accidents which had recently occurred on two or three of the leading railways. Unless Government interfered, he was afraid that some contingencies would occur still more calamitous.—Sir G. Clerk lamented that the Board of Trade had no power to enforce the compliance of the railway companies to those suggestions which it felt itself bound to make. He thought it might be necessary to impose some more efficient check on the companies for the prevention of future accidents.—After a few words from Mr. Clive and Mr. P. Howard, Sir R. Peel observed, that the recent accidents might have been prevented by due precaution. It was constantly stated in reply to the charge of numerous accidents occurring on railways, that a greater number of accidents occurred from stage-coaches; but that sophistical argument was no answer. "We have a right," said Sir R. Peel, "to expect that those who are deriving large profits from railways should take every precaution which ample means can afford to guard against accidents; and if they do not do so, I am confident Parliament will demand a reduction of the profits in order to provide a more efficient means of safety."—A conversation then took place on the best mode of transacting public business in the next session of Parliament, in which Mr. Hume, Sir R. Peel, Mr. Hawes, Mr. Bernal, and several other members joined. The result was that Mondays and Fridays are to be appropriated to Government business, and Tuesdays and Thursdays to motions. In future the House is to sit on Wednesdays at 12 and rise at 6 o'clock—a plan by which members will have one evening in the Parliamentary week left to their own engagements.—Lord Palmerston called attention to the great deficiency in our present means of national defence. He stated that, independently of a National Guard, consisting of 1,000,000 of men, France had a standing army of 340,000 fully equipped for warfare—that she had also a fleet equal to our own, and steamers capable of transporting 30,000 men—that the harbours in which she might collect that fleet were inaccessible to attack, and were within a few hours' voyage of the coast of England—and, last of all, that steam navigation had converted the Channel into a sort of river "crossable" by a steam bridge. He next showed that we were not in a condition to meet any sudden hostile attack; and in so doing repeated the observations which he made on a former occasion, on the necessity of placing our dockyards and naval arsenals in a proper condition of defence, and of providing along our coasts convenient harbours of refuge. He was glad to find that measures had been taken to remedy some of the deficiencies which he had pointed out; but still he thought that they did not go far enough. He showed that if 20,000 or 30,000 men were suddenly landed on our coast, the only regular force which we had to meet them was 50,000 men, dispersed all over the three kingdoms and in the Channel Islands. Considerable time must elapse before they could be brought together to oppose the enemy, and in that time much mischief might be inflicted on the country. To meet that state of things, he called on the Government to re-organise the militia, which was an acknowledged, established, and constitutional force. He suggested to Government the expediency of not allowing the autumn to pass over without balloting for and enrolling the militia, and the propriety of giving them in the next summer their 28 days of training. For a comparatively small amount of expense it would thus have the means of calling into arms within a fortnight 50,000 men in Great Britain, and 20,000 more in Ireland. The knowledge that the Government had such a force at its command would be a most powerful assistance in preserving it from difficulties which might ultimately terminate in war.—Sir R. Peel denied that the country was in the defenceless position described by Lord Palmerston. If we should be compelled to resort to hostilities, it would be found that there never was a period when so formidable a demonstration of the energies of the country could be made as now, when we had a Sovereign who would be supported by a people determined in a just cause, to make every exertion which the [illegible] of Great Britain demanded. He was surprised at the apprehensions which Lord Palmerston had just expressed, as his lordship had been 10 years in office as Minister of [illegible] circumstance which would not prevent him from [illegible] were now in a far better situation to repel hostilities [illegible] had ever been during his lordship's administration [illegible] that period there had been no ballot for the militia; [illegible] not been such an amount of military force in the country; [illegible] there had not been so many sail of the line in the [illegible] at present. With regard to foreign powers he [illegible] hesitate to provide measures for the contingent security of the country, whatever offence it might give them. On this subject he was between two fires—that of Lord Palmerston on the one side, and that of the economists on the other. In taking into account the defensive power of this country, Lord Palmerston had omitted from his list the disciplined body of pensioners, who had once served in the army and the Marines, and who were liable to be again called into service—a force amounting to 50,000 men at least. Twenty years ago he had felt that the militia was in an unsatisfactory condition, and that some alterations ought to be made in its constitution. The ballot for the militia could at any moment be put into force, for it was only suspended at present. He would not state to Lord Palmerston his intentions on that subject at present. He hoped that the House would not force him to any further explanation on these subjects. The naval arsenals were now safe, the dockyards were in repair; and the Government was taking measures for establishing harbours of refuge at Harwich, Dover, and other points of the coast. Lord Palmerston urged us to make further provisions for our defence, because we had a large surplus of revenue. It was true that we had, but who was to be thanked for it? He was placed by the noble lord in a situation in which he must rest upon the confidence of the House, and abstain from making those disclosures, which could be easily made, and which would be the best answer to Lord Palmerston's observations.—Lord Palmerston, in explanation, observed, that he did not wish to encourage Ministers in any endeavours to rival in extent the armies of continental Powers. Neither did he intend to impeach the spirit of Englishmen. All he had done was to recommend the enrolment of the militia, and the provision of some organisation for the defence of the country; for unless we had a good organisation to fall back on, all the bravery of our people would be found unable to cope with the disciplined armies of veteran soldiers which by bridges of steam might suddenly be brought against us.—Sir R. Peel was not prepared to admit that our means of defence were at all diminished by the invention of steam. Two parties could play at the game of building "steam bridges," and our steam navy, if called into action, would prove an astonishment to the rest of the world.—Sir C. Napier pointed out the deficiency of our war steamers, the superiority of the French steamers, the insecurity of our dockyards and naval arsenals, and the difficulty which we had to encounter in manning the navy.—The house then resolved itself into a Committee of Supply, and a great many votes were taken, after the usual objections and divisions.—In the course of the various conversations to which the votes gave rise, Sir R. Peel announced his intention of proposing, before the close of the session, a sum in aid of the sufferers by the late fires in Quebec. This vote would be not so much a matter of amount as a mark of sympathy from the House of Commons. It was stated by Sir H. Douglas, that the loss occasioned by the two fires amounted to 1,250,000*l.* On the New Zealand vote of 22,505*l.*, Sir R. Peel acknowledged that negotiations had been re-opened between the New Zealand Company and the Colonial-office, which he trusted would lead to an amicable arrangement. In case, however, such a result should not be obtained, he thought an evening might be fixed for the discussion of the question.—On this understanding the debate, which had been arranged to take place on this vote, was partially dispensed with, and the vote was agreed to.

Thursday.—Mr. Hawes gave notice of a resolution on Monday next, to the effect that the conduct of Mr. Wray (in the transactions with Mr. Bonham) disqualified him from holding any public service.—The report of the Slave-trade (Brazil) Bill was brought up, and Mr. M. Gibson reiterated his objections to the measure, and asked if it were not a fact that the Brazilian Minister in this country had protested against it.—Sir R. Peel, after defending the Bill, admitted that the Brazilian Minister had protested against the measure, though he did not think that a sufficient reason for delaying it. When an answer had been given to the protest, both documents would be laid on the table of the House.—On the third reading of the Games and Wagers Bill, Mr. Hume moved an amendment, to insert in the 15th clause words having the effect of giving costs as between attorney and client to the plaintiffs in the qui tam actions.—This amendment was negatived by 44 to 10; and the Bill was read a third time and passed.—A discussion arose on the Waste Lands Australian Bill, which, having come down from the Lords applicable to the different Australian colonies, has been now reduced to a single clause, relating to Van Diemen's Land exclusively.—Mr. Hawes considered that they could take other measures to provide for the prosperity of Van Diemen's Land, and supply employment for the population. The admission of the corn of the colony duty free into this country, as recommended by Sir E. Wilmot, would benefit both. He moved the committal of the Bill that day three months.—After a short debate the amendment was rejected by 35 to 7. In committee, Mr. Hawes again urged his objections. At this moment the price of wheat in this country was rising, while we refused to admit duty free the produce of a colony admirably adapted for agriculture, and for the relief of which we were contriving the present expedient.—Sir J. Graham urged the importance of providing employment on the waste lands of the colony for the convict population.—Mr. Villiers thought that all opposition to the Bill would be withdrawn if Government would give them the assurance that next session the corn of the colony would be admitted duty free. He called on the agricultural members to express their opinion on the subject. The Bill then went through committee.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer having briefly stated the details of the two great fires which have desolated Quebec, an address cited, proposed, in a committee of the whole House, an address to the Crown, praying that a sum of 20,000*l.* be applied to the relief of the inhabitants, and assuring her Majesty, in the usual form, that the House will make good the same.—After a few remarks from Mr. Hawes, Sir R. H. Inglis, and Sir H. Douglas, the address was unanimously agreed to.

Friday.—Lord Courtenay moved the further consideration of the London and York Railway Bill, which was met by an amendment from Mr. Ward, that the Bill be recommitted, on the ground that the committee had refused to hear evidence on the part of competing lines. The amendment was supported by Mr. Hutt, Mr. Darby, Mr. P. M. Stewart, and Mr. Cotlett, and opposed by Mr. B. Wall and Mr. P. Scrope. The House divided when there were, for the amendment 19, against it 79; majority 60. [Left sitting.]

Government School of Design.—The annual meeting and distribution of prizes to the successful students took place last week at Somerset-house. Lord Colborne presided, and was supported by Lord Ashburton, the Right Hon. H. Labouchere, M.P.; the Hon. Hugh Cholmondeley, M.P.; B. Hawes, Esq., M.P.; H. T. Hope, Esq; H. G. Knight, Esq, M.P.; R. M. Milnes, Esq., M.P.; P. Pusey, Esq., M.P.; Sir R. Westmacott, R.A.; Thomas Wyse, Esq., M.P.; J. G. Lefevre, Vice-Chancellor of the University of London, &c. A large number of ladies were also present, and the rooms were decorated with specimens of the students' skill.—Mr. Heath Wilson, director of the school, read the report. It stated that the prize committee appointed by the council had examined the various designs and drawings exhibited by the competing students, and had much satisfaction in testifying to the great improvements made in the school during the past session. The designs were more numerous, better executed, and displayed more knowledge of ornament, and greater range of taste and composition than those exhibited on any similar occasion, holding out a cheering prospect of continued improvement on the part of the pupils. The committee had also much satisfaction in reporting that some of the students were already engaged as designers by manufacturers, and several of the designs which were exhibited that day had been purchased by upholsterers and others. An evening class had been established, in consequence of a large portion of students, to whom the study of the practice of painting was of essential importance, being able to attend in the evening only; but as painting by gas-light was attended with considerable difficulty, the practice of these students had been principally confined to subjects from casts, or groups of still life. This arrangement had been found of great practical benefit to the students, and the works produced by them had considerable merit. The works of the female pupils were extremely satisfactory, as had also been the progress of the pupils in the modelling class. The chairman remarked, that in the higher classes of art, the people of England had generally been found inferior to their continental neighbours; but he thought, from the achievements of the students in that school, that in a few years we might be able to equal them. The noble lord passed a high eulogium on Mr. Wilson, the director of the school, and all who were concerned in the work of tuition. His lordship then delivered the prizes. They consisted of sums of money from 30*s.* up to 8 guineas, and were 60 in number, and were awarded for designs in carpets, paper-hangings, handkerchiefs, chandeliers, and every conceivable branch of manufactures, as well as for paintings, drawings, and sculpture, &c. The principal prizes were adjudged to Messrs. Harvey, Cadman, Pearce, Jefferson, Denby, Longford, Wise, O'Reilly, Durrant, Abercrombie, and Wells; in the female school, to Misses Fillmore, Cooke, Bragg, Smith, Hunter, Shaw, Jennings, Farrer, and Culbard.

Extraordinary Will Case.—One of the most prolonged arguments with respect to the will of a deceased wealthy Baronet has been in progress the greater part of the past week. Sir H. Jenner Fust has already heard three civilians out of six engaged in the suit. The deceased was Sir G. R. De Apreece, Bart., and though most wealthy, it appears that he lived in a style infinitely inferior to the position in which such wealth placed him. He had large landed property in Essex, Hampshire, and other counties. His freehold property is worth from 180,000*l.* to 190,000*l.*, and he left a personal estate of something short of 25,000*l.* From the pleas it appears that the Baronet, from his youth up, was exceedingly eccentric. The will in dispute, and which is opposed by a sister (Mrs. Peacock), was executed at a fishmonger's shop in the neighbourhood of Fleet-street, the parties who were witnesses to it being entire strangers. The document was duly attested, but it gave the property, real and personal, to St. George's Hospital, excepting two legacies to the executors. The rental of the estates amounted to 7,800*l.* a year. In bar of the validity of the will insanity is alleged. The number of witnesses examined, and documentary evidence brought forward, is unparalleled, not less than 74 witnesses having been produced and examined upon one plea. Dr. Phillimore took two days in reading and commenting upon the exhibits. Dr. Jenner, who followed, also occupied two days with his argument in support of the paper. Sir J. Dodson took a day and three quarters in opposition to the paper, and as Dr. Addams, who followed on the same side, desired not to have his speech split in half, the learned judge having intimated his intention not to sit again until the caveat day, the arguments have necessarily been postponed. If reliance is to be placed upon the immense mass of letters which have been brought forward in support of the will, unquestionably St. George's Hospital will reap a rich harvest by the distribution. But the deceased baronet, it appears, for years contemplated self-destruction, and ultimately died by his own hand. He had carefully collated for years what he called a "Fact Book," in which were pasted all the accounts of murders, suicides, and dreadful accidents. From the proof that monomania upon such subjects existed in the testator's mind, the sister of the deceased has proceeded to oppose the will. At the time of his death, Sir G. R. De Apreece was 51 years of age, the will being executed some years before. Among the arguments brought forward to prove insanity were a constant fluctuation of intention, a degree of wilfulness in character and irritable temperament, wholly inconsistent with what may be considered a sound state of mind, eccentricities the most remarkable, and incoherency of conduct. At meals he would swear at the cook and the servants for viands prepared for him, and subsequently eat them. On one occasion he threw a hare on the fire, took it off again, forced the leg down the servant's back, saying it was a mouse. A vast variety of similar eccentricities were brought forward. But on the other side the documentary evidence is produced to show capacity. The brother of the deceased is married to the widow of Sir H. Davy; and from various communications produced, sanity is sought to be proved. It will be perceived by this brief outline of the case that the family of the testator is entirely deprived of all interest in this immense property, which is left, with the exceptions named, to an hospital with which he was very little acquainted. Dr. Addams, it is expected, will occupy three or four days as counsel for the next of kin, and then Dr. Harding will follow on the same side. This will be one of the most strongly contested will causes ever brought forward in the Prerogative Court. That it will be appealed against, whichever way the learned Judge decides, is pretty certain. It will afford nearly as rich a harvest for the legal profession as that gleaned out of the estate of Mr. James Wood, the banker, of Gloucester.—Observer.

The Effects of the late Duke of Sussex.—The sale of the last portion of His Royal Highness's effects, consisting chiefly of personal apparel, trinkets, miniatures, &c., concluded on Monday, after lasting for three days. The articles generally fetched moderate prices, and the three days sale realised upwards of 1000*l.*

Extension of the Regent's Park.—On Monday a large number of workmen, by order of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, commenced fencing in the land, including Primrose-hill on the north side of the Regent's Park, recently belonging to the Euston estate, but exchanged with the Commissioners for other lands, for the purpose of increasing the Regent's Park, and securing a public thoroughfare to the top of Primrose-hill. The hill and land adjoining it, from the suspension-bridge over the Regent's Canal, comprising 150 acres, will be converted into plantations, gravel-walks, and small pieces of ornamental waters, the whole of which, when completed, will be thrown open to the public.

The Press and the Bar.—The Bar of the Western Circuit have come to a resolution "that it is inconsistent with the dignity and independence of their body that any member of it should furnish reports to a newspaper." The Oxford Circuit had previously adopted a somewhat similar resolution; and the daily papers retaliate upon the members of both circuits, by omitting the names of the barristers who are engaged in the different causes,—simply mentioning them as "counsel for plaintiff," and "counsel for defendant."

A Freak of Fortune.—James Seaward, a poor carpenter, residing in Somers-town, who has been some time in great distress from want of employment, last week received intelligence that he had become the possessor of a large fortune by the death of a brother in India, who had there amassed considerable wealth. His wife was actually on the way to pledge an article for food, when the letter arrived bearing the welcome news that he was the owner of 15,000*l.*

Vauxhall Gardens.—This celebrated and attractive place of amusement was again put up to public competition at the Auction Mart last week. The first offer for the principal lot, including the gardens, Rotunda, &c., was 10,000*l.*, and after much competition it was knocked down for 17,000*l.*, at which price the auctioneer said it was not sold. The other two lots, consisting of a plot of building-ground at the west end of the gardens, and a family residence at the south-east corner, let for 100*l.* a year, were also withdrawn.

The Excise Prosecution against Messrs. Smith.—The daily papers have announced that a compromise had been arranged between the excise and Messrs. Smith, the distillers, by which all further proceedings would be stayed. It is understood that Messrs. Smith have paid to Mr. Goodall, the chief collector of the eastern division of Excise, the sum of 10,000*l.*, with the understanding that all prosecutions on either side shall be withdrawn; and Messrs. Smith agree to remove or discontinue the use of the rectifying house, the primary cause of the prosecution.

St. John's Gate.—Notwithstanding the interest excited by the probable destruction of this ancient specimen of monastic architecture, when at the commencement of the new Building Act notice was given by the overseers of Clerkenwell, that unless put into substantial repair it would be pulled down, it is likely soon to be demolished. A scaffolding was about six months ago erected around the dangerous portions of the building, and a public subscription entered into to provide for its restoration, which has, however, proved quite inadequate for the purpose.

Balloon Ascent.—On Monday evening, about 7 o'clock Mr. C. Green, the veteran aeronaut, made his 304th ascent, in his Nassau balloon, from Cremorne Gardens, Chelsea. Mr. Green was accompanied by two ladies, and eight gentlemen, including Lord G. Beresford, and another officer of the Life Guards, and Mr. T. Matthews the clown at Drury Lane Theatre, who amused the company with various comic songs. On its departure from Cremorne Gardens the balloon passed over Chelsea Hospital to the city side of Blackfriars-bridge, where it met a S.W. current of air (being then at an altitude of between 3000 and 4000 feet) by which it was carried over St. Paul's. Here it was apparently stationary, from the variable winds. It subsequently went over the Post-office, towards Dalston, and Clapton, over Stamford-hill, toward the reservoir of the New River. About this spot it was Mr. Green's intention to have descended, but he was prevented doing so by the immense crowds of persons who were approaching, many of whom had followed the course of the balloon from London, and he was alarmed for the safety of his passengers. He then immediately ascended to an altitude of about 6500 feet, by flinging out ballast, the barometer having fallen from 29.85 to 23.90, and the thermometer from 66 to 46. After being in the air about 2 hours and 20 minutes, the balloon was safely landed in a large marsh, at Tottenham, near the residence of Mr. Smale, a director of the Northern and Eastern Railway, who provided a sumptuous meal for his unexpected visitors, after which they returned to the gardens.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending July 26:—West Districts, 122; Northern, 162; Central, 135; Eastern, 193; Southern, 211; Total, 873; males, 434; females, 439. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1232; males, 653 females, 579.

Provincial.

Canterbury.—Mr. Beresford Hope, M.P. for Maidstone, having purchased the ruins of St. Augustine's monastery in this city, for the purpose of presenting it to the church of England as a missionary college, for the education of young men as missionaries to the colonies, a proposal for establishing the college has just been issued. The monastery it appears has latterly been used as a brewery, bowling-green, and beer-shop. Mr. Hope has not only purchased the site and devoted his gift to the church, but has raised for its support among his personal friends no less a sum than 39,000*l.* This is independent of the cost of the site, and the assurance from its munificent donor of yet further assistance towards the erection of the buildings, in addition to a large donation to the general fund. It is proposed, therefore, to commence immediately the principal quadrangle of the college, which includes the chapel, hall, library, and apartments for 50 students, with the requisite accommodation for the officers and servants of the establishment. The arrangements of the building will be so constructed as to admit subsequent enlargement. The institution will be formed on our own collegiate models, and the Archbishop of Canterbury has consented to give statutes for the future government and regulation of the college. The appointment of all the officers of the college will be vested in the two metropolitans and the Bishop of London, as the prelates more immediately connected with the church in the colonies. The Archbishop of Canterbury will be the perpetual visitor of the college. It is proposed to endow and support the institution by free contributions, and by such moderate payments as may be required from the students; it being understood that no contribution shall convey any right of nomination, or of interference with the government of the college. The property of the college will be vested in trustees. The following provisional committee, for forwarding the preliminary arrangements, has been appointed by the Archbishop:—the Bishop of Lichfield; Bishop Coleridge; the Rev. W. R. Lyall, Archdeacon of Maidstone; the Rev. Dr. Jelf, Principal of King's College, London; the Rev. B. Harrison, Domestic Chaplain to the Archbishop; Mr. Joshua Watson, and Mr. A. J. B. Hope, M.P. His Grace has also nominated the Hon. Mr. Justice Patteson and Mr. William Cotton as treasurers, and the Rev. Edward Coleridge, as honorary secretary.

Cowes.—Mr. White, the celebrated yacht-builder of this port, has received orders to construct a schooner-yacht of about 130 tons for the Emperor of Russia. This order has been conveyed to Mr. White through the Earl of Mount Edgcumbe, who is commodore of the Royal Western Yacht Squadron.

Deal.—Last week the Trinity Board put down an iron tube of 2 ft. 6 ins. in diameter into that part of the Goodwin Sands which is most dangerous, as a preliminary to the erection of a lighthouse thereon. It is on the Calipers, and at a short distance from a bank which forms a steep declivity to the depth of 10 fathoms. The tube descended 22 ft. into the sand in an astonishingly short time, by the application of Dr. Pott's process, in which atmospheric pressure is the principal agent.

Exeter.—The local papers state that letters have been addressed by the Bishop of Exeter to the Rev. J. Lampen, Minister of St. John's Chapel, the Rev. H. A. Greaves, of St. George's Chapel, Stonehouse, the Rev. J. Hatchard, vicar of St. Andrew's, and the Rev. G. F. Whidborne, of Charles Chapel, Plymouth, highly disapproving of the practice of allowing strangers to advocate in their pulpits the cause of the Church Missionary Society, and directing attention to that portion of his last charge in relation to this practice.

Liverpool.—The Great Britain steam-ship has at length fairly started upon her course across the ocean; and thousands on Saturday witnessed, with gratification, the departure of this wonderful vessel upon her maiden voyage. The Great Britain left her moorings in the Mersey on Saturday afternoon, having on board Admiral Sir Byam Martin, and a very large party of influential gentlemen of Liverpool and the neighbourhood, and accompanied by no less than nine steamers of various tonnage, the decks of which were crowded with spectators. The Great Britain proceeded slowly down the river, the piers of which from north to south were crowded with thousands anxious to witness her departure; and taking the route through the Rock Channel, she made slowly for the open sea. The scene, while rounding the light-house, was most brilliant; the monster vessel gliding steadily through the waves formed a striking contrast to the small wave-tost steamers which surrounded her on every side. On arriving at the north-east light-ship, those who had accompanied her bade adieu to the gallant ship, and while the Great Britain steamed away by the north of Ireland route, the guests returned to town in the steamer Dreadnought, which had been placed at their disposal.

Stafford.—Some notice was taken in Parliament last week of the practice which prevailed in the gaols of this county, of handcuffing and chaining prisoners committed on light charges, and reference was specially made to the case of Eliza Price, which had occurred in Kingswinford gaol. The correspondence which had then passed between Sir J. Graham and Lord Talbot, the Lord-Lieutenant of the county, has since been published. Sir J. Graham, in his official letters, severely censures the practice of chaining prisoners of this description, and mentions with dissatisfaction the conduct of the committing magistrate. We learn, however, from the Worcester Journal, that another case has recently occurred. It appears that a statement having got abroad that two girls were in the custody of Onions, a constable, at his own house, an inquiry was instituted, and the following statement was taken on the 15th ult. in the presence of a magistrate, who also directed Capt. Roberts, the inspector, to make inquiries and report to the chief-constable of the Staffordshire police. Margaret Perry stated, "My sister, Susannah Hill, aged 14, was taken into custody by Onions, the constable, on the 9th July. I heard of it, and between 11 and 12 o'clock went to Onions's house and found my sister in the back kitchen. Onions was at Higgs's public-house; I went to him and asked him to let my sister have a bed. He said he had not a bed, and if he had, he dare not put her in it. I asked him if he would take bail for my sister's appearance. He said he would not. I then left. I went to Onion's house the following morning between 8 and 9 o'clock, and found my sister in the back kitchen with a handcuff on her wrist, and a chain fastened to it, the chain being fastened to the grate. She was sitting on a stool, and had not been in bed all night, but chained in the kitchen. I went again on the Friday morning between 7 and 8 o'clock; my sister was then in the back kitchen chained to the grate. Emma Woodhall was handcuffed to her, and both were chained to the grate. After the first night they were allowed to lie on the ground upon some bags, against the grate, with the handcuffs on and chained."

Windsor.—Considerable sensation has been caused within the last few days in the neighbourhood of Bagshot Park, in consequence of an attempt being made to take away the life of Mr. Turner, son of the head gamekeeper of Prince Albert. It appears from information received by the police that Mr. Turner, who has charge of the young pheasants in Repley Farm, was fired at about two o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, the 22d inst, from behind a watch-box, adjoining to which a vast quantity of birds are kept, with a gun containing three bullets, one of which struck him on the third finger of the left hand and shattered it to pieces. No person was seen about the premises during the night; and the only reason that can be assigned for the outrage is, that Mr. Turner on a late occasion took active measures in prosecuting persons for selling pheasants' eggs which had been stolen from his Royal Highness's preserves; and the attempt to take away his life must have been made by a person well acquainted with the place. The police are in possession of such facts as may shortly lead to the apprehension of the offender.

Railways.

The Lords' Committee, on the Glasgow Junction, on Monday passed the preamble of the Bill, subject to certain restrictions contained in a series of resolutions respecting the increase of quay accommodation and the protection of property along the line. The Standing Orders Committee have decided that the standing orders in the case of the following Bills had been complied with:—South Eastern (Deal extension). Opposed.—London and Croydon Enlargement. Unopposed.—Bolton and Leigh, Kenyon and Leigh Junction, North Union, Liverpool and Manchester Grand Junction Amalgamation. Unopposed.—The following return has just been issued by order of the House of Commons of the names of all railway Bills or projects on which committees have made reports (for or against such Bills or projects) at variance with the reports made upon the same by the railway department of the Board of Trade, with copies of all special reports made by such committees in reference to statements contained in the reports of the Board of Trade. The following is a list of such railway Bills and projects—23 in number; the special reports occupy 12 folio pages of print:—1. Belfast and Ballymena. 2. Brighton and Chichester (Portsmouth Extension). 3. Direct London and Portsmouth. 4. Dublin and Belfast Junction (with branch to Kells). 5. Ely and Huntingdon. 6. Ely and Huntingdon. 7. Grand Junction (Potteries branch). 8. Great North of England (Clarence and Hartlepool Junction). 9. Great Western (Ireland) (Dublin to Mullingar and Athlone). 10. Guildford, Chichester, and Portsmouth. 11. Leeds, Dewsbury, and Manchester. 12. Leeds and Thirsk. 13. Leeds and West Riding Junction. 14. Liverpool and Manchester. 15. Londonderry and Coleraine. 16. Londonderry and Enniskillen. 17. Monmouth and Hereford. 18. Newry and Enniskillen. 19. North Woolwich. 20. Oxford and Rugby. 21. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton. 22. Runcorn and Preston Brook. 23. South Wales.—An arrangement is going on for amalgamating the South Midland and Leicester and Bedford Railways, and for leasing them to the London and Birmingham and Midland Companies. A deputation headed by the Hon. C. P. Villiers, went to Derby on this business on Friday to meet Mr. Hudson, Mr. Stephenson, and other influential gentlemen, and the heads of a satisfactory agreement between the companies, were submitted and approved of by all parties, subject to the approval of the respective boards. The Great Western Company and the Gloucester and Dean Forest Company have perfected their arrangements; and the Gloucester Company, in conjunction with the Great Western, will take immediate steps to complete, by means of the Dean Forest line, the chain of communication from Gloucester to Hereford and Monmouth, and from that place into South Wales.—The line from London to Cambridge, and thence to Ely, and from Norwich to Ely, was opened to the public on Wednesday. The inspection of the line took place on the previous day. One train, consisting of 13 double carriages, an open carriage, &c., in which were the chairman of the Eastern Counties line, the directors and their friends, many scientific men, engineers, &c., left the Shoreditch station, at 10 minutes to 9 o'clock, and arrived at the Cambridge station at a quarter past 11, having performed the distance of 57¼ miles, including stoppages, in 2 hours 25 minutes. After a stay of half-an-hour, the train was again in motion, and at a quarter-past 12 reached the Ely station, which was decorated with flags, garlands, &c. The train from London was here joined by the train which had left Norwich at half-past 10, and which had passed through Wymondham, Attleborough, Thetford, and Brandon stations, stopping a short time at all those places. The company having alighted, a great portion of them walked up to the city to see the cathedral, and on their return, both the London and the Norwich train proceeded to Cambridge, leaving the Ely station at 20 minutes to 2, and arriving at the Cambridge station at five minutes past that hour, getting over the distance 14 miles and a half, in 25 minutes. Some parts of the journey were run at a rate of speed upwards of 30 miles an hour, and allowing for stoppages, the average of the whole was upwards of 26 miles an hour. The whole of the company from London and Norwich partook at 3 o'clock of a sumptuous banquet, furnished by Mr. Gunter, of Berkeley-square, and cooked, by permission of the college authorities, in the kitchens of Downing College. Upwards of 600 gentlemen sat down to the tables, beneath the ample covering of an elegant marquee, manufactured by Mr. Edgington, of the Borough, and which effectually protected them from the showers which at times descended in torrents. The chair was taken by Mr. Bosanquet, supported by Lords Roden and Braybrook, the Bishop of Norwich, the Dean of Ely, the Vice-Chancellor of the University, most of the heads of houses, &c. There were also present Major Beresford, M.P., Mr. M'Kenzie, M.P., Mr. Ward, M.P., the Mayor and Corporation of Cambridge, a great number of the clergy of the University and neighbourhood, and many of the gentry of the county. The company broke up at ½ past 4, and at 9 the London train reached Shoreditch, having performed the journey from Cambridge, including stoppages, in 2 hours 40 minutes.—An accident of a serious nature, although not attended with any fatal effects, took place on Tuesday morning at five o'clock, at the Camden-town station of the London and Birmingham Railway. At the time the morning mail train arrived from Liverpool, there was a dense fog, and on arriving at the Camden station it came in contact with the "goods" train, as the latter, which was behind time, was crossing the line. Two of the leading carriages of the mail train were injured by the concussion, but they were not thrown over, and were able, after a short delay, to proceed on the journey. We regret, however, to state that the two of the passengers received serious injury. Mr. Dean, of Exeter, agent of Lord Devon, a passenger by the second class train, had his leg broken, and was immediately conveyed to University Hospital, where amputation was performed. Another gentleman, a passenger by the first class train, had his face much cut by the broken glass of the carriage windows, but he was able to return home. The goods waggons were greatly injured, and parts of the luggage damaged. Some of the other passengers were much hurt. The following is an official account of the accident:—"A serious accident occurred to the Lancashire mail train on its arrival yesterday morning. It is due at the Euston station at thirty-two minutes past five, and entered the Camden station at five, just as the first goods train from London was crossing to the down line to proceed on its journey. The consequence was a collision, which caused a serious fracture of the leg to a passenger in a second class carriage, and severe cuts on the face and head to a passenger in a first-class coupé carriage from the breaking of the glass. Both received the immediate assistance which their hurts required. The question of the individuals who may be open to blame on this occasion will be submitted to investigation, but the proximate cause of the accident appears to have been a too early arrival of the mail train and a late departure of the goods train, joined to the impossibility of seeing the usual signals distinctly in consequence of a fog.—On Monday night a serious accident took place on the South Eastern Railway. It appears that the six o'clock train from Dover reached the Tunbridge station about nine o'clock, when the hinder carriage was detached from the train, and this carriage having, according to the usual practice, the signal lamps attached, the man employed to "shift the train" neglected to remove them, and consequently the train went forward without any lights at the rear. The mistake being shortly afterwards discovered, a pilot engine with the lamps was despatched to the Penshurst station, but the engine-driver not perceiving any lights or signal to show that any obstruction was upon the line, and being in haste to forward the coloured lights, pushed forward with much speed, and the consequence was, that as the train had reached the station, and was at that moment waiting for passengers, a collision ensued, which was attended with serious, but happily not fatal, consequences. So violent was the concussion, that a gentleman, whose name could not be learned, had his leg broken; another gentleman was so injured in the spine, that it is probable it will be a long time before he recovers; and several others, to the number of 20 passengers, were more or less injured.—A meeting of the Blackwall company was held on Tuesday, at which the late proceedings of the directors in respect to the branch to connect the line with the Eastern Counties, and the abandonment of the Epping Extension, were approved by the shareholders. It was stated that it had been proposed to the Eastern Counties Company to take up the Epping line next session, and it was not improbable that they would do so and make it their main line to Cambridge by carrying it as far as Harlow, thus reducing the distance considerably. If, however, the Eastern Counties declined, the Blackwall directors were prepared to go on with the project next session.

Ireland.

Dublin.—Mr. Lucas, the Under-Secretary for Ireland, has resigned his office, in consequence, it is said, of ill health; and Mr. Pennefather, son of Baron Pennefather, and brother-in-law of the Earl of Glengall, has been appointed his successor. It is understood that this is the third occasion on which Mr. Lucas has tendered his resignation of the Under-Secretaryship—once during the Viceroyalty of Lord De Grey; a second time, shortly after the appointment of Lord Heytesbury; and now, when the resignation has been accepted. The Lord-Lieutenant has left town on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Leinster at Carton, and has intimated his intention, during his stay at that place, of proceeding to Maynooth, to inspect the buildings of the College.—The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday, Dr. Asken in the chair. Mr. John O'Connell, M.P., in reference to the contemplated meeting of the London Repealers, said that if the parties alluded to continued contumacious, and persevered in holding the meeting, he would feel it his duty to call upon the Association to pass an absolute vote for their expulsion. A number of remittances having been announced, including the subscriptions of Mr. Smith O'Brien for the current month, Mr. John O'Connell announced the rent for the week to be 338*l*.

Cork.—The long-protracted inquest at Ballinhassig has been brought to a close, by 14 out of the 23 jurymen returning a verdict of justifiable homicide. The other nine, including the foreman, warmly expressed their dissent to the finding, and announced the names of those who did not concur in it, and would have returned quite a contrary verdict.

Wexford.—The Irish papers are full of the Repeal demonstration which took place at Wexford, on Wednesday, the 23d ult. Mr. O'Connell left Dublin for that town on the previous day, passing through Bray, Ashford, Arklow, and Ferns, preceded by bands of music, and by processions formed in the different towns and villages on the route. He slept at Edermine, the seat of Mr. James Power, M.P., and on Wednesday morning resumed his journey. About noon he joined the procession which had been formed by the Repealers of Wexford and the other towns in the county. When the procession got in motion there were some thirteen or fourteen bands, with parties carrying banners and wands, and the number present was considered fully equal to the monster meetings of 1843, with the exception of Tara. The procession passed through Wexford, and arrived at Whitcrock, about a mile beyond the town, at four o'clock. Mr. J. H. Talbot, ex-J.P., was called to the chair; upon taking which he intimated that the principal object of the meeting was to petition Parliament for the repeal of the legislative union. On the motion of Mr. John Maher, ex-J.P., the petition and a declaration that the county of Wexford would never relax its efforts for Repeal were adopted. Mr. O'Connell then addressed the meeting. He commenced by expressing his delight at the magnificent display around him, and computed the number of "stalwart men" who participated in the demonstration at 200,000. He next adverted to the representation of Wexford borough and county, and the borough of New Ross, and said that unless all the members appeared at Conciliation Hall, the electors should not again return them to Parliament. After some routine business, he resumed his seat on his carriage, and the procession returned to Wexford. The dinner (to which about 800 persons sat down) was given in a spacious building, covered with canvas and lighted with gas. The banners used during the day were suspended from the walls. The chair was filled by John Maher, Esq., on whose right sat Mr. O'Connell, and on his left Mr. Steele and Dr. Gray. These gentlemen, with Captain Broderick and a few others, were attired in the uniform of the '82 Club. Letters of apology were read from Lord French, Dr. M'Hale, Dr. Cantwell, Mr. W. S. O'Brien, &c. The Chairman having proposed "The health of Mr. O'Connell,"

"The hon. and learned gentleman rose to return thanks, and commenced by describing in florid language the occurrences of the day, and the scenes which he then witnessed, and proceeded to express his conviction that success must ultimately crown their efforts. The people were beginning to understand their own cause. The knowledge of the injurious effects of the union was spreading from the humblest hut to the most splendid mansion. Even the British ministry admitted that Ireland could not be much longer continued in misery and degradation—that it was not wise—nay, that it was not safe to keep her in her present position. England well knew that she could not maintain her reputation for invulnerability so long as her weakness lay where her strength ought to be. She thanked Heaven that while she acted unjustly to Ireland, she was not safe herself. Having dwelt at some length upon the injustice of English legislation, he proceeded to ridicule the outcry raised in some of the English papers respecting certain barbarities alleged to have been inflicted recently upon an Arab tribe by Colonel Pelissier, of the French army, and cited several instances of cruelty on the part of the English towards the inhabitants of this country when at war with it, which he contended greatly exceeded in barbarity the acts of the French Colonel. Amongst the instances of English cruelty practised in Ireland, was the oft-quoted massacre of 300 Wexford ladies, by Cromwell's soldiery, in the Bull-ring. The Standard paper had accused him of lying, in connection with this occurrence. There was lying, no doubt, but the scoundrel print had it all to itself. Having read Dr. Lingard's account of the alleged atrocity, he proceeded to congratulate the women of Wexford on their present safety. The ruthless barbarians should never again even think of slaughtering one of them. His countrymen would die by inches sooner than permit them to do so again. And who was it committed the barbarity? They were what he might term Englishmen of the very highest water, Cromwell and his barbarian soldiers; and was he to blame because he had no confidence in their descendants, or if his mother thought, as he lay his head on his pillow every night was, whether he had omitted to do anything during the day which might have forwarded their march towards Ireland's nationality. [A voice, 'You would die for her'.] To be sure he would die for her, but he would sooner live and work in her service, for one living lover was worth a whole churchyard of dead ones. He was animated in his hope of Irish freedom by what he saw there that night. All around him were Repealers, and he called on them to rally for Repeal in the most distinct manner. Would they promise him to return no one as a member for Wexford to the Imperial Parliament except a man who would stand by them in voting for Repeal (cries of 'We do promise'.)? The success of the Repeal cause was in their hands—by their conduct it would be determined how the heart of Ireland beat for Repeal. If they shrunk from their unequivocal adherence to Repeal, what part of Ireland could he expect to exhibit manliness, courage, and determination? But if Wexford triumphed, he would not despair of any other part of Ireland. The cause of Ireland, he repeated, was before them. Let them listen, but determine—let them hear, but decide—and let them be certain that the country would think them degraded if they returned their representative any one but a substantial, out-and-out Repealer."

The toast of Repeal, coupled with the healths of the Repeal Martyrs, having been proposed, Mr. Steele and Dr. Gray returned thanks. The Chairman next proposed "the Healths of the Borough and County members," which was received with mingled cheers and hisses. Mr. J. Power, M.P., returned thanks, and declared himself an unequivocal Repealer. The healths of Mr. W. S. O'Brien, of Lords Denman, Cottenham, and Campbell, the Rev. T. Matthew, the Press, &c., closed the festivities of the day. An Anti-Repeal and Conservative paper, in noticing the fact that orange colours were seen in the procession, observes that "the demonstration is a very formidable one; and it was attended by some of the respectable gentry of the county, who had hitherto stood aloof from the movement. Whether there were any Orangemen present, as the decorations seem to imply, is more than we can tell; but, until Repeal can be shown to be a worse evil than concession, many Protestants will, to say the least, remain neutral."

Galway.—Mr. O'Connell, it is understood, has concluded his round of monster meetings for the season. Sunday and Monday were devoted to Galway. On Sunday there was a grand procession through the town; on Monday morning a levee, and on Monday evening a dinner in the theatre of Galway. The speeches, however, presented no topics of novelty to call for a detailed report.

Enniskillen.—The monster meeting of Repealers at Wexford, on the 23d ult., is about to be paralleled by a monster meeting of Orangemen at Enniskillen, on the 12th inst. The Conservative papers state that, at least, 40,000 members are expected to be present.

Westmeath. — A correspondent who writes from Mullingar states, "the greatest anxiety prevails as to the increase of Molly Maguireism; and that if not put down before winter, it is difficult to say to what extent it may not go during the long nights."

Scotland.

Cromarty.—The local papers announce that nearly the whole of the fine mansion-house of Tulloch Castle, near Dingwall, in this county, the seat of Duncan Davidson, Esq., has been destroyed by fire, with a large portion of the furniture, pictures, library, &c. The house and furniture were only partially insured. The unfortunate accident would appear to have been caused by a lighted candle being left in the bed-room.

WESTERN CIRCUIT, EXETER.—Trial of the Brazilian Slavers.—On Thursday, the trial of the persons charged with piracy, and with the murder of 10 Englishmen belonging to Her Majesty's ship, Wasp, commenced before Mr. Baron Platt. The prisoners were placed at the bar in the following order:—Janus Majaval, Francisco Feriera de Santo Serva, Manuel Jose Alves, Florenco Ribeiro, Juan Francisco, Jose Maria Martinos, Antonio Josquim, Sebastian de Santos, Manvil Antonio, and Jose Antonio. They were all dark-looking men, and appeared to be well fitted for the trade in which they had been engaged. Mr. Bellamy, of Plymouth, was sworn as interpreter. The prisoners stood indicted for the wilful murder of Thomas Palmer on the high seas, on board a vessel called the Felicidade, on the 2d of March last, by Janus Majaval striking and stabbing him with a knife, giving him a mortal wound upon the belly, of which he died, the other prisoners being present at the time of the murder, aiding him and assisting him. There was another count in the indictment, charging the prisoners with having thrown Thomas Palmer out of the vessel and drowning him. The Jury was composed of half Englishmen and half foreigners. The prisoners pleaded "not guilty." Mr. Godson addressed the Jury for the prosecution, and gave this detail of the facts:—A vessel called the Felicidade was equipped at Bahia, in the kingdom of the Brazils, for the purpose of carrying on the slave-trade on the coast of Africa. A person of the name of Cerquiera was the master or captain of that vessel, and he came on the coast of Africa with a large crew for the purpose of taking in a cargo of slaves. His vessel was taken by the crew of the Wasp, one of Her Majesty's ships. The vessel being so taken, Lieut. Stupart and 16 men, and a midshipman of the name of Palmer, were put on board, the crew of the Felicidade being, as a matter of course, prisoners. The vessel was about to be taken to Sierra Leone to be adjudicated on. On the morning of the 1st of March, another slaver was seen at a distance. Lieut. Stupart immediately gave chase: and, leaving the Felicidade, in his boat, with English colours flying, he approached this second vessel, the Echo brigantine. This vessel, the Echo, had also come from Brazil. She had been upon the coast; she had taken in a cargo of slaves, 430 in number, the tonnage of the vessel being something less than 70 tons. Lieut. Stupart approached the Echo in the English boat, with the English flag flying. The moment it was found they were English, the Echo immediately sailed off. The prisoners had come from the same country in these two vessels. They came from the Brazils. They all spoke the Portuguese language—the language spoken in the Brazils. The Echo escaped for that night; but the next morning the English, still pursuing her in the Felicidade, their prize, at length overtook her, and an officer from the Felicidade in a boat boarded her. In that state of things, Lieut. Stupart had two prizes. He had but himself, the midshipman, and 16 men altogether. He, therefore, divided them: part he took with himself on board the Echo, and part he left on board the Felicidade. His first object was to relieve the negroes, who were starving. He took with him seven men, intending to come back the next morning. Mr. Palmer, and nine of the men, he left behind. Before he left for the night, they had made an interchange of prisoners from one vessel to the other for the purpose of better custody. Lieut. Stupart thought, in the execution of his duty, and every one would agree with him, that with such a small number of men the best way was to divide the crew: there were 28 in one vessel, and 22 in the other. He, therefore, brought from the Echo all the prisoners at the bar, except Majaval (cook on board the Felicidade). Now, if Lieut. Stupart had a right to take the Echo, he had a right to use all means to keep the prisoners in custody: and if it was necessary for that purpose to take them on board the other vessel, he had a right to do so. Part of the prisoners were put into a boat at the stern of the vessel for the same reason: they were eight in number. The Felicidade was under the command of the midshipman, Thos. Palmer, and he had with him seven Englishmen and two kroomen, natives of the coast of Africa, employed and entered on the books of Her Majesty's ships of war. In the morning, Mr. Palmer was combing his hair at one end of the vessel, and talking to Mullings, the boatswain. It would appear as if the Englishmen, wearied, were some of them asleep. Serva approached the hatchway, the other prisoners being down below, and called to them to come upon deck. Majaval ran up to Thomas Palmer, the mid-shipman, struck him with a knife, about 8 or 9 inches in the blade, and then, taking him by the legs, threw him overboard. Cerquiera was the captain of the Felicidade, on board his own vessel. He gave no countenance to what was going on: but, on the contrary, behaved in a manner which entitled him to the confidence of the Jury. From the moment that he heard what they were about, he immediately went to Mullings, the boatswain, and [illegible] by signs that they were coming up the hatchway, upon which Mullings went and got a piece of iron, and [illegible] handspike, to defend himself as well as he could. He was afterwards killed. Cerquiera then went to the mate, and advised the Englishmen there, that he might save the lives of his brethren. The whole of the Englishmen on board that vessel were killed. All the Englishmen who were on board having been killed, Serva took the command of the vessel, and suggested to his companions that they should now go and take the Echo. Accordingly he placed close to the Echo, discharged two guns at her, and then sailed right away. The Echo had the Brazilian colours flying at the time, and sailed away under them; she remained away three days when Her Majesty's ship, Star, took her, and then she was sent, under command of Lieut. Wilson, to Sierra Leone; but on her way thither, by a storm, or a sudden gust of wind she was sunk. But Lieut. Wilson had time, before she went down to make a raft out of the spars of the vessel. On that raft he saved himself, with his unfortunate companions, during about [illegible] days, existing—it could not be called living upon the blood and flesh of sharks. This was the end of the Felicidade; and, therefore, with respect to that vessel, no judicial condemnation ever took place. With respect to the Echo, there could be no doubt of her character, she having 430 slaves on board when taken; and, finding her in that state, Her Majesty's ships were bound to take her. The Learned Counsel proceeded to prove that, under treaty with Brazil, the prisoners were legally in custody, and showed that the crew of the Felicidade was just as liable to be seized as that of the Echo itself.—After the evidence for the prosecution had been given, Mr. Serjeant Manning submitted that there was no case to go to the Jury. In the first place, this Court had no jurisdiction, as the transaction took place in a foreign ship and the parties were not within the peace of our Lady the Queen. An offence of this kind committed by a foreigner in a foreign ship on the high seas was not cognizable in our courts. The Felicidade was not legally taken, and the men were not in legal custody, as they were not carrying on the slave trade, the Felicidade having no slaves on board, and therefore the prisoners had a right to endeavour to escape, and were justified in any act they might have committed. Mr. Baron Platt ruled that the sea was the highway of nations, and all rovers and thieves and pirates who infested that highway were liable to punishment as much as the highway robbers were on land. He had no doubt with regard to the jurisdiction, nor of the legality of the taking and detention; and, if it had been illegal, it would not reduce the offence below the crime of murder.—On Saturday, Mr. Serjeant Manning and Mr. Collier addressed the Jury at considerable length on behalf of the prisoners, and Mr. Godson replied on the part of the Crown. The Jury retired for an hour, and then re-entered the Court, amidst the most profound silence, and returned a verdict of Guilty against Majaval, Serva, Alves, Ribiero, Francisco, Martinos, and Joaquim; and Not Guilty as regarded Dos Santos, Manuel, and Jose Antonio.—His lordship then, in the most impressive manner, passed sentence of death on the seven prisoners who had been convicted.—The Secretary of Legation, and other parties who attended on behalf of the prisoners, expressed their thanks, through Mr. Serjeant Manning, for the very fair way in which the case for the prosecution had been conducted. Bodmin.—On Wednesday evening, Benjamin Ellison was convicted of the wilful murder of Ruth Seaman, his housekeeper, at Penzance, and sentenced to death. The circumstances of the case must be fresh in the recollection of our readers.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT, DURHAM.—Louis Henry Goulé, was tried on Tuesday on the charge of having murdered Emma Goulé, his wife, in June last. The case had caused great excitement in Durham on account of the esteem in which the prisoner has been held by many people in the neighbourhood, and the remarkable circumstances attending the alleged crime, which were noticed in this Paper when they occurred. The prisoner held, up to the time of his imprisonment, a high situation in the county police, being chief superintendent of that body, over which Major Wemyss is chief constable. After a long trial before Baron Rolfe, the jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty, on the ground that the prisoner was not of sound mind when he did the act. The verdict was very loudly cheered by a crowded court.

Miscellaneous.

Relic of Nelson.—An interesting relic of Nelson has been discovered, and some interest also attaches to the manner in which it has been secured to the nation. Sir Harris Nicolas, in his laborious researches for editing the hero's despatches, had satisfied himself that the coat and waistcoat which Nelson wore when he fell at Trafalgar were carefully preserved. In pursuance of the admiral's directions, they were given, with several other things, by Sir Thomas Hardy, his captain, to Lady Hamilton; by her they were transferred, under peculiar circumstances, to a late alderman of London; and they remained in possession of the alderman's widow. The lady is not rich, and she asked 150*l*. for the relic. The sum being beyond his own means, Sir Harris determined to raise it by subscription, in order that the coat and waistcoat might be deposited, like the coat which Nelson wore at the battle of the Nile, in Greenwich Hospital. With that view, he put the proposition in writing, and had it printed as a circular. Before issuing the circular, however, he sent a copy to Prince Albert, who immediately desired that the purchase might be made for himself, as he should feel "pride and pleasure" in presenting the precious memorials to Greenwich Hospital. Sir Harris Nicolas took them to the royal purchaser on Wednesday, and, we understand, that the Prince manifested a very fine feeling on the occasion. There is a kind of generous wisdom in this act, for nothing could so help to identify the Queen's husband with the British people as such little tributes to their maritime pride. The coat is thus described in Sir Harris Nicolas's circular; and it will be seen that it has an historical value:—"The coat is the undress uniform of a vice-admiral, lined with white silk, with lace on the cuffs and epaulettes. Four stars, of the orders of the Bath, St. Ferdinand and Merit, the Crescent, and St. Joachim, are sewn on the left breast, as Nelson habitually wore them, which disproves the story that he purposely adorned himself with his decorations on going into battle! The course of the fatal ball is shown by a hole over the left shoulder, and a part of the epaulette is torn away; which agrees with Dr. Sir William Beattie's account of Lord Nelson's death, and with the fact that pieces of the bullion and pad of the epaulette adhered to the ball, which is now in Her Majesty's possession. The coat and waistcoat are stained in several places with the hero's blood."—Spectator.

How to Predict the Weather.—Many rules for predicting the characteristics of forthcoming seasons have from time to time been put forth. The following we have from an intelligent farmer, who has made the weather his study for the last 20 years:—"Observe the wind," says he, "when the sun crosses the equinoctial line, about the 30th of March and the 12th of September. If the prevailing wind be in an easterly direction, a dry season will follow; if in the west or south-west, the succeeding season will be distinguished by rain. I have remarked this for years, and by noting it have been enabled to predict the weather with an accuracy that has surprised many."—Brighton Herald.

Storms.—Professor Looms, of New York, states in a letter to Lieutenant-Colonel Sabine, as one of the results from the system of meteorological observations now established all over the United States, that it has been ascertained that "On the morning of February 3, 1842, rain was falling throughout nearly every portion of the United States, from an unknown distance in the Atlantic to far beyond the Mississippi, and from the Gulf of Mexico northward to an unknown distance beyond Lake Superior. The area upon which rain is ascertained to have been simultaneously falling was more than 1400 miles in a north and south direction."—Athenæum.

Marine Phenomena.—The following extract of a letter received at Lloyd's, from their agent at Malta, recounts a circumstance of singular interest, but which in some particulars is similar to what has been experienced by other mariners in various parts of the world:—"Captain Caithness, of the brig Victoria, reports that on the 18th inst. (June), at 9 o'clock P.M., a heavy squall took both top-gallant and royal masts over the side, at the same time no appearance of a squall. At 11 o'clock called all hands to reef the topsail, then blowing hard at S.S.E to S.E. All hands proceeded aloft to reef the main-topsail, in a moment it fell calm, and all hands complained of being so hot, and so much sulphur and dust, they could hardly remain up aloft, and it was worse on deck, the ship at the same time labouring. Half a mile from the ship saw three balls of fire come out of the sea, this lasted about 10 minutes. Another heavy squall from S.S.E., and then the ship soon ran into the cold atmosphere. The position of the ship as well as he could judge from observations taken at noon, was latitude 30 deg., 40 min., 56 sec., longitude 13 deg., 44 min., 36 sec., by two chronometers."

BIRTHS—On the 16th ult., at Bilting-house, near Godmersham, the lady of C. H. MASTER, Esq., of a daughter—16th ult., at 33, Merrion-square North, Dublin, the Lady ELIZABETH MONCK, of a daughter—17th ult., at West Heath-house, Erith, Kent, Mrs. RENSHAW, of a daughter—18th ult., at Walpole-house, Chiswick, the lady of JOHN WILSON ALLEN, Esq., of a son—19th ult., in Tilney-street, Lady CAROLINE TOWNELEY, of a son, still-born—19th ult., at 78, Pall-mall, the Countess of DUNMORE, of a daughter—20th ult., at Eastland Villa, the Hon. THE ATTENTION OF ASSURERS is particularly directed to the detailed Prospectuses of this Company. Assurances can be effected on a profit or non-profit scale, and for short periods, at a very moderate rate. When on the life of another, the Policy may be rendered payable, notwithstanding the life assured may go out of the limits of Europe without the necessary permission of the Directors having been previously obtained—this plan makes a Policy an available security.

Credit of half the premiums for the first five years allowed on Policies effected for the whole term of life.

Advances are made to Assurers on real or undoubted personal security, for terms of years, repayable by instalments.

William Ratray, Actuary and Secretary.

ECONOMIC LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 6, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, London. Established 1823. Empowered by Act of Parliament, 1 Will. IV.

Chairman—The Right Hon. Thomas Pemberton Lewis.
Deputy Chairman—Henry Frederick Stephenson, Esq.

The following are among the advantages offered by this Society:—Lower Rates of Premium than those of any other Office which entitle the assured to participate in the profits, and considerably lower than those of any other Mutual Assurance Society. No Proprietary participate in the profits, the whole being divisible among the Assured. The first Bonus, in 1834, averaged 16*l.* per cent. on the Premiums paid; the second Do., in 1839, averaged 31*l.* per cent. since the first division; and the third Do., in 1844, averaged 36*l.* per cent. since the second division. Prospectuses and full particulars may be obtained on application to Campbell James Downer, Secretary.

Assurances are granted by this Society on the lives of persons in every profession and station of life.

The assured have the option of participating in the profits, or of effecting their policies without participation of a reduced rate of premium.

Four-fifths of the profits of the society are divided every five years among the participating members, in the form of an immediate or reversionary bonus, or by reduction of premium, at the option of the assured.

Where a life assured by another has gone beyond the prescribed limits, without the knowledge of the party interested, this Society renews the policy on the same terms as they would have required for its continuance, had their consent been previously obtained.

Assurances for which immediate despatch is required, may be effected on the same day that they are proposed.

The tables have been calculated by the Actuary from the experience of numerous offices in this country and the whole kingdom.

Every requisite information, diagrams to assist the inexperienced in all its branches, may be obtained by applying personally or by letter to the Actuary at the office.

News of the Week.

The legislative business for the session of 1845 has been brought to a close, and Her Majesty will this day prorogue Parliament in person, before her departure for Germany, which will take place in the course of the afternoon. The proceedings in both Houses during the early part of the week were confined mostly to routine business. In the Lords, on Monday, Lord Stanley stated that a legal question of considerable delicacy, connected with our treaties with Brazils, had arisen in the case of the Brazilian pirates; and as some doubt existed respecting the jurisdiction of our courts of law, the sentence passed upon them last week at Exeter had been respited until the question had been argued before the fifteen Judges. On the same day, on the motion of the Duke of Richmond, the Direct Portsmouth Railway Bill was recommitted by 13 to 11, on the plea that the committee had refused to hear the evidence of a competing line. On Tuesday a select committee was appointed to investigate the allegations of a petition complaining of wholesale frauds in the subscription contract of the London and York Railway; and on the same day the House of Commons, on the motion of Mr. Hawes, also appointed a committee to investigate similar charges against the Bill. On Thursday Lord Campbell called the attention of the Peers to the approaching visit of the Queen to Germany, and complained that as the Government did not intend to appoint Lords Justices to administer the affairs of the country, there would be no representative of the regal power during Her Majesty's absence. The Lord Chancellor, in reply, stated that the law officers of the Crown, both on this occasion and on Her Majesty's visit to the Chateau d'Eu last year, were unanimously of opinion that the appointment of Lords Justices was not legally requisite. In this opinion the Lord Chancellor concurred, and in regard to the other grounds for the appointment, his lordship showed that the facilities of travelling in these times, as compared with the system of the last century, rendered it altogether needless.—In the House of Commons on Friday, Lord Palmerston called attention to the state of Greece, but Sir R. Peel considered it inexpedient to have recourse to direct interference in the affairs of that unsettled country. On Monday Mr. Hawes brought forward his motion respecting the late disclosures of bribery in connection with the South Eastern Railway. The main object of this motion was the removal of Mr. Wray from the office of Receiver of Police, on the ground that by acting as the agent of the Railway Company in their transaction with Mr. Bonham, he had rendered himself incapable of being retained in the public service. This motion was opposed by Ministers, and supported by Lord J. Russell, but after a long discussion it was lost by 81 to 18. On Tuesday a discussion arose on the late accident on the Eastern Counties Railway, and a lengthened conversation arose respecting the increasing frequency of railway accidents, which derived fresh interest from Sir R. Peel's recent hint of Parliamentary interference. Mr. Ward then gave, as one of the directors of the company, a detailed and official account of the late accident, which will be found under our Railway news. Lord J. Russell on the same day closed the Parliamentary campaign by taking the usual opposition review of the proceedings of the Session. He congratulated himself, as a member of the late Administration, that the present Ministers had so fully adopted the free-trade principles of their predecessors, and at great length criticised the various points in their foreign and domestic policy of which he disapproved. Sir J. Graham replied on the part of Ministers, but neither his speech nor that of Lord J. Russell seems to have attracted much attention, as there were barely enough members present at any period of the debate to make a House.

Home News.

Court.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert arrived at Buckingham Palace yesterday from Osborne House, travelling from Gosport by a special train of the South Western Railway. On Her Majesty's arrival a Privy Council was held, at which the Queen's speech to be delivered this day at the prorogation of Parliament was submitted for Her Majesty's approval. During the early part of the week, Her Majesty and Prince Albert took their usual walks and rides in the neighbourhood of Osborne House, and occasionally made an excursion in the Royal yacht. On Saturday the Queen and Prince, attended by Sir J. Graham, drove to Parkhurst Prison for Juvenile Offenders. The Royal party remained two hours, and witnessed the inmates pursuing their various modes of instruction, and also the performance of their gymnastic exercises. On Sunday the Queen and Prince Albert attended Divine service at Whippingham Church. On Tuesday Her Majesty and the Prince went to Portsmouth to receive the King of Holland, who paid a farewell visit to Her Majesty on that day. It is Her Majesty's intention to leave town this afternoon on her Continental tour, embarking on board the Victoria and Albert steam-yacht at Woolwich for Antwerp. Her Majesty will be attended by the Earl of Aberdeen, the Earl of Liverpool, the Countess of Gainsborough, Viscountess Canning, Sir James Clark, Mr. G. E. Anson, and Colonel Wylde. It is said that Her Majesty will be absent for at least three weeks.

The King of Holland.—In consequence of the unfavourable state of the weather on Saturday, the review of the troops, which was appointed to take place in Hyde Park, was postponed to Monday. His Majesty, therefore, remained at Mivart's during the morning, and gave an audience to Dwarkanauth Tagore; and Sergeant Rayner, of the Scots Fusilier Guards, the veteran who carried His Majesty (then Prince of Orange) off the field of Waterloo, when wounded in that action, was presented to the King during the morning. His Majesty had a long interview with the sergeant, who, on taking leave, was presented with a substantial mark of the royal munificence, and directed to see His Majesty again before he left England. His Majesty left Mivart's early in the afternoon in one of the royal carriages, to pay a round of visits. The King called on the Duke of Beaufort, Lord and Lady de Ros, and at Stafford House, to make inquiry after the state of the Duchess of Sutherland. In the evening His Majesty honoured Sir Robert and Lady Peel with his company at dinner in Whitehall-gardens, and in the evening attended the performance of the Italian Opera. On Sunday morning His Majesty, attended by the members of the suite, proceeded to the Dutch Chapel in Austin-friars, to attend divine service, which was performed by the Rev. Dr. Gehle. The church was crowded to excess by a highly respectable congregation. On his return from the chapel, His Majesty visited the new library and gardens of the Temple. In the afternoon the King called on General Sir James Kempt, and other persons, and in the evening honoured the Duke of Wellington with his company at dinner. On Monday His Majesty reviewed the household brigade of troops in Hyde Park. His Majesty was dressed in the full costume of an English Field Marshal. On entering the ground, which was kept by the 2d Life Guards, the King was received with a royal salute from the Artillery. His Majesty then rode towards the Duke of Wellington, who advanced to receive the King, the whole of the troops presenting arms, and the bands playing the national anthem. His Majesty then accompanied the Duke of Wellington along the front of the lines formed by the troops and up the rear, expressing himself pleased with their soldier-like appearance. The inspection completed, His Majesty and suite returned to the stand, where a brilliant circle was assembled. The troops now marched past at slow time, under the command of their respective officers, who joined the staff as the regiments passed. Subsequently they returned, the cavalry at a trot and the infantry at a quick march, to the enlivening tune of the "British Grenadiers." His Majesty entered very fully into the spirit of the scene, keeping time with his hand on his saddle, and complimenting in the most flattering manner the various officers on the admirable and fine appearance of the corps they severally commanded. The infantry then marched to the rear and sent out skirmishers, who commenced a running fire. The 1st Life Guards and the Royal Horse Guards (Blue) formed into open columns and charged through each other. The 4th Light Dragoons and the Royal Horse Artillery proceeding in advance of the infantry, the artillery opened up a fire with their field pieces, which had an excellent effect, and was a rich treat to the thousands of spectators assembled in the Park. The running fire was kept up for a considerable time, 15 rounds having been served out to each man. The evolutions concluded by a volley from the infantry formed in line after the skirmishers had returned to the ranks. The whole of the troops having re-formed, His Majesty, accompanied by the staff, rode forward and again congratulated the officers on the excellent appearance of the various corps, and expressed himself greatly pleased with the precision of the movements in the field, and with all the exercises he had witnessed. His Majesty left the review ground a few minutes before one o'clock, under a Royal salute from the light field-pieces of the Royal Horse Artillery; and as he entered the crowd, it was scarcely possible for the police to make an opening, so anxious were the people to obtain a glimpse of the King; and when they succeeded, the air resounded with acclamations and cheers. His Majesty appeared delighted with his reception, and smiled and bowed repeatedly; while the Duke of Wellington also appeared pleased, and acknowledged the cheers with which he was received along the whole line of streets to Mivart's hotel, where the Staff parted with his Majesty. The royal carriages being in attendance, His Majesty almost immediately left his hotel for the residence of the Hon. Colonel and Mrs. Damer, in Tilney-street, where a dejeuner had been prepared for his reception. His Majesty remained the guest of the Gallant Colonel only a short period, having engaged to lunch with the Archbishop of Canterbury, at Lambeth Palace. The royal party reached the Palace a few minutes after two. His Majesty was received by Mrs. Howley, whom the king cordially recognised and greeted in the most affectionate manner, expressing in warm terms the high gratification he had in paying his promised visit. The Archbishop met the King on the grand staircase, and conducted him to the drawing-room, where a select circle invited to meet his Majesty had assembled. The dejeuner was served in the banquetting-hall, a beautiful apartment, hung round with portraits of former Archbishops, and having a fine oaken roof. The King occupied the centre of the table, having the Countess Delawarr upon his right hand, and Mrs. Howley upon his left. The Archbishop faced his Majesty. The repast having been concluded, the Archbishop proposed the health of his illustrious guest, remarking that "he considered it a great privilege to be honoured with his Majesty's presence on that occasion. It had been his good fortune nearly 40 years since to be in some way connected with his Majesty, and he might take that opportunity of observing that he had always experienced the greatest kindness and affection at his hands. From the early connection alluded to, he had the more pleasure in receiving His Majesty on the present occasion, and was exceedingly glad to express thus publicly the feelings of affection which he entertained for his Majesty." The toast having been drunk upstanding, His Majesty, in acknowledging the toast, said, "Gentlemen, I beg to thank you very sincerely for the honour you have done me in drinking my health, and at the same time to assure you that I shall always look back with pleasure on that period of my life to which my most excellent friend the Archbishop has referred. I shall ever be most sincerely grateful to his Grace for all that good advice which he took so much pains to instil into my youthful mind, and which in later times I have found of so much use to me. His Majesty, in conclusion, said he hoped the company would join him in drinking 'The health of the Archbishop of Canterbury,' coupling with the same 'The principles of the Church of England.'" The toast having been responded to, the party broke up, subsequently proceeding to the library and picture-gallery, where his Majesty had an opportunity of inspecting the various works of art and historical portraits it contains. His Majesty left the Palace at four o'clock, the Archbishop accompanying the King to his carriage, before entering which the King took leave of his Grace in the most affectionate manner. His Majesty, attended by Baron Dedel and his suite, left town in one of the Queen's carriages soon after six o'clock for Bushy House, to dine with her Majesty the Queen Dowager. His Majesty and suite returned to town shortly before midnight, and honoured Lady Laura Meyrick with his presence at a ball given by her ladyship at her residence in Curzon-street. On Tuesday morning the King left town for Osborne House, to pay a farewell visit to the Queen, travelling to Gosport by a special train of the South-western Railway. At the Clarence Victualling-yard the King was received by Her Majesty and Prince Albert, who had come from Osborne in the Fairy to meet him. The King having embarked, the Fairy, with her royal freight, steamed out of the harbour under royal salutes from the platform battery, and the various ships at the station. His Majesty accompanied the Queen and Prince to Osborne, and having taken leave of the Queen returned to Gosport a few minutes after four o'clock, accompanied by Prince Albert, who there took leave of the King; his Majesty left that place immediately, in a special train, for London, reaching Mivart's Hotel at a quarter before seven o'clock. His Majesty honoured the Lord Chamberlain and the Countess Delawarr with his company at dinner in the evening at their residence in Upper Grosvenor-street, and afterwards attended the performances at the Italian Opera. On Wednesday morning the King breakfasted with Lord Fitzroy Somerset, in Great Stanhope-street, and afterwards inspected the new Houses of Parliament, the Exhibition of Cartoons in Westminster Hall, and the National Gallery. His Majesty then paid a visit to the Marquis of Westminster, and in the evening honoured the Earl and Countess of Jersey with his company at dinner. On Thursday his Majesty honoured the Princes Lieven with a visit, at the Clarendon Hotel, and paid visits to their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Gloucester, and the Duke of Cambridge. The King also honoured with visits in the course of the afternoon Sir Robert Peel, the Duke of Wellington, Lord Palmerston, and Lord and Lady Willoughby de Eresby. In the evening his Majesty attended by his suite, honoured Baron de Brunnow, the Russian minister, with his company at dinner. His Majesty left Woolwich last evening in the Dutch steamer Cyclops, on his return to Holland.

Official Appointments.—Lord Arthur Lennox has been appointed Clerk of the Ordnance, in the room of Mr. Bonham.

The Game Laws.—The Select Committee appointed by the House of Commons to inquire into the operation of the Game Laws, and to report their observations and opinion thereupon to the House, have just issued their report to the effect that they have made certain progress in the matter to them referred; but owing to the advanced period of the session, have not been able to bring the inquiry intrusted to them to a close, but recommended the re-appointment of the committee next session.

Foreign

France.—The Paris papers, in the present absence of political excitement, and in default of other news, return respectively to the attack or defence of the policy of Ministers, but without any new fact or argument on either side. Almost all of them bestow considerable attention on the annexation of Texas to the United States, which has reached them through the papers of this country. The Débats and other Ministerial prints abstain from expressing any opinion on the intelligence, which they, however, avow to be of great importance. The Opposition journals concur in censuring the French Cabinet for having co-operated in the unsuccessful efforts which this country has made in order to prevent Texas from becoming a member of the American Union. In most of these articles it is urged that the friendship of the United States ought to be preferred to that of England, and that, in the Texas affair, France has been made to sacrifice and offend a natural ally for the sake of a perpetual rival. The Constitutionnel says the whole affair of annexation was really a question of money. Texas having a considerable debt, and no money to pay it, the creditors looked round for the most promising purchaser; and, on the whole, the States made the best offer. It considers the conduct of France in the question as disgraceful to the Ministry, and as having brought unnecessary humiliation on the country, from the support which it says the French Ministry afforded to England in her efforts to prevent Texas from being united to the States. The Courrier Français remarks, on the contrary, that "the policy of the United States, backed by the French Ministry, has triumphed over the efforts of the Mexican Government and the resistance of England. We imagine that Mexico will not engage in a war with the United States in order to retake Texas. As to England, no doubt she will resign herself to it, and our Ministry will follow the example of that of Sir R. Peel. But now that the Texas question has been resolved, there still remains that of Oregon, and we shall be much astonished if the British Government does not seize the occasion to be avenged for this late defeat."—The short discussion which took place on Wednesday week in the House of Commons, when Lord Palmerston drew attention to the defenceless state of this country in the event of a war with France, also affords a subject of comment to several of our Parisian contemporaries. The Débats says—

"At the moment when the British Parliament is discussing the last affairs of the session, Lord Palmerston again presents before it the phantom of a French invasion. His Lordship and Sir Charles Napier both declare that the French navy is infinitely superior to that of England, and that the steamers of France could at any moment transport 290,000 men to the shores of Great Britain; and this at the time that France is upbraiding its Government with not paying sufficient attention to the naval department. Lord Palmerston considers the danger so imminent, that he calls upon the Ministry to re-organise the local militia without loss of time. It is true he recollects that 'the world (particularly the two Powers, France and England) are at peace, but no man can say what might not happen.' Lord Palmerston always fancies himself Minister for Foreign Affairs, in the exercise of the functions appertaining to which situation he can only be compared to a lucifer-match, which spits fire at the slightest touch. Sir R. Peel, in order to calm the apprehensions of his Lordship and Sir C. Napier was obliged to tell them that he had in England 50,000 veterans ready at a moment's notice. This declaration relieved the hearts of the alarmists of a great load. It appears that the Commodore has had a difficulty of respiration ever since France started Transatlantic steamers."

The Siècle speaks with more candour and less bitterness. It acknowledges with pleasure that the remarks of Lord Palmerston, though perhaps a little exaggerated, are founded on truth:—

"There is as usual," says the Siècle, "some exaggeration, but there is a great foundation of truth in what was said by the noble lord. The Straits are no longer an obstacle on which England can depend as it could before the introduction of steam: our fleets have at Cherbourg and Brest a secure shelter against the attacks of an enemy: England may consider itself, with great truth, threatened with a disembarkation in the event of a contest with France. But we have not a navy in every respect superior to that of Great Britain, and our steam fleet is not sufficient to transport 290,000 men. Without reckoning that an army of that size would be needless for a descent, we know that 40,000 men disembarked on the coast of England, with sufficient stores and amunition, would maintain itself easily there during the whole time necessary to receive reinforcements by the new mode of navigation. The Emperor wished to go to London, with 70,000 men; an army of from 70,000 to 80,000 men would be sufficient at the present day against a country where the people are in flagrant hostility with the aristocracy, and where battalions do not start up at once, whatever may happen."

It then gives a report of the speeches, and adds—

"In England soldiers are engaged for life, so that it is evident that not one-third of the 50,000 invalids are fit for service. As to the militia, Mr. Pitt armed it, and placed but little dependence upon it—first, on account of the state of public feeling, and secondly, on account of the difficulty that all Englishmen have in contracting military habits. But we now only wish to point out that, by holding a lofty attitude towards England, we can oblige our neighbours to expend 50 or 60 millions additional francs annually to place their land forces on a footing to give us battle on the soil of Great Britain itself. A struggle between England and France will henceforth be as much a continental as a maritime war."

The Queen's intended visit to Germany also affords a subject for discussion.

"European diplomatists," says the France, "are greatly preoccupied by the interview which is about to take place between the Queen of England and the King of Prussia. The nature of their meeting, and the importance of the political men who are to attend it, impart to it a serious character which was not attached to the sentimental promenades to Treport and to London. We are informed that the Nestor of diplomacy, M. de Metternich, Lord Aberdeen, and M. Bulow, the Prussian Minister for Foreign Affairs, are among the distinguished personages invited by the King of Prussia. If we are to credit the Journal des Débats, which, however, does not vouch for the accuracy of its information, the affairs of Switzerland and the marriage of the Queen of Spain will be discussed at this reunion. The French Cabinet feels somewhat alarmed, and has instructed its political agents to collect every rumour that may transpire round the Royal residences. The Cabinet of the Tuileries still remembers the 15th of July, 1840, and views with apprehension a conference which may regulate without its participation the affairs of the Peninsula."

The Debats contradicts and replies to Lord Palmerston's charge against the French Government for their intention to revive and continue the slave-trade through its treaty with Imaum of Muscat, which, indeed, our contemporary deems sufficiently disproved by the text of that treaty. The Debats adds that the treaty alluded to by Lord Palmerston in the House of Commons, and which was properly characterised by his lordship as tending to nothing less than the re-establishment of the slave-trade, was one entered into between the Imaum and M. de Kerdudal on the 20th April, 1843, but that the French Government had refused to ratify it, so that it never came into operation. The same paper contains an article on a still more interesting topic—the increase of the steam navy of France. "The king by an order in council," says the Debats, "has sanctioned the immediate commissioning of 10 out of the 17 steamers which have been built by virtue of the law of the 16th of July, 1840, avowedly for the purpose of establishing transatlantic lines of correspondence. Six of these are of 450-horse power each, and the remaining four of 220. The first six were, 18 months ago, ordered by the Minister of Marine to be kept in readiness either for the transport of the mails, or in a case of emergency to act as war steamers."—The Moniteur contains a notice from the Minister for Public Works, fixing the adjudication of the Northern Railroad line, and of the Branch Railroad from Fampoux to Hazebrouck, for September 9.—Advices from Algiers to the 23d ult., state that the Governor-General, Marshal Bugeaud, has left that place for Dellys, in order to commence an expedition against the Kabyls, which both the French Government and the Chambers have hitherto strongly opposed. The Marshal was to assume the command of two columns, which were to march from Dellys on the 24th; and Colonel Pelissier, whose achievements in the Dahra caverns he has so warmly eulogised, is to act in this expedition as his Chef d'Etat Major.—The King, Queen, and Royal family, left Neuilly on Monday for the Chateau d'Eu, where they will remain two months.—A supplement of the Semaphore, of Marseilles, mentions that a destructive fire broke out in the dockyard at Toulon on the 1st inst., which destroyed timber to the value of a million sterling, but the shipping and buildings were saved. Several lives were lost. The fire is said to be the act of an incendiary. The Sud de Marseilles gives the following particulars, dated "Toulon, August 1.—A terrible fire broke out at ½-past 11 o'clock this morning, in the Marine Arsenal at the Mourillon. The tocsin and the alarm-gun of the admiral's guard-ship immediately announced this misfortune, and means were adopted to extinguish the fire, but in vain. The fire broke out simultaneously in several parts of the great covered wood-yard. Every part soon became a prey to the flames, which also destroyed all the neighbouring piles of wood. The offices were also burnt to the ground. Fortunately the wind, which was from the east-south-east, and blew hard, though it excited and extended the fire of the wood-yard, prevented it from communicating with the ships on the stocks. Nevertheless, the loss is immense. The fire still continues at the moment I write (7 o'clock in the evening); but with much less intenseness, and we can now say that it will not extend further. About 15 wounded persons have been carried to the hospital. The fire can be attributed to nothing but maliciousness. It is attributed to the convicts, several of whom have escaped."—The weather was still stormy and rainy in Paris and its vicinity, but private letters state that otherwise no serious injury had been done to the crops.

Spain.—We have accounts from Madrid of the 28th July, but their contents are not important. The Queen, Queen-Mother, and the Court, arrived at Pampeluna on the 31st. She remained only two days in that city. On the 2d she arrived at St. Sebastian, from which place she was to go direct to the waters of Santa Aguada. The Ministers, with the exception of Narvaez and M. Martinez de la Rosa, who accompany the Queen through the Basque Provinces, have returned to Madrid. Letters from Saragossa mention that the Queen would take nine mineral baths at Santa Aguada, and as many sea baths. Her Majesty will repair thence to Bilboa, and, after sojourning three or four days in that city, she is to return to San Sebastian, to receive the Duke and Duchess of Nemours, who are to arrive there towards the end of August. It was not known how long the French Princes would remain at San Sebastian, but it was believed that their stay would not exceed two or three days. The Queen will afterwards visit Vittoria, Burgos, and Valladolid, and return to Madrid by La Granja, towards the middle of September. Alarming accounts have been received from Malaga of the discovery of a conspiracy, having for its object the proclamation of the constitution of 1812, and the restoration to power of the party of Espartero. The authorities of the city have succeeded in seizing a small quantity of arms and ammunition, but no attempt has been made to disturb public tranquillity. This conspiracy is said to have ramifications in Ronda, Granada, Carthagena, and other places, and to have secured the co-operation of several commissioned officers, and all the sergeants of the provincial regiment of Jaen. The plot was revealed to the Commandant-General of the province, by one of the sergeants. Several persons have been arrested, among whom are Don Manuel de Lara, a major of the above regiment, several officers and sergeants, a merchant named Hervas, a barrister named Cardero, and several others known as professing liberal opinions. Malaga has since been declared in a state of siege. At the time the last accounts left Malaga none of the conspirators had been executed, and it was to be hoped that General Sans would agree to suspend the execution till the arrival of further instructions from Madrid. The Postdata states that several persons were arrested at Madrid on the night of the 29th and 30th. El Heraldo says, that Ministers had decided on the dissolution of the Senate, and the nomination of certain senators. The meeting of the Cortes will take place on the 10th of October, the day Her Majesty will have attained her 15th year.

PORTUGAL.—We have Lisbon intelligence of the 29th ult. Senhor Antonio Cabral had returned to the capital in improved health, and resumed his office of Minister of the Interior. His brother, Senhor José, who had temporarily filled that post, and also that of the Minister of Justice, has been nominated to the latter by Her Majesty. He had taken his departure for Oporto on the 26th ult. on an electioneering mission, but had previously promulgated two ordinances, which strike at the root of constitutional liberty, and are calculated to lead to very grave results. It is said that the Cabrals are treading in the footsteps of the Spanish Ministry, but with a very inferior force at their command. One of the Government papers had entered on the novel course of crying down all great monopolist companies, especially that of the Obras Publicos, the one of late most singularly favoured by the Government. Railway projects were at a stand, and unlikely to make any progress till after the elections.

BELGIUM.—After a month and more of negociations, and diplomacy of all kinds, His Majesty on Thursday accepted the following as Ministers:—Minister of Foreign Affairs, M. Dechamps, now Minister of Public Works. Interior—M. Van de Weyer, the present Ambassador in London. Public Works—M. D'Hoffschmidt. Finance—M. Malow, the present Governor of Antwerp. Justice—M. D'Anethom. War—M. Dupont. It was not considered probable in Brussels that this Ministry would be able to hold together beyond the opening of the Chambers in October or November next.

GERMANY.—The German papers are full of the forthcoming visit of our Queen to the King of Prussia. The Cologne journals announce the arrival of Prince Metternich at his castle of Johannisberg on the 30th ult. The King and Queen of Prussia arrived at Stolzenfels on the 28th, and on the 30th made an excursion to Coblentz. A letter from Cologne says:—"Our town is taking measures in order to give a brilliant reception to the Queen of England, who is expected on the 15th or 17th August. Received at the frontiers by His Royal Highness the Prince of Prussia, and conducted to Aix la Chapelle in the Royal carriages, she will continue her journey by a special train thence to Cologne, where their Majesties the King and Queen will receive her at the terminus. It is not yet known whether the Court will go the same day to Stolzenfels, or pass the night at Bruhl. Upon arriving at Stolzenfels, Queen Victoria will visit, at Bonn, Professor Bischoff, at whose house Prince Albert finished his academical studies. During the second day's residence at Stolzenfels the royal party will visit Wiesbaden and Bieberach, by invitation of the Duke of Nassau. The third day they will return to Cologne and Bruhl, after which the Queen of England will go to Cobourg. Our Steam Navigation Company have placed at the disposal of the King, during his sojourn on the borders of the Rhine, two of its best steamers, Le Roi and La Reine. The guardianship of the castle will be confided to the landwehr of the Royal Guard, and this service will be counted as 15 days' drilling. A grand concert will be given at the castle, to assist at which Meyerbeer has invited several of the most distinguished musicians, and among the number Liszt and Spohr. The rehearsals for the Fête de Beethoven will take place at Bonn on the 7th, 8th, and 9th. The evening that the Royal party go upon the Rhine, the banks, as well as the entire exterior of the cathedral, will be illuminated, and from one of its towers fireworks will be let off. The Royal party may enjoy this magnificent spectacle during the supper, which will be served on board the steamer. King Leopold is to repair to the castle of Stolzenfels, where the interview of Queen Victoria with the King of Prussia is to take place, but he will leave Brussels a few days after the arrival of his Royal niece in that residence. It was believed that the King of the Belgians would extend his excursion to Cobourg." A letter from Bonn of the 30th says:—"The committee appointed to superintend the fêtes which will be celebrated in our town upon the occasion of the inauguration of the monument to Beethoven have taken the liberty of inviting King Frederick William to honour the solemnities by his presence. His Majesty had replied that he would accept the invitation with pleasure, and that he would most assuredly attend, should nothing occur to prevent him. The Queen of England is also desirous of assisting at these fêtes, and has been heard to state that should the Parliamentary session not be prolonged beyond the 6th, she will go direct from London to Bonn."—Letters from Stutgard of the 31st ult., state that the King of Wirtemberg left that day on an excursion to the Tyrol, from which he was going to pass some time on the banks of the lake of Como. The Queen of Wirtemberg and the Royal family left on the same day for Wiesbaden, and will probably go to Cologne, or some other place on the Rhine, to meet the Queen of England.—A Vienna paper of the 29th ult., revives the report of a projected marriage between the Duke de Bordeaux and the youngest daughter of the Duke of Modena.—From Leipsic we learn that the Saxon Government beholds with great inquietude the tendency of the Reformers of the German Catholic Church. A great number of Protestants are joining the sect. M. Ronge, who had organised the communes of the German Catholics in Silesia, lately proceeded to Konigsberg in Prussia, and thence to Dantzic. In this latter city he was received with extraordinary honour, and preached in the open air to an immense concourse of persons. During his stay he laid the foundation of an organisation similar to that of Silesia, and has made a great number of proselytes. It is said that he has just quitted Dantzic to go and confer with Czerski on some dogmas of the new church. It was remarked, that in his religious ceremonies, and in performing the mass, he evinced much more simplicity than Czerski, and contented himself with having prayers recited, which pleased the Protestant proselytes much. The Saxon Government has taken energetic measures against the tendencies of the reformers. The four ministers charged by the constitution to watch over the Protestant worship have published a strong proclamation against the innovators. They declare that they will oppose to the utmost of their power the partisans of the New Church, and they positively prohibit all meetings to attack the profession of faith of the Protestants of the Confession of Augsburgh. The students of Cologne, in imitation of those of several German Universities, have abolished duelling, and replaced it by a tribunal of honour, whose decisions are to be without appeal. They, moreover, resolved to give a legal existence to that tribunal, and had called on the Government to authorise it.

SWITZERLAND.—A letter from Zurich, of the 27th, says:—"The greatest uncertainty still hangs over the death of M. Leu, and the utmost activity of the Lucerne police, aided by that of the adjoining cantons, only give rise to vague suspicions. What is certain is, that the Government of Lucerne, six days after the event, was not in possession of any information of a nature to lead to the discovery of the guilty party. The police has issued orders to Madame Steiger to quit the Canton of Lucerne without delay, or else she should be forcibly expelled by gendarmery. She was consequently compelled to abandon her children, and depart by night to Zurich, where she arrived on the 26th. On the following day, another order was issued ordering the children to leave the city, which took place under the care of a faithful domestic. The proceedings of the Diet are without interest."—A letter from Geneva, 30th ult., says:—"Our Council of State, anticipating that the Jesuits, when expelled from France, might be tempted to come and form establishments on our territory, has just reminded the public of an ordonnance which forbids any foreigner to undertake the duty of instruction in the Canton of Geneva, without a special authorisation. It is still, however, feared that they may form an establishment in some Sardinian commune on our borders, which would for us be attended with the same dangers as if a college of Jesuits were established within our canton."

RUSSIA.—The St. Petersburg Journal of the 22d July publishes a second bulletin from General Woronzoff, detailing his further operations in the Caucasus. From it we find that the Russian General assuming as the basis of his operations the line of the Terek and the town of Kisliar, has penetrated, by the north of the Daghestan, into the mountains which bound that country to the west. His object is to secure the communications between the capital, Derbent, and the line of the Terek, by penetrating to the Mussulman mountaineers, commanded by the Emir Chamil, who lately invaded all the country below, and blockaded the town of Derbent. The general has not yet pushed his operations further than towards the sources of the Soulak, a river which falls into the Caspian Sea, at a short distance from the mouths of the Terek. Success appears to have hitherto crowned the Russian forces; and Chamil appears to have adopted the tactics of avoiding coming to a regular engagement. The Russian general has disposed his army into two detachments, one at Kisliar and the other at Derbent, the combined movements of which have compelled the enemy to evacuate his positions.

TURKEY, SYRIA, AND EGYPT.—We learn from Constantinople of a melancholy disaster in the Black Sea, about 40 miles east of the Bosphorus, on the night of the 11th July. The Ottoman steamer Scutari, Captain Dubbins, going to Trebizond, came into collision with the Ottoman steamer Medjahrai Tidjahret, Captain Lambert, coming from Trebizond, both being full of passengers. It would seem that the commanders of both vessels were well aware of the approach of the other full 20 minutes before the accident, which occurred from Captain Lambert's putting his helm a starboard, which is the rule in the Austrian service, supposing the approaching vessel to be of that nation; whilst Captain Dubbins, following the rule of the English service, put his helm a-port. Had both vessels put their helms a-port, nothing would have happened. For a few minutes it was doubtful which vessel had received the greatest injury, and, under such circumstances, it was proposed by the Captain of the Scutari that the two vessels should be lashed to each other, so that the sounder vessel might receive on board, in case of need, the crew and passengers of the more injured one. This offer, however, was rejected by the other captain, who, dropping about a mile astern, soon found his vessel sinking under him. The Scutari hastened to her assistance, but succeeded only in saving some 70 souls (including the captain and engineer), the remaining 135 meeting with a watery grave, chiefly Turks and Persians. The anguish of the two captains and engineers, all English, can be better imagined than described. During seven years which these steamers have been running, navigated by Englishmen, and for the greater part of the time by the individuals named, in as many as 650 voyages between Trebizond and Constantinople, in the most tempestuous sea, only three or four accidents have occurred. A court of inquiry is investigating the matter; but as it is composed of Turks, knowing little of nautical affairs, it is not likely that the investigation will put matters in their true light. Advices from Beyrout, of the 12th July, announce that the affairs of the Lebanon were more satisfactory; hostilities had ceased; and although some partial murders bore witness to the deep animosity which existed between the Druses and Maronites, nevertheless it was expected that an arrangement would be come to suitable to the present state of that country. The unanimity of the five Powers at Constantinople, and the positive and precise instructions of the Porte, had produced beneficial results. The conduct of the Turkish governors and agents, whose apathy had much encouraged the Druses in their attempts, had become entirely changed. The Turkish Governor had made a certain display of kind feelings towards the Christians; and it was asserted that from his example Hassib Pasha and Hussein-Bey, who commanded the Mitin district, had granted protection to the Maronites.—The Duke of Montpensier arrived on the 8th ult. at Cairo, where he was received by Ibrahim Pacha. On the 9th he left for Suez, with Abbas Pacha, one of the Viceroy's grandsons. At Suez he visited the steam corvette, Archimedes, and the English Bombay steamer, Victoria. He returned to Cairo on the 13th, and left for Upper Egypt on the following day. It is said that the Pacha intends to establish at Cairo an Academy of the Fine Arts, the first professors of which are to study at Rome. In order to realise his plan, the Viceroy has already, at his own expense, sent to that capital several young men, to study painting, sculpture, mosaic, &c.

WEST INDIES AND MEXICO.—The mail-steamer Dee arrived at Southampton on Monday with the West India mail to the 9th ult. from Jamaica, and to the 12th from Vera Cruz. The sugar crop throughout the West Indies has been most abundant, but there is a great falling off in the coffee crop. The Hill Coolies work well in all weathers, and continue to give great satisfaction. The ex-President Herrera had proceeded to Santa Martha, after another attempt to land at Hayti. Santa Anna was at the Havannah, waiting a favourable opportunity for returning to Mexico. General Woll, who commanded in Texas for Santa Anna, as well as Colonel Garcia, his late private Secretary, are passengers by the Dee.—Letters from Mexico to the 29th June, state that since the abortive attempt at revolution on the 7th June, the city of Mexico had remained perfectly quiet; but a federalist pronunciamento had been made at Tobasco. The Congress was to assemble in extraordinary session on the 1st July. The Senate had discussed the tariff, and made some alterations which compel its being sent back to the Deputies. Nothing definite could take place for at least three weeks. The intention to reduce the duties of 1842 was still entertained. The dispute between the Government and the French Minister remained unsettled, though a promise had been made of reparation. —Advices from Texas received in Mexico already represented that annexation was inevitable. It was generally believed that General Herrera would be elected President.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday.—The Earl of BESSBOROUGH brought up the report of the select committee appointed to inquire into the evidence of John Stinton, on the Dublin and Galway Railway Bill, to the effect that, though it appeared that the said John Stinton had wilfully contradicted himself, the committee were not of opinion that it would be expedient to prosecute him.—On the motion for the third reading of the Bills of Exchange Bill, Lord MONTEAGLE moved as an amendment that the act suspending the usury laws should be perpetual, and not limited to five years as proposed by this Bill.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE supported the amendment. He thought that the benefit conferred on commerce by the relaxation of the usury laws was sufficiently established, though an inquiry would be necessary before similar relaxations should be tried on real property.—The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH said that, though the suspension of the usury laws was good in time of peace, yet in the event of war he could not see how loans could be raised unless the usury laws were maintained.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE, Lord WHARNCLIFFE, and the Duke of WELLINGTON said they were not yet prepared to suspend the usury laws permanently, without further experience of the operations of the suspension.—Their lordships divided, when the third reading was carried by 37 to 9.—The Bill was then read a third time and passed.—The Joint Stock Company (Ireland) Bill, and the Stock in Trade Bill, were read a third time.—The Removal of Paupers Bill and the Borough and County Rates Bill were read a second time.

Saturday.—Both Houses met for a short time, to advance some Bills and transact routine business: but there was nothing in the proceedings of either House to require notice in detail.

Monday.—The Royal assent was given by commission to the following Bills:—Customs Laws Repeal Bill, Customs Management Bill, Customs General Regulation Bill, Smuggling Prevention Bill, British Shipping and Navigation Bill, British Vessels Registration Bill, Customs Duties Bill, Warehousing of Goods Bill, Customs Bounties Bill, British Possessions Abroad Trading Bill, Isle of Man Trade Bill, Auction and Legacy Duties (Ireland) Bill, Compensation Allowances Courts of Law Bill, Real Property Amendment Bill, Bills of Exchange Bill, Disembodied Militia Bill, Court of Chancery Amendment Bill, Public Funds Bill, Corn Warehousing Bills, Lunatics Bill, Coals (Port of London) Bill, Stock in Trade Rating Bill, Joint-stock Company's (Ireland) Bill, Westminster Improvement Bill, Waste Lands (Australia) Bill, Scotch Poor-law Bill, Assistant Barristers' (Ireland) Bill, Grand Jury Presentments (Dublin) Bill, Dublin Pipe Water Bill, Duddeston and Nechell's Improvement Bill, White's Estate Bill, Ellison's Estate Bill, the Rochdale Vicarage Bill, the Yoker Road Bill, and the following Railway Bills:—Leeds and Bradford, Glasgow Junction, Birmingham and Gloucester, Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, London and South Western, South Eastern, Londonderry and Coleraine, Oxford and Rugby, Erewash Valley, South Wales, Monmouth and Hereford, Glasgow, Barrhead, and Neilston.—The Commons Inclosure Bill and the County Rates Bill were read a third time and passed.—The reception of the report of the South Eastern Extension Bill was carried, on a division, by 37 to 1.—On the third reading of the Taxing Masters Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill, the Earl of Wicklow moved, as an amendment, that the persons to be appointed should be exclusively solicitors of the Court of Chancery in Ireland who had practised for ten years and upwards.—On a division this amendment was negatived by 30 to 19, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.—In reply to Lord Fortescue, Lord Stanley stated, that doubts having arisen as to the legality of the sentence passed on the Brazilian pirates, the legal question, with the assent of Mr. Baron Platt, was reserved for the opinion of the 15 Judges, and, of course, the sentence would be suspended till they had delivered their opinions.—The Earl of Hardwicke moved that the report on the Portsmouth Direct Railway Bill be taken into consideration.—The Duke of Richmond moved as an amendment that the Bill be recommitted, on the plea that the committee had refused to hear the evidence of a competing line. After some discussion the amendment was carried on a division by 15 to 11, and the Bill recommitted.—Lord Stanley moved the second reading of the Valuation (Ireland) Bill, but ultimately abandoned it, in consequence of the opposition offered to the measure by Lord Monteagle and the Earl of Wicklow.

Tuesday.—The Merchant Seamens Bill and the Borough Rates Bill were read a third time and passed. The Marquis of Clanricarde presented a petition from Mr. George Pryme, of Cambridge, complaining of wholesale fraud in the subscription contract of the London and York Railway, and moved that the petition be referred to a select committee. The motion, after a discussion, was agreed to.—On the third reading of the Chichester and Portsmouth Railway Bill,—The Earl of Lovelace moved its recommitment. The amendment was negatived without a division, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.—On the motion of the Lord Chancellor, the amendments made by the Commons in the Small Debts Bill were agreed to.—The Marquis of Londonderry called their Lordships' attention to the fact that, in consequence of the present Earl Grey's delaying to take his seat as a Peer, the borough of Sunderland was likely to be left until the next session of Parliament without a representative.—Several Bills were brought up from the Commons and read a first time, and the Bills on the table were forwarded a stage.

Thursday.—The Municipal Districts (Ireland) Bill, the Fees in Criminal Proceedings Bill, and the Naval Medical Supplemental Fund Bill, were read a third time and passed.—Lord Campbell questioned the Lord Chancellor as to whether it was the intention of the Queen to appoint Lords Justices to exercise the royal authority during Her Majesty's absence in Germany. He said that it had been decided by Parliament that it was part of the privileges of the Crown of England that the Sovereigns, by the common law, were entitled at their pleasure to leave the realm; but that the invariable practice from the earliest times had been, that when they did leave the realm, they either appointed a Regent or Lords' Justices to exercise the royal authority during their absence. The noble and learned Lord cited the instances of William III., George I., George II., and George IV., and declared that, in his opinion, any departure from these precedents would be unconstitutional, and inconsistent with the principles on which the monarchy was established.—The Lord Chancellor said that Government had no intention of advising Her Majesty to appoint any regent or lords justices during her short tour abroad. On the occasion of Her Majesty visiting the King of the French, the then law officers of the Crown, the present Lord Chief Baron, and the late Sir W. Follett, had been consulted on exactly this point; and, after mature deliberation, these learned persons gave it as their decided opinion that it was not at all necessary, in point of law, that such an appointment should take place on such a case. As to the question of expediency, the Government were of opinion that any such appointment was equally unnecessary in the present instance. The existing facilities of communication made all the difference in the matter, in the latter point of view. On former occasions, when the Sovereigns of England went abroad, it was for the most part for the purpose of residing abroad for a more or less considerable period of time; whereas Her Majesty's visit to the Continent would be of very limited duration. It was to be borne in mind, that while Her Majesty on the one hand, had as free a right to visit the Continent as any of her subjects, on the other hand, any act which she might be called upon to do abroad, as Sovereign, would have as much validity as though it were done here; that, moreover, she would be accompanied throughout by one of the principal Secretaries of State; and that there was no point of her proposed tour whence she might not return to England within two days. Whereas, within his recollection, from Hanover (the more usual point of visit with our later Sovereigns), it took eight days to get back to this country. As to the lords justices in former days, their power was so limited by instructions, that no material act could be transacted without first communicating with the Sovereign. In the present instance also, the law officers of the Crown had been consulted as to whether it was necessary, in point of law, for Her Majesty to appoint a regency during her absence, and their reply was that it was in no degree necessary—an opinion in which he entirely concurred. Upon all these considerations it had not been deemed necessary that any regent or lords justices should be appointed on the present occasion.—Lord Campbell said he must still express his opinion that the departure from constitutional principle in this case was very unadvisable.—The Earl of Besborough moved that a letter be sent to each Peer at the beginning of the session, for him to name a time when he could serve on a committee, on private and opposed Bills: but after a few observations by the Duke of Wellington, Lord Monteagle, and Lord Redesdale, he withdrew his motion.—The Earl of Dalhousie moved that the standing orders, so far as the same relate to railway and other Bills, be taken into consideration, in order to be amended. The noble earl proposed sundry technical amendments, which were agreed to.—In the course of the conversation upon the subject, the Duke of Wellington remarked, that in all these railway speculations there were three objects—the first was, to get hold of property convenient to the parties for their scheme; secondly, to found upon these Bills a system of gambling; and, lastly, that alone in which the public had any interest, the formation of a railroad. He should like to give the public the chance of having the railroad. He was afraid they could not prevent property being taken for the purpose, nor put down gambling. That was out of the question, perhaps; all they could do was to secure to the public the railroad for which the Bill was obtained.—The Marquis of Clanricarde observed, that our railway system was the worst upon earth, whereas it ought to be the best. There ought to be some authorised persons in different parts of the country to lay down great lines in those districts which were yet untouched, by which the public would be benefitted. Those lines should be sanctioned by the Government, and gradually carried out as the exigencies of the country required. The real interests of the public would be consulted, and there would be no gambling, because capital would not be thrown into such schemes before there was any prospect of success.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday.—After the report of the London and York Railway Bill had been received, the second reading of the Exchequer Bills Bill was moved, when Lord Palmerston adverted to the present condition of Greece, in the prosperity of which this country was largely interested. The expectations that Greece, as an independent kingdom, would advance in civilisation, had, unfortunately, not been realised. A political intrigue had set aside the Minister to whom had been delegated the task of carrying out the provisions of the constitution; and M. Coletti was now pursuing a totally different policy. The liberty of the press was trampled on; revolting tyranny was practised; the country was disorganised, and its revenues being recklessly squandered, the interest of the debt remained unpaid. The excesses committed by the banditti on the frontiers would in all probability lead to political complications, which this country might find it difficult to assuage. He called on Government to interfere, by strong representations, so as to restore order and peace, and thus secure to Greece the full benefits of that constitutional freedom which had been guaranteed to it.—After some remarks by Mr. A. B. Cochrane, Sir R. Peel admitted the peculiar interest of this country in the prosperity of Greece, both as one of the powers which created its independence, and also as a national creditor. But it was also necessary to recollect that we had guaranteed self-government to Greece, with which we should be cautious of interfering. We had an abstract right of seizing portions of the Greek territory, in order to secure and provide for the payment of the debt due to us; but the exercise of such a right might bring on a crisis fatal to the independence of the country, and the existence of that popular power which we had been instrumental in creating. Pronouncing an eulogium on General Church, he denied that the just influence of England could ever be permanently impaired in any country, so long as we pursued the strict line of international justice; if any other country had been successful in producing the present condition of Greece, he wished it joy of that species of influence. We certainly did not enjoy any foreign influence founded on mischievous interference; and yet there never was a period in the history of this country when our influence was greater in foreign countries generally than at the present time.—The Bill was read a second time. The Lords' amendments to the Lunatics Bill were agreed to, and the Silk Weavers' Bill was read a second time.

Monday.—Mr. Hawes presented a petition from Mr. Bruce, the chairman of the Cambridge and Lincoln Railway, similar to one presented to the Lords by Lord Clanricarde, setting forth that he and his agents on Thursday last commenced an inquiry into the names, residences, descriptions, and places of abode, and pecuniary responsibility of the parties to the London and York subscription contract. That the subscription contract returned to the House was 5,000,000*l.* That the result of his inquiries has been the discovery of upwards of half a million sterling of subscribers who appear on the contract deed by fictitious names, description, or place of abode, or of needy persons and paupers, or persons wholly unable to pay their respective subscriptions. That he can prove the facts above stated, and that the subscription contract contains not only such fictitious names, and needy and indigent persons of inferior station in life, using fictitious descriptions and places of abode, and deeply engaged in bubble companies and gambling transactions, and utterly unable to pay the sums affixed to their respective names in the said list, but also numerous scandalous forgeries. A list is then given of nearly 70 names, subscribers to the deed, whose descriptions or places of abode the petition states are fictitious and false, and it concludes by calling on the House to institute a committee of inquiry. The hon. Member moved the printing of the petition.—Mr. Denison denied the truth of the allegations contained in this petition, which he asserted had been got up suddenly and unfairly for the purpose of preventing the London and York Bill from passing this session.—The petition was ordered to be printed.—On the motion for the third reading of the London and York Railway Bill, Mr. Roebuck moved the third reading that day three months.—After a discussion the Bill was read a third time and passed without any division.—Mr. B. Escott gave notice that he would next session move a resolution to the effect that all maize and Indian corn imported into all ports in the kingdom be admitted free of all duty.—Lord Palmerston said he had been requested by the directors of the South-eastern Railway Company to state, that the late accident that occurred was in consequence of the engine having been too weak to perform the work required. They informed him that there was a mistake in the calculations that had been made, and that those who were then directors were not so at present.—On the bringing up of the report on the Exchequer Bills Bill, Mr. M. Gibson pressed on the Government the importance of devoting attention to the position in which British subjects residing in Brazil are now placed, their property should they die there, being attached by the Brazilian Government, and liable to confiscation by heavy fees.—On the motion for receiving the report on the Appropriation Bill, Mr. Hume called attention to the practice of exacting fees or receiving gratuities from the public as the condition of their admittance to cathedrals and other public buildings. He thought that such practice was highly improper, and ought to be discontinued.—Sir R. Peel had always expressed an opinion that there was great advantage in giving every access to our ancient cathedrals that was consistent with their safety. That position was however liable to one restriction—namely, that security should be taken for the safety of the monuments and other works of art contained in them. He gave the House an account of a recent order of the present Dean of Westminster, for giving free admission into the north and south transepts and into the nave of Westminster-abbey. A charge of 6*d.* was still to be made, as in continental churches, for permission to visit the different chapels.—Mr. Cowper considered the statement of Sir R. Peel very satisfactory.—A conversation on this subject then took place, in which Mr. Williams and Mr. Borthwick joined. The report was then brought up.—The report on the Silk Weavers Bill was also brought up and agreed to.—Mr. Hawes then brought on his motion respecting Mr. Wray, the Metropolitan receiver of police, the purport of which was that the conduct of Mr. Wray, in acting as the agent for the transfer of 300*l.* derived from the sale of South Eastern Railway shares, as a consideration for the Parliamentary services of Mr. Bonham in 1836, rendered him incapable of being retained in the public service, and that consequently the letter of the Home Secretary censuring his conduct, fell short of the justice of the case.—Sir J. Graham was not inclined to dispute the precedents and strong declarations of opinion by the House of Commons, which Mr. Hawes had quoted as applicable to the case of Mr. Wray. Neither was he inclined to palliate the conduct of Mr. Wray, which he considered highly culpable; for to the best of his judgment he had endeavoured to do impartial justice in this case, and to give effect to the recommendation of that committee over which Mr. Hawes had so ably presided. Mr. Wray was utterly unknown to him; and he had received no application either from the friends of Mr. Wray or from any of his colleagues in office before he addressed to Mr. Wray that letter, which Mr. Hawes had so severely criticised. For that letter he alone was responsible. He might have acted wrongly in writing it; but, if he had to act again, he should act again exactly in the same manner. After defending his decision at considerable length, he alluded to the share which Mr. Bonham had had in this transaction. Mr. Bonham had committed a grave error, which he did not even attempt to defend: but he had done nothing to compromise his honour, and he (Sir J. Graham) was still as proud as he ever had been to call Mr. Bonham his friend.—Mr. Sheil contrasted the language of the committee which had investigated Mr. Wray's conduct with the language of Sir J. Graham's letter to that gentleman, and complained that Sir J. Graham had omitted from his letter all mention of the most material charge against him—namely, that he had paid money to a member of Parliament for services rendered by him as a member of a particular committee. He contended that Sir J. Graham had been guilty of a dereliction of his duty, if there were any truth in the old maxim, "Judex damnatur, cum nocens absolvitur."—Mr. W. Patten regretted that Mr. Hawes had brought forward the subject again. He defended Mr. Bonham and Capt. Boldero from the attacks made on their personal honour, and concluded by moving the previous question.—Lord J. Russell would not admit the plea of pain as a reason for the non-performance of an imperative though disagreeable duty. He considered that Sir J. Graham, as a Minister of the Crown, had fallen into an error of judgment in dealing with this case. The committee in Sir Jonah Barrington's case—removed, as he was, for misappropriation of public moneys, did not think it their duty to point out what punishment should be awarded; and Sir J. Graham should not have shaped his conduct towards Mr. Wray from information or opinions gathered from individual members of the committee. Pointing out the nature of bribery, he contended that the 300*l.* derived from the sale of the 100 shares, was a bribe administered by Mr. Wray to a member of Parliament, for his services in that capacity: and he saw not the justice of punishing a hand-loom weaver, a cobbler, or a day labourer, for taking five or ten pounds for his vote, accepting the money perhaps to maintain his family, and permit the person who bribed a member of Parliament with 300*l.* to escape with a slight censure. Were their resolutions against bribery to be a dead letter? Was the House unable to maintain the standard of purity required in the reign of William III. or George I.? The lapse of time was urged; but in Sir Jonah Barrington's case 24 years had elapsed since some of the transactions occurred for which he was removed. Sir J. Graham was not always actuated by those feelings of generous lenity for which he now claimed credit, as in the case of Mr. Mazzini, in whose treatment the hospitality of the country had been impugned. He did not think that criminality attached to the conduct of Capt. Boldero; but Mr. Bonham had not been able to withstand the temptation of a bribe, and the briber, Mr. Wray, had been allowed to escape with a slight censure.—Sir R. Peel admitted that pain should not lead them to shrink from the performance of an indispensable duty. But he had never, in the whole course of his public life, performed a more painful duty than in advising her Majesty to accept the resignations of Capt. Boldero and Mr. Bonham, both of whom he eulogised, and his friendship for the latter he avowed, the more especially that he was suffering the consequences of a serious indiscretion. He reviewed the report, contending that the Government had acted strictly on its discriminative censures, accepting the resignations of their personal and political friends, dismissing Mr. Hignett, and seriously animadverting on the conduct of Mr. Wray. It might suit such a stoic and Spartan as Lord J. Russell to administer the same punishment to the weak and helpless as to those who were protected by their connections; but Government had drawn the distinction, in the conviction that even if they had erred on the side of lenity, they had not marred the effect of punishment, as a preventive for the future.—Mr. Hume termed Mr. Wray his friend, whom he had long known, and considered to be an honourable man, on whose mind the censure of the Home Secretary, coupled with such a debate, would operate with a severity which he considered adequate to his offence.—Lord Ebrington, Sir J. Easthope, Mr. Mitchell, and Mr. B. Escott supported the motion; Mr. Ward, Colonel Peel, and Sir R. Inglis opposed it.—Mr. Hawes replied, and the House divided, when the "previous question" was carried by 81 to 18, and the resolutions were consequently lost.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer then moved that the order made on the 31st ult. for certain returns relative to the Property-tax Commissioners should be rescinded. His reason for making this motion was founded on the impossibility of making the returns in question.—Mr. Hume opposed the motion, on the ground that the returns could be made with the greatest ease, if Government would only give the necessary orders for their production.—Mr. Fielden also maintained that there could be no difficulty in producing the returns which he had moved for. He then recapitulated the grievances to which he had been exposed under the oppression and tyranny of the Property-tax Commissioners. Another process had been issued against his goods for the payment of the Income-tax since the period he had last addressed the House upon this subject. He should, however, allow the Government to sell them, but with this public notice, that he would again bring his case before the House at the earliest period in the next session of Parliament.—The order of the 31st ult. was then rescinded.

Tuesday.—Mr. Denison presented a petition from the directors of the London and York Railway Company, denying the allegations contained in Mr. Bruce's petition, that the subscription list had been fraudulently made up. The petition was ordered to be printed, and the hon. member gave notice of a motion, founded thereon, for Friday.—Mr. Hawes moved that Mr. Bruce's petition, alleging fraud in the London and York Railway subscription contract, be referred to a select committee.—Sir R. Peel and Lord J. Russell having agreed that this was a special case, which could not be turned into a precedent, the committee was nominated and ordered to sit and make inquiry without delay.—A conversation followed on the subject of the late railway accidents, in which various suggestions were offered with the hope of rendering them of less frequent occurrence in future.—Lord Palmerston stated that a friend of his had observed the practice of placing the engine at the rear of the line on the London and Birmingham Railway. The noble lord suggested that the House should at once pass a Bill on the subject, and get it through the Lords before Saturday.—Sir G. Clerk agreed that additional powers should be given to the Board of Trade to prevent these practices, but suggested that the Bill should be deferred to next session.—Mr. Waddington called attention to the accident on the Eastern Counties line, which he had himself witnessed.—Mr. Ward, as one of the directors, gave a full statement of the accident, and said that no human prudence could avert it, and that an allowance would be made to the families of those who had suffered.—After an immense variety of questions had been answered by Ministers, the Exchequer-bills Bill and the Consolidated Fund Bill was read a third time and sent to the Lords.—Mr. Greene then moved the third reading of the Silk Weavers Bill.—Mr. Hume objected to proceeding further with this Bill. He knew nothing of its contents. It had come down to the House from the Lords; it had passed through every stage to the present in silence, and he much doubted whether it had ever been printed.—A conversation then took place between Mr. Greene, Mr. Bright, Mr. Warburton, Sir J. Graham, Mr. Borthwick, Colonel Rawleston, Mr. Villiers, Sir J. Easthope, and several other members, from which it appeared that an hon. member for Leicestershire had the charge of the Bill when it came from the Lords; that he had been obliged to leave town, and had committed it to the charge of Mr. Greene; that Mr. Greene was not fully acquainted with its merits, but had ascertained that the Board of Trade had no objection to it; that it had not been introduced, as a Bill for the regulation of trade ought to be, introduced, in a committee of the whole House; that it was a retrospective Bill, which was to be considered as coming into operation on the 1st January, 1845; and that not a single member knew anything about its different clauses. Under these circumstances Mr. Warburton moved that it be read a third time this day two months.—Mr. Brotherton considered the Bill a very useful Bill; but still he could not approve of the very reckless and irresponsible manner in which the House was legislating upon it.—Sir J. Graham proposed that the further debate on the Bill be postponed till Friday next, in order that he might have an opportunity of conferring with Lord Dalhousie upon it.—Mr. Warburton then agreed to withdraw his amendment, and the debate was adjourned to Friday next.—Mr. B. Escott moved for "copies of all letters and other documents which have passed to and from the Court of Directors of the East India Company and Lieutenant W. Hollis; and to and from the said Court and the Board of Control, relative to the dismissal of that officer from the East India Company's service."—Lord Jocelyn said the Board of Control had no objection to produce the correspondence, and justified the conduct of the East India Directors towards Lieut. Hollis. The papers were then ordered.—A new writ was ordered to issue for Chichester, in the room of Lord Arthur Lennox, appointed to the office of Clerk of the Ordnance.—Lord John Russell terminated the party campaign of the session by taking the usual Opposition review of the legislative promises, performances, omissions, and failures of Ministers. He began by disclaiming all intention o imitating Lord Lyndhurst in those famous onslaughts which he was wont to make on the "incapable Whig Government;" and said he should direct his observations simply to the progress made in passing useful measures, and to the prospect which the House had before it in ensuing sessions. Had he desired to accuse the Government of delaying some Bills, of indecently hurrying forward others, of submitting to mutilation, of giving them up altogether at the end of the session, he might have found ample materials for his accusation; and the physic and surgery measure alone would afford him sufficient scope for lengthened comments. The noble lord having referred to the satisfactory state of our foreign relations, took a review of the domestic measures introduced by the Government: and first noticed those which were framed for Ireland. He congratulated ministers on having recanted all their former declarations, including that of Sir J. Graham "that concession had reached its limits." They had admitted that the Irish people were entitled to equal municipal and elective rights as the people of England or Scotland. But while they had given forth these liberal principles they had brought forward no measures to secure to the Irish a municipal franchise, or a right of voting for Members of Parliament, equivalent to those possessed by the English or Scotch. They had issued, too, a landlord and tenant commission, which had excited undue hopes in the minds of the tenantry, and the only result of that dangerous expedient was a Bill the most extraordinary, unpractical, and absurd ever imagined, which they abandoned almost as soon as they had propounded. They likewise proposed a Bill for the Endowment of Maynooth, which, though good in itself, was so introduced, and so defended, as to raise a clamour, and excite the most puzzling doubts as to their future intentions with respect to the endowment of the whole Roman Catholic clergy of Ireland. If their intentions were ultimately to endow their clergy, they should have avowed it; if their intentions were not to follow up the Maynooth Bill by other similar measures, their conduct was unwise and impolitic. They, too, carried their Maynooth Bill in such a manner that it appears not to have been granted on its own merits, but to have been conceded to the clamour of the Repeal Association. They, on the other hand, carried their academical education project in obedience to the cry raised in England. These concessions to Ireland were late and imperfect. They were late, because the determination of the Irish now was not to give up their demand for repeal, no matter what might be conceded: they were imperfect, because it was evident that the endowment of the Catholic clergy, and the equalising of the Roman Catholic and the Established Churches in Ireland, or the destruction of all Church establishments there must inevitably follow. Lord John turned from the consideration of Irish measures to those connected with finance and trade, which he admitted had never thus answered his expectations; but though the principles of free trade had been adopted to a considerable extent, he thought they ought to have been further carried out in respect to timber, sugar, and corn. However, though he felt pleased with the free trade measures of Ministers, he did not know how gentlemen who had placed those Ministers in power for the sole purpose of protecting the produce of native industry could be satisfied with their performances. And every session the language of these Ministers, with regard to protection to agriculture, was growing "small by degrees, and beautifully less." Considering the prospects of the harvest, and the departure of bullion from the Bank, it was time the Government should say definitively what they mean to do next year with the Corn-laws. The farmers felt that there was less security for the maintenance of the Corn-laws now than there was in the preceding year, in consequence of the declarations made by Sir Robert Peel and Sir James Graham that in times of cheap corn the comforts, morality, and contentment of the poor were much improved. Could any man of common prudence, who had witnessed the state of public feeling during the last 10 days, and the anxiety which prevailed respecting the harvest, refrain from wishing that we had greater facilities for the importation of foreign corn? To the uncertainty of the seasons and to the uncertainty of the supply there was now added a legislative uncertainty whether in 10 weeks hence the duty would be 20*s.* or 1*s.* a quarter on foreign corn. This augmented almost incalculably speculation and gambling in corn; and, what was worse, exposed the country to the want of so necessary an article. Was it then wise in the Government to rest the law on its present basis? In addition to all this, there were members of Parliament declaring that the law was not likely to be permanent, and that it would expire in all probability in two years. If such were the case, then Government ought not to leave the country any longer in uncertainty, but should begin the next session early, and begin it with the revision of the Corn-laws. Though the Government had done much to approach to the principles of free-trade, it had kept up restrictions on timber, sugar, and corn, hostile to its principles, and hostile to the interests of the country. At the present moment the stock of corn in bond was unusually small, and he should, therefore, move for a return of it. It was small in consequence of the law, and that he considered a national misfortune. He then referred to the questions of the destitute condition of the labouring population, of general education, of improving the health and increasing the comforts of the poorer classes; and complained that little or nothing had been done. He concluded his review of the legislative fruits of the session by praying the Government to give some fixed notion of the principles they mean to carry out in the ensuing year. Lord John then alluded to Her Majesty's visit to the Continent; and complained that, as the former precedents of appointing Lord Justices in the Sovereign's absence from England were to be abandoned, there would be no depository of the royal power in England during her absence from her dominions. He also lamented that Her Majesty, who had twice visited Scotland, had not proceeded to visit Ireland. He thought that Her Majesty might rely on receiving a cordial welcome whenever she visited that country. Yet it was impossible not to draw an inference to the contrary, when the very ambiguous answer to the address of the Lord Mayor and corporation of Dublin, put into her mouth by her Ministers, was brought to the recollection of her subjects. The noble lord concluded his observations by moving for a list of the Bills which had been introduced and abandoned in the present session.—Sir J. Graham had no objection to make to the motion, although he had to the general spirit of Lord J. Russell's address. He took upon himself the responsibility of yielding up the Physic and Surgery Bill, which he described to be a most "desperate legislative difficulty" for any one to undertake. He excused the failure of the Landlord and Tenant Compensation Bill, and the non-production of the Irish Municipal and Elective Franchise measures. He regretted, if it were so, that the measures of Government had pleased no party in Ireland, but still he was prepared to go on dealing out impartial justice to all in that country with a firmer hand. He was glad of the approbation bestowed by the noble Lord on the financial and commercial policy of the Government; but in reply to his fears respecting the harvest and importation of foreign corn, he would merely state one fact, which was, that while in 1839 there were only 50,000 quarters of corn in bond, and 2,000,000*l.* of bullion in the bank—there were now 450,000 quarters of corn in bond, and there were 16,000,000*l.* in the coffers of the bank. Neither in 1839 or in the following session did Lord J. Russell propose any alteration in the Corn-law of that day. What right, then, had he to call upon Government to do now what he had himself refused to do then? Lord John had spoken of the sliding scale as "small by degrees and beautifully less;" but what had become of the noble Lord's own resolution for an 8*s.* fixed duty? First it sank down to 6*s.*, then to 4*s.*, and last session Lord John had had some difficulty in convincing the House that he was for any fixed duty at all. He then entered into a defence of the existing corn-laws, and showed that at the present moment the stock of corn in bond was fast accumulating. Instead of sharing in the apprehension of Lord J. Russell, Ministers entertained a confident hope that no great increase in the price of corn would now take place. Lord J. Russell had spoken of the possibility of Her Majesty paying a visit to her Irish subjects, and had tancied, from the speech which had been addressed to the Lord Mayor of Dublin, that doubts were entertained of the reception which Her Majesty would receive in Ireland. He must either have misconceived or forgotten the nature of that speech. However torn that country might be by angry party conflicts, he was quite sure that the presence of Her Majesty among her Irish subjects would hush into oblivion all their acrimonious and irritated passions.—Mr. M. J. O'Connell thanked Lord J. Russell for the mode in which he had brought forward the subject of Ireland in this debate, and contended it was calculated to produce much good in that country. He then expressed his views generally on the condition of Ireland.—After a conversation, in which Mr. Plumptre repeated his dissatisfaction with the Maynooth Bill and the Irish Colleges Bill, Mr. Moffatt condemned the conduct of Government in retaining the present duties on tea and sugar, Mr. Villiers and Mr. Gibson advocated the repeal of the corn-laws, Mr. Darby insisted on the necessity of protecting the agricultural interest, and Mr. Sheil recommended Sir R. Peel to follow up by acts the conciliatory professions which he had given to the people of Ireland, the motion was agreed to.

Friday.—Sir A. Clifford appeared at the bar and summoned the House to attend in the House of Lords, to hear the Royal assent given by commission to several public and private Bills. New writs were moved for Belfast in the room of J. Emerson Tennent, Esq., who has accepted the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds; for Cirencester, in the room of Wm. Cripps, Esq., who has accepted the office of one of the Lords of the Treasury; for Linlithgow, in the room of Charles Hope, Esq., who has accepted the office of Governor of the Isle of Man; for Warwick, in the room of Sir C. Douglas, who has accepted the office of Commissioner of Greenwich Hospital, and for Sunderland, in the room of Lord Howick, who has been called to the House of Peers.—The Silk Weavers Bill was read a third time and passed. [Left sitting.]

Fishmongers' Company.—On Friday the annual meeting of the Fishmongers took place at the hall of the Company. Upon this occasion the freedom of the Company was conferred upon Viscount Melbourne, who was afterwards present at the dinner. After the usual toasts, the Prime Warden rose to propose the health of Lord Melbourne, who had been that morning admitted to the freedom of the Company. He had great pleasure in proposing the health of a nobleman who had always been attached to liberal and patriotic principles, and whom they remembered with gratitude as the head of an administration which had for some time conducted the affairs of the country on those principles, and which had carried into effect many wise and beneficial measures. This toast having been drunk with great applause, Lord Melbourne rose and said, "Mr. Prime Warden and gentlemen, before I thank this company for the great honour which they have done me, I must express my regret and concern that the infirm state of my health has compelled me so often to decline the invitations with which I have been honoured, and to put off for so long a time the reception of the honour which I have at length received this morning, and which I highly value and esteem. I assure you that I consider it a very high distinction to be enrolled among the members of a corporation so ancient and respectable, and which has always been distinguished by its steady adherence to the enlightened and constitutional principles of civil and religious liberty. In proposing my health the Prime Warden has adverted in terms highly flattering and complimentary, and very gratifying to my feelings, to the administration of which I was the leading member. That administration is now defunct. We are gone as members of it and as a government. But pars melior nostrum is still adhuc viva et superstes; the corporeal frame may be said to have expired, and to be consigned to the tomb, but the immortal spirit—the ignea vis animi—is still alive, and not only alive, but active and efficient. Our principles and opinions, our views of public affairs, they still survive us. They have been adopted and acted upon by those who replaced us, and they have been productive, during the session of Parliament that is just about to terminate, of more than one wise and beneficial measure—of measures which I believe to be fit and essential, to be founded upon sound principle, based upon good example, and which, I have the greatest hopes, will confer lasting benefit upon the part of the empire to which they specially apply, and upon the community at large. At the same time we all well know that these very measures have been productive in one house of Parliament of much difference of opinion—that they have been the cause of much bitter feeling, not to say malignant invective, being levelled against the right honourable baronet at the head of her Majesty's government, upon the notion of some supposed inconsistency of these measures with his former opinions and conduct. Placed as I have been by circumstances in the position of an antagonist and competitor to that right honourable baronet, it is natural that I should look into and examine his conduct, not with hostile jealousy or any hostile feeling, but with care and anxiety. It is natural that I should be anxious to learn what his conduct has been, what have been his measures, what have been the principles upon which they have been founded, and what the language in which he has urged and enforced those principles. I have made such inquiry and examination, and I think myself bound to state, as the result of it, that I know of nothing in the antecedent conduct of the right honourable baronet which should in point of consistency preclude him from bringing forward either the measures which he has brought forward, or any other measures in the same direction which he may convince his understanding or persuade his conscience would be both expedient and conducive to the benefit and advantage of his country. Thus much I have thought it my duty to say. I had intended to have said it in Parliament, but I have never been able to find an opportunity of doing so. But, indeed, when I look at the assembly which I have the honour of addressing, and consider how it is composed, I do not think that I am likely to find a better opportunity of making this declaration than that which is now presented to me. Gentlemen, I thank you again for the honour which you have conferred upon me. I wish you success in all your undertakings. I know you will undertake nothing which, while it is for your own benefit, is not also for the advantage of your country, and wishing you collectively and individually happiness, prosperity, peace, and every earthly blessing, I respectfully take my leave." The noble lord sat down amid loud cheers.

Public Testimonials.—A few of the political admirers of Mr. B. Hawes, M.P., desirous to present that gentleman with a mark of their esteem, recently raised a subscription, and purchased a massive and richly-wrought salver, which was presented to the the hon. member, at the residence of Mr. Moffatt, M.P., in Eaton-square, on Saturday.—The Directors of the Bank of England have contributed 100*l.* to the National Testimonial to Mr. Rowland Hill.—A meeting was held last week at the London Tavern, at which it was resolved to acknowledge the services of Lieut. Waghorn, in establishing the overland route to India, by a public subscription; and a committee, headed by Lord Auckland and Lord Ellenborough, was appointed to carry the resolution into effect.

Night Ascent of Mr. Green in his Balloon.—On Monday night Mr. Green undertook the perilous feat of a night ascent in his balloon from Vauxhall Gardens, displaying fireworks of a novel description from the car. The occasion of this adventure was celebrated by a festival, in which all the resources of the establishment were brought into requisition to render the fête the most brilliant of the season. The efforts of the management proved successful, the gardens being crowded by an immense assemblage, including several persons of rank and distinction. The balloon selected by Mr. Green for the occasion was the Albion, formerly the property of Mr. Hampton, and now considerably enlarged and improved in shape and construction. It will contain 26,000 cubic feet of gas, and stands 60 feet in height. Mr. Darby, the pyrotechnist to the gardens, had the arrangement of the fireworks, and the construction of the machinery for their discharge. The frame containing the fireworks was suspended to the car by a line about 70 feet in length, attached to a swivel, so that it might spin freely in the air, and thus increase the effect of the display. The frame consisted of three conjunct wheels, the radius of each being six feet, and the circumference of the entire frame 36 feet. Mr. Green was provided with a regulating winch in the car, so that he was enabled to wind up or lower the frame at pleasure. The fireworks consisted of variegated lights, Italian gerbs, with stars, coloured Roman candles, French jets, and Chinese streams of fire, concluding with an enormous bouquet of coloured fires. With respect to this ignition, a number of suggestions were made to Mr. Green, and among others the percussion system was recommended, but he expressed his determination to adopt his own plan of lighting the fireworks from the car by means of a common lucifer-match, to ignite a fusee connected with the pieces on the frame, and the lowering it by the windlass, the slow-match burning for about a minute previous to the general explosion of the fireworks. The car having been attached to the balloon, Mr. Green previously deposited in it his barometer, a large lantern, compass, map, a guide-line of about 1000 feet, grapnel, and between 2 and 3 cwt. of ballast in bags: the frame, with the fireworks, was then affixed to the car, great care being taken to prevent its position being reversed from the horizontal to the vertical, as in the case of Madame Blanchard, who lost her life in a night ascent at Paris, the frame, by an accident, becoming reversed, the fireworks consequently played into the car instead of beneath the balloon, ignited the silk, and caused a fatal explosion. After the arrangement of the usual preliminaries, Mr. Green entered the car alone, having been previously solicited by the Earl of Munster and Lord George Beresford to allow those noblemen to accompany him; but Mr. Green felt it his duty, on account of the hazardous adventure, to decline. At 11 o'clock the signal for ascent was given. Mr. Green immediately seized the liberating iron with one hand, and lighting the fusee with the other, the ascent took place amidst the cheers of the assembled thousands outside the gardens and of the company within. The fireworks in a few seconds became discharged, and a more brilliant pyrotechnic exhibition was never witnessed. The balloon took a northerly direction, and descended about midnight, in a pea-field, at Ponder's End, near Enfield. Mr. Green states, that the view of the metropolis was truly splendid, London appearing one mass of light, resembling only Vauxhall with its myriads of lamps, and to all appearance confined within the space of a square mile. He could distinguish the bridges from the dotted lines of lamps, and in his transit over the metropolis could distinctly hear the shouts of the assembled crowds. No difficulty occurred with the fireworks, either in the ignition or otherwise. After pleasantly sailing for about an hour, Mr. Green determined on descending, but he was anxious to ascertain first whether any difficulty occurred in the shape of trees, or whether he was over a field. His position, however, he soon discovered, for on hearing voices below, he called out, "Where am I?" This question greatly surprised the gentlemen (Mr. Hogg and Mr. Smythe, of Edmonton), who could not conceive from whence the sound proceeded. Mr. Green repeated the question in a louder tone. They replied, "Who are you!" The rejoinder was, "I'm Mr. Green, and have come in my balloon from Vauxhall-gardens." Mr. Hogg and Mr. Smythe laughed heartily, and exclaimed, "Then come down, for you are all right." Mr. Green, on hearing this, let go the grappling iron, and was soon safe on terra firma. On Thursday night, Mr Green repeated the experiment in the same balloon, and with the same success.

Inquest at a Private Lunatic Asylum.—On Saturday a lengthened inquiry took place before Mr. Wakley, at the private lunatic asylum of Lady Ellis, the widow of the late Sir W. Ellis, Southall-park, near Hanwell, on the body of Mr. Everett, aged 40 years, late professor of chemistry at Middlesex Hospital, and for some time past an inmate of Lady Ellis's institution. From the statement of the different witnesses, it appeared that the unfortunate gentleman had been placed in Lady Ellis's asylum by his relatives some months since, shortly after his malady became known to them. On Saturday, July 19th, deceased was put into a warm bath by Sage, his keeper, with the assistance of a person named Wright, an attendant upon a private patient; and having done so, Sage left the apartment for a short time, leaving Wright with the deceased. When Sage was absent, and after deceased had been about five minutes in the bath, a stream of boiling water came running into the bath over the deceased. As soon, however, as Wright discovered that fact, he pulled deceased out of the bath, by which time deceased had sustained a scald in his neck and back. Wright, however, took no notice of the circumstance, beyond telling Sage, on his return to the room, what had happened, but dressed the deceased without putting any application to the injured parts. The scald became worse, and medical aid was called in, but deceased continued to get worse and died. After a long investigation, the jury returned a verdict of accidental death, with a recommendation that such alteration should be made in the apparatus of the bath as to prevent similar accidents in future.

Destruction of Portman Hay-market by Fire.—On Thursday evening, between 6 and 7 o'clock, a fire broke out in Portman-market. It originated in a large shed used as a straw depot, the property of Mrs. Ellis, and was not subdued before the whole of the hay-market, from 300 to 400 feet long, with a large quantity of the stock, was consumed. The market was the property of Lord Portman, and is said to be insured.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Aug. 2:—West Districts, 129; Northern, 162; Central, 163; Eastern, 205; Southern, 168; Total, 827; males, 416; females, 411. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1143; males, 565 females, 578.

Provincial.

Cowes.—Her Majesty has done Mr. Robert Bell the honour of presenting him with a magnificent vase, in acknowledgment of the promptitude with which he lately surrendered his seat, Norris Castle, to the use of the King of the Netherlands. The presentation of the vase was accompanied by an expression of feeling most gratifying to Mr. Bell, while it evinced the pleasure the Queen felt in testifying to the politeness of one of her subjects.

Durham.—The Bishop of this diocese held a visitation in this city last week, and delivered the usual charge to the clergy. His lordship commenced by saying that

It was a source of sincere gratification to him, and it reflected no little credit on them, that whilst other dioceses were convulsed with agitations and divisions consequent on the introduction (unnecessary, as he continued to think) of obsolete usages, the diocese of Durham had been little agitated by an occasion of that sort. In other portions of the kingdom differences on matters in themselves trivial, yet swelled into magnitude by the length into which adverse parties had gone, had called for an expression of their opinions from the highest ecclesiastical authorities, and threatened the whole Church with the fatal consequences of disunion. Here, however, the good sense and good feeling of the great majority of the clergy had rendered abortive the attempts to uphold customs extremely trivial, and in no place whatever had such an estrangement taken place between the minister and his parishioners as to call for the interference of the diocesan. Such a satisfactory state of things scarcely imposed the necessity of adverting to the subject at all: but he was anxious to offer a few remarks, in order that he might point out the generally mischievous effects which could not fail to flow, in particular, from any extreme opinions on questions connected with disputed points of theology. And he would therefore remind all such, either there or elsewhere, who, from an honest but certainly mistaken sense of duty, might have felt themselves called upon to revive what had long been disused, because it had not been formally repealed, that in the process of time the views of men as to what was expedient as well as what was necessary must undergo a change; and that it would be attended with serious inconvenience if an alteration of the law was resorted to on occasions when every such change of habits took place: and that, in point of fact, long-continued and universal disuse afforded as strong grounds for considering it unnecessary to observe the law as if a solemn act of the Legislature had abolished that law. He would further remind them that the interests of peace and charity, with the acknowledged advantages of union, required to be considered by Christian clergymen far more than the mere details of rites and ceremonies, or the minutiæ of observances. All, in short, would do well to bear in mind the sound and practical advice of that consummate lawyer and statesman, as well as upright man, Sir Thomas More, 'Leges abrogatas consuetudine haud temere revoca: præsertim quæ diu desitæ nunquam desideratæ sunt.' In delivering his opinions to the clergy on a matter in which error of practice had arisen from an over nice comprehension of personal and moral responsibility, and from a circumstance by no means uncommon, a person of a quick and sensitive mind, who was desirous of carefully following the directions of the service, and attending to the growing claims of the people, and the calls of duty, would find something to clash in this their state of probation. In touching on a question at once delicate in its own nature, and momentous in its consequences, he availed himself of the opportunity of remarking on the necessity of discouraging the notion of any extreme view at all, whether as to the form of worship or the more material point of doctrine. In the consideration of matters connected with their duties they had been too much in the habit of looking out for the opinions and considering the practice of men of the same opinions, and whose sentiments they regarded as similar to their own. Most undoubtedly they ought to look to a sure guide for their opinions, and pre-eminently to consult the infallible pages of Scripture, but they might in some cases consult those men whom they esteemed more judicious than themselves, for assistance in interpretation of what was doubtful. They were naturally led to respect such authorities more than they ought, and even to adopt the conclusions of men when they should rely on the unerring word of God. In short they were too apt to refer to books of controversy when they should gain more real knowledge, and be guided much more safely if they were to abide by the dictates of inspiration. The consequence of such difference in the opinions of men was too often seen in an over-weening reliance on their own peculiar views, by an uncharitable distrust and even dislike of those who in embracing a standard of faith, had arrived at conclusions very different from their own. Thus, unconsciously perhaps, to themselves, some were to be found who claimed the name of Protestant, who yet claimed and practised the very license and exemption from error as much as ever did the Church of Rome, whom those very Protestants censure for their pretensions to infallibility and deficiency of charity. Surely they forget that spirit-stirring question of the Apostle—"Who art thou that judgeth another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth; yea, he shall be holden up: for God is able to make him stand." Some alleged that one who differed from themselves had not the degree of faith requisite for salvation; others that he was not in a state of grace; they opposed the heresy in others to condemn, but reserved to themselves the power of condemning. By such proceedings they act against their principles, which assured to every one the privilege of private judgment, and forbade them to molest any one, or deprive him of any right to which he would be otherwise intitled merely because of any particular mode of interpreting the Scriptures which he might have adopted or might hereafter adopt. Thus it was that in this fallible world of ours where persons were disposed to embrace error in preference to truth, the conscientious but unreflecting Protestant actually committed the faults for which he so vehemently denounced the Church of Rome. He was, indeed, so far from holding the doctrines of that Church, that he viewed them in the light of a complete justification of that severance which happily took place from her communion in the sixteenth century; but he forgot that there were other grounds on which she then entered her protest against that church, such as her assumption of infallibility, the power of determining what was a dangerous error, and to inflict punishment for such an error. It is quite true that by the milder spirit which now prevailed, the Inquisition no longer caused alarm in the Church of Rome or any other Church, but the spirit which directed the Inquisition, and which authoritatively prescribed the limits of truth and error was not entirely extinguished either in Roman Catholics or Protestants, for every one who took upon himself to pronounce judgment on the religious opinion of another, and to debar him admission to the realms of bliss, was surely actuated by the intolerant spirit which animated the Inquisition. "The heart of man," they were told, "is deceitful above all things," and that had induced him to make these remarks. If those who gloried in the name of Protestant would attend less to human theories and search more diligently into the oracles of divine truth, they would there discover how ignorant and liable to err all were by nature—how little it became them to set themselves up as judges of other men—how great was the need every one of them had for watchfulness, lest they should commit the gross mistake of refusing indulgence to others, whilst they themselves might be mistaken: and, above all, what enlarged, comprehensive, and unfathomable love to all their brethren were contained in the pages of inspiration. Never let them forget with what eloquence as well as truth the qualities of that virtue were set forth by the apostle, that "though prophecies might fail, and tongues might cease, though knowledge itself might vanish away, yet charity never faileth"—that charity which, in the triple constellation of Christian graces, was pronounced to be the greatest of them all. The bishop then pointed out the necessity of the wealthy laity contributing to aid the Ecclesiastical Commission in building new churches, and dwelt on the important changes which that commission had effected in the church. To meet these changes his lordship urged upon the younger clergy the necessity of economy, and suggested their avoidance of early and imprudent marriages. The bishop concluded with a warm eulogium of the University of Durham.

Eton.—A splendidly-bound folio volume has been recently presented by His Majesty the King of Prussia to Eton College. This curious work, which is in large folio, and beautifully printed on vellum, containing 155 pages, is magnificently bound in purple velvet, inlaid with massive ornaments with solid gold, and of curious and elaborate workmanship. This royal present to the college authorities is described, in the letter which accompanied it from his Excellency the Prussian Minister, as being "one of the only two copies on vellum of the edition of the 'Niebelungen,' in great folio, struck off as a monument of typography at the centenary festival of Guttenburgh's invention, in 100 copies only. The two on vellum were struck off for the King and Queen of Prussia." The copy intended for the King of Prussia was presented by His Majesty to Eton College, and the only other copy on vellum (presented to their Majesties) has been placed in the royal library in the Palace at Berlin. The following is a translation of the German inscription on the first leaf of the book, in the hand-writing of the Prussian Sovereign "To Eton School—The guardian of the hope of the rising generation, the promoter of all that is good and noble, the preserver of old Saxon intellect, this hero-poem of the German people, and memorial of the jubilee of a German invention, is presented, in memory of his visit in January, 1842, and in gratitude for his affectionate reception, by Frederick Wilhelm, King of Prussia. Berlin, June 18, 1845." This handsome present was exhibited to the numerous visitors who assembled at Eton on "Election Monday," which took place on the 28th ult., and passed off with the usual eclat.

Exeter.—A respite for the Brazilian slavers was received here on Monday from Mr. Baron Platt. The learned judge, in his communication to the sheriff, requests him to respite the execution for a month from Friday the 8th. He states that he does this in consequence of a communication with Mr. Justice Erle, and in order to give time to refer the points of law raised by Mr. Sergeant Manning to the consideration of the 15 judges.

Preston.—On Saturday the Rev. R. Moore, incumbent of Lund, and a county magistrate, was fired at as he was walking up Fishergate, in this town, by a person called Richard Bennett, the son of a shoemaker at Kirkham, who was instantly apprehended and committed to Lancaster Castle to take his trial. The ball missed Mr. Moore, upon which the prisoner threw the pistol at him and hit him on the breast. It appears that the prisoner is the same person who was charged with having, on the 19th April, 1836, blown up with gunpowder the house of Mr. Parkinson, of Kirkham. He is about 34 years of age. Mr. Parkinson's house was blown up the day following the marriage of one of his daughters, with whom the prisoner was in love, but to whom he had not declared his passion. This circumstance, added to the previous indifferent character he had borne, led to his apprehension on the charge, but for a singular anomaly in the law the offence could not be brought within any existing statute, and, of course, no indictment could be preferred against him.

Ripon.—Our obituary last week recorded the death of Mrs. Lawrence, of Studley Park, who expired on Wednesday week, at her well-known seat near this town, in the 85th year of her age. She enjoyed her health until about the last fortnight, when she became slightly indisposed; it was soon ascertained that nature was giving way, and that she was gradually sinking. Although her death was an event looked for during the previous two days, yet the information cast a general gloom throughout the neighbourhood. All the shops in Ripon were closed, so universally was the deceased lady respected. The inhabitants of the whole district, especially the poor, will experience a great loss in her death. Her acts of kindness and benevolence to all classes were bounded only by the extensive means which she possessed of doing good to her fellow-creatures. Her large fortune has been left, it is said, to her two nephews, the Earl de Grey and the Earl of Ripon, and to Sir Lancelot Shadwell, the vice-chancellor of England, who is likewise a relation.

Worcester.—On Monday Dr. Pepys, the Bishop of Worcester, held a visitation in the cathedral, which was very numerously attended by the clergy of the diocese. His lordship's charge had reference almost exclusively to those matters which have recently agitated the Church, viz., the question of the revival of obsolete forms and usages.

His lordship observed that the first matter which had presented itself to his mind as most calling for remark from him on this occasion of his triennial visitation, was important, not only on account of its effect, but of the specious grounds on which it rested—he meant an undue regard for antiquities, which had latterly been manifested, and dwelt upon by theological writers, and which extended not only to the forms and ceremonies of the Church, but related also to architectural matters; and he proceeded first to consider whether there were sufficient grounds for such reverential observance of these antiquities. Here he found that, scanty as were the books which had reached us, written by authors living in the first century of the Christian era, and invaluable as those works were in establishing the fact of the early circulation of the Scriptures, they did not assist in clearing those points which now agitated the Church. Not only was it unsafe to appeal to those authors, because so few records had reached us, but also because there was reason to believe that in those early days the Church had become much corrupted; and it might be doubted whether the early fathers, while engaged in refuting the errors which had crept into the Church, had not really been imbued with their latent heresy. Hence we were struck with the differences which exist between the doctrines taught by the inspired followers of our Lord and those inculcated by the ancient fathers of the Church. By the former they were taught that the expiation of sin was through the vicarious interposition of Him who sacrificed himself for us upon the cross, and by the latter they were strictly enjoined to expiatory penances and fasts. But if the paucity of writers in the three first centuries of the Christian era rendered it unsafe to trust to them, he asked should they be more successful if, abandoning these, they had recourse to the writings of the fourth and following century? Much stress had been laid upon the writings of the fourth and fifth centuries of Christianity as authorities not to be questioned regarding Catholic doctrines, but here errors much more fatal to Christianity prevailed. The contest between Christianity and Paganism finally ended in the victory of the former, though that victory was not won without some sacrifice. His lordship then alluded to the Roman Catholic processions as in use in Italy, and their similarity to the Pagan rites. All these ancient authorities were contradictory one to another. If, therefore, they were to regard antiquity, it became a question which of the fathers they should adopt. Should they believe some who affirmed that the blessed should live for a thousand years in Elysium, or should they treat that doctrine as others of the same day had done—viz., as the idle dream of a child. "In short," said his lordship, "he who trusts to antiquity will find so much diversity of opinion among those styled the 'Fathers of the Church' that he will be so tossed about upon those troubled waters as to search in vain for an anchor for his soul in the midst of them. Were, then, the writings of antiquity worse than useless? He answered by no means. Not only were they most valuable for the sentiments of piety which they contained, but as corroboratory of the Scriptures. The Established Church was deeply indebted to the works of antiquity as furnishing corroborative evidence of the book of Scripture, but they would be in danger of falling into the worst errors of Popery if they went beyond this in their regard for those works. The Bible, and the Bible alone, was the book upon which the Protestant depended in his faith. It was an argument against the doctrines of transubstantiation and the adoration of the Virgin Mary that they could find no traces of these for six centuries of the Christian era. Was it likely that such important doctrines should have been transmitted from the Apostles, while they found no trace of them until five or six years after Christ? In this negative sense it was that the true use of antiquity consisted." The bishop then went on to say that there was another point to which he was anxious to call the attention of the clergy as resulting from excessive attention to antiquity—a matter of very interior consequence as to doctrine, but which had its effects upon the Church. He alluded to the pedantry (if he might so call it) of introducing into Protestant churches stone altars instead of the communion table, a substitution for a reading desk, sedilia, candlesticks placed on the communion table never to be lighted, and texts of Scripture emblazoned upon the walls in divers colours and in Roman text, which never could be read. He objected to the revival of these obsolete uses in the Church, not on account of the expense attending them (though this was under circumstances to be regarded), but because he regarded them as having a tendency to convey a wrong impression of the purposes for which they assembled in church. They did not meet to gaze with awe upon lighted tapers carried by priests, but they assembled together in Protestant worship, humbly to confess that they had left undone many things which they ought to have done, and done those things which they ought not to have done; to pray to God to forgive their sins committed, and to offer up prayers and thanksgivings at the throne of mercy. These were the spiritual exercises for which Protestants assembled together in the house of God. His lordship then begged to offer some remarks in favour of an internal arrangement in churches which had been made the subject of much vituperation. He alluded to that distribution of the sittings by which each family in the parish was allowed to make, as it were, a family congregation in the midst of the general congregation. Such arrangements he observed were unnecessary in Roman Catholic congregations, where the mass of the people assembled not to pray, but to gaze where the service was performed in an unknown language, and the whole was performed by the priests, the congregation taking little part in it. His lordship expressed himself in favour of family arrangements of the pews, and asked, what father of a family, who had been accustomed to offer up his prayers with his wife and children, would willingly resign that privilege for a strict regard to ancient usages? He admitted that abuses of this privilege had crept into practice, but such abuses should immediately on their detection be corrected by the proper authorities. His lordship next alluded to the practice of turning to the east, which he said was now exercised not only during the recitation of the creed, but even when the congregation united with the priest in prayer. This was unquestionably a very ancient practice, and his lordship here quoted authorities who, in proving the origin of this custom, had assigned the eastern portion of the universe to the Omnipotent, and the western to the enemy of mankind. On this point it was evident that the fathers differed; and, certain it was, that no authority could be found for the usage in the Scriptures, which abounded in evidence of the universality of the Deity. In the above observations, as also in the expression of his opinion on other points, when called upon (his lordship continued), he trusted he had sufficiently testified that there was no leaning on his part towards the errors of Rome; no deviation from the principles of the Reformation. He, therefore, approached with more confidence a subject upon which he differed in opinion from most of those around him; he alluded to his vote upon the grant to the College of Maynooth. It might be true that a Bishop, as a Peer of Parliament, was bound to give his vote according to the dictates of his conscience, without being called upon to render an account to his clergy in justification of himself; but, for his part, he was most anxious to prove to his brethren that he had not given his vote in favour of the Maynooth grant without the most mature deliberation, and upon good grounds. No consideration of expediency would ever induce him to vote for a measure which he could consider per se sinful. His lordship then proceeded to combat the argument adduced against this measure, viz., that it was a national sin, and would be injurious to the Established Church. He denied both of these positions, and said the question was, whether they should contribute to teach Christianity as inculcated by Roman Catholics, or whether their fellow-countrymen in Ireland should not be educated at all. The extension of education he considered must in the end contribute to the extension of the Established Church. After some further remarks and arguments in favour of the Maynooth endowment, his lordship dismissed the clergy in the usual form.

The Lords' Committees have passed the preamble of the Bolton and Leigh, Kenyon and Leigh Junction, North Union, Liverpool and Manchester, and Grand Junction Amalgamation; of the South Eastern and Deal Extension, the London and Croydon Enlargement (unopposed), the Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings, and the Blackwall and Eastern Counties Junction, lately called the Epping Line. The Commons' Committee on the Northern District decided on Tuesday that the preamble of the London and York bill, in respect to the Bawtry branch, was not proved, and that the preamble of the Sheffield and East Lincolnshire Railway, with the exception of the branch to Lincoln, was proved, and would be reported accordingly. They had previously decided that, in the case of the London and York (Sheffield branch), the preamble had not been proved, and that in the case of the Sheffield and Lincolnshire the preamble had been proved, with the omission of the words "to the city of Lincoln." The committee broke up on Tuesday, after sitting uninterruptedly for 14 weeks, from the 28th of April.—A report has just been presented to the provisional committee, from Mr. Neale, the engineer, with reference to a new line, 15 miles in length, to be worked on the atmospheric system, commencing at the Aller station of the South Devon Railway, near Newton Abbot, proceeding thence to Dartmouth, and connecting Dartmouth, Brixham, Torbay, Paignton, Torquay, and their neighbourhoods, with the South Devon, thereby affording to these places direct railway communication between London and the existing lines. The report states that the engineering difficulties are not so great as from the undulating nature of the country might have been expected, and that with the exception of two tunnels there are no works of great magnitude. The cost is estimated at 300,000*l*.—Surveys have been commenced on the line of roads and property in the neighbourhood of the York-road, New-cut, Kennington-road, St. George's-fields, &c., with the view to ascertain the best possible route for the proposed extension of the South Western line to London-bridge, in connection with the line from the York-road, near Hungerford and Waterloo-bridges, to the station at Nine-elms, the bill for the formation of which has received the royal assent. The terminus, as at present proposed, will be on the open piece of garden-ground on the south side of the York-road, and on part of which the Belvidere Brewery now stands.—The formation of the branch line to Salisbury, from the South Western Railway, is proceeding throughout the whole extent of the line, and it is expected to be opened in April or May next. The preparations for the branch from the Great Western line, on the other side of the city, are also in active progress, and an effort will be made to get this line opened to Bath as early as the line to Bishopstoke.—A meeting of gentlemen interested in the Exeter, Yeovil, and Dorchester Railway was held at Exeter on Friday, the Mayor presiding. It was resolved that the construction of a railway between Exeter and Exmouth, in connection with the proposed Exeter, Yeovil, and Dorchester line, was highly desirable. A provisional committee, to carry the same into effect, was appointed.—A meeting of the directors of the Great Western, Bristol, and Gloucester, South Devon, Cornwall, and West Cornwall lines was held last week, Mr. C. Russell, M.P., in the chair. The resolution of the committee of the House of Lords was read, to the effect that "the making of a railway to connect the towns of Plymouth and Falmouth, with a branch to the town of Bodmin, would be of great public advantage, by opening an additional, certain, and expeditious means of communication between the said places, and also by facilitating the communication between more distant towns and places; but the committee are also of opinion that it would not be advisable to adopt definitely the plan of railway communication which is intended to be carried out by the bill, without a further and more accurate survey of the whole line of country traversed between Plymouth and Falmouth, with a view of obtaining gradients and curves more favourable, and avoiding the passage of the Hamoaze and the Fenryn river, below Penryn, if these last objects can be effected without any great countervailing cost and disadvantage. The committee are therefore of opinion, that the bill should not be now further proceeded with." It was resolved that Mr. Brunel should resurvey the line, and that steps should be taken for prosecuting the measure in the next session.—The past week has been more productive than any on record, in new schemes for railways, of which there have been upwards of 16; notwithstanding the alteration just effected in the standing orders of the House, raising the deposit from 5 to 10 per cent. Several of them are quite Herculean, both in character and capital, and must, if proceeded with, lay enormous claims on the floating capital of the country. The announcement of the Great European Railway, for instance, is of a nature almost to superinduce doubts of the sanity of its projectors, since it proposes, according to the prospectus, to deal with a superficies of 37,000,000, the portion of the earth comprehended under its title, and states its paid-up capital at one million. The Rugby and Huntingdon Junction is a child of the London and York, and proposes to take a stride of 50 miles long, from its rise in the agricultural to its termination in the manufacturing districts. It is to consume half a million of capital in its construction. A line from Hungerford-market, through Battersea and Hammersmith, to a junction with the Great Western at Drayton, seeks the market and public patronage to supply capital of upwards of half a million, under the title of the London, Hounslow, and Great Western, engineered by Mr. Gravatt. A 12 mile extension, at a further cost of 250,000*l*. of the Chelmsford and Bury to Thetford is also in the field. The Surrey Grand Junction is to be a line to Chelsea, there to join extensions from the London and Birmingham, and Great Western. The London, Aylesbury, and Oxford is an extension of the Aylesbury line, which is under the wing of the London and Birmingham, who propose this extension westward as a set off, it is presumed, to the incursions northward of the Great Western. Waterford and Tramore are to be connected by a line of eight miles in length, and the seaport town of Ballyshannon is to be connected by a combination of rails and steamers with Enniskillen, by a line between Belleek, in Fermanagh, and Ballyshannon. The Anglo-Belgian company proposes to surround Belgium with a belt of iron, and to map out for her new lines in addition to those which she already possesses. A new line is to start from the Manchester and Leeds at Wakefield, and form a junction with the northern lines at Harrogate. The broad gauge is to travel downwards into the Vale of Neath, by a line of 22 miles long, under the engineering auspices of Mr. Brunel, connecting Swansea and Neath with Merthyr Tydvil. The promoters of the main line of the Huddersfield and Manchester now about to be constructed, intend throwing off a branch to Oldham. The directors of the Manchester and Leeds, Goole and Great Grimsby lines are represented to be the originators of a line just proposed between Sheffield, Barnsley, and Wakefield. The Bristol and Exeter, and West and Somerset lines are to be connected by the Bridgewater, Frome, and Central Somerset line, which takes a range of 32 miles, at a contemplated cost of 350,000*l*. Mr. Hudson, the promoter of so many lines in the north, proposes to add another district to his 600 miles of railway empire, by a line from Preston to Richmond, forming a direct communication from the Newcastle district to Liverpool and Manchester.—A dreadful accident occurred on Monday afternoon to the down mail train on the North Eastern and Cambridge line. Shortly after leaving the Wendon station, the train proceeded at great speed towards Cambridge; on approaching Chesterford it is supposed a rail had sprung, which threw the engine off the line, and completely embedded it in the embankment. The facts of the accident are given so variously in the different newspaper reports, that we prefer quoting the following statement made in the House of Commons on Tuesday by Mr. Ward, who is one of the directors of the company:—"The train with passengers," said Mr. Ward, "left London at eleven o'clock; and, since the opening of the line to Cambridge, by the express order of the directors, the superintendent of the locomotive department went with the engine as far as Cambridge. The superintendent was on the engine at the time of the accident, he suffered by that accident, but he preserved distinctly his recollection, and his self-possession had never for a moment abandoned him. The engine that was running was a first-class engine. That engine the superintendent stated was running particularly steady, the pace at which it was going was 28 miles an hour, the exact rate at which it was desired that it should go. There was no vibration, no oscillation, nothing to excite the slightest apprehension, when on a sudden the engine struck one of the wedges, which must have started from its position, and turned up the rail; the engine then run upon the ballast for 150 yards. It so ran for about 100 or 150 yards, dragging the whole train after it, and up to a certain period the hope was entertained (for the superintendent did not lose his self-possession for a moment) that, by throwing off the steam, the engine might be stopped before any accident could occur. Instead of that, of a sudden, the engine with the train crossed the line, and rose against the embankment—of course the vehicles nearest to the engine, the luggage van, and a horse box, were thrown up in a heap on the engine. The engineer was thrown off to a considerable distance. This man was not in a state to mention what had occurred, and he had no recollection of what had happened. The stoker's clothes were in some way caught by the engine; he was thrown under it, and it was to be hoped he was killed instantaneously, for all his lower extremities were found frightfully burned. As to the superintendent, he found himself under an enormous heap, and within nine inches of the man who had been killed. He crept out as well as he could from the ruins of the carriages. The guard, who had been sitting upon one of the second class carriages, had one of his legs broken, and the other much injured. He was immediately removed to the Cambridge Hospital. It was perfectly providential that no further accidents occurred; for out of the whole of the persons who were in the train there was not a single human being hurt. There was no one hurt but the unfortunate servants of the company. This, amongst other circumstances occurred:—One of the carriages was riven in two. In that carriage there was a woman and child, and they escaped without the slightest injury or smallest bruise. He must say that after an anxious examination into all the circumstances, as far as they had come to his knowledge, he could not find that anything had been left undone to prevent the accident occurring on the line. That line had been opened only a week ago. It had undergone the careful inspection of General Pasley, who declared that he never saw a line in a more fit condition for being opened. They had this opinion in favour of the line from one who was so careful, and he could say that all had been done that possibly could have been done previous to the opening of the line to the public to secure safety, and he believed that no human foresight could have prevented what had occurred. An immediate inquiry would, however, be directed into all the circumstances connected with this accident." It appears from subsequent accounts that General Pasley has examined the line since the accident, but some days will probably elapse before his official report will be published. It is stated, however, that towards the close of the investigation, General Pasley inquired of Mr. Phipps and Mr. Hanson, two officers of the company, what would have been the effect had an engine been propelling the train behind? "Both gentlemen," say the daily papers, "shrugged up their shoulders, but made no answer." General Pasley: "It would have settled them." One of the officers remarked, "Yes, indeed, it would; every one of them would have been killed."—We regret to announce that Mr. Dean the civil engineer, of Gandy-street, Exeter, who had his leg crushed by the collision which took place on the line of the London and Birmingham, near Chalk-farm, on the morning of the 29th ult., expired on Tuesday morning. The fortitude which the unfortunate gentleman exhibited at the time of the accident, when amputation was necessary, left no doubt on the minds of his medical attendants that his ultimate recovery would be effected. On Monday, however, unfavourable symptoms set in, and it soon became evident that mortification had ensued, under the effects of which he gradually sank. Mr. Dean, who, in addition to an extensive business as a civil engineer, was agent to the Earl of Devon, on whose business he was travelling to London at the time of the collision, was 48 years of age, and is understood to have left a widow and family.

Dublin.—Mr. James Watson, the Orange magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant, whose conduct recently formed the subject of discussion in the House of Lords, has been dismissed from the commission of the peace for the county of Antrim, and from his Deputy-Lieutenancy. The case was referred by the Government to the Lord Chancellor, who entered into a correspondence with Mr. Watson, and the result is, that that gentleman has been superseded. The Orange journals, pending the decision of the Government and the Chancellor, threatened "war to the knife," in case of Mr. Watson's dismissal; and the Evening Mail announced that a monster Orange meeting would take place in Dublin, attended by all the leaders of the party, to denounce the Government, open a vigorous campaign of agitation against them, and that Orange-lieutenants, Deputy-lieutenants, and Magistrates of the northern counties would make common cause with Mr. Watson against the Executive. The Evening Mail adds that the copy of Mr. Watson's dismissal had not yet been received by that journal; but that it is "couched in the most bitter and offensive epithets that language is capable of supplying," and that this document was "manufactured in Downing-street."—Mr. Lucas, on retiring from the Under-Secretaryship, has been made a member of the Privy Council.—Archbishop Murray, in a letter to Mr. O'Connell, denies an assertion recently made by that gentleman, that the Roman Catholic prelates have committed themselves, under the Bequests Act, to the exercise of an uncanonical power. The Archbishop says—"With respect to the hope expressed in the subsequent part of your speech, 'that the Catholic prelates will see what course they should now take, and that they will not permit themselves to be committed any longer to the exercise of an uncanonical power,' I have only to repeat, that they have not committed themselves to the exercise of any such power; and I beg further to assure you, that it is their fixed determination to persevere, with the blessing of God, so long as the multiplied duties of their station will permit, in that charitable course, on which, at a great sacrifice of time and personal convenience they have, as members of the Charitable Bequests Board, deliberately entered with the sole view of serving the poor, and of protecting, if necessary, the interests of our Church."—Mr. O'Connell left Galway on Wednesday week for Derrynane.—A verdict, with heavy damages, having been recently obtained at Waterford against the Dublin Warder, for the publication of an alleged libel, which had for its object the exposure of the vices and abuses of the factory system, several gentlemen of the highest respectability formed a committee for the purpose of raising a fund to liquidate the heavy expenses of the suit. The proprietors of the Warder have, however, written to the Rev. T. Scott, one of the members of the committee, to decline "most respectfully and firmly," all assistance of the kind proposed.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday, Dr. Murphy in the chair. A letter was read from Mr. O'Connell describing the recent demonstrations at Wexford and Galway, and calling upon the Association to take measures for returning 60 Repeal members to Parliament. At the close of his letter Mr. O'Connell says:—"Should the proposed meeting of Orangemen for the 12th of this month be seriously intended to take place, the Association must take the most active means by counsel and influence to prevent the Catholics, but especially to caution all Repealers from interfering in any way, and from in any respect impeding the Orangemen in their procession. Between the Repealers and the Orangemen there is no real cause of quarrel, or even of difference. In Wexford the green arches across the roads were, in very many instances, decorated with orange lilies. It is thus we can best attain the Repeal.—On the motion of Mr. J. O'Connell, resolutions in accordance with his father's views were adopted.—Capt. Broderick next addressed the meeting, taking for his theme the present relations of America with England. He taunted England with inability to resist aggression successfully, unless aided by Ireland, and predicted a termination to the greatness of the British empire, in the event of a war, unless independence were conceded to this country as the price of its assistance.—Mr. J. O'Connell followed in a similar train. He protested against the annexation of Texas as a measure calculated to promote slavery, and contrasted the language of defiance used in Parliament by Sir R. Peel towards America in reference to the Oregon boundary question, with the concessions at present in the course of being made. Proud, haughty England, in spite of all Peel's bluster, was forced into a disgraceful submission to America, because she continued unjust to Ireland. But she would have to truckle not only to America but to France and to any other country which might have the courage to assail her, unless she did justice to Ireland. She should have the assistance of Irishmen: hearts and hands, they offered her the last drop of their blood, if she acted justly to them; but if she persevered in tyranny, injustice, and insolence, she would have to yield to a foreign power, in spite of big words and insult. In the event of a war, Irishmen would not be untrue to the allegiance which they owed their Sovereign; they would not invite the foreign enemy to their shores, but they would stand smiling by and witness the ruin of England. Let then Peel talk, let him prate as he pleased; whilst he was talking, America was acting, and Ireland was looking on.—Mr. Scott deprecated the introduction of irritating language towards Americans in connexion with the system of slavery. There was an anti-slavery institution in Dublin, and that, in his opinion, was the place to declaim against slavery, and not that association. He condemned slavery as much as any man, but that association should not be made the vehicle of slanderous attacks on the Americans, and thus convert into enemies people who were most desirous to assist them. He knew that many American slave-holders were anxious to get rid of slavery, but it was necessarily a work of time. He thought it was absurd and improper that that association should take money from America with one hand and give her a slap in the face with the other.—Mr. J. O'Connell expressed astonishment that any Irishman could dare to stand forward for the purpose of advocating or palliating slavery, and casting reproaches on those who were doing their duty as Christians by condemning it. For his own part he should never cease to denounce the infernal system and its abettors, even at the risk of his life.—Mr. Scott having denied that he was an apologist of slavery, the subject was abandoned.—The rent for the week was 267*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*

Arches Court.—The Office of Judge promoted by Barnes v. Shore.—Sir H. Jenner Fust delivered his sentence in this case, which was a proceeding against the Rev. James Shore, as a minister of the Church of England, for performing Divine service in an unconsecrated chapel at Berry Pomeroy, Devon, without license from his diocesan the Bishop of Exeter. The present question was, as to the admission of a defensive allegation on the part of Mr. Shore, pleading that he had seceded from the Church of England, having taken the oaths as a Protestant Dissenting minister, and that he was now a minister in holy orders of a Protestant Dissenting congregation assembling in the said chapel. The learned judge held that this allegation was not admissible as a defence to the articles which had been admitted. It appeared that Mr. Shore had been regularly ordained, was a priest in holy orders of the Church of England, and was licensed to preach in this chapel by his diocesan, the Bishop of Exeter, and that license remained in force till the 7th March, 1844: and that on the 13th March, 1844, notice was served upon him of the revocation of his license; that he then, as he alleged, from conscientious motives, seceded from the Church of England; that is, he ceased to conform to the Church of England, and that he was at the time the citation issued, and is now, a Protestant Dissenting minister in holy orders, and a preacher and teacher of a congregation of Protestant Dissenters; that on the 16th March, 1844, he took the oaths as a Protestant Dissenting minister, and from that time has never officiated as a minister of the Church of England, but as a Dissenting minister only. Now, he (the learned judge) thought it absurd to suppose that it was tenderness of conscience that induced this gentleman to take the oaths directed by the Toleration Acts three days only after his license had been revoked. The Toleration Acts were passed to relieve persons of scrupulous conscience, not to exempt clergymen of the Church of England from responsibility, if they had in any way misconducted themselves; they were not intended to apply to such cases. Surely, it never could be contended that a person could throw off his obligations as a minister of the Church of England by merely qualifying himself as a Protestant Dissenting teacher. He (the learned judge) was yet to learn that any person could so throw off the character of a clergyman after he had taken holy orders. He apprehended that if such a person misconducted himself, he would still be liable to proceedings under the Church Discipline Act, and be amenable to ecclesiastical punishment. Was it to be contended that, if a minister of the Church of England was guilty of immorality, he could escape all punishment except any that he might be liable to by the common law, by merely taking the oaths under the Toleration Act, and calling himself a Dissenter? Under these circumstances it was useless to admit the allegation, which he therefore rejected.

Norfolk Circuit, Norwich.—[Before a Special Jury.]—Murryatt v. Barber.—This was an action of covenant, brought to recover damages for the breach of certain stipulations in a lease, the breaches relied on by the plaintiff being the omission to drain the land and cleanse the ditches in certain proportions every year by the tenant. In answer to this the defendant placed on the record several special pleas, alleging that the covenants were not broken, that the lands had been drained and ditches cleansed; that after and before the breaches complained of, plaintiff and defendant had entered into an agreement; and that defendant had, in pursuance thereof, done certain other works on other lands of plaintiff, which had been accepted by the latter in satisfaction of the alleged breaches. This, as may be inferred from the above abstract of the record, was a purely "agricultural cause." It appears that plaintiff, who is the celebrated novelist, and moreover possessed of a landed estate in this county, demised some 400 acres thereof in 1837 to the defendant, at an average rent of 25*s.* per acre, that comparatively low sum being fixed upon in consideration of the nature of the land which required great outlay by the tenant in order to drain it effectually. With the view of carrying out this object, certain clauses were introduced into the lease, which now gave rise to the present action, the defendant thereby binding himself to drain at least two acres yearly, or pay 10*l.* per acre as "liquidated damages," and also cleanse out all the ditches yearly. On the part of plaintiff it was now proved by a former tenant of the same farm, that the land had never been drained in any part, or the ditches cleansed out, with very small exceptions, during the whole of the defendant's tenancy, the result of which was that the farm, which was low and swampy, springy and boggish, had become infinitely deteriorated in value. On the part of defendant it was insinuated that the plaintiff's proceedings arose from an undue anxiety to take the farm into his own hands, and that the alleged breaches of covenant now so loudly complained of as having been committed for seven years, had been brought under the plaintiff's notice without any object. It was further contended that when the matter was discussed, an agreement was come to such as was set forth in the plea. The witness however when called to prove this agreement, did not substantiate the plea, and at the close of a long consultation and discussion between the bench and the jury, his lordship directed them to find a verdict for the plaintiff for 140*l.* on the first breach, and left it to them to say what they would give him for the omission to cleanse the ditches. At the same time, in the event of the court thinking that plaintiff was not intitled to the full penal sum of 10*l.* per acre, he wished them to say what the actual injury to the farm was in their estimation. The jury then found for the plaintiff—140*l.* for the first breach, 10*l.* for the second, and assessed the actual damage at 28*l.*

GOODWOOD RACES.

Friday, concluded.—Maidstone Stakes, of 15 sovs each, with a renewal of the gift of 50 sovs added by Lord Maidstone: 3 yrs-old, 9st 9lb; 4 yrs, 11st 4lb; 5 yrs, 11st 11lb; 6 yrs, 12st 4lb. Winner to be sold for 500 sovs. (23 subs.) Duke of Richmond's Red Deer, by Venison, 4 yrs, beat Lord G. Bentinck's John o'Gaunt, aged, and Mr. W. H. Johnstone's Pythia, 3 yrs. Won by half a length. Challenge for the March Stakes.—Lord G. Bentinck's Naworth, beat Karnac, and Africain, Lord Maidstone's Arcanus, Lord Chesterfield's Cockfighter, Lord Howth's Beatrice, 6lb extra, Mr. Osbaldeston's Sorcerer, and Lord Howth's Wolfdog, 6lb extra. Won by a head. Bentinck Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 50 added by Lord G. Bentinck: 3 yr-olds, 9st 12lb; 4 yrs, 11st 7lb; 5 yrs, 12st 2lb; 6 yrs and aged, 12st 7lb. Winner to be sold for 100 sovs. (28 subs.) Lord George Bentinck's Best Bower, 4 yrs, beat Mr. Osbaldeston's Fickle Wild Rose, 3 yrs, and several others. Won by a neck. Deciding Heat for the Nassau Stakes.—Duke of Richmond's Refraction, beat Sir R. Bulkeley's Queen Pomare. We may here observe, in reference to the visit of the King of Holland, who left Goodwood before the commencement of Friday's races, that at the dinner on Thursday evening, the Duke of Richmond in proposing the health of His Majesty, announced to the company His Majesty's gracious intention to present a "Cup" of 300 sovereigns value to be run for at the Goodwood meeting for 1846. His Grace observed, that he was sure he was only describing the feelings of all present in expressing his own gratitude for the act of royal munificence it had been his pleasing duty to announce. The Noble Duke then concluded by proposing the health of His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, at the same time expressing a hope that his august visitor might be at Goodwood next year to see "the race run and the best horse win." The toast having been drunk with all the honours, His Majesty rose and spoke as follows:—My Lords and Gentlemen Allow me to thank you for the honour you have done me in drinking my health in so flattering a manner, and at the same time permit me to propose another toast for your acceptance, and that is "The health of the Duke of Richmond, and prosperity to Goodwood races." The guests immediately rose, upon which His Majesty, with the same affability and kindness, continued, "With three times three, gentlemen, if you please." The toast was then drunk by the company with all the honours, the King himself leading off. The King's Cup next year is to be called the "Orange Cup," and to be weights for age.

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES. — A. B. SAVORY & SONS, WATCHMAKERS, 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention of purchasers to their stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves in their own house. In silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled, the prices are four guineas and a half, six, and eight guineas each; or in gold cases, 10, 12, 14, and 16 guineas each. The very large stock offered for selection includes every description, enabling customers to select that which is more particularly adapted to their own use.

News of the Week.

The Parliamentary Session of 1845—one of the most busy and laborious on record—was brought to a close on Saturday with a speech from the throne. The Speech is remarkable for very little beyond its extreme brevity. It begins with an acknowledgment of the zeal and assiduity with which both Houses have applied themselves to public business during the session, alludes with satisfaction to the repeal of the Customs and Excise duties, and expresses a hope that, although this reduction of taxation will cause an immediate loss of revenue, its effects in stimulating commercial enterprise will ultimately compensate for any temporary sacrifice. It then refers to the Bills for extending academical education in Ireland; but makes no allusion to the other questions which have so long agitated that part of the kingdom. It contains the usual paragraph relating to the friendly disposition of foreign powers, and expresses confidence that the new convention with France will afford a better prospect than has hitherto existed of effectually suppressing the Slave-trade. It thanks the House of Commons for voting the customary supplies, and concludes by an assurance that the members of both Houses, on their return to their several counties, will promote and confirm that spirit of loyalty and contentment which they will find prevalent throughout the country. Previous to the prorogation, the Speaker, in his address to the throne, recapitulated the leading features of the business of the Session, and entered much more into detail than the Queen's Speech. He adverted to the laborious legislation on the subject of railways, and mentioned the Maynooth Bill and the establishment of provincial colleges in Ireland as proofs that the Legislature had been anxious to place the future improvement and prosperity of that country on a sure and lasting foundation. He touched briefly on the amendments of the Scotch Poor-law, on the Bills for the Drainage of Lands, and for the Enclosure of Commons, as measures calculated to benefit the poorer classes, and spoke with satisfaction of the reduction of the customs duties, the modification of the tariff, and the alteration of the law of Banking in Scotland and Ireland. He expressed some regret at the necessity of renewing the Income-tax in time of peace; but considered that the objections to the continuance of a war-tax were counterbalanced by the opportunity it afforded of adding to the efficiency of the navy, and of relaxing those restrictions which had long pressed on our domestic industry, and fettered the commercial relations of the country. Sir R. Peel also took occasion to pay a just tribute of thanks, on the part of Government, to those members who had given their attention to private business, and especially praised the indefatigable zeal and impartial justice they had displayed on railway committees. The only other noticeable point in the closing sitting was the discussion which arose on the appointment of Lords Justices during Her Majesty's absence on the Continent. Mr. Borthwick brought this subject before the House of Commons on the same grounds as those taken by Lord Campbell last week in the House of Lords. Sir R. Peel was proceeding to show that the appointment of a commission was not required by precedent, when he was interrupted by the summons to attend the ceremony of the Prorogation. The answer of the Lord Chancellor, however, to Lord Campbell's question last week may be referred to as explaining the views of Government on this subject, to which the late Ministers appear to have attached considerable importance.—The details of Her Majesty's progress in Germany, and of the enthusiastic reception which she has met with from the King of Prussia and his subjects, will be read with lively interest. The hospitality and affection which have been manifested towards Her Majesty, cannot fail to be gratifying to all classes in this country; and there is no doubt that this visit will perpetuate those amicable relations which have so long subsisted between England and Germany, and which have their origin in the common descent and character of the two nations.

Our foreign news presents but one topic which calls for observation—the publication of a document by the Mexican Government, which is virtually a declaration of war against the United States and Texas. It is however scarcely credible that in the present distracted state of the republic the Mexicans will seriously declare war without some guarantee of support from Europe; and it is needless to add that without such a guarantee, the country which could not keep Texas is not likely to reconquer it when backed by the additional power of the United States.

Home News.

COURT.—On Saturday, previous to the Queen's departure for Germany, Her Majesty went in state to the House of Lords, to close the session of Parliament with a speech from the throne. On the previous day, Her Majesty held a Court and Privy Council at Buckingham Palace. At the Court, Baron de Hugel, the Wurtemberg Minister, had an audience of the Queen, on his return from leave of absence; Mr. Everett, the United States' Minister, had an audience to deliver his letters of recall; Mr. Louis M'Lane, the new United States' Minister, had an audience to deliver his credentials; and Baron de Gersdorff, the Saxon Minister, had an audience to deliver his letters of recall. During the absence of Her Majesty in Germany, the Prince of Wales and the infant royal family will remain at Osborne House under the care of the Dowager Lady Lyttelton. Wednesday being the birthday of the Queen Dowager, the day was observed in the metropolis with the usual honours, and at night the royal tradesmen illuminated their houses.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO GERMANY.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert embarked at Woolwich on Saturday afternoon, in the Victoria and Albert steam-yacht, for Antwerp. On arriving at Woolwich dockyard, the royal party were received by the Lords of the Admiralty, and the authorities of the arsenal. Her Majesty embarked amidst the usual salutes, and was loudly cheered by the large concourse of people who had assembled to witness her departure. Her Majesty looked very well, and was plainly attired, wearing a black silk mantle and cottage bonnet. Prince Albert appeared in excellent health, and to take the greatest pleasure in the spirit-stirring scene which the river and its shores presented, and which in all its circumstances was of the most gratifying and animating character. Her Majesty was attended by Lord Aberdeen, Lord Liverpool, Lady Canning, and the Countess of Gainsborough, the rest of the suite having previously embarked. Her Majesty and the Prince were greeted on reaching the yacht with cheers from the crews of the Victoria and Albert, the Black Eagle, and the Porcupine. The yacht then left her moorings and steamed down the river at a rapid rate, the Black Eagle and Porcupine following in her wake. The squadron increased its speed as it advanced towards the less crowded parts of the river, and the yacht was considerably ahead of the other steamers when abreast of Tilbury Fort, from which a royal salute was fired as Her Majesty passed. The weather had at this time much improved in appearance, the sun shone out brilliantly, but the wind still blew strongly from the south-west, which increased considerably towards evening. The yacht, therefore, anchored for the night in the lower Sea Reach, nearly opposite Southend. She started again at an early hour on Sunday morning, and reached Antwerp at half-past 6 in the evening of the same day. In all Her Majesty's previous excursions, either by sea or land, it has been remarked that the weather has generally been most favourable; such, however, has not been the case on the present occasion. From the time the yacht got under weigh on Sunday morning until its arrival at Antwerp, the weather was most unpropitious. A strong wind from the south-west, with occasional squalls, accompanied with rain, and a heavy sea, marked the progress of the yacht on her passage from the Thames to the Scheldt; notwithstanding which she made such rapid way that the Black Eagle and Porcupine were unable to keep up with her. When the Victoria and Albert, with the British standard flying at the mast-head, arrived off Flushing, royal salutes were fired from the fort and from one of the Dutch frigates at anchor there. The passage from Flushing to Antwerp up the river did not exceed four hours. When the yacht approached Fort Lillo a royal salute was fired from it, and from the forts on the opposite side of the river. During the afternoon the rain came down very heavily, but the citizens of Antwerp, in spite of the weather, congregated upon their quays some considerable time before the royal yacht made its appearance. A few minutes before six o'clock the saluting from the north fort gave notice that the royal squadron was in sight, and as it neared the city the sloops and gun-boats of the Belgian Marine also commenced a salute. It being Her Majesty's intention to remain on board all night, the yacht was not brought alongside the quay, but was anchored in the middle of the stream abreast of the city. As soon as the yacht had anchored, Baron D'Arnim, the Prussian Minister to the Belgian Court, who had arrived by train from Brussels, to pay his respects in the name of his Sovereign, Sir Hamilton Seymour, the British Minister at the Court of Brussels, Lieut.-General Count D'Hane de Steenhuyse, charged with the compliments of His Majesty the King of the Belgians, went on board, and had interviews with Her Majesty. The authorities of the city and the commandant of the port also went on board to receive Her Majesty's commands. On Monday morning the yacht was hauled alongside the quay, and a few minutes before seven o'clock Her Majesty and Prince Albert disembarked. Notwithstanding the early hour at which the Queen landed, and the unfavourable state of the weather at the time, a vast number of spectators assembled on the quays to witness the disembarkation. A detachment of infantry formed the guard of honour to receive Her Majesty, and the forts saluted. The Queen and Prince Albert proceeded at once to the Railway station, where a special train was in waiting to convey them to Malines; they were there met by the King and Queen of the Belgians, who took their seat in the same carriage, in order to accompany Her Majesty to Liege and Aix-la-Chapelle. As the train passed down the line through the suburbs of Liege, the high banks swarmed with the inhabitants, who had turned out with right good will to cheer the royal party. The station at Liege, which was reached at 12 o'clock, was a scene of great excitement. A regiment of the Belgian infantry was drawn up in line on either side, and saluted Her Majesty, the band playing the while. Flags waved from every height, and among them the Royal standard of England. After a few minutes' delay, the train with the royal party proceeded at a rapid rate to Verviers, the last town in the Belgian territory. The influence of Prussian habits begins to be perceived here for the first time. Her Majesty's reception at this station was very different from the cold, phlegmatic, and orderly demeanour of the Belgians who had assembled at the previous places on the line; and, for the first time on her journey, Her Majesty was received with a real, genuine hearty, and almost English cheer. The Prussians, who are much more quick in the expression of sentiments of enthusiasm, and particularly of loyalty, seemed to have in this respect infected their Belgian neighbours; for there was certainly a very marked difference between the reception given at Verviers, and that at the other places passed on the route. The next station at which the train stopped was Habersthal, the point at which the Prussian territory commences. Here it had been arranged that Her Majesty should be received by the Crown Prince of Prussia, who made his appearance immediately on the arrival of the train, and was received most cordially by Her Majesty. He went into the royal carriage. The characteristic enthusiasm of the Prussians was exhibited here also. The cheering was deafening, and had her Majesty's arrival taken place in the heart of her own dominions, instead of in those of a foreign Sovereign, the welcome she received could not have been more warm and hearty. The station is very spacious, and a very handsome bridge crosses it at the frontier line, having on the one side the Belgian lion; on the other the black eagle of Prussia. Over the former waved the tricolor, and over the latter the black and white flag of Prussia. At Aix-la Chapelle a similar scene was presented, but on a larger scale. The Prussian troops lined the station, in which also there was a very large assemblage of people. Here the King of Prussia was waiting to receive her Majesty. As soon as the royal carriage stopped before the station, the King advanced towards it, and handed out her Majesty. Prince Albert, the Crown Prince of Prussia, and the royal suite followed; and the whole party, amidst the most enthusiastic cheers from the people, military music, and the firing of salutes, passed through the station to the carriages, in which they went off towards Aix-la-Chapelle. A large body of gentlemen on horseback, dressed in the colours of the national flag—black and white — escorted the royal party through the town. Great preparations had been made by the inhabitants. The principal street was spanned with triumphal arches and lined on either side with immense festoons of fir, laurel, and flowers. The houses were hung with garlands, and the windows crowded with people. A prettier sight than Aix-la-Chapelle presented on this occasion has seldom been seen. The Queen and Prince and their Royal hosts proceeded at once to the house of M. Nellessen, the Burgomaster, and an extensive manufacturer, where they partook of luncheon. They then went to visit the tomb of Charlemagne in the Cathedral. The Royal party returned to the station about 5 o'clock, having been away altogether three hours. In a few minutes the train was again in motion. At a small place, called Langerweide, the train stopped for a few minutes, and again at Düren, where there was a great display of troops, music, and enthusiasm. Here, too, the Landwehr, or national militia of Prussia, made for the first time their appearance; and their band played "God save the Queen" with a spirit and expression which it would not be easy to equal in England. But, gratifying as the reception of Her Majesty by the Prussians must already have been, Cologne presented a still more striking spectacle. As the spires of the ancient city became visible in the distance, so also were there signs that its vast population were on the stir. When the train neared the station, a dense mass of people were to be seen, who had collected there to view Her Majesty's arrival. There were triumphal arches, festoons, bands of music, and troops in abundance—in fact, the same scene which had been enacted at almost every station on the way down, was now repeated, but on a gigantic scale. The whole population of the city seemed to have poured out, so enormous was the crowd. The royal party left the railway for the private carriages, which were drawn up outside the station, and drove off at once to the station of the Bonn Railway. To do this they had to pass through the principal part of the city of Cologne, which was a gay and brilliant spectacle. Flags spanned the streets till they seemed all one triumphal arch, and the bells of the many churches around rang a merry peal. Dense masses of people lined the way, and by loud and enthusiastic cheers greeted the new guests of their Sovereign. In this way the Sovereigns of Prussia and England passed through Cologne to the banks of the Rhine, whence the railway runs to Bonn. At the station another scene of military pomp and popular ardour displayed itself, not inferior to what had taken place elsewhere. Cheers and shouts of welcome, mingled with the rattling of drums, the roar of cannon, and the music of the bands, completed that enthusiastic welcome which had greeted the Queen of England and her Consort from the first hour of their arrival in the territory of Prussia. A very short time brought the royal travellers to the Brühl station of the railway, close to the palace of the King of Prussia, where Her Majesty arrived soon after in safety in the presence of multitudes, who gave her a right hearty welcome. Here Her Majesty was met by the Queen of Prussia, who was waiting to receive Her Majesty, and embraced the Queen with affectionate cordiality. At 8 o'clock a sumptuous banquet was served, to which several of the Prussian nobility had the honour of receiving invitations. In the evening Her Majesty was welcomed by the most magnificent serenade of military music that was perhaps ever produced. 700 performers, including 150 drums, were engaged in this musical festival, and the delight of Her Majesty and the Prince was unbounded. The Queen was to leave Brühl on Tuesday for Bonn, to be present at the inauguration of the Beethoven statue, and in the evening Her Majesty was to witness a display of fireworks on the Rhine. On Wednesday it was arranged that Her Majesty should go over the Cathedral and the other remarkable places in Cologne. The whole of the Royal party were expected to arrive at Stoltzenfels on the 13th. On the 14th, there was to be a grand reception and gala at Coblentz. The Queen's stay at Stoltzenfels will be for four days. On the 18th Her Majesty will go to Mayence; and on the same day the King and Queen of Prussia will leave the Rhenish provinces for Berlin. The Princess Charles of Hesse, daughter of Prince William, who is governor of Mayence, is to accompany the Queen of England to that town, and will do the honours during her stay in it. The Archduke Frederick of Austria has already arrived at Johannisberg, and is to proceed to Stoltzenfels, to compliment the Queen, in the name of the Emperor, on her arrival in that country.

Knighthood.—The Queen has conferred the honour of Knighthood on Fitzroy Kelly, Esq., on being appointed Solicitor-General, and on James Emerson Tennent, Esq., on being appointed Colonial Secretary for the Island of Ceylon.

Official Appointments.—The following appointments have been gazetted:—Mr. Cripps, M.P., for Cirencester, to be one of the Lords of the Treasury; Sir Charles Douglas, M.P., to be a commissioner of Greenwich Hospital, in the room of the Hon. C. Hope, who is appointed Lieut.-Governor of the Isle of Man; Andrew Clarke, Esq., late Lieut-Colonel in the Army, to be Governor of Western Australia. Earl Somers to be Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Hereford; Lord Willoughby d'Eresby, to be one of the Fine Arts Commissioners; the Hon. James Stuart Wortley, Q.C., to be Attorney-General for the county palatine of Lancaster, in the room of the late Mr. Sergeant Atcherley.

Parliamentary Movements.—Lord Arthur Lennox has been re-elected for Chichester, Sir C. Douglas has been re-elected for Warwick, and Mr. Cripps for Cirencester, without opposition.—Col. Macdowall, of Logan, has announced himself a candidate, on the Conservative interest, for Kirkcudbright; Mr. Maitland, late solicitor-general for Scotland, has come forward on the Whig interest; and Mr. Maxwell has retired from the contest. A vacancy having occurred in the representation of Linlithgowshire, by the appointment of Mr. Hope as Lieut.-Governor of the Isle of Man, Mr. Baillie, of Polkemmet, has offered himself to the constituencies, on the Conservative interest.—The death of Mr. Benjamin Wood, which took place on Wednesday last, has caused a vacancy in Southwark. Sir William Molesworth, and Mr. Pilcher, the late sheriff, have offered themselves to the electors, and Mr. D. W. Harvey is also mentioned as likely to become a candidate.—The election for Sunderland, after one of the hardest contests on record, terminated on Thursday in the return of Mr. Hudson. The numbers were, for Col. Thompson, 497; Mr. Hudson, 627. Majority for Mr. Hudson, 130

Foreign

France.—The Paris papers of Monday announce that the Princess Clementina of Saxe Coburg Gotha was safely delivered of a prince, at the Chateau d'Eu, on Saturday last.—The Moniteur publishes a telegraphic despatch from the Maritime Prefect of Toulon, dated the 7th, confirming his preceding statement as to the loss sustained by the fire at the Mourillon Arsenal not exceeding 2,400,000 francs. The Journal des Débats takes the trouble of seriously refuting an absurd charge, insinuated rather than made, by the National and some other Paris papers, against the English, of having incited the convicts of Toulon to set fire to the arsenal. Every day there are charges, equally unfounded, made against us in the same quarter, which no Englishman ever thinks it worth his while to contradict; the article in the Débats, however, is remarkable for the excellent spirit which always distinguishes that journal. After admitting that it cannot be considered a casualty or the result of negligence, and that all parties concur in accusing the convicts of having prepared and kindled the conflagration, the Débats proceeds to question the reports in circulation that the fire had been caused by the convicts, or by the officers of the dockyards, to destroy proofs of their having been plundering the state by claims for fictitious supplies of timber. The Débats expresses its surprise at one thing—the omission to impute to "perfide Albion" this crime, through the agency of the convicts, or to M. Guizot the guilt of having sought to burn the dockyard to please the English. "We are only surprised," it says, "that among the rumours thus re-echoed there should not be one accusing M. Guizot or Admiral de Mackau of having set fire to the Mourillon, in order to please the English. Such a report would not be more devoid of foundation, more improbable and ridiculous, than that which will have perfidious Albion to have set the convicts to the work, or the fire to have been kindled by some functionaries of the navy department, who were anxious to obliterate all evidence of their disorder, dishonesty, and peculation! The equitable public may choose between the two versions. They are not obliged to decide upon them; but, until they obtain proofs which will not be forthcoming, the public may indulge their imagination, and ask whether the administration of the navy do not contain men capable of superadding the crime of incendiarism to the crime of peculation, or whether Lord Aberdeen be not in communication with our convicts of Toulon or Brest." "Notwithstanding the doubts expressed by the Débats that the officers of the dockyard could have committed this horrible offence, I am sorry to inform you," says a private letter, "that the rumour that the fire was raised in order to cover deficiencies of stock gains ground. That the convicts were the criminals, is not believed." It has, however, been clearly ascertained that the fire was the work of an incendiary, matches having been found in a state of preparation, which probably the alarm prevented from being ignited.—The papers publish the treaty concluded between France and Naples on the 18th June last, and ratified by the King of the Two Sicilies on the 19th July, the principal clauses of which are similar to those of the treaty signed by Great Britain with his Sicilian Majesty. Another treaty was entered into on the same day between France and Naples, for the mutual extradition of criminals between the two countries, excepting persons accused of political crimes, who are formally excepted.—The Duke and Duchess de Nemours are still at Bordeaux, and have visited the various charitable institutions, the Palais de Justice, the prisons and churches, with several of the manufactories of the city. The enthusiasm with which they were received on their arrival had in no degree abated.—The Constitutionnel says that on Saturday the Jesuits resident in Paris quitted the House in the Rue des Postes, which they inhabited in common, and went to live separately in private houses. The Constitutionnel adds that the French Government is still negotiating with the court of Rome for an express declaration on the subject of the Jesuits, and at the same time for a circular letter from the Pope to the French bishops, recommending them to abstain from interfering in political questions, and moderate their opposition to the University. On these conditions the Government would make some concession on what is called the liberty of education.—It was reported and credited in Paris on Saturday, that the negotiation for an amalgamation of all the companies formed with a view respectively to bid for the Northern Railroad line had succeeded, and that the treaty had been signed, the capital subscribed between them being 150,000,000 francs.—The weather, throughout France, is beginning to inspire apprehensions for the safety of the crops. No very material damage has as yet been occasioned by the inclemency of the season, except in localities which had been ravaged by storms; all will depend, however, on the turn the weather will take in the course of the next ten days. Should it set in fine there is still every prospect of a good harvest, but, if the rain continue, all hope will be at an end. Vegetation throughout France is late by at least three weeks, and towards the north the Wheat is still green.

Spain.—Accounts from San Sebastian state that the Queen will, probably, prolong her residence in that city to the 17th, when she will go to the sulphuric springs of Santa Aguada. Her Majesty and Queen Christina are expected at Pampeluna about the end of the month, to meet the Duke and Duchess of Nemours. It is supposed they will not return to Madrid till about the end of September. Our advices from Madrid extend to the 6th inst., when extraordinary precautions were adopted by the military authorities of that capital. Several more arrests had taken place, and General Alcala, Brigadier Montero, Commandant Sarmiento, and Captain Sarabia, had been ordered to quit the capital within 24 hours, and respectively to take up their residence at Segovia, Guadalaxara, Alcazar, and Almaden. The Gazette contains a royal decree, dated Saragossa, the 28th ult, whereby the present Senate is dissolved, and the Council of Ministers is immediately to propose to the Queen such persons as are, conformably to the constitution, to form a new Senate. The Gazette also publishes a royal decree, approving of the division among the provinces of the kingdom of the new tax of 300 millions of reals, to be raised on the agricultural property in the kingdom. The measure continues to give great dissatisfaction everywhere, and it is apprehended that this state of feeling may lead to disturbances. On the 30th, the trial of the individuals implicated in the Malaga conspiracy concluded, when two sergeants were sentenced to death, several inhabitants of Malaga to the presidios, and the other individuals accused to imprisonment.

Germany.—The German Diet, which is now sitting at Frankfort, has granted 100,000 florins towards the arming of the fortresses of Ulm and Rastadt, the fortifications of which are nearly completed. The President has communicated to the Diet that he has received from the English Government a copy of the convention concluded between France and England respecting the suppression of the slave trade. A letter from Pesth of the 28th ult. gives an account of a frightful inundation of several rivers in the north of Hungary. The great commercial town of Miskocz, which has a population of 20,000, was submerged, the current being sufficiently strong to carry away several houses and other buildings. As the torrent came on in the night, several persons were taken by surprise, and lost their lives. All communication between Pesth and Kaschau was prevented for several days. This calamity happened on the 19th July, precisely the second anniversary of the conflagration from which Miskocz suffered so severely in 1843.

Switzerland.—The Diet sat on the 4th at Zurich, when the question of expelling the Jesuits from the Confederacy was revived before a crowded and excited audience. After much angry discussion, in the course of which the Deputy of Lucerne vigorously accused the Radical party of having murdered Counsellor Leu, several divisions took place, and the question, before, remained in statu quo, neither party having obtained the required majority of 12. The votes were given in the following manner:—Eight and two halves states decided against the competency of the Diet; ten and two halves pronounced it to be a federal question; one state alone was for inviting Lucerne, in a friendly and pressing manner, to renounce the Jesuits, in consequence of Lucerne being one of the directing cantons; two and a half were for inviting the three states, Schwitz, Friburg, and Valais, to renounce the Jesuits also; five and a half were for calling upon Lucerne to renounce the Jesuits; eight and a half were for banishing the Jesuits by a federative measure; four and two halves were for banishing them in whatever capacity they may be found in Switzerland; one half state was for resorting to force, if necessary; ten and two halves were against permitting the further introduction of Jesuits into the other cantons; six and two halves were for their admission under certain forms.

Italy.—It is stated by Galignani on the authority of a letter from Rome, that the dome of St. Peter's inspires serious alarm in the minds of the architects of Rome. For a long time past the cupola has been cracked in many places, and 10 arches of iron, weighing 60,000 kilogrammes, have been placed so as to prevent its fall. It has just been discovered that the lanternino, above which rises the cross which crowns the edifice, is cracked through and through. The sumerous lightning conductors which had been erected by Pope Pius VII. for the protection of the edifice, remove all idea of this mischief having been the effect of a thunder storm. The lanternino is being surrounded by heavy iron chains, to prevent the cracks from extending.—The restoration of the ancient Basilica of St. Paul, on the Ostia-road, and which was destroyed by fire some years since, is almost completed.—An English company has just made a proposition to the Papal Government for deepening the Tiber. It demands neither payment nor indemnity, hoping to repay itself by the monuments of antiquity which it expects to find in the bed of the river. If the Pontifical Government accede to this offer, it is thought at Rome that the company will have an excellent bargain.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—The New York packet-ship Fidelia arrived at Liverpool on Monday, on her first voyage across the Atlantic; she left New York on the 16th ult., and has therefore brought one day's later dates than we received by the last arrival. A decree has been passed by the Congress and sanctioned by the Executive, of which the following is the substance:—"That the National Congress of the Mexican Republic, considering that the Chambers of the United States sanctioned, by a decree of the Executive, have resolved to incorporate the territory of Texas to the American Union, and that this mode of appropriating foreign territories, of which other foreign nations are the rightful owners, introduces a monstrous novelty of great importance to the peace of the world, and detrimental to the sovereignty of nations. That this usurpation, thus consummated to the prejudice of Mexico, has been insidiously preparing for a length of time, whilst the most cordial friendship has been proclaimed, and whilst this Republic has scrupulously respected the existing treaties between her and the United States. That the annexation of Texas to the United States tramples under foot all the conservative principles of society, attacks all the rights that Mexico possesses on that territory, is an insult to her dignity as a sovereign nation, and threatens her independence and political being. That those principles which served as the basis to the treaties of friendship, commerce, and navigation, and especially that of the precise limits even in treaties previous to 1832, being threatened on the part of the United States, are considered violated by that nation. And finally, that the unjust despoliation of which she wishes to make the Mexican nation the victim, gives Mexico a just right to use all her resources and power to resist said aggression to the uttermost. It is decreed—1st. The Mexican nation convokes all her children to the defence of the National Independence, threatened by the usurpation of the territory of Texas, which is intended to be carried into effect by the decree of annexation passed by the Chambers, and sanctioned by the President of the United States. 2d. In consequence the Government will put under arms all the force of the army, conformably to the authority conceded by the existing laws; and for the preservation of public order, sustaining the institutions, and, if necessity requires, to serve as a reserve to the army, the Government, using the faculties conceded on the 9th December, may raise forces, of which the said decree speaks, under the name of Defenders of the Independence and of the Laws. Mexico, 4th June." General Bustamente arrived at Vera Cruz on the 17th ult., and offered his services to sustain the integrity of the Mexican territory and the dignity of the republic. He was rather coolly received by the Government, and it is reported that he refused the military honours tendered him on his arrival. It was believed that his return was not invited by any party, and that he had no desire to meddle in public affairs. The people generally were quiet, and not at all alarmed, notwithstanding the war cries made by the Federalists and the partisans of Santa Anna, who are loud in denouncing the Government for want of energy. The state of the public treasury was presumed to be pretty low, as the officers in the employ of the Government found great difficulty in obtaining one-fourth of their salaries. The acting president, General Canalizo, and ex-Minister of War, General Basadre, not accepting the propositions made them by Government, to be expatriated for 10 years, have been imprisoned for the same term, the former in the castle of Perote, and the latter in that of San Juan d'Ulloa. The yellow fever was raging at Vera Cruz.—It is reported from Washington that Mr. Buchanan has resigned the Secretaryship of State, and that the President had selected Mr. Andrew Stevenson, of Virginia, in his place. A difference with his colleagues upon the Oregon negotiation is said to have led to this step. There had been an extensive fire at Matanzas, by which a number of houses and a vast quantity of sugars in store had been destroyed.

Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday.—The royal assent was given by commission to the following Bills:—The Apprehension of Offenders Bill, Documentary Evidence Bill, Granting of Leases Bill, Outstanding Terms Bill, Fees Criminal Proceedings Bill, Real Property (No. 2) Bill, Removal of Paupers Bill, Borough and Watch-rates Bill, Games and Wagers Bill, Merchant Seamen's Bill, Commons Inclosure Bill, County Rates Bill, Lunatic Asylum and Pauper Lunatics Bill, Slave-trade (Brazil) Bill, Naval Medical Supplemental Fund Bill, Taxing Masters Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill, Fisheries (Ireland) Bill, Turnpike Roads (Ireland) Bill, Municipal Districts (Ireland) Bill, Lunatics Asylum (Ireland) Bill, Grimsby Dock Bill, Winchester College Estate Bill, Marsh's Estate Bill, the Earl of Powis's Estate Bill, Sir R. Keith Dick's Estate Bill, Follett's Estate Bill, Lutwydge's Estate Bill, Howe's Estate Bill, Birmingham Blue Coat School Charity Estate Bill, Severn's Estate Bill, Duke of Bridgewater's Trustees Estate Bill, Archbishop of York's Estate Bill, Sampson's Estate Bill, the Marquis of Donegal's Estate Bill, the North Washam School Estate Bill, Shoulham's Divorce Bill, Bolton's Divorce Bill, and the following Railway Bills—London and Croydon Enlargement, South-Eastern (Deal Extension), Bolton and Leigh, Kenyon and Leigh Junction, North Union, Liverpool and Manchester and Grand Junction Railway Companies Amalgamation, Brighton and Chichester (Portsmouth Extension), Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings (Hastings, Rye, and Ashford Extension), Eastern Counties (Cambridge to Huntingdon).—The last Bills of the session, the Consolidated Fund Appropriation Bill, and the Exchequer Bills Bill, were read a third time and passed.

Saturday.—The Prorogation.—This being the day appointed for the prorogation of Parliament, the House was crowded soon after the doors were opened by peeresses and strangers who were anxious to witness the ceremony. Prayers having been read by the Bishop of Ely, some routine business took place before the arrival of Her Majesty.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE brought up the report of the select committee on the London and York Railway Bill. The Earl of ABERDEEN laid several papers upon the table, by command of Her Majesty.—Lord CAMPBELL presented a petition from the Isle of Man, praying for the establishment of local courts.—Her Majesty's arrival was now announced, and after the usual ceremonies THE QUEEN took her seat on the throne, and desired their lordships to be seated. The Commons were then summoned, and about 100 members having appeared at the bar, the SPEAKER delivered the following address:—"Most Gracious Sovereign,—We, your Majesty's loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled, attend your Majesty with the concluding Bill of Supply for the present year. The session we are about to close has been rendered unusually laborious by the rapid development of private enterprise, in extending the railway communications of the kingdom. We anticipate the most beneficial results from the facilities thus afforded to the internal trade of the country; and we have devoted much time and labour to the legislation requisite for the construction and regulation of these important works, notwithstanding the various measures of great public interest which demanded our attentive consideration. Your Majesty was graciously pleased to intimate to us at the commencement of the session that your Majesty had carried into effect, in the spirit in which it was conceived, the Act for the more effectual application of Charitable Donations and Bequests. In the same spirit we have continued to legislate for Ireland; and in making a further grant for the endowment of Maynooth, and in providing the means of academical instruction, we have shown due regard to the peculiar circumstances of that part of the United Kingdom and the religious feelings of the majority of its inhabitants; and we believe that the encouragement afforded by this and former Parliaments to the education of the people, has placed the future improvement and prosperity of Ireland on a sure and lasting foundation. Our attention has been no less anxiously directed to the condition of the destitute poor of Scotland, and, assisted by the information which your Majesty directed to be laid before us, we have made such amendments in the law as will provide for the more effectual relief of the poor and for a better system of parochial management under the control of a general board of supervision. We have endeavoured, by facilitating the drainage of lands and the enclosure of commons, to encourage agricultural improvement and the beneficial employment of labour in the rural districts. And we advert with peculiar satisfaction to the measures which have been adopted for the further security and extension of the trade and commerce of the country. The laws passed in a former session for regulating the banking establishments of England have been applied with certain requisite modifications to Scotland and Ireland. The operations of trade have been simplified and rendered more secure by the abolition of the duties on many articles of import, and by the consolidation of the Customs' laws. The duties on sugar have been so far modified and reduced as materially to affect its price and increase its consumption; and the important staple manufacture of glass has been relieved altogether from fiscal charge and the inconvenience and expense of Excise regulations. To meet the deficiency in the revenue caused by these alterations of the tariff, we have deemed it indispensably necessary to continue for a further period the tax upon income; and we have been thereby enabled, in accordance with your Majesty's suggestion, to add to the efficiency of the naval service, and to afford adequate protection to our commerce. It has been my duty thus briefly to lay before your Majesty some of the most prominent measures of the session. We believe them to be well calculated, under the blessing of Providence, to increase the prosperity of the country, and to promote the welfare and happiness of all classes of your Majesty's subjects: and, if we have felt ourselves reluctantly compelled to renew a tax usually resorted to under the pressure of an expensive war, we have at least the satisfaction of reflecting that we have reimposed it for no purpose of aggrandisement or conquest; but that we might be enabled, without endangering public credit, to relax those restrictions which press upon our domestic industry—to extend our commercial relations—and to share the blessings of peace with all the nations of the world." The right hon. gentleman then presented some Bills, to which he in the name of the Commons prayed Her Majesty to give her royal assent. This afforded strangers an opportunity of witnessing some ancient forms of the House. The Bills were brought from the bar and laid on the table, at each corner of the north end of which stood two clerks; one to read the title of the bills, and the other to announce in Norman French the assent of Her Majesty to them. The first two were bills of supply, viz.:—The Exchequer Bills Bill for raising the sum of 9,240,000*l.* for supplies; and the Consolidated Fund Bill, for appropriating 10,689,239*l.* As the title of each was read the clerks bowed lowly to the throne, and then turning to the bar one of them, the clerk of the Parliament, declared,—"La Reine remercie ses loyaux sujets, accepte leur benevolence, et ainsi le veut."—The Small Debts Bill, and the Silk Weavers Bill, being public bills, to these the Royal assent was given in this form,—"La Reine le veut."—The Bristol Parochial Rates Bill, the Blackwall (Eastern Counties) Railway Bill, and the Marquis of Westminster's Estate Bill, being private bills, the announcement was in these terms,—"Soit fait comme il est désiré."—The LORD CHANCELLOR, as soon as these forms were disposed of, knelt and presented Her Majesty with a copy of the Royal speech, which Her Majesty read in her usual clear and melodious voice as follows:—

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—I rejoice that the state of public business enables me to release you from further attendance in Parliament.

"In closing this laborious session, I must express to you my warm acknowledgments for the zeal and assiduity with which you have applied yourselves to the consideration of many subjects deeply affecting the public welfare.

"I have given my cordial assent to the bills which you presented to me for remitting the duties on many articles of import, and for removing restrictions on the free application of capital and skill to certain branches of our manufactures.

"The reduction of taxation will necessarily cause an immediate loss of revenue; but I trust that its effect in stimulating commercial enterprise, and enlarging the means of consumption, will ultimately provide an ample compensation for any temporary sacrifice.

"I have witnessed with peculiar satisfaction the unremitting attention which you have bestowed on the measures recommended by me to your consideration at the commencement of the session for improving and extending the means of academical education in Ireland.

"You may rely upon my determination to carry those measures into execution in the manner best calculated to inspire confidence in the institutions which have received your sanction, and to give effect to your earnest desire to promote the welfare of that part of my dominions.

"From all foreign powers I continue to receive assurances of their friendly disposition towards this country.

"The convention which I have recently concluded with the King of the French for the more effectual suppression of the Slave-trade will, I trust, by establishing a cordial and active co-operation between the two powers, afford a better prospect than has hitherto existed of complete success in the attainment of an object for which this country has made so many sacrifices.

"GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,—I thank you for the liberality with which you have voted the supplies for the service of the current year.

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—On your return to your several counties duties will devolve upon you scarcely less important than those from the performance of which I now relieve you.

"I feel assured that you will promote and confirm, by your influence and example, that spirit of loyalty and contentment which you will find generally prevalent throughout the country.

"In the discharge of all the functions entrusted to you for the public welfare you may confidently rely on my cordial support, and I implore the blessing of divine Providence on our united efforts to encourage the industry and increase the comforts of my people and to inculcate those religious and moral principles which are the surest foundation of our security and happiness."

The LORD CHANCELLOR, kneeling, received from the hand of Her Majesty the copy of the royal speech just Her Majesty's commands on the subject of the prorogation. Then rising, and turning to the House, the noble and learned lord said,—"My lords and gentlemen, it is Her Majesty's royal will and pleasure that this Parliament be prorogued to Thursday, the 2d day of October, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Thursday, the 2d day of October next."—Her Majesty then graciously bowed, and, descending the throne, retired from the House, accompanied by Prince Albert and the great officers of state in procession and in the same order in which they had entered. On the way from the House to the robing-room, however, an accident occurred which might well alarm the superstitious, and which, after such speeches as those of Lord Campbell and Mr. Borthwick, upon the necessity of appointing a Regency during Her Majesty's absence from the kingdom, might with reason be considered an ill omen by one more inclined to attach weight to such trifles than the Queen. The Duke of Argyll, whose office it was to bear the crown, by some mischance stumbled, and upset his precious charge. The ponderous crown rolled from its velvet cushion, and fell on the floor with such force, that several of the jewels were shaken from their settings, and the crown itself was much bent and injured. The stones, however, were soon picked up by the assistance of several peers who formed part of the procession, and the crown was then delivered into the hands of its usual keepers.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday.—After the moving of the new writs, specified in our last, Mr. G. W. HOPE brought in a Bill for the regulation of waste lands in Australia, which was read a first time.—In reply to a question by Colonel VERNER, Sir R. PEEL stated that Government had felt it their painful duty to dismiss Mr. Watson from the Deputy-Lieutenancy and the Commission of the Peace, in consequence of his having appeared in an Orange procession, and signed, as chairman, a declaration that the period had arrived when the Orange institution should be re-organised. Sir R. Peel said that the House having, in 1837, addressed the Sovereign, praying him to adopt every means to put down Orange societies throughout the kingdom, and King William IV. having returned his solemn assurance that he would discourage and discountenance those societies in every way, Government were bound to supersede Mr. Watson.—Colonel VERNER gave notice that next session he should move an address to the Crown on this subject.—Lord PALMERSTON drew attention to the present state of the affairs of Syria. In 1840 the people of Syria were induced by the Allied Powers to join in the effort for ridding themselves of the usurped despotism of Mehemet Ali, by expelling the army of Ibrahim Pacha, and restoring the province to its legitimate Sovereign, the Sultan. This they achieved under British officers, and with the aid of British troops and arms, and their inducement was the promise of the Sultan, guaranteed by the Allied Powers, that the oppression under which they had laboured for centuries would be removed. This had not been done, and Great Britain was bound in honour to take further steps, in order that the engagements entered into with the people of Syria might be realised. There were, doubtless, great difficulties in the way. Syria was not peopled by a single race, but by different tribes, the Maronites, considered as Christians, and the Druses, whose faith was allied to the Mahommedan, and these were not separated by geographical distinctions, but were intermixed with one another. The deposition of the Emir Beschir was the result of the inducements of the agents of this country, and his claim for compensation, guaranteed by Britain, was still unsatisfied. In 1841, a plan was proposed with the unanimous approbation of the Allied Powers, for settling the affairs of Syria. Two governors were to be appointed, one for the Maronites, the other for the Druses; and in order to separate as much as possible the two races, the minority in any particular village were to be allowed to retire, and join those of their own race in any other, compensation being given to them for any loss arising from abandoning their property. Had this plan been carried out it would have restored peace to Syria. But the Turkish Government have constantly interposed delays; they have set the two races against each other with the view of weakening both; and the disastrous civil war, which has distracted that fine province, is attributable to the want of energy shown by the Allied Powers, but more especially by the Government of Great Britain. He urged the importance of maintaining the integrity of the Turkish empire, which was neither necessarily falling to pieces, nor yet retrograding in civilization—an object contemplated by the treaty of the Dardanelles in 1841, between the five Powers, England, France, Austria, Prussia, and Russia. But in order to maintain the integrity of Turkey, and preserve the balance of power in Europe, it was necessary that the disturbances in Syria should be composed; and for this purpose he hoped that before next session, the five Powers would have united in carrying out the plan of 1842, to which the Sultan had given his sanction.—Sir R. PEEL replied that it was the desire to maintain the independence of the Turkish empire which rendered the relations of the five Powers with it so very delicate, and made them reluctant to enforce on Turkey the fulfilment of its engagements. He quoted from the printed correspondence, in order to show that the late Government, as well as the present, had found the difficulty of inducing Turkey to act with good faith and good sense towards Syria. There had been the most shabby evasions on the part of the Porte, of its promises made both to Lord Ponsonby and Sir Stratford Canning, the latter of whom he eulogised for his great zeal and ability. He read a letter from Colonel Rose, in order to show that he was labouring, with the entire approbation of the Government, to protect the Maronites from the cruelties of the Druses, and also quoted a despatch from Sir S. Canning, which had arrived that very day, in which there is held out a prospect that the Porte would fulfil its engagements. He had no objection to produce these papers, but he thought it better not to publish the three or four despatches which had been recently received, but to wait till more came to hand, when they should all be laid on the table at the commencement of the next session. He could not take leave of his Parliamentary labour this session without returning his thanks to the gentlemen who had given their attention to private business. He then read to the House an account of the labours performed this session by the Committee on Standing Orders, the Committee of Selection, the Committee on Petitions, by the Railway Committees, and the Committees on Private Bills. Those gentlemen had not only performed their duties admirably as individuals, but had also added to the reputation of the house in the country, by the indefatigable zeal and impartial justice which they had displayed.—Sir C. Napier was proceeding to address the chair, when an hon. Member moved that the House be counted, and 40 members not being present, it stood adjourned.

Saturday.—Mr. Hawes brought up the report of the select committee appointed to inquire into the allegations in the petition of Mr. Henry Bruce and others, impugning the acts of certain subscribers to the contract deed of the London and York. The report was not read, but ordered to lie on the table and be printed.—In answer to Mr. Wyse, Sir J. Graham stated, that as only a few days had elapsed since the royal assent had been given to the act for the establishment of new colleges in Ireland, the charter for the incorporation of these colleges had not yet been prepared. It was the intention, as it would be the duty of Government to lay copies of those charters before both Houses of Parliament. Instead of one visitorial board, it was intended to appoint separate visitorial boards for each district, those boards to be composed of lay and clerical persons, locally acquainted with the wants of each district. Sir J. Graham took this opportunity of answering a question put to him a few nights since by Mr. Wakley, when he presented a petition complaining that in a Poor-law union in Hampshire, paupers receiving temporary relief were subject to employment at the mill, though that mill was not employed for any useful purpose, or for any purpose save that of working the poor who had been relieved at the union. Sir J. Graham said he had made inquiries into the subject, and found that the statement was not without foundation, and he had strongly expressed his opinion as to the impropriety of that course, and with that view he had sent instructions to the Poor-law Commissioners through England and Wales to use their efforts for the discontinuance of the practice. The right hon. Baronet then proceeded to make some observations on the practice of employing the poor to crush bones in Union workhouses.—Mr. Borthwick said he wished to put a question to the right hon. Baronet at the head of the Government—a very grave and important question, which stood under his name for that day. He wished to guard himself against any expression of disrespect, either against the right hon. Baronet or his Government. A few nights ago the noble lord, the member for London, called the attention of Government to the same circumstance, but no reply was then given; and he (Mr. Borthwick) conjectured from that silence that the subject was under the consideration of Government. He regretted now to think otherwise. He alluded, of course, to the Queen's intended visit to the Continent. There was no precedent in the history of this country in which the Sovereign had left the country without appointing a commission. It was always considered a great constitutional principle that the functions of the Crown should not be exercised out of the realm. From the earliest period of our history to the present moment this custom had been religiously observed, and he saw no reason why it should be departed from on this occasion. A precedent to the contrary ought not to be formed, for, although it could not be in any way dangerous at present, it might on a future occasion be attended with the worst consequences to the peace of the realm. He would not say one word on the subject, but would prefer listening to the reasons which the right hon. baronet could advance for the course which the Government thought fit to pursue.—Sir R. Peel said: "I hope, the hon. gentleman will not attribute the abruptness of my reply to any want to courtesy towards him, but rather to the shortness of the time during which I can now occupy the attention of the House. I will begin at once by saying that the hon. gentleman is wrong on every single point which he has thought proper to advance. First of all, he is wrong, utterly wrong, in point of precedent. He said that there was no instance where the Sovereign had been absent from the realm, and where a commission of the lords justices had not been appointed. Now, sir, that is not the fact. The hon. gentleman says he will go back to the earliest periods of the history of our constitution. I cannot say what he means by constitution, but there are instances within"—Here the Usher of the Black Rod appeared at the bar, and announced the desire of Her Majesty that the Commons should immediately attend in the House of Lords.—The Speaker forthwith rose, and attended by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and followed by the members in a body, proceeded to the House of Lords. After an absence of about a quarter of an hour, the Speaker returned, and the Queen's Speech having been read from the chair, the busy and protracted session of 1845 was brought to a close.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Weather.—For the last fortnight the weather in the metropolis and the suburbs has been of the most uncertain and unfavourable character. Last week thunder-storms were frequent, but on Thursday one of unusual violence, attended by torrents of rain and hail, visited this district, and did a great deal of damage. On Friday there was considerable sunshine; but the greater part of the day was cloudy and gloomy, with a few light showers, and generally brisk wind from the south-west. On Saturday the sun was scarcely seen, and the day throughout was marked by innumerable and heavy showers, with a violent south wind. About 11 o'clock at night there were several beautiful and vivid flashes of sheet lightning, but thunder was not heard. The whole of Sunday the atmosphere was charged with a dense mass of murky clouds, and all the morning, and greater part of the afternoon, heavy showers of rain fell at very brief intervals, with brisk wind. The rain abated in the evening, but the gloominess still prevailed. Monday was also a stormy day. The morning commenced brightly and genially, but at 11 o'clock the sky became overcast, and shortly after, heavy showers of rain descended, accompanied with thunder, the wind blowing freshly from the north. Shortly before one o'clock a tremendous peal of thunder was heard, which was speedily followed by a deluge of rain, which continued at intervals, though with increasing force, and accompanied with lightning and terrific peals of thunder, till nearly four o'clock. Such a day of frequent heavy storms has at this season scarcely been known. Towards evening the sky became brighter, and Tuesday was much more favourable, but at night the rain returned, and the rest of the week has exhibited the same succession of changes. The temperature is very low for the season. The Surrey farmers attending Croydon and Kingston markets, represent the Wheat and corn generally to be good crops, and in excellent condition, the chief part fit for the sickle, and only waiting for good harvest weather, the want of which, however, has not been felt at present. Accounts from Sussex, Essex, Kent, Herts, and other places are equally favourable, and all agree in stating that Turnips and Potatoes are generally abundant. The damage hitherto done to the crops seems not to be great, and, if a continuance of fine weather succeed the heavy rains, all will yet be well.

Presentation of Plate to Mr. David Salomons.—On Friday a deputation from a large body of Mr. Salomons's friends and admirers presented him with a very handsome piece of plate, in token of their esteem for his character and for his conduct during the recent contest for the aldermanic gown of Portsoken Ward. The presentation of the plate, which has been some time prepared, was delayed till the Jewish Disabilities Bill had received the Royal assent.

Wesleyan Conference.—At the Wesleyan conference, now sitting at Leeds, the Rev. Joseph Stanley, of Bristol, was elected president for the ensuing year by a large majority, the numbers being—the Rev. J. Stanley, 191; the Rev. W. Atherton, 57; majority for Mr. Stanley, 134. The result of the election gave much satisfaction.

Anti-Maynooth Committee.—Sir Culling Smith, Mr. J. D. Paul, and Mr. Lord, respectively the chairman, treasurer, and secretary of the Anti-Maynooth Committee, have issued a circular, stating that in opposing the Maynooth Endowment Bill that Association has contracted debts to the amount of 732*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.*, which it is unable to defray, and demanding assistance, in order to discharge them.

The Charterhouse.—The Governors of the Charterhouse met last week to appoint two new Governors in the places of Earl Grey and Lord Canterbury. Their choice fell on the Duke of Buccleuch and Lord Devon.

Improvements in Hyde-park.—On Saturday the erection of the new iron gates at the Albert-gate entrance into Hyde-park from Knightsbridge was completed, and a very handsome addition they make to the already great improvements effected at that point. The gates, which consist of two openings for carriages and two for pedestrians, form a handsome screen across the road, are affixed to buttresses on each side, each buttress being surmounted by the figure of a stag, and are lighted by six large gas lamps. The Commissioners of Woods and Forests are employing upwards of 200 labourers in the park, carrying out most extensive improvements, by filling up with earth all the uneven parts, and sowing them with grass seed, for the purpose of producing a level sward. Seven new footpaths, 24 feet wide, are also making, extending the entire length of the park, from Hyde-park-corner to Cumberland-gate, and from the Albert and Victoria gates.

New Public Offices.—In consequence of the great increase of the public business at the Boards of Trade and Control, adjoining the Treasury, at Whitehall, it has been determined to erect another story. Men are now engaged in fixing a hoard for the commencement of the work. The piece of ground at the corner of Downing-street, which has been so long vacant, is also being laid out for the foundation of public offices.

The British Museum.—Last week, by order of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, the whole of the eastern wing of the British Museum, comprising several tons of lead, the brickwork, &c., was disposed of by auction, in order to be removed for the erection of the new stone wing, to correspond with that on the western side, which has been recently finished. Among the mass of building which will be taken down will be the old lantern-formed house, abutting on Great Russell-street. The foundation of the intended wing has been laid for some weeks; but it is expected to be two years before it will be completed.

Demolition of the Fleet Prison.—The work of demolition of this once celebrated place of imprisonment for debt is now completed, the whole of the interior having been pulled down, and the materials carried away. Nothing now remains but the lofty walls which formerly surrounded it. It is not known to what purpose the ground will be appropriated.

New Houses of Parliament.—It is rumoured that Mr. Dyce is to have one of the rooms in the new Houses entirely to himself, to ornament with fresco-paintings; and that Messrs. Severn, Fennell, and Herbert, are to have other apartments. Mr. Maclise, it is said, has declined a commission.

Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Society.—The adjourned general meeting of this society took place last week, at the London Tavern, for the purpose of receiving the report of the select committee of three subscribers, who were appointed in June last to examine the accounts. There was a numerous attendance of subscribers, amongst whom were Sir G. Cockburn, Bart., Earl Manvers, Major Oliphant, Lord H. Cholmondeley, Hon. Capt. Maude, R.N., Captain Shea, Admiral Young, Sir G. Westphal, Sir W. Burnett, B. B. Cabbell, Esq., J. T. Pratt, Esq., &c. Sir G. Cockburn, having been unanimously called to the chair, the secretary read the report, which was of considerable length, but with reference to the matter of account in dispute, and which led to the investigation, may be embodied in a few words. On the retirement of the late secretary, Mr. West, there was a debit to the account of somebody of the sum of 230*l.* owing to the funds of the society, and the matter in dispute was whether the sub-treasurer or the late secretary stood so indebted, each charging the deficiency on the other. The report presented on the present occasion, which was got up after much labour and protracted investigation, completely set this point at rest. The report stated that the committee found, from the great laxity that pervaded the manner of keeping the accounts generally, the greatest difficulty in arriving at any definite or accurate result, but they did obtain the result that Mr. West, the secretary, was exonerated from all claim on the part of the society, and that the accountant who had on a former occasion examined the accounts should have charged the deficiency to the sub-treasurer, Mr. Hume Middlemass. The report further recommended that the office of sub-treasurer, which was gratuitous, should be abolished, and that in future there should only be a treasurer, and that the secretary should be responsible for all vouchers and books of account.—Earl Manvers, in moving that the report be received and adopted, said that although he was a member of the committee for a considerable time, he had not much attended; but when he heard that there was something wrong in the accounts of the society, he determined at once to forward the most rigid investigation. He was happy to find that that inquiry had ended in so satisfactory a report as that presented, and that the whole proceedings were about to terminate in so satisfactory a manner. The motion having been agreed to, the report was ordered to be printed, and circulated generally amongst the subscribers, with the balance-sheet.

Balloon Ascents.—Mr. Green has made two day ascents since the night expeditions mentioned in our last. One of these was from the Albert Saloon at Hoxton, when he was accompanied by the proprietor of the saloon and his wife; and the other, on Tuesday last, from Vauxhall, accompanied by Mrs. Green. In the ascent from Hoxton, the balloon remained in the air nearly an hour, and descended at Kidderborough, near Woolwich Common, and in that from Vauxhall it descended at Beckenham.

Arrival of the Chinese Ransom Money.—Last week the Chinese ransom money, which was brought to England by the Cambrian, Commodore Chads, was forwarded from Gosport, by a special train, on the South Western Railway, under the care of Mr. Cooper of the Treasury, and a guard of the 8th regiment of foot. The whole of the ransom, consisting of 2,000,000 dollars, which were deposited in 500 boxes, and weighing about 62 cwt., was sent by the train. On their arrival they were placed on 10 waggons, each drawn by four horses, and taken to the Mint. It took nearly three hours to unload the waggons.

Discharge of Mr. Barnard Gregory.—This person who it will be remembered was sentenced to six months' imprisonment in the Queen's Bench prison for a libel on the Duke of Brunswick, was on Friday discharged from custody, by an order of Mr. Justice Wightman. An application was made under the act which came into force on the 31st ult., entitled "An Act to stay execution of judgment for Misdemeanours upon giving Bail in Error," and it was submitted to his lordship that the defendant was entitled to liberation until a decision was given on the writ of error allowed in the cause "The Duke of Brunswick v. Gregory." The words of the statute are, "that in every case of judgment whether given before or after the passing of this act for a misdemeanour, where the defendant or defendants shall have obtained a writ of error on such judgment, execution thereupon shall be stayed until such writ of error shall be finally determined." Two sureties, a tailor and a livery-stable keeper, gave bail in 100*l.* each, and defendant who was brought up by a writ of habeas corpus from the Queen's prison, gave his own recognizance of 200*l.* The condition of the recognizance is that the writ of error shall be proceeded with, and in case the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench should be affirmed, then the defendant is to be rendered to his former custody to undergo the sentence recorded. This is the first application under the new law which has reference to misdemeanours in which judgment has been pronounced and writs of error allowed. The point raised in this cause cannot be determined until Michaelmas Term.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Aug. 9:—West Districts, 126; Northern, 134; Central, 198; Eastern, 201; Southern, 259; Total, 918; males, 474; females, 444. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1216; males, 588; females, 628.

Provincial.

Bangor.—As a proof of the extraordinary character of the weather during the present season, the Chester Chronicle states that on Tuesday morning the surface of country between Bangor and Bethesda, for an extent of three miles at least, was covered with snow to the depth of three inches and upwards.

Beverley.—At the annual dinner of the Yorkshire Agricultural Society last week at Beverley, Lord Fe-versham presiding, after grace had been said by Archdeacon Wilberforce, and the usual loyal toasts had been drunk, Lord Morpeth, in proposing "Success to the Society," made some observations on the education of farmers, which were received with great attention and applause. After alluding with satisfaction to the excellence of the day's exhibition, both in stock and implements, his lordship said :—

"I have sometimes been led to apprehend, amidst all the perfection to which the breeding of stock and the exhibitions of cattle have attained, from the faultless symmetry of the short-horn to the unquestionable proportions of pigs and sheep—amidst also the perfection which has been attained in the department of agricultural implements, of which your field to-day afforded such various and admirable specimens (hear, hear),—I have sometimes been led to apprehend whether we bestow on all occasions a corresponding degree of culture and attention upon that which you will all admit to be the most important breed, the noblest stock of all, the human animals (loud cheers); whether amidst the increasing care and skill which day by day, and year by year, are expended upon the farm, we do all we ought to do for the farmer. (Cheers.) Now, I am well aware that out of the materials here before me I must at once meet with the most satisfactory and triumphant refutation. (Hear.) Many, very many farmers here present there are who may safely be pointed out, and then I might be asked, where would you look for more intelligence, for more enterprise, for more worth? (Cheers.) In the face of such an exhibition as we have seen to-day, where would you desire better evidence of the skill and ability which are bestowed upon the management and cultivation of the land? (Hear.) Where, and under what system, could you wish to better the results that are set forth in the farming of the Wolds, and in the show fields of Beverley? ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) Now, I am the very last person to counteract or weaken such a satisfactory testimony; but what I wish for us all to strive for is, to make what is now partial become universal (loud cheers)—to make the whole mass what the pattern samples are now made of. It would be superfluous at this time of day, and upon this occasion, to descant upon the advantages of education. (Hear.) Education is probably now more abundantly provided for than at any former period of our history. But, whilst the best and most improved methods of education are at the service of the wealthier classes, and the mercantile and commercial classes in our larger towns,—and while, on the other hand, there is a multitude of schools now open in our country parishes and villages, where the children of the agricultural labourers, and the working classes generally, may receive a daily improving system of education, it has seemed to me, and to others far more competent to form a sound opinion, that there is a deficiency in the special and appropriate modes of education best suited for the sons of farmers. (Loud cheers.) Now, the importance of this point turns very much upon the importance which ought to be attached to the class of farmers, and to the rising generation of English farmers. (Hear, hear.) I, for one, attach the very highest importance to that class. I think they fill the most important place in the social scale of the British commonwealth. I think they have high duties to discharge,—first, to themselves; and perhaps, this is the class of duties which we are always most likely to remember. But, whatever Parliaments or legislators might do with respect to the laws which bear upon their condition, it is plain that, in the present state of competition which besets every department of human industry and effort, if the farmer will do his duty to himself,—if he means to keep his place, or, as I fervently hope, to improve upon it (loud cheers),—he must be wide awake, he must be up to all the new methods and discoveries which are every day so largely developing themselves, and adding to, in the science of practical agriculture. Next, the farmer has duties to his landlord,—reciprocal duties, I admit,—in which the landlord largely shares. (Hear, hear.) I am not now about to take up the question of leases, or of any which may excite a difference of opinion; but I may observe in passing, that, in my belief, there is perhaps a greater degree of what is called security of tenure in the ordinary run of the Yorkshire landlords—this practically is the case—than can be found in Scotland or elsewhere, where granting of leases forms the system of more regular business. (Cheers.) But if this be the case, and if the landlord is expected not lightly to disturb the tenure of the tenant—as I hope he never lightly will, then, on the other hand, the tenant owes it to the landlord not to let himself be grievously outrun in the management of his farm by his neighbours around him. (Loud cheers.) And the last duties to which I would advert on the part of the farmer are those which he owes to the agricultural labourers, on the strength of whose arm he so much relies, and on which he must so mainly depend. (Hear, hear.) Now, it is upon the well-being and the good conduct of the labouring classes of this country that I think our hopes and destinies as a nation, more than on any other thing, mainly depend. (Cheers.) And when I reflect how much the farmer has it in his power, and within his reach, not only to consult the material wants and the condition of those who work for him, but also to influence their character and to raise their moral tone, I think it must be agreed that, in addition to the duties they owe to themselves and to their landlords, they have most serious duties to discharge to the class of agricultural labourers. (Loud cheers.) But wherever there are high duties, there are also high responsibilities. And what I earnestly wish is, that the coming generation of British farmers should be trained fully up to the level of its duties and responsibilities. (Cheers.) I beg pardon, gentlemen, for being so long in laying my premises; but I will fix my conclusion very shortly. That which under the circumstances I should have originally thought most desirable would have been to establish some distinct school in a rural district, in connexion with some model farm (cheers), where a complete course of agricultural instruction might be pursued. But those with whom I have had an opportunity of consulting came to the conviction that we should not be able to raise sufficient funds, nor insure a sufficient attendance, to set on foot and maintain such an object. (Hear.) However that may be, I believe many amongst you may be acquainted with the substitute we are endeavouring to introduce. There is already in existence a most excellent school at York, where a very useful, sound, and complete education—when I say complete, I admit that it will not be so without religion and morality being taught at the same time (cheers)—where such an education is provided for the young of the middle classes, who have at present no such means afforded. What we propose is to attach to this school a large and commodious boarding-house, where children from any distance may be accommodated and carefully attended to; and on the education at present given it is proposed to graft special instruction in agricultural chemistry, in practical mechanism, or any other branch which recent discoveries have brought to bear upon this class of Her Majesty's subjects. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) But this undertaking, like all others, stands in need of funds. I have been informed that many of the wealthier and spirited farmers in this district have given as much as 100*l.* a-year; and it is proposed that the entire expense for lodging, board, and education shall be 21 guineas a year, which I hope will not be considered out of the reach of that class whose interest we are wishful to consult. (Cheers.) But, as I said, to accomplish this, we are in need of the sinews of war. 2,200*l.* has been already subscribed: and about 1,000*l.* more is required in order to make the boarding-house and school contiguous to the present establishment. And I ought to mention that many of the chief proprietors and leading noblemen and gentlemen of the county, including our noble chairman, have come forward most munificently on this occasion. But perhaps their munificence, in the first instance, may have had the effect of deterring smaller subscriptions. If, however, the wealthy farmers would spare us 1*l.* a-piece, we should probably be enabled to accomplish the whole extent of our wish. Our York Yeomen School is well worthy of support, and with the addition of what we propose would be a most valuable acquisition to the British farmers. (Hear.) I again beg pardon for being indiscreet—tedious I know. ("No, no.") But I thought that, having occasion to address you, you would forgive me, if, instead of indulging in vague generalities in praise of agriculture, I should have called your attention to a project which, to my mind, would be most useful, most desirable, and which is most extremely wanted. (Loud applause.) And I feel that it would be as well for us to make an intellectual co-operation second to our mechanical contrivances, for when we have made man keep pace with the machine ("hear," and cheers): when we have made the human breed as thoroughly furnished to the work as the best and most faultless of our short-horns; when we can not only point to the rest of England, and, so far as the northern counties of the island are concerned, show our agricultural labourers superior to our brethren of the south, not only in the amount of wages, but in the physical energy which more than repays the outlay (cheers)—when, besides these, we have made every class of the farmers take the same high ground in all their resources of intellectual affinity, it will then be with the best conscience, and with the surest auguries of prosperity, that we shall drink the toast I have now to propose,—"Success to the Yorkshire Agricultural Society." (Continued applause.)

Brighton.—The sections of Capt. Taylor's floating breakwater, which have been moored off Brighton during the last six months, have got into trouble. Last week they were seized by the sheriff under an execution, and during the night of Friday, one of them broke from its moorings. The consequence was that it swung round with the wind and tide, and ran foul of the adjoining section, the timbers of which were broken into splinters. These two sections have continued battering each other ever since, and each tide finds their length diminished. A man and his son, who have lived night and day in a little box on the third section, seeing the dangerous proximity of the loosened section, hoisted signals of distress on Saturday morning. It was then blowing almost a gale from the south-west; but the Shoreham pilots put off in their life-boat, and succeeded with some difficulty in bringing the man and boy on shore.

Calne.—The Wiltshire papers contain detailed accounts of the destructive hail-storm which visited the neighbourhood of Bowden-hill, Studley, and Bowood, on the afternoon of Thursday, the 31st ult. The Wiltshire Independent states that about 4 P.M. on that day, "two clouds, like immense mountains, were observed approaching each other from opposite points the one coming from the direction of Melksham, and the other from that of Chippenham. They moved along slowly and majestically, till they neared each other, over the seat of T. H. Sotheron, Esq., M.P., at Bowden-hill; when, coming into collision, an appalling noise was heard, as if a thousand pieces of artillery had been simultaneously discharged, and repeated at intervals of a second only. The war amongst the elements now became grand in the extreme. The rain descended in torrents, accompanied with showers of hailstones of various forms, and of extraordinary magnitude, some of them measuring 3 inches in circumference. The descent of these sharp, angular, and ponderous congelations committed much mischief among the windows, fields, and gardens of the poor cottagers, breaking their glass in a thousand fragments; cutting their Potatoes, Peas, Beans, and every species of garden productions, and laying them prostrate; and literally thrashing their Wheat in the ear. It is supposed that 100*l.* will not cover the loss sustained by Mr. Cole, a small farmer at Studley. From Studley the storm took a more easterly direction, and passed over Bowood, where it committed great havoc. Besides breaking a number of windows in the mansion, 30,000 squares of glass were demolished among the frames and hothouses of the Marquis of Lansdowne. Fortunately the tempest did not extend to much more than a mile in breadth, and about three miles in length. The Devizes Gazette says, in reference to its effects on Lord Lansdowne's houses, that "glass was destroyed to the value, it is estimated, of 500*l.* Much injury was also done to the beautiful pines and plants, and many of the trees in the park were stripped of their leaves. In the neighbourhood the wheat and beans were cut down by the hailstones as if by a scythe. The roaring of the tremendous storm at Bowood was heard at Calne, which is two miles distant, for full five minutes before its approach to that town. So loud was the appalling sound, that the people in the streets stopped to listen to it, not being able to conceive what was the immediate cause of it. Considerable injury was also done at Rumsey House, the residence of Mr. Angell, and at Bowden Park. The hailstones were remarkably large, some of them being an inch in circumference."

Carmarthen.—Lord Teynham has recently been preaching in the Baptist chapels in this town, Swansea, and Llanelly, and has attracted immense congregations. His lordship is on his way to Ireland on a missionary tour.

Chatham.—The engineers having made considerable alterations in the rotatory engines of the Janus steam sloop, several trials have been made during the last three days in the presence of the Earl of Dundonald, and have succeeded in getting the engine to revolve, although but slowly. The vessel proceeded down the river last week to Sheerness with the tide and her sails up. Her steam speed is about three miles an hour.—A fire broke out last week in the Southampton 50, lying in ordinary. Assistance was immediately rendered by the ships in harbour, and the fire was extinguished in half an hour, having been confined to the cabin in which it broke out.—A Court Martial has been recently held on Commander Gayton, of the Coast Guard, for alleged neglect of duty; and after a very long and minute inquiry it has ended in the honourable acquittal of Commander Gayton of all the charges preferred against him.

Exeter.—On Wednesday a special messenger arrived at the gaol with a further respite for the condemned pirates until the 25th November. This step has been taken to afford the Judges an opportunity of fully considering the points of law raised on the trial during the approaching Michaelmas term.

Farnham.—On the 24th ult. the foundation stone of a gipsy school was laid in this place, by the aged gipsy, Charles Stanley. About 500 persons were present, among whom were several groups of gipsies. It is proposed at first to give education, food, and clothing, to 12 boys and 12 girls. Lord Ashley is the patron of this institution, and amongst its liberal supporters are the Bishop of Salisbury, Marquis of Cholmondeley, Hon. Mr. Cowper, M.P., the Dowager Duchess of Beaufort, Sir M. Biskiston, Bart., Lady Caroline Neeld, Sir Edward Parry, Sir R. P. Glynn, Bart., Mr. Labouchere, M.P., &c. The proposed school has received a grant of 100*l.* from the committee of Privy Council for Education. The building is undertaken with a view of gathering in the gipsy children from the highways and hedges, to be brought up in religious principles. The Rev. Mr. Crabb, in addressing the meeting, mentioned several instances of members of the gipsy tribe becoming converted to Christianity, who go to church regularly, and are most attentive in their religious devotions.

Isle of Wight.—The daily papers state that Her Majesty and Prince Albert, before their departure for Germany, being desirous of having the estate in which Osborne house stands, and which consists of about 1500 acres, thoroughly drained, had Mr. Webster's new patent hand-pipe and tile-machine exhibited and explained to them. After seeing its operation, they expressed their approval, and instructed Mr. Webster to carry out their wishes.

Leeds.—Such is the desperate eagerness for gambling in shares in this town, that the magistrates are compelled to employ the police to keep the footpath clear in the street in which the Stock Exchange is situated. The Leeds Mercury says, "it is not an uncommon thing for 100,000 railway shares to be sold in one day in the share markets at Leeds. The state lotteries of other times, and the gambling houses of the metropolis, are and were mere bagatelles for the spirit of adventure, compared with the railway share exchanges."

Leicester.—A man called William Hubbard, a framework knitter in this town, has been committed for trial on the verdict of a coroner's jury, for the wilful murder of his wife on Monday last, by cutting her throat with a clasp-knife. The details of this melancholy affair have excited the greatest sensation in the neighbourhood.

Liverpool.—We learn by the Liverpool Times that a new line of steamers is about to be established between this port and Constantinople, which will greatly facilitate the trade of England and the Levant. Three large steamers are in progress for this line, one of which, named the Levantine, will be ready in about two months; and until they are completed the line will be worked by steamers temporarily engaged for the purpose. The first vessel which is to be despatched is the Novelty, at present lying in the Clarence Dock. This vessel well deserves the name which it bears, being not only propelled by the screw, but worked by a newly invented rotatory engine, which promises to make a complete change in steam navigation. In point of size this engine is not more than one-third the dimensions of an ordinary engine of equal power, and its consumption of coal is small in the same proportion. This is the first successful attempt to construct a marine engine on this principle, and if the succeeding applications of the same principle should be equally successful, the saving of fuel and gain of space will be such as to lead to an immense extension of steam navigation. The whole weight of the machinery of the Novelty is only 24 tons. The Levantine and other steamers of the new line are all to be constructed on the same principle as the Novelty, so that it will be seen in operation on a large scale very shortly.

Merthyr.—An explosion of fire-damp, by which 29 persons lost their lives, took place on Saturday week, at a colliery belonging to Mr. Thomas Powell, situated at Crombach, about three miles distant from the village of Aberdare, and six from Merthyr Tydvil. About 11 o'clock a loud report, attended with a violent concussion of the earth was heard, and in a very short time it became known that an explosion of fire-damp had occurred. There were in the pit at the time from 150 to 200 human beings, men and boys. The air in the pit, after the explosion, was so noxious, that it was a considerable time before any person could venture to seek for the missing men. It is said the Davy lamp was constantly used to try the air, and that the pit has always been deficient in ventilation. No accident in this part of the country has ever been attended with the loss of so much life, and the effect consequently is an unusual gloom over the whole neighbourhood. There were also two or three horses killed, and the damage done to the works is very great. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Accidental Death, adding that "this jury are of opinion that the present system of ventilation employed in the Dyffryn or Crombach Colliery, though as perfect as the said system will admit, is inadequate to insure the safety of the lives of the men employed in the said works, and they strongly recommend that a system which will prevent the gas from oozing out of the old or abandoned workings into a tram-road air-way, may be adopted in preference as soon as possible."

Ripon.—It appears that Earl de Grey, by the will of the late Mrs. Lawrence, succeeds to the Studeley estate and Ripon property. The estates adjoin the noble earl's Newby estate, and both were bequeathed to him by the former proprietors, although they were in the remotest way connected to his lordship by family ties. Mrs. Lawrence's Hutton, Sharow, and Kirby Malzeard property, with the Moors, go to the Earl of Ripon, the Leicestershire estate to Sir Cornwallis Ricketts; and the manor and estate of Kirkby Fleetham to H. E. Waller, Esq., who would have been heir-at-law to all the landed property, in case Mrs. Lawrence had died intestate.

Winchester.—During the whole of last week, that portion of the members of the British Archæological Association who, in the recent schism in that body, ranged themselves on the side of Lord Albert Conyngham, Mr. Pettigrew, and Mr. Wright, held their annual meeting in this city. The different days were devoted either to antiquarian excursions in the neighbourhood or to the reading of papers on subjects of archæology, and the evenings were appropriated to soirées. Among the places visited were Rumsey, Netley Abbey, Romney Abbey Church, Bittern Manor-house, the site of the Roman station, Clamentum, &c. Among those who attended the meeting were, Sir W. Betham, Ulster King of Arms, Sir J. Annesley, Sir F. Myers, Mr. Planché, Mr. I. G. Akerman, Mr. Kempe, Dr. Lee, Mr. Halliwell, Mr. Haigh, of Leeds, Mr. M. Farquhar Tupper, Mr. Jerdan, Mr. Cressy, Mr. Waller, Rev. S. Isaacson, Rev. A. B. Hutchins, Mr. East, M.P., the Mayor, &c. The meeting, however, was not supported by the citizens and clergy of the city, and nearly all who were present were strangers whom the meeting had drawn together from distant parts of the country.

Windsor.—The Commissioners of Woods and Forests have determined upon several erections in the Home and Great Parks at Windsor, according to the designs by Mr. Blore, the architect. An extensive lodge is to be erected at the entrance of the Great Park, close to Cumberland-lodge. The gardener's cottage, close to Adelaide-lodge, in the Home Park, is to be taken down, and a picturesque building erected, to harmonise in style with Adelaide-lodge. Flying-barn, the residence of the fisherman in charge of Virginia-water, and the fishery at Cumberland-lodge, are also to be taken down, and rebuilt in the Elizabethan style. Several other alterations and improvements are in contemplation.

The following is a copy of the report of the select committee appointed by the House of Lords "to inquire into the allegations of the petition of Henry Bruce, of Mincing-lane, merchant, and two petitions of George Pryme, of Cambridge, Esq, also a petition of certain subscribers of the London and York Railway," presented on Saturday to the House of Lords:—"The committee have proceeded to inquire into the circumstances referred to in the petitions referred to them, and have examined several witnesses, and they are of opinion that the evidence taken before them is sufficient to induce them to recommend to the House that the Bill should not be allowed to be read a second time until a further investigation has taken place; but, as their inquiries cannot be brought to a close during the present session of Parliament, they do not propose to report the evidence taken before them to the House. That in the petition of Henry Bruce, presented to this House on the 4th instant, and referred to this committee, are included two lists; the first contains 35 names subscribed, objected to 'in respect to notices or descriptions of places of abode as fictitious or false;' the second list contains 30 names of persons who are alleged, 'from their circumstances or station of life, to be utterly irresponsible and unable to pay the several sums subscribed by them.' In the second petition, presented to this House on the 5th of August, 21 persons, whose names appear on the lists already alluded to, have explicitly denied the allegations made against them, and have requested that, if the House think fit to direct an investigation of the allegations of the petition of Henry Bruce, the same may be made without delay; but the fullest inquiry into the circumstances the committee felt ought to take place into this branch of the subject, so as to allow these last-named petitioners an immediate opportunity of exonerating themselves from the charges brought against them. The agents on both sides were informed of this determination of the committee, and were allowed to produce evidence on the subject, but some of the parties did not appear. The committee have, however, been enabled to investigate the following cases, in which the allegations contained in the said petitions have not been sustained." [The names of the parties are then inserted, to the number of 13.] The report then proceeds to state, "that the opposers of the Bill have withdrawn all imputation against the following parties." [This list comprises the names of 20 subscribers.] "The committee cannot conclude without expressing their disapprobation of the hasty and inconsiderate manner in which personal abuse has been brought forward against parties who appear, in several cases, from the admission of the opposers of the bill themselves, and in others, upon investigation, to be free from all imputation." The committee of the House of Commons also presented their report on Saturday, to the following effect:—"That the petition of Mr. Bruce alleged charges against parties named, which were classed under two heads. The first class of charges applied to persons who were said to have given false and fictitious names of places of abode when they signed the Parliamentary contract. Under the second class it was alleged that the parties were unable to pay the sums for which they had subscribed the deed. There was also a third class, which had reference to a general allegation, false and fictitious descriptions, and inability to pay the deposits for which the parties made themselves responsible. Previous to the committee inquiring into the first two classes of allegations, Mr. Bruce withdrew a large number of names, and expressed his sorrow for having introduced them into his petition, but said he had been induced to do so in accordance with the advice given to him by his solicitor and agents. The committee proceeded to inquire into the first two classes of allegations, and came to the conclusion that in some of the cases the charges made, both as respects the incorrectness of the names of the parties, and of the descriptions given of their places of abode, and also of the liability of certain parties to pay the deposits for which they had subscribed their names, were proved. The committee likewise reported that in cases of several other parties against whom similar allegations like those just referred to were made, the charges were not sustained. They also reported that several cases were postponed in consequence of absence of witnesses and the non-attendance of parties. The committee did not go into the third head of charges contained in the petition, that which related to the general allegation of fraud, &c. The committee then stated that, considering the case as it stood before them, they were of opinion that 'Mr. Bruce had abused the right of petition,' inasmuch as he had made charges against parties which were not founded on fact. The committee came to no resolution as to resuming the inquiry next session." Such are, it is understood, the main features of the report of the Commons committee. It is said that some of the cases submitted were of an exceedingly curious character, and created no little amusement amongst the members of the committee. It was shown that in certain cases clerks and porters subscribed the Parliamentary contract for parties who, although not named, were said to be perfectly responsible for the amount signed for.—On Saturday the half-yearly meeting of the South Western Company was held at Nine Elms. The report stated that the accounts show a progressive improvement in the traffic, the available balance being 86,733*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.* out of which the directors recommend a dividend of 37*s.* 6*d.* per share, subject to the Income-tax, being 5*s.* per share, or 14 per cent. more than the dividend declared for the corresponding half of last year. The report was adopted after some discussion on the propriety of a further reduction of fares. The directors in this document congratulate the proprietors on the passing of the Act for extending the line to Waterloo and Hungerford Bridges having received the royal assent, and on the passing of the Act for making a railway to Richmond, since arrangements have been made for working the line by this Company. The Bill introduced by the Brighton Company for connecting the two companies by the Wandsworth branch, which would have had a favourable influence on their Lambeth extension, had been lost in the Commons, but the directors believe the application will be renewed next session with more success. The line from Southampton to Dorchester, towards which this Company have subscribed 325,000*l.*, has been authorised by Parliament, and the terms on which this Company are to become the perpetual lessees of the line are already discussed and arranged. The directors regret that a successful result has not attended the application for the Guildford, Chichester, Portsmouth, and Fareham line; which, relying on the reports of the Board of Trade and the merits of the line, they had confidently expected. The House, however, has since referred the matter to the consideration of a fresh committee in the ensuing session, when the directors trust that the strength of their case will insure a favourable result. With respect to the new lines, the directors intend to recommend the making of lines from Basingstoke to Salisbury, from the Salisbury branch at Romsey to the Southampton and Dorchester line at Redbridge, a branch to Alton, and an extension from Waterloo to London Bridge, should further examination justify it. The attention of the directors has been called to a project for the formation of a central railway station at Charing-cross, which they have agreed to subscribe to, subject to the approval of the proprietors and Mr. Locke, their engineer, and to its receiving the support of other leading companies.—The London and Birmingham Company held their half-yearly meeting last week. The report exhibited a great increase of traffic both in receipt and passengers, and a considerable increase over the corresponding half year of 1844, notwithstanding the large reductions which have been made in the company's fares and rates; and a dividend was declared of 5*l.* for the half-year on every 100*l.* consolidated stock, and 17*s.* on the 32*l.* new shares, free of income-tax. The chairman, Mr. Glyn, in his address, called attention to what had just taken place in Parliament. Their Bedford, Dunstable, West London, and Trent Valley Bills had received the royal assent, but they had received a severe blow by the rejection of the Tring line, which he did not attribute to any superiority in their opponents' line, but to their having for the first time encouraged the principle of competition. The Chairman said, that for the purpose of promoting the defence of their line, they proposed bringing forward in the ensuing year a line from Watford through St. Alban's to Luton; one from Northampton to Banbury; one from Coventry to Nuneaton, which would complete the Trent Valley line; and an extensive one, to connect Warwickshire and Buckinghamshire, from Hampton, through Warwick, Leamington, Banbury, Aylesbury, Brackly, and Missenden, to join their line between Harrow and Watford. Arrangements had also been made with the Birmingham Canal Company and the Shrewsbury and Wolverhampton Company for a direct line from Birmingham to Wolverhampton, by which, though they had lost the South Staffordshire line, they would be enabled to regain that traffic. They also proposed a line to the westward, through the valley of the Stour, and one from Wolverton in connection with the Bedford, by Bicester to Oxford. These various schemes he thought would be found not only useful as a means of defence, but a source of profit to the proprietors. The Chairman then took occasion to defend the company from a representation made by the Marquis of Clanricarde in the House of Lords, that they did not care for the interests of the public, and stated that they had always acted on the principle of first securing a fair dividend for their outlay and risk, and of their giving to the public the utmost benefit that could flow from the system. He also took occasion to express the regret of the directors at the late accident, and to deny in the strongest terms the assertion of Lord Palmerston in the House of Commons, that engines were ever used on their line for the purpose of propelling trains at the rear.—After the meeting of the Brighton Company the directors were authorised to declare a dividend of 20*s.* per share less income-tax; to purchase the Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings Railway; to purchase the Brighton and Chichester on terms which will repay shareholders the amount paid by them, together with 10*l.* bonus on each Brighton and Chichester share, and an additional bonus of 2*l.* 10*s.* per share; and for the purpose of effecting such purchases, to raise 616,000*l.*, by the creation of 12,320 shares, of 50*l.* each.—By the proceedings of a special meeting of the South-Eastern Railway Company, it appears that the claim in dispute between that and the Brighton Company for the construction of the six miles of railway west of Reigate by the latter company, has, at last, by mutual concession, been adjusted; and with that adjustment has followed an arrangement for the transfer of powers, proposed to be given to the Brighton Company, for making a rail from Ashton to join the Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings Railway to the South-Eastern Company; and thus all further contention between the directorates will cease. It was stated as a singular fact, that the rise in the value of Consols during the last few years was the chief cause of an amicable settlement of the claim between these two companies. The money originally invested to meet this claim was 327,000*l.*, which, with accumulating interest and advance in value, now amounted to 390,000*l.* Of that sum the Brighton is to receive 340,000*l.*, and the remainder will be returned to the coffers of the South-Eastern Railway Company.—Last week was as abundant in new projects as some of its predecessors. Among these is the Buckinghamshire Railway which originates in the desire of the London and Birmingham to extend its borders towards Banbury and Oxford, and to connect the district lying between itself and its great neighbour, the Great Western, so as to give it the best metropolitan access and to connect it with the North-eastern lines and the South. Its capital is to be 2,000,000*l.*, and its promised profits 4 per cent. The Derby, Gainsborough, and Great Grimsby, vid Mansfield, is to connect, at a cost of 900,000*l.*, those ports with Gloucester and Bristol, completing the trunk communication between the Humber and the Severn, passing through the rich mineral districts of Derby. The want of a more direct communication between Liverpool, Preston, and the north is to be supplied by the Liverpool, Preston, and North Union, with branches to Southport and Wigan, and the coal-bearing fields of the district, the capital to be created being 350,000*l.* The Manchester and Wigan, with extension to Southport, contemplates a similar object, travelling through clusters of coal-mines. The Oldham, St. Helen's, and Liverpool Junction is to give the inhabitants of those districts an easier communication with Manchester and Liverpool, to which their trade is tributary, and where it requires to be centralised. The Chester and Manchester Direct is to create for one million a connection between those cities, and laterally with Birkenhead, by an easy and direct route, instead of by the present system of complicated lines. The North Devon is to embrace, by a comprehensive plan and a capital of one million and a half, the chief seats of trade and agriculture in Devon. Taking a run of 120 miles, it is to unite Barnstable with Bideford, Taunton with Tiverton, and other places. The lime-burning and manufacturing district of Buckfastleigh is to be connected with the Totness and South Devon Junction. The corn-producing districts, with Wisbeach, the principal seat of it, are promised a communication with Cambridge, St. Ives, and the metropolis, by a line traversing to a junction with the Huntingdon branch of the Eastern Counties. The Derbyshire, Staffordshire, and Worcestershire Junction, proposes to take the centre of an agricultural district, and to unite Uttoxeter and Dudley. The great gauge of the Great Western proposes to take a line from Worcester to Hereford and Gloucester through Malvern, with a branch to Ledbury. The merchandise of Manchester is to have a direct sea-port outlet, by a line between it and Barnsley and Hull. The resources of Argyleshire are to be developed by a line to commence at Oban, to proceed by the bank of Loch Etive to the river Awe; to run along the north side of Loch Awe to Dalmally, where one line is to fork off to Loch Lomond, and there form a junction with the Glasgow and Dumbartonshire, and the other by Glen Ary to Inverary, and from thence by Loch Eck to Kilmun, on the Clyde. The Irish Great Southern and Western are to extend to Templemore, Nenagh, and the Shannon. The Exeter, Topsham, and Exmouth is to command a sea-coast communication for Exeter, and Dereham and Pakenham are to be put in possession of a direct communication with Westwick and East Norfolk. Other projects propose to unite Oxford, Southampton, Gosport, and Portsmouth, the Isle of Axholme, Gainsborough and Goole, and Bath, Bristol, and Brighton.—"Now that the most eventful session of Parliament recorded in railway history has reached its close, we are enabled," says the Railway Chronicle, "to announce, from our official returns, the following as the great results of its legislation. Parliament has sanctioned the construction of 2090 miles of new railways in England and Scotland, and 560 miles in Ireland. This is in effect to double the extent of the railways of Great Britain, exclusive of Ireland. The capital authorised to be raised in shares for this purpose amounts to 31,680,000*l.*, exclusive of 6.800,000*l.* required for the Irish lines, making in all 38,480,000*l.* to be applied in England within the next two or three years for our own railways. The cost of the new railways per mile will be thus very much less than that of existing lines. The average of the new is nearly 15,000*l.* per mile, and that of the old exceeds 30,000*l.* per mile. It will thus be seen that the amount to be provided for the new railways is not so enormous as has been supposed from the number of Bills before Parliament. At the same time it is sufficiently large to require serious consideration, and to arrest the progress of reckless speculation. Ten millions a year for the next three years can be easily spared by a nation whose annual savings are calculated to exceed 50 millions. By an investment of these 30 millions profitably the country will be enriched, and multitudes benefitted both at present and permanently. At the same time the demand for money, when the calls for these works come to be made, will be sufficient to put a check upon all idle and foolish schemes, such as those against which we have warned our readers. The expected revenue from these new lines considerably exceeds 2,000,000*l.* sterling per annum."—The late accident on the Eastern Counties Railway has been more fatal than was at first supposed, the guard of the train having died on Friday night of the injuries he had received. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of accidental death, with a deodand of 1*s.* on the engine and 1*s.* on the carriage. They also added a recommendation to the company to have direction-posts at all inclines on the line. The clerk of the company informed the jury that those posts had been already ordered. Another jury, who had been previously empanelled on the body of the stoker, returned on Wednesday a verdict of accidental death, and a deodand of 150*l.* on the engine. The jury also expressed a hope that no swift train will be allowed to run upon any part of the line beyond Stortford till it has become much more consolidated. They also hope that no train would be allowed to run, without at least two trucks between the tender and the passengers' carriages; and that posts may be put up to mark where the incline begins and ends. The jury at the inquest on Mr. Dean returned, on Thursday, a verdict of accidental death, with a deodand of 1000*l.* on the engine. In delivering this verdict the jury expressed their opinion "that the laws and regulations of the London and Birmingham Railway Company for the guidance of servants have been carried out very inefficiently for some time past; and, further, the jury consider that the area of the Camden-town station, and the system of rails there laid down, are too much cramped and limited, consistently with the public safety."

Dublin.—The Evening Packet contains the official letter from Mr. Lucas to Mr. James Watson, of Brookhill, informing that gentleman of the reasons which have induced Government to "deprive him of any influence and authority derivable from the offices he has hitherto held under the Crown." This document is dated so far back as the 31st ult., and fully confirms the original statement of Mr. Watson's dismissal having taken place a fortnight since. The letter may be considered as a warning to all lieutenants, deputy-lieutenants, and magistrates, that any participation on their part in the Orange Society will be followed by dismissal. After pointing out in decided terms that Orange meetings are contrary to law, Mr. Lucas says:—"It is not without feelings of extreme regret that his Excellency has arrived at the decision now announced to you. He has been informed that you have attained to an advanced age, possessed of the respect and esteem of those by whom you are surrounded. It is painful to his Excellency to place a mark of disapprobation where it seemed so unlikely to be called for; it is equally painful to him to deprive a gentleman of a trust which he has long enjoyed, and of which he has been hitherto considered entirely deserving. But in proportion to the station and rank in which you are placed, and to the esteem with which your general conduct has invested you, must be the effect produced by your precepts and example in the county where you hold an office of trust under the Crown; and his Excellency feels bound in your instance to demonstrate to the public that it is his firm determination to be influenced by no other considerations, in the exercise of the functions with which he is invested, than those which relate to the maintenance of the law and the promotion of the public welfare in that part of Her Majesty's dominions in which the supreme authority has been committed to his charge." This decision, however, applied only to the deputy-lieutenancy, the removal of magistrates resting with the Lord Chancellor, who seems to have taken the same view of the matter as the Lord-Lieutenant, as he has superseded Mr. Watson from the commission of the peace in Antrim and Down. Mr. J. R. Cleland, a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of the county of Down, has forwarded his resignation of both offices to the Castle this day. Mr. Cleland had declared, at the recent meeting of the "Protestant Operative Association," in Dublin, his determination to adopt this proceeding the moment he obtained official knowledge of the fact that Mr. Watson had been dismissed by the Government. The letter of Mr. Lucas having removed any possible doubt upon the point, Mr. Cleland has carried out his resolution. It is alleged that a great number of northern magistrates and deputy-lieutenants will throw up their commissions from the same cause.—Mr. Power, M.P., has been superseded by the Lord Chancellor in the commission of the peace for the county Wexford, in consequence of having attended the recent repeal demonstration and dinner at Wexford.—Mr. Theobald M'Kenna, a Roman Catholic Queen's Counsel, is likely to be the successor of Mr. Pennefather, as chief clerk in the secretary's office. The office is an important one, and the salary is 800*l.* per annum.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday, Dr. DRURY in the chair.—Mr. J. O'CONNELL read a long epistle from his father, on the subject of rent, collection, registering of votes, and other matters, relating chiefly to the necessity of returning none but Repeal members at the next election.—The SECRETARY having announced the receipt of 110*l.* from St. John's, Newfoundland, and other remittances, Mr. J. O'CONNELL again rose, and expressed the deep regret he felt at being obliged to move that the following London wards be closed, in consequence of their refusal to abide by the decision of the Association, viz.—the St. Patrick's, Maze, E. B. Roche, Dr. Gray, Aldersgate, Bermondsey, and Smith O'Brien wards. He wished it, however, to be understood, that any individual wardens who wished to abide by the rules of the Association would be re-admitted.—Mr. SOMERS, M.P., said that from the experience he had had of imperial legislation, he considered it absurd to expect that the British Parliament would ever pay that attention to Irish affairs which they so imperatively demanded. The representations of Irish members were either overlooked or disregarded, and it was therefore the more necessary that the national energies should be exerted for the accomplishment of an object which only could restore happiness and prosperity to his country—a domestic legislature.—Capt. BAGGERLY having read the address of the Association to the Catholics of the north, calling upon them not to interfere with the Orange demonstration at Enniskillen, observed that the Orangemen were as discontented as the Repealers, and it was becoming more evident every day that no party in Ireland could in future support any British ministry. He was at a loss to conceive what was the object of that demonstration. If it were intended to re-establish an ascendancy, he would say the days of ascendancy were gone for ever.—Mr. J. O'CONNELL said it was with considerable apprehension for the public peace that he read the language addressed to the Orangemen by the organ of that faction, which recommended those who purposed attending the meeting he had alluded to to carry arms. If any infraction of the peace occurred, if any blood were shed, he thought the journal in question responsible. He then referred at considerable length to the spy system, which he emphatically denounced, and called upon the Government to abolish such an iniquitous practice. He deprecated the reference in Her Majesty's speech to the Colleges Education Act, which he regarded as insulting to Ireland. He agreed in that portion of the royal speech which represented them as loyal, but denied that they were contented.—After the disposal of some routine business, the rent for the week was announced to be 377*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.*

TIPPERARY ASSIZES.—At the assizes recently held at Nenagh, four men were tried upon a charge of murder. Their names were Martin Maher (called also "Tierney"); Martin Maher, a wood-ranger; William Maher, and John Shanahan. Martin Maher, the wood-ranger, was not tried with the rest, but subsequently. The other three were indicted together on Thursday, the 31st of July. The name of the murdered man was Timothy Cleary, and it appeared that he had been engaged to serve notices of ejectment on the prisoners. From that service he did not return, but his dead body was found some time after in a stream, mangled in a frightful manner. The evidence which connected this murder with the prisoners was given by two persons. Anne Monaghan, a strolling beggar, swore that she saw the act committed in the house of Maher, the wood-ranger, and identified Martin Maher (Tierney) as the man who killed the deceased by striking him on the head with a hatchet. This evidence was open to the objection that the same witness had previously sworn to having seen the murder take place, not in a house, but in a grove. The contradiction she attempted to explain, by saying that she had been sworn by Maher not to disclose what had taken place in his house, and to satisfy her conscience, in her first depositions she changed the scene of the murder. The other witness, Michael Cooney, deposed to having heard threats from the accused against their landlord, and also declarations that, "It would be a good deed to put Cleary out of the way, as then there would be peace in the county." After hearing the case, the jury came to a verdict, at midnight, acquitting two of the prisoners, Shanahan and William Maher, and finding Martin Maher (Tierney) guilty of the murder. A painful scene followed. "When the result," says the reporter of the Freeman's Journal, "was known outside the court-house, the screams of the friends of the convicted man were most piercing, and for hours the sharp burst of passionate despair would break upon the stillness of the night, disturbing the repose of many." On the following day (Friday), Maher, the wood-ranger, was put upon his trial, and the same evidence was given against him. On this occasion, however, a daughter of the principal witness, Anne Monaghan, swore that, at the time when the deed was said to have been committed, her mother was at a distant dispensary getting medicine for a child, and therefore could not have been at the scene of the murder. This statement was corroborated by other evidence. The mother being recalled, persisted in her story, and accused her daughter of perjury. The jury, after five minutes' consultation, Acquitted the prisoner. On Saturday, the day after the acquittal, the four prisoners were placed at the bar, when Baron Pennefather, after a solemn admonition, discharged the three who had been acquitted, and passed sentence of death on Martin Maher (Tierney). While this was going on, it was found that the witness Cooney, whose evidence with that of Anne Monaghan had led to the conviction, had cut his own throat. His death being momentarily expected, a Catholic priest was summoned to attend him, and in consequence of the communication which he had with the clergyman, it is stated that he made the following confession:—"I, Michael Cooney, being now on my death-bed, do make this solemn and dying declaration:—The evidence I gave on the trial of the Mahers and Shanahan, for the murder of Timothy Cleary, was false. I am sorry for it. I ask pardon of God, and of them. I feel bound, in justice to them and to the public, to make this declaration." Under these circumstances, it is believed that the sentence will not be carried out, and the judge in passing the sentence seems to have alluded to the possibility of a respite as depending on some inquiries about to be made. One of the most remarkable facts of the case is that the witness Cooney, is, contrary to expectation, recovering, and at the same time recurring to his original statement, under the influence, no doubt, of a lively fear that he may be prosecuted for perjury.

Cork.—A numerous meeting of the citizens of Cork was held last week to memorialise government "for a further investigation into the conduct of the constabulary concerned in the late affray at Ballinhassig, and, further, to request that in future they be deprived of the use of fire-arms, as are the English constabulary." The Mayor presided. Resolutions in accordance with the object of the meeting were adopted, and it was arranged that the memorial should be forwarded to the Lord Lieutenant. Amongst the resolutions was the following:—"That we have not decided on our present course hastily or without deliberation, that after the verdict of the coroner's jury, we have afforded ample time to the Government to institute an inquiry so imperatively called for; that we have witnessed with sorrow and indignation the indolent indifference with which this fearful tragedy has been treated; and that, therefore, to prevent the effect that the real or seeming denial of justice may have on the minds of the people, we call on the Government to take effective means to prevent the recurrence of police outrages that may be fatal to the peace of the country."

Enniskillen.—The long-promised Orange demonstration took place in this town on Tuesday. The streets at an early hour were paraded by bands of music playing the "Boyne Water," "The Protestant Boys," and other party tunes. Orange flags were displayed from the houses with the usual inscriptions "1688," "1690," "No Repeal, No Surrender." "The glorious, pious, and immortal Memory," &c. The meeting was held in a large meadow belonging to Mr. Paul Dane, J.P., and Lord George Loftus, in the absence of his father, the Marquis of Ely, took the chair. One of the most remarkable features was the almost total absence of the Orange magistrates and gentry, whose abandonment of the humbler classes of Orangemen, formed the subject of an angry and pointed resolution. The Earl of Enniskillen, the Orange grand master of England, was not at the meeting; but the Countess of Enniskillen, having no fear of dismissal, took the place which was expected to have been occupied by her noble husband, in front of the platform. One of the speakers, Mr. W. Dane, alluded to this circumstance, in terms far from complimentary to the absentees. He said, "he was proud to see that ladies who were not natives of Fermanagh, but who had married Fermanagh men, were joining them. It showed their hearts were in the right place (cheers). They had all heard of Mrs. Caudle's lectures (laughter). He hoped that when the ladies returned home they would lecture their husbands (laughter). Let them say that there was nothing for the loyal hearts of Fermanagh but Orangeism (cheers), and that nothing else would go down (renewed cheers)." The speeches were remarkable chiefly for their extreme hostility to the present Government. The advances made to the Orange party by the Repealers of Conciliation Hall were indignantly repudiated by a special resolution. The meeting pledged themselves never to support any candidate at an election who did not join the Orange Society, and adopted a resolution "That a loyal and dutiful address from her Majesty's faithful and attached Protestant subjects, resident in the county of Fermanagh, be presented to the Queen, praying her to dismiss her present ministers from office." This address, which was read to the meeting, describes Sir R. Peel and the Ministers as "those unconstitutional servants, who are striving to induce you to withhold your protection from the church of our martyred reformers, of which your Majesty is the temporal head and the hereditary defender." The meeting separated peaceably, but some disturbance was threatened when it was known that Mr. Steele was in the town as the Repeal envoy, but at the suggestion of some of the magistrates, he took no part in the demonstration, and left the town.

Law.

Assize Intelligence.—Northern Circuit, Appleby.—Richard Simpson, charged with the murder of his own mother, was tried on Saturday, before Mr. Justice Cresswell. The prisoner, it will be remembered, had been committed in consequence of the death of his mother, she having died from the effects of dreadful blows inflicted by the prisoner's hand. He had been a farmer, and used to attend the market days at Kendal. Was almost constantly in a state of drunkenness; so much so that delirium tremens, it was said, had affected his mind to a degree which rendered him perfectly mad. The mother and he resided in the same house; and upon his returning from the market one night he beat her so shockingly while she lay in bed as to cause her to keep her bed until the next market day, when, on coming home again, the infuriated man beat her a second time. The son and mother were not alone, for there was a man-servant as well a woman in the house, and, strange as it appeared, both the man and the woman had permitted the prisoner thus to treat the old woman without adopting any means to guard her against his violence, which was of the most savage kind, he having taken a poker and fractured his mother's skull, besides doing her other violence of the most shocking kind. There appeared to be reason for supposing that the prisoner had, for a long while previous, been in a state of unsound mind, and the jury, after hearing the defence upon that ground, returned a verdict of Acquittal on the ground of insanity. Carlisle.—Jane Crosby was tried for the murder of her infant child by burning it over the fire. The particulars of this case excited universal horror at the time, and were fully noticed in this Paper. The principal facts deposed to were, that she had held her little child upon the fire for such a time as to cause it to be burnt so severely that it died of the injuries. But it had already been partially burnt by its clothes accidentally taking fire, after which the mother first extinguished the flame, and then, as stated by the other daughter, a child of eleven, she had put the living child upon the fire and held it there. For the defence it was argued, that although the prisoner was shown to have been rendered in a manner crazy from the habit of drinking, and had treated both her children with occasional great harshness, there was much inconsistency in her conduct if she really intended to put the child to death. It was suggested to the jury as being not all improbable that she, in fact, so placed the child in order to "draw the fire out" which had already been communicated to the child's body, it being a common notion with some people that such means of "counteraction" will be efficacious. Mr. Baron Rolfe concurred in this view, and the jury, after a few minutes' deliberation, returned a verdict of Acquittal.—John Graham, of Grimsdale, farmer, aged 44, was tried on the charge of having in November last wilfully caused the death of his wife at Kirkandrew, by administering to her arsenic mixed in some panada, or bread and milk. The facts of this case have been so recently noticed in this paper, on more than one occasion, that it is not necessary to repeat them in detail. After numerous witnesses had been examined, Mr. Baron Rolfe proceeded very carefully to sum up. He could not admit the objection which had been taken to the indictment. The charge against the prisoner was, that he, knowing that his late wife was about to take panada, or medicine, or milk, or all of them, contrived very wickedly to murder her, by mixing up with that which she took a quantity of deadly poison. Poisoning was always looked upon as the most odious kind of murder, inasmuch as it was generally committed in the dark, and in an insidious manner. It was quite clear from the evidence that the deceased had died from poison. The points they would have to consider were, whether an opportunity and motive existed for the prisoner to commit the crime. Had the prisoner an opportunity of administering poison? If so, had he more opportunity than others? Had he a motive? If he had a motive, might as strong a motive actuate another? The evidence showed that the prisoner had abundance of opportunity if he had the inclination; but on the other hand, it was evident that there were others, servants in the house and members of the wife's family, who had almost an equal opportunity, supposing a motive to exist, of administering the poison which had caused death. The question of opportunity was important, as it might be negatived on the part of a prisoner, by proving that he was present in some other place. But the mere fact of being unable to discover a motive was by no means the same thing as to discover a want of opportunity; because what the motives operating on the human mind were at times it was for Omnipotence alone to fathom. He must say, with the counsel for the defence, that he could discover extremely little evidence indeed of apparent motive. The learned judge proceeded carefully to examine the evidence relating to assumed motives; and contrasted it with the motives which must certainly have operated on the other hand; the long time during which he and his wife lived amicably together, and the money which, it appeared from the statement of the counsel, would be forfeited by the death of his wife. The evidence from Newcastle respecting the prisoner's purchase of arsenic, would be cogent indeed, if the identity were made out, because it would show that the party had not only procured poison, but also that he purchased it under false pretences. The learned judge then alluded to the evidence relative to the identity of the prisoner. That identity had not, perhaps, been perfectly established, but that was a question entirely for the jury to determine. As to finding poison in the pockets, he thought it hard to press upon the prisoner that fact, when the clothes had not been in his possession for several weeks, and as during that time they were accessible to so many persons; though, he must say, if poison had been found in the clothes he was wearing, it would certainly have been a strong fact against him. Though he should be sorry to believe that any one could be so wicked and diabolical as to put this poison in the pockets to secure the conviction of the prisoner, still such cases had been known; and what he had said of the inefficacy of absence of motive as a plea of defence would apply here in benefit of the prisoner; certain it was that sufficient opportunity had been given for such an act to be committed. His lordship then carefully adverted to all the minor points in the evidence, taking, as was thought, in almost every instance, a view favourable to the prisoner, and concluded by saying.—"Before the trial came on application was made to me that I would postpone it till some future assizes, in order that prejudice, which was alleged to exist against the prisoner at the bar, might have subsided. Gentlemen, to that application I did not think fit to accede. I did not think fit to accede, first, because I saw no adequate grounds laid down that might not be applicable to every case where a dreadful catastrophe had happened, and that catastrophe supposed to be the result of a horrible crime by some one. In every such case it was impossible to prevent people talking, and newspapers printing some matter connected with it. I abstained on another ground. I thought it a dangerous doctrine to hold out to the community that it is possible for gentlemen sitting in the situation that you are, placed there to discharge an important duty, to decide on the life of an individual, to say whether he should be sent to his long account, to do what justice to the public demands on the one hand, and protect the prisoner, if innocent, on the other—I say I think that it is a dangerous doctrine to have it supposed that you can be actuated by prejudice or aught you have heard out of court. You are to judge from what you have heard in court; you have soon to return a true verdict according to the evidence; if that evidence does satisfy you that the prisoner did administer this poison, and so caused the death of his wife, your oath imperatively calls upon you, in discharge of your duty to the country, to say 'guilty;' but if those circumstances detailed in the evidence, and the inferences fairly deduced from them, do not lead you to that conclusion, I, for one, feel confident, you would feel it an insult to have it thought that anything you might have heard out of court should lead you to the gross injustice of allowing that man to suffer, not from the evidence that has been heard, and which he had an opportunity of answering, but for statements made by parties irresponsible and out of the walls of the court, on which the prisoner has had no opportunity of comment. Gentlemen, you will now proceed to discharge your duty, and return your verdict to the best of your judgment." After receiving this charge the jury retired. They remained out rather more than half-an-hour, and returned, finding a verdict of Not Guilty. After this verdict, a consultation was held on the propriety of prosecuting the second charge against the prisoner for the murder of his father. It was ultimately decided to go on with the second indictment, and on Friday the prisoner was again placed at the bar. Mrs. Ruth Graham, widow of the deceased, stated that she and deceased had lived at Grimsdale, two miles and a half from Carlisle, for many years. Her husband had property there, which was inherited by witness before her marriage. The prisoner, the eldest of four children, had occupied a farm, the property of his father, for some years, but ceased to occupy it at Candlemas last, when John Beswick became the tenant. The prisoner from that time became a lodger in the house occupied by Beswick. The farm had been let for 100*l.* a-year. The place is called Kirkandrew. Deceased had another, a small piece of freehold land, worth about 20*l.* a-year. The property which witness herself has at Grimsdale is 25 acres of land, and worth about 50*l.* or 60*l.* a-year. The health of deceased had been pretty much like that of an elderly man. He had been well, but declining. His illness began on the Thursday preceding his death: and he died on the 20th May last. He took some bread and milk scarcely an hour before he went to bed. On the Thursday before witness made the cakes in question, and the dough was put in the back kitchen. The prisoner used to come often to the house of deceased, and came on the morning when the dough, of which the cakes were made, was in the kitchen. Witness then went into the front kitchen also, and sat there with the prisoner near an hour. He went away about the middle of the day. Deceased kept no servant, and nobody lived in the house but him and witness. About an hour after the prisoner left the house, witness went out to get some water at a well some distance from the house, about 100 yards off, and there is a hill between the house and the well. Left nobody in the house while she went to the well. Went out at the back door, and left the door closed, but not fastened. Remained some time away. She had a washing of clothes at the bottom of the garden, and was a good while with them. Was several times at the well, and at the hedge where the clothes were, that morning, both before and after 12 o'clock. In February last both witness and deceased were ill. They were sick, and very poorly, at about 2 o'clock in the day. It was much like the illness they had since, in June, only not so bad. They vomited. The prisoner was at their house on the day, in February, when they were both taken ill. The prisoner was at the house on the night before his father died, and sat up part of the night; believes not all night. The deceased died at 12 o'clock the next day. Dr. James, physician, of Carlisle, stated that he, with other professional gentlemen, made a post mortem examination of the body of deceased. The appearances were those which indicate the presence of arsenic, and arsenic was found in the stomach, the blood, and the liver. Had no doubt that the death was occasioned by that arsenic. Detected arsenic also in one of the cakes which were made by Mrs. Graham; and there was some of the same substance among particles taken from the prisoner's pockets. Other witnesses were examined, whose evidence was in many respects the same as on the preceding trial. The circumstances respecting the possession of the arsenic were against the prisoner, as he had denied in a statement before the magistrate that he had had any arsenic for some years. His Lordship recapitulated the facts to the jury, and in so doing, appeared to express his view of the case to be, that it was not one upon which the jury could satisfactorily believe, without doubt, that the crime alleged had been perpetrated. The jury retired from the court for somewhat less than a quarter of an hour, and returned a verdict of Acquittal.—Newcastle.—Knight v. the Marquis of Waterford and others.—This action was brought by the rector of the parish of Forde, in this county, to recover under the statute from the defendant and his tenants the treble value of certain tithes to which it was alleged the plaintiff was entitled, and which the defendants had failed to set out. The defendants pleaded they were never indebted A bill had, it would appear, been filed in the Exchequer by the plaintiff, and an answer was put in by the defendants, in which the defence set up was, that the lands in the defendants' occupation comprised the manor of Forde, which was in the rectory of Forde, and that from time immemorial the owner for the time being of the manor of Forde had paid to the rector of Forde the yearly sum of 40*l.* for maintenance of divine service there, for and in lieu and contentation of all manner of tithes arising within the manor, and that the owner for the time being of the said manor, or his assignees, had from time immemorial, in respect of the said yearly sum, used to have and ought to have the tenth of all titheable things arising within the manor. The case was argued at great length in the Exchequer, and a decree obtained in favour of the plaintiff. It was then carried to the House of Lords, and the decree was, it would seem, detained there until the parties should bring their action at law. Mr. Watson, for the plaintiff, opened the case in a speech which occupied nearly four hours, in which he briefly stated the evidence afterwards given more in detail; and it was wholly documentary. The printed proceedings in the Exchequer had been, by consent admitted in evidence, and from these, forming a large and closely-printed folio of several hundred pages, the learned council read his extracts. Sir Thomas Wilde (who, in consequence of his having been engaged in the same cause, now led for the defence), then addressed the jury. During the speech of the learned counsel, a discussion arose as to whether the late Statute of Limitations (Lord Tenterden's) would apply to the present case. It was submitted for the plaintiff, that the fact of a suit having been brought, and a decree obtained before the passing of the statute, rendered it inapplicable, especially with the assistance of the proviso in the 3d section. After a long argument, Mr. Baron Rolfe held it was within the statute, and that a payment for the time specified in the act, and under the conditions therein stated, would be sufficient to establish the equal existence of such a payment. This finally proving to be the point on which the case turned, Sir T. Wilde, in his address confined himself to the discussion of it, and adduced some slight evidence in addition to that already appearing, to show these annual payments. His lordship summed up, leaving it to the jury to say whether this payment of 40*l.* from the lord of the manor of Forde was an immemorial payment in lieu and contentation of all tithes, and whether he or his assigns from time immemoriable had, and was used to have, in respect of the said yearly sum, a tenth of all titheable things arising in the manor. Both issues were found for the defendants.

News of the Week.

Her Majesty's progress in Germany continues to supply the European journals with their most interesting topics, and the importance attached by our Continental neighbours to this royal visit cannot be better proved than by the fact that for the first time in the history of French journalism the Paris press has employed a reporter to follow Her Majesty in her tour, and to chronicle with minute precision the picturesque occurrences of her progress. We mentioned in our last the enthusiastic greeting which our Queen received on first setting foot within the Prussian frontier. Nothing that had then occurred, gratifying as that reception must have been to all classes in the country, had at all approached the magnificent welcome prepared for Her Majesty on the banks of the Rhine. In reading the details of the procession of that noble river on Monday week, it seems as if we had quitted the plains of modern Europe, and the pomp of every nation in Europe which had representatives on the spot came to hail the queen as the most splendid compliment ever paid to a foreign sovereign. Her Majesty left the Rhine on Monday last for Coburg, passing on her way through Wurtzburg, where the King of Bavaria was to meet and welcome her to his dominions; and at this time Her Majesty is, no doubt, enjoying the repose of the family circle at Coburg.—From another part of Germany we have accounts of a very different character. The religious movement which took place last year in the Roman Catholic Church, in consequence of the exhibition of the Holy Coat at Treves, has latterly been advancing with very great rapidity in most of the German states. M. Ronge, the principal leader of the movement, had proceeded his crusade against Popery without meeting with any personal violence, even in the Catholic provinces; but on the 5th inst. his denunciations of Rome led to acts of resistance from the Catholics of Hallberstadt, which were not suppressed before blood had been shed and various disturbances committed. The popular indignation, aroused by these events, soon forced to Leipzig; and on the arrival of Prince John of Saxony in that city to review the troops on the 12th inst., the people, knowing that the Prince had shown hostility to the new religion and had always opposed its toleration in the Council of State, broke out into open violence, destroyed the windows of his hotel, and hissed and hooted his Royal Highness through the streets of the city. The troops were called out and ordered to fire. Upwards of 50 people were killed and wounded, and among them several official persons who had taken no part in the riots, and were unable to get out of the way, so sudden was the order given to fire. The Prince left Leipzig at daybreak on the following day, but even at that early hour the inhabitants were assembled to hoot him until he had passed beyond the city boundaries. The people have since addressed the King of Saxony, praying for an immediate inquiry into all the facts of the case; and in the meantime there is a general belief that the outbreak will only tend to advance the cause of the new Church, and lead to its recognition by the State.—From the United States we learn that the Annexation question was settled in the affirmative by the Texan Convention on the 4th July. The "Republic of the Lone Star" is therefore at an end; all the foreign relations of Texas have been closed; and the frontier is now guarded by the troops of the United States. The news of the declaration of war on the part of Mexico turns out to be premature, and there is no probability of any disturbance in that quarter. A dreadful fire in New York, which has destroyed property to the amount of a million and half pounds sterling, and another fire at St. John's, New Brunswick, which has destroyed 60,000*l.* worth of houses and other property, are melancholy sequels of the many similar calamities which have lately taken place in the North American continent.—The news by the Overland mail is even more painful and alarming; the cholera has swept away some thousands of victims in various parts of India, carrying off in Lahore from 500 to 700 a day, and even arresting by its scourge the hostilities of the rival parties which have so long agitated the Punjaub.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO GERMANY.—The account of the Queen's progress in our last closed with a description of the grand concert of 600 musicians, which welcomed Her Majesty on her arrival at the Palace of Bruhl on Monday the 11th inst. The dinner at the Palace was attended by all the distinguished guests whom the King of Prussia had invited to meet Her Majesty. The King in proposing Her Majesty's health touched every German heart by his wonted felicity of expression. The following are given as the exact words of the toast. "Sirs, fill your glasses to the brim! The burthen of the toast is a word which resounds with an inexpressible charm in all British and German hearts. One day it sounded as the sign of a fraternity of arms, triumphant upon a field of battle with difficulty gained. This day, after a peace of 30 years' duration, the fruit of those arduous days, it resounds in the lands of Germany, on the banks of the noble Rhine. That word is Victoria! Sirs, empty your glasses to the bottom. The toast is Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland. Long live the Queen Victoria, and her Royal husband Consort." It is needless to add that the toast was drunk with the utmost enthusiasm.—On Tuesday morning Her Majesty left Bruhl by the railway and proceeded to Bonn, to witness the grand ceremonial of the inauguration of the statue of Beethoven. On their arrival at the Bonn station, seven of the royal carriages were brought round to convey their Majesties to the square in which the monument was placed under its [illegible] covering. It had been arranged that Her Majesty might witness the ceremony from the Prince of Furstenberg's house, which is situated immediately opposite to the statue, and the balcony of the drawing room overlooking in front of the house was covered with red velvet and appropriate decorations. Accordingly, the the carriages were driven at once to the Prince's residence, and as soon as their Majesties appeared on the balcony, they were greeted with loud shouts of welcome from the vast crowds who thronged the square. The ceremony of inauguration was then commenced by suddenly drawing the cloth from the statue, which was the signal for a discharge of cannon, intermingled with the shouts of the populace and the cheers of the numberless students, who were accoutred in the costume of the middle ages, with jack boots and swords, and feathers. A parchment bearing the facts and date of the inauguration, and attested by the signatures of the King and Crown Prince of Prussia, the Queen of England, and Prince Albert, having been soldered up in a leaden case, was placed under the basement of the statue, and the aperture closed and cemented. With this ceremony the inauguration terminated, and the committee and visiters returned to their hotels for the purpose of refection, previous to an open-air concert, in which all the distinguished artists, assembled at Bonn, took part, and at its conclusion rose loud shouts rent the air, in the midst of which their Majesties retired. The royal party then drove to the house of the Professor with whom Prince Albert lodged whilst a student at the University of Bonn. Her Majesty alighted and insisted on being shown to the room which the Prince formerly occupied, and minutely inspected it with the greatest interest. Their Majesties followed by the distinguished visitors at Bruhl, then drove to the Observatory, and from thence to the railway, in which they at once started for the Palace at Bruhl, to partake of an early dinner at four o'clock, in order to enable them to repair to Cologne to see the fireworks in the evening. Her Majesty looked remarkably well, and was received everywhere with the most enthusiastic demonstrations of respectful welcome. The Prince had also recovered his good looks, and had apparently got over the effects of the sea voyage. The fireworks in the evening formed the most magnificent display ever witnessed on any river of Europe. The account written on the spot by the reporter of the Times says: "As soon as twilight began, the massive outline of the antique city of Cologne was traced dimly on the darkness. Lines of twinkling brightness were seen stealing like liquid gold along its front, as house after house became illuminated. It was but a few minutes that passed before the whole mass shone with light, developing the outlines of the architecture, and indicating in bold and bright relief upon the gloom beyond the great features of this part of the city. A little longer, and the lines of brightness might be seen shooting across the Rhine, as the illumination was communicated to the Bridge of Boats; again a little longer and the tête du pont on the opposite bank to Cologne was kindled up into brilliancy by the same almost magic influence. Running along the shores of the river the eye perceived the twinkle of the innumerable lights on either side, dotting the darkness like diamonds, till the line of arrowy silver was lost in another and greater blaze of splendour on the upper part of the river, about a mile and a half above the Bridge of Boats. The surface of the river blazed too with artificial lights of dazzling brilliancy, and on the eastern shore along the banks, besides the lamps that twinkled from the masts of every vessel lying alongside, the hotels were all lined in front with little globes of exquisite transparency, in colours of more than Chinese variety. The whole vast space thus framed in light sparkled and twinkled like a firmament. This was beautiful in the extreme, but it was to be succeeded by what was far more grand and striking. A rocket from the upper end of the river, in the direction of Bruhl, made the thousands of spectators who lined the shores and crowded the windows of the houses aware that the approach of the Queen might soon be expected. Other rockets from the Bridge of Boats immediately answered the signal, and in a minute or two after, a large steam-vessel (the Princess of Prussia, belonging to the Dusseldorf Company) was seen gliding slowly up the Rhine in the direction of Bruhl, her masts bearing signals of various colours, and her cabins and saloons literally a blaze of light. Rockets of all the most brilliant colours shot up instantaneously from all parts of the horizon, forming, as they bent gracefully towards a centre in the high upper air, a canopy of brief splendour. The steam-vessel proceeded up the river as far as St. Tremond, the place at which Her Majesty was to embark on coming from Bruhl, and during the interval that elapsed a dead silence prevailed among the orderly spectators. A quarter of an hour or 20 minutes afterwards a rocket shot up from the quarter to which the steamer had gone. This was the signal for the commencement of the grand reception, and grand it was in the extreme. The rocket immediately preceded the appearance of the steamer which bore Her Majesty and her Royal host. Instantaneously, as if one will had animated all those who took part in the spectacle, the whole firmament was in a blaze of light. Rockets and other feux d'artifice appeared in every direction, and salvos of artillery were fired on all sides. The Prussian troops, who lined both shores, also kept up a continuous fire of musketry, and, from different parts of the horizon, blue, red, and orange-coloured lights were burnt in large masses, shedding a bright glare over the animated scene. This firing was kept up without intermission—rockets blazing and salutes firing from every part of the vast area covered by the illuminations—during the whole time the steamer took to come to the Bridge of Boats—perhaps 20 minutes. The sky was one wide blaze of light, and the lurid glare thrown over it by the artificial light, particularly over the city of Cologne, brought out some exquisite effects. A more striking and imposing display—from the extent of the field of operations and the inexhaustible continuity of the firing—can seldom have been seen. As the steamer approached the Bridge of Boats, a new feature of Beauty was added. Instantaneously the whole bridge became a blaze of light, looking like a rich fringe of bright gold. And as a climax to the Festbeleuchtung, the Cathedral of Cologne was illuminated." All around that noble edifice, up to the topmost pinnacle of the nave, men were stationed with red fire, shedding a mellow tint upon the cathedral, the moss-grown stones of which, being white with dry antiquity, reflected the light, and produced an effect of unparalleled beauty, giving to the whole building the appearance of being entirely transparent. After this beautiful exhibition, which cost the King and the town 20,000 thalers, the royal steamer, passing through the Bridge of Boats, which was opened for the purpose, went on to the landing place, amidst a continuous fire of salutes. A guard of honour formed of Prussian troops of the line was there drawn up. Her Majesty afterwards drove through the principal streets of Cologne, which were brilliantly illuminated and decorated with flags. She was enthusiastically received by the people.

The Royal party then went back to Bruhl by the railway.—On Wednesday afternoon Her Majesty and suite, accompanied by the King of Prussia, left Bruhl for Cologne, in order to see the Cathedral and some few other of the remarkable sights of the city. By an order from the authorities, which was previously promulgated in the papers, a procession was formed of the Dombau-Verein, or committee for superintending the completion of the Cathedral, together with the workmen employed under them. They formed in a long line, two or three abreast, in a small square near the Cathedral, so that when the Royal party came up they were ready to precede them. The carriages drove slowly round the area in which the Cathedral stands, the Queen being thus enabled to see the full beauty of the structure, which, although, as every reader knows, it is unfinished, is nevertheless magnificent. When it is entirely finished, which now, after the lapse of nearly three centuries and a half, seems probable, it will be the most splendid specimen of Gothic architecture in the world. As it now stands, there is a melancholy grandeur about the edifice. The great design of the architect for the whole building is marked out with tolerable clearness, but nearly all that is necessary to give it an ensemble of architectural beauty is unfinished. The great tower, which is a miracle of lightness and elegance for so gigantic a mass, was to have been 500 feet high, but it is cut short at about 160. It was to have had a companion tower of the same height, which, however, was not even commenced. From the top of one of the towers the Royal flag waved, and, singular to say, from the crane which was left by the workmen at the top of the tower when the work was left unfinished in the very early part of the 16th century. As the Queen now passed round the Cathedral a vast crowd of persons lined the way, and behaved with the utmost decorum. As soon as the circuit of the exterior had been made Her Majesty and the other distinguished personages left their carriages and entered the Cathedral. The bells were set tolling at the time, and their blended tones, more deep, and at the same time more soft than those of the finest organ, produced the grandest harmony conceivable. The choir of the Cathedral is remarkable as one of the most perfect specimens of Gothic architecture extant. Here also is the famous shrine of the Three Kings of Cologne. All these things, and many more, which are familiar to travellers, were visited by the royal party. After leaving the Cathedral, they proceeded to the Church of St. Ursula, to the Museum, and to some of the other objects of interest in the city. They then returned to Bruhl, accompanied by the King and Queen of the Belgians. In the evening, after dinner, a concert was given at the palace, at which several of the artists assisted who are at present resident at Bonn.—On Thursday morning the royal party left the Palace of Bruhl, by railway, for Bonn. They remained but for a brief period in the town, and then proceeded to the banks of the Rhine, where the King's steam-yacht, the König, was in readiness for the reception of their Majesties. The pier at which the royal party embarked was decorated with flags and banners, and their Majesties stepped on board amidst the loud cheers of the multitude. The King of Prussia had proposed that Her Majesty should ascend the Rhine in her own yacht the Fairy, but Her Majesty expressed a wish to perform the voyage in the König, a graceful compliment which appeared to be fully appreciated by the King of Prussia. As Her Majesty steamed up the Rhine she was favoured with a few hours of sunshine, and scarcely any rain, so that she had the best possible opportunity of seeing all that the banks of the river presented to view on either side. There were at different points some feeble attempts to welcome her, here and there a flag and clusters of people, but the breadth of the river would have rendered any attempt at display quite useless. At the different towns and villages on the banks of the river, particularly at Königswinter, at Linz, at Andernach, and at Neuwied, there were considerable crowds of people, and the houses and pier-heads were hung with flags. At these places the Queen received a very enthusiastic reception as she passed along. The good people of Coblentz had made every preparation to greet the Royal travellers. Her Majesty did not land there, but as the steamer passed slowly on through the bridge of boats, flags and decorations of all kinds were to be seen in gay clusters on the shore, while the windows of the houses, fronting in a long line of splendid hotels the river, swarmed with spectators, who gave Her Majesty a hearty cheer. The Castle of Ehrenbreitstein also pealed forth its welcome from 400 cannon, which saluted our Sovereign with 2,500 discharges, whilst 5 000 muskets from the opposite shore at Coblentz poured their deafening volleys through the loopholes in the walls. In less than an hour the steamer reached Stolzenfels, the summer palace of the Queen of Prussia, which is situate about three German miles above Coblentz. Its position is highly picturesque, perched on the top of a high hill, almost a crag, on the left bank of the Rhine, and overlooking one of the finest prospects the river affords. The Rhine becomes land-locked here, so that all the features are those of lake scenery. The Royal party immediately landed, and proceeded by winding paths, formed amidst the wood, from the water's-edge to the castle. The King and Queen of the Belgians, and Prince Metternich, were among the party. In the evening the Rhine opposite Stolzenfels was partially illuminated, and there was a grand display of fireworks. Unfortunately the weather was bad, which interfered much with the brilliancy of the scene, but still it was one of the most beautiful fêtes of the kind that has been ever got up. At a signal from the left bank the villages opposite the castle were suddenly, one by one, illuminated till they shone with an unearthly brilliancy, coming out in exquisite relief from the dark mountain behind, and mirrored under its shadow, in the calm water of the river, under the bright moonlight, which shone forth for a few moments. This was a graceful and beautiful spectacle to prepare for the Queen. The places illuminated were the Church of St. John, at Oberlahnstein, Niederlahnstein, the Castle of Lahneck, and the Palace of the Elector of Mayence. Rockets were also let off in abundance from all those places, and from Nassau (which is at some distance). There were also fireworks behind the Palace of Stolzenfels but the rain came on, and this part of the display was not equal to the other. Thousands of people witnessed the scene from all parts of the hills around, and also from the decks of steamers, which went from Coblentz and other places for the purpose. The fireworks were over by about ½-past 11 o'clock, soon after which Her Majesty retired to rest.—On Friday the weather which had been threatening for two or three days became so unpropitious, that it was impossible for Her Majesty to leave Stolzenfels. Incessant rain, which poured in torrents since morning, robbed the Castle of all its romance, and debarred the Royal visitors of the King and Queen from all outgoing for the day. The Rhine looked like a large muddy canal, Stolzenfels was a puddle, Coblentz a mudheap, and all the fine castles and crags, and fortresses, that looked so bright and imposing on Thursday were but dimly seen through the mist that rose from the river. No one could stir out at either Stolzenfels or Coblentz, and the visitors and travellers who had been deluded into coming to the spot on the strength of our Queen's proverbial good fortune in weather, were a spectacle more to pity than to laugh at. Anyone who knows what life in a German inn is, even in the best weather, may conceive the sufferings of several hundred people pent up in inns which could not accommodate one half that number. Coblentz on Thursday and Friday was so crowded that not a bed was to be had. Those who did not arrive until a late hour walked about the streets in despair, and many obtained no beds at all, but were obliged to sleep on chairs. One English lady slept in her own carriage. On Saturday her Majesty left Stolzenfels in her steam-yacht Fairy, at half-past 11 o'clock, and reached Mayence at 6. The weather, which had for so many hours been bad brightened up a short time before her Majesty's embarcation; and, with the exception of now and then a slight shower, it continued fine the whole of the day. The King of Prussia, and the Crown Prince, escorted their royal visitors to to the landing place. In a few minutes, Her Majesty and the suite had embarked on board the Fairy, amidst salutes from a park of artillery stationed in the neighbourhood. A guard of honour, composed of Prussian infantry, were present at the embarcation. While the vessel was getting under weigh, and for some minutes after she had started, the King of Prussia stood on the river side waving his hat to Her Majesty. At most of the principal towns and villages which so prettily stud the shore on either side of the river there were some efforts made by the inhabitants to welcome the Queen. Passing Oberlahnstein, Lahneck, and the other places which were the scene of the illuminations on Thursday night, the first place of any importance is Boppard, a picturesque little town, where there were some flags and a great many people, who cheered loudly as the Fairy passed. Further on she passed the two castles of Lubenstein and Steinberg. At the Rheinfels, the castle of Prince Frederick of Prussia, which looks very much like a miniature Windsor Castle in the last state of crumbling decay, salutes were fired in honour of Her Majesty as the vessel passed. The people had collected in numbers on the banks, and flags hung from some of the houses. A little further on, and Her Majesty approached the Lurleiberg, so celebrated in the romance of the Rhine. When the yacht arrived off the spot, she was hove to for a few minutes, to afford the Queen an opportunity of hearing the remarkable echo, which is repeated 15 times by the surrounding crags. At Oberwesel, a fine old fortified town, with crumbling walls, and of most picturesque aspect, there were stores of flags and crowds of people; and the same may be said of Gutenfels and the bank of the Rhine opposite Pfalz, the isolated tower rising abruptly from the bosom of the Rhine, which was once the toll-house of the river. At Bingen, where the scenery presents a coup d'œil almost as fine as that at Coblentz, there was great gaiety, animation and excitement. Here the dominions of the King of Prussia end, and those of the Grand Duke of Hesse Darmstadt commence. The flag of Prussia waved from an old tower on one side of the boundary line, and that of Hesse Darmstadt on the other side, and salutes were fired as the Fairy—which looked fairy-like indeed as she glided without noise or apparent motion on the bossom of the river—passed slowly by. The first place of any importance passed on the way to Mayence, at the point where the course of the Rhine turns, is Rüdesheim, and a little beyond it is Geisenheim, close to which, on a high hill at a distance, overlooking the river, is the celebrated seat of Prince Metternich, surrounded by the vineyards whence is produced the celebrated Johannisberg. A few miles further on is Bieberich, the palace of the Grand Duke of Nassau, a massive and rather cumbrous pile, of great architectural pretension. Here the standard of Nassau floated from the top of the palace, and a crowd of the Nassau people assembled to see the Fairy pass. They were, however, doomed to disappointment. Opposite the palace a narrow richly wooded island divides the stream, and the Royal steamer, instead of passing through the channel nearest to Nassau, went on the other side. This was the only instance of disappointment on the whole trip, for Her Majesty gave orders that the speed of the Fairy should be slackened at different places on the route, that the people on the shore might have an opportunity of gratifying their curiosity. The people of Biebrich were not so fortunate; but this did not prevent the firing of salutes in right military style. In a few minutes the two towers and the whole river front of this picturesque city of Mayence were visible: the shore lined with people, flags waving from the masts heads of the shipping, and troops drawn up at the landing place. As the Fairy steamed up, salutes were fired on all sides, and there was a very grand and animated reception—as much so as there has been at any place of the kind. Her Majesty and Prince Albert stood upon deck and witnessed the whole scene. On landing, Her Majesty was received by Prince William of Prussia, who is the Governor of Mayence, and a brilliant staff, and nearly 9000 troops lined the way and kept the ground in and about Government house, to which Her Majesty was conducted. Such a body of troops had a very imposing appearance, as may be supposed. They were mixed, Austrians and Prussians, the city being garrisoned jointly by the two nations on terms of equality. In the evening after dinner Her Majesty was serenaded with a military concert by torchlight. All the bands of the different Austrian and Prussian regiments in the garrison turned out and formed in procession. They then proceeded, accompanied by soldiers bearing torches, to the Hotel de l'Europe, which was occupied by Her Majesty and suite while staying there. They formed a circle opposite the hotel, and played the English national anthem and several airs. The effect of this may be conceived; it was like everything else that has been got up in Germany to welcome the Queen,—grand and imposing in the extreme. The illumination at Cologne, the fireworks at Stolzenfels, the reception at Bruhl,—all had the same characteristic of magnitude and profuse splendour. They were less the compliment of a Sovereign than the tribute of a nation. The Government-house had been placed at the disposal of Her Majesty, but the time of her arrival was so uncertain, and it was so doubtful whether she would sleep at Mayence at all, that Her Majesty declined to allow it to be fitted up, and the Hotel de l'Europe was engaged for her accommodation. On Sunday, Her Majesty took a day's rest at Mayence, after the excitement and travelling of the past week. In the afternoon Her Majesty and the Prince attended Divine service at the English chapel, where the service was performed by the Rev. Mr. Dunnage, the British chaplain; and in the evening the royal party dined with Prince William of Prussia at Government-house. On Monday morning the day broke most brilliantly, and at 7 o'clock the Queen and Prince set out for Coburg. Her Majesty travelled in a close carriage and four, with one postillion, German fashion, riding one of the wheelers, and bumping most ungracefully in his saddle, a complete mass of boots and blue and yellow jacket, jolting along the road at a farmer's jog-trot, a complete contrast to the usual rapid pace of which Her Majesty is so fond. The suite followed in two barouches, and the royal carriage was escorted by a troop of Prussian lancers. From the slow rate of travelling in this part of Germany, some days will probably elapse before we have any further details of Her Majesty's movements.

Parliamentary Movements.—The official declaration of the poll at Sunderland was made on Friday, when the majority for Mr. Hudson was 128.—The election for Kirdcudbright closed on Tuesday, when Mr. Maitland, the Whig candidate, was returned by a majority of 142, the numbers being for Mr. Maitland, 486; for Colonel M'Dowall, Conservative, 344.—Lord A. Chichester has been returned without opposition for Belfast, vacant by the resignation of Sir Emerson Tennent.—There are three candidates for Southwark, Mr. Pilcher, the late Sheriff, Sir W. Molesworth, and Mr. Miall, the Editor of the Nonconformist, dissenting newspaper. Mr. D. W. Harvey has declined to come forward, stating, in answer to the requisition presented to him, that, until he was as independent in circumstances as he was in principle, he would not again enter the House of Commons.

Foreign.

France.—The Paris papers during the past week have been filled with comments on a speech delivered by M. Guizot, on the 10th inst., at a public dinner given to him by his constituents, at St. Pierre, in Normandy. The fête was one of great enthusiasm, and a sufficient proof of the Minister's popularity in the district. Dinner being ended, the Prefect of Calvados proposed the health of the King, which was received with loud and continued applause. M. Legrand, after some minutes, rose and proposed, in a long and highly complimentary speech, the health of M. Guizot. In his reply M. Guizot dwelt upon the great advantages which had resulted from the revolution of 1830, and the Conservative policy pursued by the Government since that period. "You assist," he said, "in the debates of the Chambers; do you think anything is wanting to the liberty of the tribune? You read the newspapers; does the liberty of the press appear to you to be in any way shackled

You make frequent elections; do you perceive them fraught with corruption or violence? Do you consider yourselves corrupted men? Have you not, on the contrary, the feeling, the certainty, that you profit, that you enjoy with the most perfect security all your liberties and their fruits? And abroad do you not clearly perceive that the end of the great revolution of 1830 is actually attained—that the Government of your country is not only perfectly independent in Europe, but that Europe, Governments and people, hold it in the highest consideration, and in all circumstances see the necessity of attaching weight to our decisions? Are not those constitutional states around us—Belgium, Spain, and Greece, which Europe has respected as though they were ourselves, so many living proofs of the action of the influence, and I may further say of the merited ascendency, that France and her Government exercise without, to the advantage of a liberal and moderate policy, which comprehends at once the new wants of men and the conditions of social order! And all this has been accomplished without violence, without war. We have succeeded in founding a new Government within by legality, and abroad by peace. I do not hesitate to say that we ought to be satisfied and proud of our Government. It is to the King, gentlemen, to his wisdom and his devotedness to his country, that the first homages of public gratitude are due. (Cries of "Bravo!" "Vive le Roi!") May our attachment and gratitude, gentlemen, be the return for this Royal self-devotion!"—The declaration of war by Mexico against the United States is, however, the great point discussed in the Paris papers. La Presse regards that act as a puerile demonstration; calculates upon the support of Mexico by Great Britain, and recommends that France observe in the contest the strictest neutrality. The other Opposition prints discuss the matter pretty much in the same strain; some of them, however, with less good taste and good feeling. Their articles concur in censuring the French Government for having seconded England in its efforts to prevent the annexation; and very few of them consider that a resistance to it on the part of Mexico has a chance of success. The visit of Her Majesty Queen Victoria to Germany has attracted much attention in France. For nearly the first time in the history of French journalism, the Paris press appears to have employed reporters and correspondents to follow Her Majesty in her tour, and hitherto they have performed their duty with commendable candour and good feeling.—A letter from Toulon, quoted by the Courrier Francais, states that fresh incendiary attempts have been made at that port. On the 11th and 12th several matches similar to those found at the Mourillon were discovered in various parts of the arsenal, and the active vigilance kept up there is stated to have alone prevented their being set fire to. One of the matches had been placed under a frigate which is on the stocks. By a Republican print, the Réforme, both the Mourillon fire and that which took place some months ago at Algiers, are, with very little hesitation, imputed to the instigation of our Government. "By what strange coincidence," it asks, "were the two ports of Algiers and Toulon visited with a catastrophe almost simultaneously? In times of old that double misfortune would have been ascribed to the influence of some God, angry at the grandeur of France. How are we to account for it now-a-days? Algiers and Toulon are like two great arms with which France encircles the Mediterranean, that centre of so many interests. Among the nations of Europe assisting at the development of our power on that sea, there is one who views that development with chagrin, because of its rival interests. That nation is doomed by its position and fortune to regard as a blessing every misfortune that befalls our country. Algiers and Toulon destroyed by fire or by an explosion would be far more profitable than two signal victories, for the preponderance of Gibraltar would thereby be insured for at least half a century. The Mediterranean, where France is beginning to rule, would become an English sea. The road to the East, to that region of wealth and splendour, would exclusively belong to Great Britain. We do not mean to apply to those two circumstances the doctrine of the Roman law, which ascribed the commission of a crime to him who was to benefit by it; but there are in the affair ample reasons for awakening our liveliest solicitude. Should not a Government, jealous of our national interests, endeavour more than ever to guarantee them from catastrophes which would seem to reveal the most odious designs? Can the nation hear in future without a very legitimate distrust those professions of friendship exchanged on both sides of the Channel?" The National, in a long article on the fire, repeats and obviously credits the hypothesis that it was raised to cover delinquencies of employés, deficits of stock, and other abuses. A few of the provincial journals—in the interest, probably, of the criminals—continue indirectly to ascribe the calamity to "foreigners."—The Débats announces that accounts have been received from Tangier of the 6th inst., which state that the ratifications of the treaty of Lalla-Maghrenia had been exchanged two or three days previously, and that General De la Rue was, on the same day, to leave Tangier on his return to France. It has been reported for some days past, in Paris, that the Government had resolved to recall Marshal Bugeaud from Algeria. Different reasons are given for this unexpected resolution on the part of the Government, but the one generally believed is, that Marshal Soult has at length become sensible that the violence with which Marshal Bugeaud administered the affairs of the colony were not likely to advance either the interests or character of the mother country. Some rumours are also afloat of a modification of the French Cabinet by the retirement of Marshal Soult, or his remaining in the Cabinet as President of the Council, without a portfolio. It had been reported in Paris that the King's health had latterly been indifferent; but it appears that His Majesty is perfectly well, and taking active daily exercise on foot at the Chateau d'Eu. The Duke and Duchess of Nemours are still at Bordeaux, and continue to receive fresh proofs of loyalty from the people. It is expected that their royal Highnesses will leave on the 28th for Luz, on their way to Pampeluna, to visit the Queen of Spain, and that they will be received at the frontier by the French ambassador at the Court of Madrid, and a deputation from the Queen. Their Royal Highnesses will, it is said, return to Bordeaux on the 5th of September.—The long-continued rains and cold weather begin to give serious alarm for the harvest and vintage. The Archbishop of Paris has given orders for prayers to be offered up in all the churches in the diocese for more seasonable weather, and the other prelates in the kingdom will probably follow his example. The cause of this melancholy state of things, this cold and rain, is, according to M. Arago, to be traced to an immense block of ice which in the northern seas has detached itself from the never-melting mass.—The Court of Cassation annulled on Thursday the decision of the Cour Royale of Paris, which declared that, there being no law against duelling, there was no ground for proceeding against M. Beauvallon for killing M. Dujarrier, editor of the Presse, in a duel. On the same day the Prince de Berghes, a young man of 23 years of age, and belonging to a very ancient family, was tried for forgery on the French Jockey Club. The Prince was found guilty, but sentenced to only three years imprisonment, and a fine of 100 francs, the jury having declared that there existed in his favour "extenuating circumstances." The new trial of Messrs. Walker, Lambert, Peyronnet, Fraser, Ogleby, Drummond Baring, and Emma Caye, for cheating at play with marked cards, ordered by the Court of Cassation, on its quashing the last judgment against the parties, to take place before the Cour Royale at Rouen, also commenced on Thursday, and lasted till Saturday inclusively. All the accused parties appeared in court except Mr. Drummond Baring, who is still in default. The Court pronounced all the parties guilty, and condemned Lambert to be imprisoned for five years, Walker and Peyronnet for three years, Fraser and Ogleby for two years, and Emma Cave for one year. They were each adjudged to pay a fine of 50f., and made liable, jointly and severally, to the payment of the costs.

SPAIN.—We have accounts from Madrid to the 14th inst. The Government has taken a further step in favour of the Church, which causes alarm rather as an indication of the tendencies of the Government, than from the importance of the act itself. It has issued a decree restoring to the Church the unsold property, and also such property as had been sold, but of the price of which the first instalment had not been paid. We have accounts from St. Sebastian of the 13th inst., but they are merely filled with accounts of the Queen's excursions in the neighbourhood of that place. The young Queen appears to have spent a good deal of her time in boating in the Bay of St. Sebastian, and strolling about the hills without her suite, and without ceremony. Her Majesty was to leave that town on the 16th, for Mondragon, where she was to take nine baths of the mineral waters of Santa Aguada. She was thence to proceed on the 25th, to Bilboa, and remove to Pampeluna about the 4th September, to receive the Duke and Duchess de Nemours. Several waggons, laden with furniture and other articles, necessary for the reception of the French princes, were sent off from Madrid on that day. It was believed that the four Ministers would repair to Pampeluna, to be present at the interview. The Castellano mentions that the decree for the convocation of the Cortes would appear in the Gazette towards the close of the month, shortly after the publication of the list of senators. Troops had left Madrid on the 8th, for the northern provinces, and orders had been forwarded to the commanders at Guadalaxara, Valladolid, and Segovia, to march a portion of the garrisons of those towns for the same destination.

PORTUGAL.—We have accounts from Lisbon of the 8th inst. The election of electors had taken place on the 3d inst., and Government was successful, with few exceptions, throughout the country. By the means employed, however, success had been purchased at a dear price. The account of the undisguised fraud and violence committed by the agents of Government is calculated to give a melancholy impression of representative Government in the Peninsula.

GERMANY.—Accounts from Germany give a deplorable account of the state of Saxony and other parts of Germany, in consequence of the religious excitement which prevails in that country, and which is every day increasing. It appears by a letter from Halberstadt, in Prussia, of the 9th, that M. Ronge preached there on that day, in the court of the Cathedral. As he terminated his sermon with the words—"Rome must and will fall," a Catholic exclaimed—"and you also, heretic," and then advanced to M. Ronge, with the intention of throwing a stone at him; but another Catholic, who was near the preacher, prevented this, and knocked the offender down with a stick. A great tumult then ensued, and the troops were called out. Detachments of infantry and cavalry appeared, and after several warnings and summonses, to which the rioters did not listen, the troops charged, and blood flowed in abundance. The German Catholics assembled in crowds in Digne-street, where the shopkeeper lived that wished to throw a stone at Ronge. They barricaded themselves in that narrow street, and completely demolished the house of the shopkeeper. They then separated, and the tranquillity of Halberstadt was re-established. The excitement, however, caused by these events soon spread to Leipsig, where M. Ronge is extremely popular, and has numerous followers. On the 12th, affairs were brought to a crisis by the arrival of Prince John of Saxony, the general in command of the Communal Guards, to review the Guards. An immense crowd of the inhabitants assembled on the occasion, who received the Prince on his arrival on the ground with shouts, hooting, and cries of "Viva Ronge," "Viva Robert Blum," and "Down with the Jesuits." The review went off for some time quietly, but again the same shouts and cries were renewed, and the people were becoming very riotous. They sang the favourite songs of the Catholic reformers, and they gradually became more and more exasperated against Prince John, from the fact that he is one of the most open and declared opponents of the Protestant Church, and that as a member of the Council of State he opposed the granting liberty to the new German Church to perform divine service according to its new forms. The review however passed off without any actual riot or outbreak, though the people were so excited that they appeared ready for any mischief. In the evening a vast number of the populace, and among them a great number of students of the university, took possession of the square in front of the "Hotel de Prusse," where the Prince had taken up his quarters. Luther's Hymn was again sung, as well as the songs from Schiller, and great excitement prevailed. At length some person threw a stone at the windows of the Prince's apartments, and the example was followed by thousands of others. The whole of the windows of the hotel were demolished in a few minutes. Fearing that the guard of honour attending the Prince would not be sufficient to repel an attack if it were attempted, a regiment of infantry garrisoned in the town was called out at ten o'clock. Some attempts were made by the troops to disperse the crowds, but finding them ineffectual, orders were given for them to fire. So unexpected was the discharge, that even those who were assisting the authorities to restore order were unable to get out of the way. Upwards of 30 persons were killed and wounded, among whom were two gentlemen in the employment of the Government, an agent of police, and several persons who had taken no part in the riot, and who were walking peaceably in front of the Hotel de Prusse. Nine persons were taken up dead on the spot, and five have since died. The exasperation of the people at the conduct of the military is extreme, for it is said that there was no good reason that they should fire. The Prince left Leipsig at daybreak on the 13th, but even at that hour a great number of the inhabitants were on foot, who hooted him till he was beyond the boundaries of the town. From the last accounts, it appears that the peace of the town was not again disturbed, but a great degree of excitement prevailed. The Communal Guards were on duty, and the troops, against whom public indignation still manifested itself, were confined to their barracks. Some additional troops from the neighbourhood were brought to Leipsig in the course of the 13th. In passing through the streets they were followed by crowds of students and others, and saluted with most opprobrious epithets. The greatest alarm still prevailed among the inhabitants. Commerce was at a stand-still, and all the shops were shut. On the 14th a meeting took place of 700 students and 2000 citizens, at which it was declared that the murder of the citizens should be avenged, but only by legal means. It was resolved to send a deputation to the King, with an address of loyalty and devotedness, praying for an immediate and rigid inquiry as to the conduct of all who took part in the late events, on whatever side they may be. The best feeling exists towards the King, but not to other members of the royal family. On the 15th the bodies of the 14 persons killed by the troops were solemnly interred. Contrary to previous expectation, no disturbance took place on the occasion, and the peace of the town is no longer in danger of further outbreaks. The funeral was attended by the whole of the communal guard, both cavalry and infantry, by the students of the university, and by the members of the corporation. Several speeches were made over the graves, and at the entrance to the cemetery. The crowd was not admitted into the interior of the cemetery, as it was feared that some disorders might take place. In the meantime the troops continue to be kept within their barracks. The rioters and their supporters affirm confidently that it will be proved by the inquiry that the soldiers were not justified in firing, that there was no riot so serious as to call for such a measure, and that a few stones were thrown and shouts were uttered, but nothing further was either done or intended. On this point, however, the result of the inquiry, which will no doubt be granted, will throw some light. The effect of this bloodshed at Halberstadt and Leipsig will probably be advantageous to the cause of M. Ronge and the German Catholic Church. The Frankfort Journal states that the German Catholics of Stuttgard have announced their intention of separating themselves from the Roman Catholic Church, because they consider the doctrines and usages of the latter as in a great measure incompatible with the spirit of the universal Christian Apostolical Church.

Switzerland.—The accounts from Zurich of the 12th inst. state, that the Diet had resolved on the preceding day, notwithstanding the opposition of Berne, Argau, and Basle-country, that the officers who had joined the free corps in their expedition against Lucerne should cease to form part of the army. The proposition was voted by 14 cantons. On the 14th the question of an amnesty was discussed, but the assembly separated without coming to any decision on the subject.

Turkey, Syria, and Persia.—Accounts from Constantinople of the 28th ult. state, that the negotiations pending at Erzeroum for the adjustment of the differences between Turkey and Persia were not likely to be brought to a speedy termination. The commissioners assembled at Erzeroum had at length drawn up a basis of settlement, which, though ratified by the Shah, is rejected by the Sultan. The town of Mohamera, near the Persian Gulf, is said to have been adjudged to Persia. It has been intimated to the Divan that, unless this long-pending question be promptly and definitively arranged, Great Britain will withdraw its intervention. The Porte has put forward a project for the pacification of the Lebanon, which is to separate altogether the Maronites and the Druses, by assigning to each of these people a distinct territory, and to indemnify them for any losses they may incur by this change of habitation. It is not known yet what reception this proposal has received from the protecting Powers. Mr. Cartwright, the late Consul-general, left this capital for England by the last steamer. Mr. Cartwright was 30 years Consul-general at Constantinople. He was greatly respected and beloved, and received many tokens before his departure of the high estimation in which he was held by all those who knew him in that place. Among others, a deputation of Ionian merchants had waited upon him, and presented him with a gold medal, in acknowledgment of their gratitude for his public services.—According to the last advices from Circassia, Count Woronzoff had left Teflis to take the command of an army of 20,000 men, and make a desperate attack against the insurgents. The Grand Duke Constantine was expected at Constantinople from his excursion to the Archipelago. The Prince was only to stop a day or two in that capital, and to embark directly for Odessa.

West Indies.—By the mail-steamer Tay we have accounts from Jamaica to the 24th ult. The papers from the different islands are destitute of any news of interest, with the exception of some feeling of anxiety expressed in several of them as to the result of the discussion in Parliament on the admission of Cuba and Porto Rico sugars at the lower rate of duty. The weather in the islands seems to have been generally fine; at Barbadoes, however, there was much need of rain, and a few showers had been hailed with much satisfaction. The railways attract much attention in Jamaica, and now that the locomotives are in operation conveying materials, the blacks are wonder-struck, not comprehending the principle of self-action. A speed of 50 miles an hour for short distances has been obtained. It is not expected that the line will be opened for passengers so soon as had been contemplated, but the works are proceeding very rapidly. The Tay brings 72 passengers; among others, the Bishop of Jamaica, who appears, by the papers, to have been addressed very affectionately from several of the islands on the eve of his departure.

India and China.—The Overland Mail from Calcutta reached London on Wednesday night, with advices from Calcutta to the 3d July, Bombay to the 6th, and Madras to the 11th. The cholera had committed fearful ravages at Bombay. The number of deaths amounted in the month of June to 998. The ravages of the fatal malady were likewise felt in other parts of the country; in the Punjaub, the Sikhs no longer mete out death to each other, but disease sweeps them off by thousands. The cholera, in its most malignant type, has been raging in Lahore and the neighbourhood, and it was calculated that the deaths averaged from 500 to 700 per day. At the date of the last accounts this dreadful disease was on the decline, after having carried off between 20,000 and 30,000 victims. The last advices from Peshawur represent that city as almost deserted. Every one who had the means of removing had left the city. The number of deaths in that place between the 30th of March and the 2d of May amounted to 4825. The cholera had reached the banks of the Sutlej and made its appearance at Ferozepore, though not in our cantonments. The mortality amongst the officers of the Madras Army has been greater than any remembered for many years past. In the midst of this direful affliction the state of parties had not changed very materially. Events in the Punjaub led to the belief that new disturbances were at hand, but there had been no positive disturbance of the general tranquillity. It appears that in consequence of the conduct of the Queen of Madagascar, in ordering all Europeans to quit her country unless they would submit to be naturalised, her Majesty's ships Thunderer and Conway had proceeded thither from Mauritius to protect such British subjects as were resident in the island.—In Ceylon the cultivation of the Tea-plant had commenced, and great hopes were entertained of the result of the experiment. According to other opinions, although the tea plant will grow within the tropics, and maintain a flourishing appearance, the leaf is said to be totally destitute of flavour, and therefore useless.—A sad accident recently occurred a few miles from Calcutta, but fortunately without injury to life or limb. The Ballee Khall suspension-bridge, the largest ever constructed in India, just as it was completed gave way in the middle, and fell into the creek over which it was erected. The accident is attributed to an error in judgment of the contractor, while making some necessary alterations, and does not in any degree affect the principle on which the bridge was built. The important subject of railroads has not escaped discussion. The Calcutta Englishman contends that the London scheme for obtaining a Government guarantee of a certain amount of dividend to a company can be of no public advantage, and that a line connecting Calcutta with the great markets and thoroughfare of the north-west provinces is the line that must be supported. There is no news of any consequence from China.

United States and Texas.—By the arrival of the mail-steamer Britannia, we have accounts from New York to the 31st July, Boston 1st inst., and Halifax 4th. The advices by this arrival are important. Those relating to Mexico and the Texas do not at all warrant the announcement put forth on the arrival of the Fidelio, of Mexico having declared war against the United States. The Annexation question was settled in the Texan Convention on the 4th July in the affirmative, as anticipated. Several companies of the United States' troops have marched for the frontier of the new states, partly to repel the encroachments of the Indians, but more to act as a stay upon any operations the Mexicans might be disposed to take; it was, however, considered improbable that Mexico would make any demonstrations, being deterred by the utter hopelessness of the attempt. Nevertheless, the United States' squadron of 13 sail still cruised in the Gulf, to act on the defensive. Emigration to Texas was going on to an immense extent, and the country promises, under the new rule, to become an immense cotton-growing district, the new crop being likely to exhibit a vast increase on any former year. Texas has of course closed her foreign relations. Mr. Ashbel Smith has arrived from France. General Terrill, late Texan Minister to England and France, has returned from Europe to New York, and Capt. Elliott, British charge, is sojourning with his family at the Mansion House, Brooklyn. So ends the "Republic of the Lone Star." The astonishing facility with which annexation has been accomplished, and the consequent elation of popular feeling on the subject have materially affected the Oregon question, so far as regards public opinion. There is no blinking the fact, that a number of leading democratic journals declare for "the whole of Oregon or none." At a large public meeting at Colombus, Ohio, the following toast was hailed with enthusiasm:—"Oregon, all or none. We have the hearts to will it, the heads to advocate it, the strong arms to defend it, and if occasion should require, the blood to spill in its defence." It is feared that serious trouble in relation to the Oregon is likely to grow out of the proceedings of the next session of Congress. Mr. Benton, Mr. Webster, Mr. Allen of Ohio, and other leading members, are expected to take prominent parts in the question; but Mr. Calhoun in the south, as well as a large portion of the northern members, favour the policy of letting the matter alone for the present, as they argue that emigration would give the whole to the United States in the course of a few years, if indeed, Oregon and California do not take the question into their own hands, and form a new republic. The fortifications of the principal seaports of the United States, the Lake frontier, and other posts, are being put in complete order and mounted with heavy guns.—The papers by this arrival are filled with details of a great fire which has devastated the city of New York, a fire approaching in area and amount of property lost the great fire in 1835. The scene of the present conflagration borders on that then involved, striking across the city almost to the Hudson river, and destroying many store-houses occupied by the first merchants in the city, some three or four hotels, together with several blocks of the finest dwelling-houses skirting along the lower end of Broadway. The fire broke out on the morning of the 19th ult., at about three o'clock, in an oil store occupied by a M. Van Doren, in New-street, a narrow avenue running from Wall-street to Beaver-street, parallel to Broadway. The exertions of the several fire companies on the spot had very nearly succeeded in overcoming the element, when it was found that the fire had communicated to a store-house at the rear of the burning premises, in which was stored a vast quantity of saltpetre or some other combustible material. A few smothered explosions took place, warning the bystanders of the impending danger, and barely giving them time to widen their distance between themselves and the burning pile, when the most frightful explosion took place, prostrating some half dozen warehouses in as many seconds, and throwing masses of burning material high into the air, which, falling through the roofs of the buildings in the neighbouring streets, set all in a blaze immediately. The firemen being prevented, by fear of a second explosion, from approaching the conflagration for some considerable time, the fire obtained tremendous head-way, spreading in five directions, and defying the utmost endeavours to extinguish or arrest it. It continued to spread and rage with astonishing fury till near 10, A.M., when its further progress was stopped, in some directions, by change of wind, in others by intervention of fire-proof roof buildings, in others by the Croton. Some 300 buildings have fallen a prey to the calamity, comprising the finest part of Broad-street, both sides, a great part of Exchange Place, New-street, Marketfield-street, and one side of Broadway from the Waverley Hotel, corner of Exchange Place, as far as the Bowling-green; also about three noble dwelling houses on the west side of Broadway. From the lower corner of Morris-street, Broadway, where the fire crossed, is no less than 120 feet wide; yet, aided somewhat by the wind, the fire succeeded in baffling all attempts to arrest it there, and would have gone clear down to the Hudson, had not a change of wind taken place. The loss by this public calamity is estimated at one million and a half pounds sterling, most of which is covered by insurance, and as the loss is divided pretty equally amongst the numerous insurance companies, it is expected that nearly all will be paid, though several will have to wind up their concerns in consequence. It appears uncertain how much human life has fallen a sacrifice; but not fewer than 10 or 12 persons are missing, and thought to have been lost. At the time the mail left the firemen were still employed in playing upon the smoking ruins, and in digging out the burnt merchandise. The explosion of the saltpetre store was heard at a distance of 12 miles, and the reflection from the flames was seen at 9 miles distant. The New York papers mention many instances of nobleness on the part of the more fortunate inhabitants during the conflagration. Many hotels were thrown open for the firemen and workers to refresh themselves, and cartloads of provisions were also sent round to the families who have been rendered houseless by the destructive element. But the calamity, mighty as it was, was accompanied by a terrible visitation in the excessive heat of the weather. For eight days in the Atlantic cities the thermometer rose to a range of from 98° to 102° in the shade. This caused an unusual mortality. In New York, during the "hot week," 474 persons died; in Philadelphia, 206. In both cities the usual average was more than doubled. Coups de soleil, apoplexy, cholera, and inflammatory disorders, produced the alarming excess of deaths. The weather has since moderated and the deaths have decreased. In addition to the fire at New York, we regret to announce a destructive fire at St. John's, New Brunswick, which has destroyed property to the amount of 60,000*l*. If it were not for the late rainy weather, which had soaked all the outside wood-work, the evil would have been still greater. Considerable quantities of merchandise were removed on the appearance of the fire, but great losses were sustained nevertheless, by damage from water and other causes.—The papers announce the extraordinary fact of the steam-ship Cambria, with advices from England, having reached Boston on the 30th, after one of the most extraordinary passages on record—11 days 9 hours from Liverpool to Boston, including her run into Halifax, and stoppage there to land the mails and passengers.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Library of the late Duke of Sussex.—The sale of the sixth portion of the library of the late Duke of Sussex, being the residue of his extensive collection, was concluded last week. The following is the result of the entire sale. It will be remembered that an offer was made to Government by the executors for the purchase of the entire library, containing upwards of 30,000 volumes, the sum asked, after a valuation had been made, being 16,000*l*. This offer was rejected, and the executors then resolved to submit the books to public competition, and the result has far exceeded their expectations. The first part disposed of consisted of the rare collection of bibles and theological works, the sale of which lasted 24 days, and realised the sum of 8437*l*. 4*s*.; many of the most rare books being purchased for the British Museum. The second portion consisted of the manuscripts, about 500 in number, and realised the sum of 3126*l*. 4*s*.; many of this portion being also purchased for the British Museum. The third portion brought the sum of 2096*l*. 12*s*. The fourth portion, consisting of rare princeps editions of the Greek classics, realised 2121*l*. 12*s*. The fifth portion comprised the collection of Latin classics, the drama, poetry, &c., and produced 2649*l*. 11*s*. The last portion just concluded produced 718*l*. 10*s*. The number of days consumed in the disposal of the collection was 62, and the total amount produced by the sale 19,149*l*. 1*s*. From this it will be seen that the executors have gained upwards of 3000*l*. by Government not accepting their offer. The collection cost the late Duke between 15,000*l*. and 16,000*l*., but great addition was made to the library by the number of books presented to him.

The Expresses of the "Times."—The rapidity and precision with which the Times newspaper on various occasions has announced important intelligence which could only have been obtained by an extraordinary and most costly system of special expresses, have long been the wonder of all Europe; but the most extraordinary exploit upon record of management and dispatch, is illustrated by the intelligence contained in the Times of Friday last, on the occasion of the Sunderland election. The distance travelled from Sunderland to London was 305 miles, in eight hours, the special train starting from Sunderland at 17 minutes past four, P.M., on Thursday, and by 10 o'clock the next morning the Times, with the result of the election, was in the hands of the citizens of Sunderland! The following is the Times's own version of the achievement:—"In the vicinity of Mr. Hudson's committee-room, in Bishopwearmouth, a carriage was in readiness to convey the travellers to the railway station of the Brandling Junction, now incorporated with the Newcastle and Darlington Railway, in Monkwearmouth, and exactly at 17 minutes past four, Mr. Allport, accompanied by Mr. Lockey, of the Newcastle Journal, who reported the proceedings for the Times, took his seat in the vehicle, and drove off amidst the cheers of those assembled to witness his departure. At 24 minutes past four, they were seated in the special train, to which a powerful engine was attached, and in one hour—that is to say, at 21 minutes past five, the special train entered the station-yard at Darlington, where the engine was detached, and another belonging to the Great North of England Company substituted. Messrs. Plues and Oxley, directors of the company, joined the special train at Darlington, and accompanied the couriers to York, at which city they arrived at 22 minutes past six, having performed the journey from Darlington, a distance of 45 miles, in 52 minutes. On some parts of the line the speed was incredible, the train at one time proceeding at the rate of a mile in 48 seconds, or at the astonishing velocity of 75 miles an hour! When proceeding at this astonishing rate the motion of the train was scarcely perceptible, there being none of that rocking motion of the carriages observable on broad gauge lines, when going at a much slower rate of speed. The operation of writing was performed with ease under these circumstances, and not the slightest apprehension of danger was felt by any of the party. Had it been possible to maintain this speed throughout, the journey from Sunderland to London might have been performed in little more than four hours! From various causes, however, that was impossible, as from the nature of the curves and gradients on some parts of the way, it was not deemed advisable to proceed at any rate approaching that velocity. This will account for the length of time occupied on the whole; though on different parts of the road the speed was almost incredible. It is also proper to state that much time was lost between Rugby and London, on the London and Birmingham line, from the inefficiency of the engine power, and the faulty arrangements made in the absence of the chief superintendent of the line. The train would have arrived in London much earlier than it did had the London and Birmingham Railway been able to advance it at the same rate as on the lines from Sunderland to Rugby, all of which are under, and do infinite credit to, the management of Mr. Hudson. Additional particulars will be found in the following time table:—

In Union-street, Blackfriars, the horse attached to one of the coaches in which the party were proceeding from the Euston-square station to the Times office, fell, and the shafts of the vehicle were broken, which caused a delay of about three minutes, which ought to be deducted from the above, and that would leave for actual railway travelling 7 hours and 27 minutes. The party left the Times office at 10 minutes to 3 A.M. on Friday, and at 5 minutes past 3 the special train quitted the Euston-square station for Sunderland, where the party arrived at 57 minutes past 10 o'clock, the distribution of the Times having, in that short interval, been effected over nearly the whole of England. This extraordinary feat is altogether without a parallel. And it is a remarkable fact, equally creditable to the sagacity of Mr. Allport, as to the efficiency of the various railway establishments between Newcastle and London, that, with one exception only, above noticed, there was not a deviation of more than five minutes from the times previously calculated upon for the performance of the journey from Sunderland."

The Sycee Silver.—The tenders for the purchase of the Sycee silver were opened on Friday, according to the terms of the notice in which the metal was offered to public competition. The result was, that 400,000 ounces were awarded to a person who had bid 60 1-16d. per ounce for that quantity only, while the rest was awarded to another firm (said to be the Messrs. Rothschild), who had offered 60d. for the entire quantity. These prices are extremely high, being exclusive (according to the terms of the contract) of all the gold above five grains in the pound troy which may be found in the silver, and which will have to be paid for separately at a fixed rate. The Sycee silver sold last February went for 5 ¾d., and that sold in July, 1844, for 5 9¼d. This is another illustration of the great demand for silver, which has arisen since the increase of railways. Not only do the foreign undertakings cause the metal to be in great requisition, but the quantity of wages incident to the domestic lines necessitates the circulation of much silver coin. The Mint is still at work to supply the deficiency which is generally felt.—Times.

Opening of Cathedrals.—In consequence of the recent conversation in the House of Commons respecting the new arrangements at Westminster Abbey, Mr. Hume has addressed the following letter to the daily papers:—"Sir—I consider the opening of the Abbey at Westminster to the public free for some hours daily an object of importance; and I am anxious to give publicity to the following letter, from the Very Rev. the Dean of Durham, which may satisfy the deans and chapters of other cathedrals, that they may follow the examples of the Dean and Chapter of Durham with safety to the monuments in their cathedrals, and with great advantage to the people of this country, who by their exemplary conduct on all occasions where they have been admitted to public buildings, have proved worthy of being trusted. During the trials that have been going on for the last 11 or 15 years, no instance has occurred in any museum or public collection where the people have acted improperly. On the contrary, their conduct has invariably been exemplary, and deserving of praise and of increased confidence. Your obedient servant, JOSEPH HUME. N.B. The Dean and Chapter of Norwich have also admitted the public free to the cathedral for some hours:—"The Dean of Durham presents his compliments to Mr. Hume, and begs to inform him that the Cathedral of Durham has been open to the public for several hours each day for the last four years without any payment being required from any one; and the Dean is happy to add, that not one instance of misconduct on the part of any one of the numerous visitors has come to his knowledge. The Dean is led to give Mr. Hume this information, by observing that in the late debate on the subject Sir R. Peel expressed a hope that the example of Westminster, which is not yet set, would be followed by other cathedrals. Deanery, Durham, Aug. 7, 1845."

The Late Bank Robbery.—Now that the excitement consequent upon the recent robbery from Messrs. Rogers' bank has somewhat subsided, all sorts of expedients, some of rather an ingenious character, are being adopted by the thieves with a view of bringing the missing notes into circulation. Amongst the most conspicuous of these is the distribution throughout the country of a new list of the stolen notes, in which the numbers of all the small notes are fictitious. A casual observer would not notice this, and, consequently, upon a stolen note being presented, and the party referring to their list for security, the number not being there, it is changed.

The Fires at Quebec.—The Lords of the Admiralty have sent instructions to the officers of the royal victualling yard, at Stonehouse, to deliver for the use of the sufferers by fire at Quebec, 4395 blankets, 100 blue jackets, 200 pairs of shoes, 190 flannel drawers, 200 pair of worsted stockings, 200 flannel waistcoats, and 400 shirts.

Hungerford Suspension-Bridge.—The directors have altered the name of this bridge, and it is now called "Charing-cross Suspension-bridge," the direction boards to which have within the last day or two been repainted, and "Charing-cross" substituted for "Hungerford."

The late Mr. Adolphus.—It is somewhat remarkable that so many of our great lawyers die without leaving a will; as is the case with this gentleman, whose personal effects have been administered to, under 5000*l.*

Destructive Fire in Aldermanbury.—A fire of a very destructive character, involving the loss of property to the amount of several thousand pounds, occurred on Monday evening in Aldermanbury, the well-known nucleus of Manchester warehousemen in the city of London. The immediate scene of the outbreak was the extensive range of warehouses occupied by Messrs. Bradbury, Greatorex, and Co., Manchester and Scotch warehousemen, No. 6, Aldermanbury. The premises have but a narrow frontage to the street, but they extend to the magistrate's office in Guildhall-yard, upon which they immediately abut. It need scarcely be added that the whole range was densely stocked with goods; indeed, it was stated during the fire that the property on the premises exceeded the value of 70,000*l.* Water was procured in abundance, and the firemen were soon engaged in their endeavours to stay the progress of the flames, which at eight o'clock had reached a fearful height, threatening destruction to the surrounding property, and even occasioning considerable anxiety for the safety of Guildhall itself, the western window of which has been materially damaged by the action of the fire. The reflection of the flames when they burst through the roof was grand in the extreme, the dome of St. Paul's and the steeples of all the City churches being brought out in strong relief. This had the effect of attracting an immense crowd of spectators, and the police had a very arduous duty to perform in keeping the street clear for the action of the firemen. By extraordinary exertions the flames were confined to the premises of Messrs. Bradbury and Co., but several of the adjoining houses received considerable damage, especially from water. The cause of the fire has not been ascertained. The whole range of warehouses were lighted with gas, and in the basement, where the outbreak occurred, the heavy goods were generally stocked. A jury has been empanelled to inquire into the origin of the fire, and after examining several witnesses, who could give no clue to the cause, they returned a verdict that it was accidental.

Night Balloon Ascents.—On Monday night at 10 o'clock, Mr. Green again ascended from Cremorne Gardens, in his Albion Balloon. There was a very numerous company, but great disappointment was experienced, in consequence of the unpropitious state of the weather, which prevented the display of fireworks that was promised, on the balloon attaining an altitude of about 1000 feet. Before the time fixed for the ascent, the rain descended in torrents, the effect of which was to saturate the balloon to such an extent as greatly to diminish its size. The balloon on being released gradually rose, proceeding in a N. W. direction, and owing to the moonlight, was visible for about a quarter of an hour. Mr. Green descended safely in the neighbourhood of Harrow.—On Wednesday night, notwithstanding the tempestuous weather, Mr. Green again ascended from Vauxhall, and well nigh lost his life, as he encountered the greatest risk in his descent, owing to the violence of the wind; and although he escaped without much personal injury, his balloon is lost. The balloon on leaving Vauxhall was carried at a rapid rate towards Gravesend, and after finding it impossible to attempt an earlier descent, in consequence of the gale, Mr. Green effected a landing about six miles beyond Gravesend. The wind raged with such fury, that the grapnel tore away from everything that opposed its progress, and the balloon after rebounding from place to place, and dragging him over the earth between three and four miles, got the car into a deep dyke, when from the escape of gas it was prevented from ascending. Mr. Green now hoped to have succeeded in packing it; but the increased fury of the wind again dragged the balloon over the earth, until no longer able to hold on, it at length escaped from his grasp.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Aug. 16:—West Districts, 128; Northern, 159; Central, 138; Eastern, 244; Southern, 195; Total, 864; males, 455; females, 409. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1266; males, 649 females, 617.

Provincial.

Andover.—A short time before the prorogation of Parliament Mr. Wakley asked Sir J. Graham if he had heard "that the paupers of a union in Hampshire were employed in crushing bones, and that while so employed they were engaged in quarrelling with each other for the bones, in extracting marrow from them, and in gnawing off the meat from the extremities." To this question Sir J. Graham replied that he had heard nothing of the sort, and he further went on to say, that "if the facts alleged were true, he was quite satisfied that they would have been represented to him. He could not believe that such an abuse existed, for, in that case, he would have heard of it." Mr. Wakley then suggested to the Home Secretary that it was his duty to make inquiry into the subject; and this inquiry having been made, the statement is entirely confirmed. It appears, from the investigation which has taken place, that the paupers are employed in crushing bones collected from various sources, including frequently the bones of horses as well as of other animals, and "occasionally," according to the evidence, some from churchyards. One of the paupers stated that such was the extent of their hunger that they are "ready to fight over the bones," and, "as soon as one sees a good bone which is unobserved by the rest, he contrives to steal it away and hide it." This preliminary inquiry took place on the 4th inst., and since the result has been reported to the Poor-law commissioners it has been deemed necessary, in consequence of what was then elicited, and from what has subsequently transpired, to continue the investigation. Mr. Parker, the assistant commissioner, was therefore sent down on Saturday last to proceed with the inquiry. The previous examination of several persons, including a labourer in the employ of a farmer (one of the guardians of the Andover district), and of Dr. Westlake, the medical officer of the union, to whom frequent complaints are said to have been made by the paupers of their not having received the necessary requisites ordered by him, but which have been charged, it is stated, in the master's report-book, have been the real causes which have led to this further inquiry. Pending this, however, the rate-payers, dissatisfied at being excluded from hearing the facts of the case, have in considerable numbers addressed the assistant commissioner and board of guardians for leave to be present at the inquiry, so that they, in common with the press, might have the opportunity of hearing the facts of the case. Upwards of 250 signatures were attached to this memorial, and, upon the guardians having assembled, the chairman, the Rev. C. Dodson, of Penton, and a large body of guardians being present, the memorial was presented, when, in answer to its prayer, it was decided, after long deliberation, that the memorialists should have the opportunity of being present in a large room sufficiently capacious to hold the whole body of ratepayers. The facts collected since the last meeting were then gone into, and after the testing of a variety of testimony, it was decided that the whole case should be gone into on Monday, the 25th inst. Mr. Etwall, M.P. for the town, was present, and several of the most influential men in the neighbourhood connected with the board of guardians were waiting to hear the result.

Bath.—On Friday last an inquiry commenced in this city before Mr. English, the coroner, as to the death of Lieut.-General George Dick, whose death took place as far back as March, 1844. Deceased was a gentleman of large fortune, who formerly resided at Clifton, but towards the close of his life he went to reside at Bath, where he kept a large establishment, and moved in the highest circles. The present inquiry was instituted by his eldest son, Mr. George Dick, who is in the civil service in the East Indies, and who has come from Mazoompore for the express purpose of causing it to be made. At the time of General Dick's death, the only members of his family residing with him were his own daughter, Mrs. Brigdall, whose husband formerly lived in this city, but is now out of England, and her son (by a former marriage), a Mr. Thomas. At the period that Mr. George Dick left England, a will existed in his favour. An affectionate correspondence was kept up between himself and father till the time of his death, after which a will was produced, leaving the General's property to the grandson, Mr. Thomas. The death of the General was rather sudden, and this fact, together with other circumstances, have tended to raise a suspicion of foul play. The coroner in his charge to the jury, said, that there were other circumstances besides Mr. Dick's suspicions, to justify an inquest, and he had therefore requested Mr. Herapath, the well-known analytical chemist, to attend and examine the intestines. The coroner said that Mr. Dick had good reason to be dissatisfied with the conduct of that part of the family which resided with his father at the time of his death, and to whom the propriety of holding an inquest was suggested at that period. Mr. Thomas, however (who was benefited by the will produced) interfered, and said there was no necessity for it, and that the body of his grandfather could be buried without one. A certificate had been given by two doctors that deceased had died from apoplexy; but on those gentlemen being summoned, they could give no reason for that opinion, except that the General died suddenly, and whilst living with some of his family. It was possible the deceased might have died from the agency of some poison. If arsenic had been employed, they might detect its presence; he believed, however, that when arsenic was used, the death was seldom so sudden as it had been in this case. The coroner and jury then proceeded to the tomb in Bathwick Cemetery, from which the coffin was taken, and opened in their presence. The remains having been identified, the inquiry was adjourned to afford time for the post mortem examination.

Bradford.—Contrary to the anticipations of the inhabitants, the Lords of the Privy Council have refused to advise Her Majesty to grant a charter of incorporation for this town.

Holkham.—The ceremony of laying the first stone of the monument, to be erected by subscription, to the memory of the late Earl of Leicester, better known as "Mr. Coke, of Norfolk," took place on Tuesday week, in Holkham. All the towns and villages round contributed their quotas to the meeting, and beside the actual subscribers, who amounted to several hundreds, and their families, there were several thousands of farmers, yeomen, labourers, workmen, and many others, attracted by curiosity, or by respect. Lord Colborne acted as founder of the monument. The ceremonial being concluded, the company made their way to seven tents, where they were entertained at a banquet prepared for the occasion.

Lincoln.—In May last the local papers announced that Mr. Rd. Hoyle, surgeon, of Heighington, had disappeared mysteriously—his horse, gloves, hat, pistols &c., being found on the Washingboro' bank, as if he had been murdered and thrown into the Witham. On Monday last, the good people of Lincoln were astonished to see the lost gentleman driven into the city in a post-chaise. He presented a very odd spectacle, being dressed in sailor's clothing, and having his head shaved and his whiskers off. The account he gave of the cause of his sudden disappearance and long absence bordered upon the marvellous. He stated that he came up to Lincoln, bringing with him 140*l.*, for the purpose of calling at several shops and making payments; having been driven too late to fulfil his purpose, he went up to the residence of Mr. East (a gentleman who had befriended him), to get his pony and go home. He stopped to supper, and about 11 o'clock at night he started down the Witham bank. When near the last gate-posts, he saw in a boat three men, who rowed ashore, and one ran up with an oar and knocked him from the pony. From their blows he was reduced to a state of insensibility, and on returning to his senses, he found himself on board a smuggling vessel, off the Lincolnshire coast; some of the crew made a proposal to murder him and throw him overboard, but that was overruled by the one acting as captain. He contrived to escape, as they were on the coast, endeavouring to run in a cargo of smuggled goods; he pushed inland, and reached Hagworthingham, near Horncastle, having only an old shirt and a pair of trousers upon him. Hence he wrote to his friends, and Mr. East immediately went to Hagworthingham, where he found Mr. Hoyle in a state of complete destitution, and having his hair and whiskers cut of. Such was the story as first related, but a clergyman of the neighbourhood, perceiving its many inconsistencies, pressed Mr. Hoyle rather closely on some points, and at last obtained from him a confession that the whole account was a fiction. The Lincoln Mercury says, that "Every one is indignant that, upon going away, he threw the neighbourhood into such a state of alarm. It is stated that he spent the whole of the time he was absent in London; and that he paid his passage to America, and then dared not embark."

Manchester.—On Saturday week a prisoner named Tweedale, in the Salford House of Correction, was murdered by a young man named Clapham, a prisoner in the same establishment. The deceased had been committed to gaol for the non-maintenance of his wife and family, and the term of his imprisonment would have expired on the afternoon of his death. The murderer was serving a term of four months' imprisonment under a conviction for felony. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Wilful murder, and the prisoner has been committed for trial.

Penzance.—On Monday week Benjamin Ellison, who was convicted at the last assizes of the murder of Mrs. Seaman in this town, was executed at Bodmin, in the presence of between 20,000 and 25,000 people, who behaved themselves in a very orderly manner. He made no confession, nor did he address a single word to the multitude. The culprit had maintained the greatest firmness throughout his trial, eating heartily of sandwiches, and taking notes of the evidence; he received his sentence with great composure, and afterwards stretching over the dock, addressed some sentences to his counsel. This indifference to his situation continued until last week, up to which time he had buoyed himself up with a hope of reprieve, neither acknowledging nor denying his guilt. He was a native of a parish near Leeds. He had received a superior education, and had moved in a respectable situation in life, having been connected with the manufactures of Yorkshire. He has left a wife and family, but in consequence of disagreements on pecuniary matters, he left his home about six years since, and had not been heard of by his family until his committal to gaol on the charge of murder.

Pembroke.—The wages of agricultural labourers in this part of Wales have risen to 16*s.* and 18*s.* per week, in consequence of the paucity of good hands in the country. A great proportion of the able-bodied men have left for the Continent, where high wages and continued employment may be had on the various lines of railways in progress of construction.

Portsmouth.—Lieut. Hawkey, who shot Mr. Seyton in the late duel at Gosport, and Lieut. Pym, the second of Lieut. Hawkey, both of the Portsmouth division, have been removed from the list of officers of the Royal Marine Corps.—Mr. Fincham, master shipwright of this dockyard, has recommended to the Admiralty the conversion of one of the old 74s into a block ship with screw propeller, and it is believed the plan of providing block ships for each port will be shortly adopted, each port having two 74s mounting 50 guns each, and a frigate mounting 30 guns, fitted with the screw, and ready for service in any emergency; an admirable proposition, and one which will speedily be carried into effect.—It is worthy of remark, in connexion with Her Majesty's voyage to Antwerp, that there was not the least restriction in the habits of the crew, the men having been permitted to enjoy their cigars or pipes, as is usual at the dinner-hour on board of men-of-war. The indulgence of Her Majesty on this occasion is spoken of in the highest terms by all on board the royal yacht, and by the navy at large.

Totness.—Our readers will recollect that one of the cases of breach of privilege which caused so much discussion in the House of Commons during the past session, arose out of an action for slander brought by Mr. Philipps, a surgeon of Buckfastleigh, against Mr. Jasper Parrott, chairman of the Totness Union, in respect of the evidence given before a committee of the House in 1844. The House of Commons, however, resolved that the commencing such action was a breach of privilege; and Mr. Philipps then, in obedience to the House, desisted from proceeding in such action. He alleged, however, that the unfounded charges contained in the evidence of Mr. Jasper Parrott had subjected him to serious pecuniary loss, and to the far deeper injury of groundless imputations against a character hitherto unimpeached. Having stated these and other circumstances in a petition, presented July 11, the House appointed a select committee, whose report has just been issued. They state therein that they have considered the matters to them referred, and have examined all the witnesses brought before them by the petitioner, and have agreed to the following report:—"That the evidence adduced by Jasper Parrott, Esq. before your committee, has not sustained the evidence which he gave before the select committee on medical poor relief on the 24th May, 1844, of which Mr. David Philipps complains in his petition as affecting his character injuriously."—Evidence of witnesses, extending to 108 folio pages, is appended to this report.

Railways.

It appears from Parliamentary returns just published that during the past session, the standing orders committee on railways sat 39 days, and had 185 cases referred (ordinary number referred 60). Committees of selection sat 41 days, and had 315 bills (ordinary number 180). The committee on petitions sat more days than the other two. 45 railway group committees sat, which, with five members in each, made a total of 225 members. There were 163 bills decided one way or the other, besides those withdrawn, those unsupported, and those thrown out on standing orders. Taking the 163 bills only, and supposing they had not been grouped, the 163 bills would have required, at the reduced number of five, 815 members. Of the committees 22 sat under six days, nine between six and 12 days, six between 12 and 18 days, three between 18 and 24 days, and five sat above 24 days; and one of the committees (that on the Northern Lines or Group X.) sat 83 days. It appears that 218 bills have been before Parliament this session. All these appear to have been read a first time, with the exception of 36, which only presented petitions, and were thrown out before the standing orders. Of the remainder, 38 have been read a first and second but not a third time, owing to their having been rejected by the select committee on the merits. Those that have been read a third time, but without receiving royal assent, are 5 in number, namely, the Cornwall, Leeds and West Riding, London and York, Irish Great Western (Dublin to Galway), Direct London and Portsmouth, and the Guildford, Chichester, and Portsmouth. The number of withdrawn bills are 10. The number passing intact through the various stages of petition, standing orders, first, second, and third readings, and ultimately receiving the royal assent, amount to 115.—The half-yearly meeting of the Great Western Company was held last week at Bristol, Mr. C. Russell, M.P., in the chair. The report stated that the total receipts to the 30th of June are 433.296*l.* 16*s.* 2*d.*; expenditure, 158,367*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, leaving a balance of 274,929*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.*, out of which a dividend of four per cent. on the capital called up was declared. The directors stated that in the next session it will be necessary, not only to promote the line proposed to connect Cheltenham with the Oxford and Worcester, but also to connect the Monmouth and Hereford with the Swindon line at Gloucester, the two measures being essential to complete the chain of communication between the railways constructed by this company and the Western districts of South Wales, Monmouthshire, and Herefordshire, through Cheltenham and Gloucester. The directors suggested the propriety of forming a branch railway to Witney, from the Worcester and Wolverhampton line, and an extension of that railway beyond Worcester, through North Wales to the coast of Carnarvonshire, as a means of giving to Ireland the best metropolitan communication. At the close of the business, it was unanimously resolved to present Mr. Saunders, the Secretary, with 300 of the new reserved shares at par, which will represent the munificent sum of upwards of 9,000*l.* The proprietors also authorised the purchase of the Berks and Hants, the Oxford and Rugby, and Monmouth and Hereford Railways by this company, and their being made and carried out accordingly.—The half-yearly meeting of the Northern and Eastern Company was held last week. The report stated that the receipts for the half year ending the 30th June last amount to 45,759*l.* 11*s.*, being an increase of 2495*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.* as compared with the corresponding portion of the year 1844; and a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. for the half year was declared. It was also resolved to capitalise the debt of the company, in accordance with the opinion expressed by two counsel, to whom this question, so long at issue with the Eastern Counties Company, had been referred.—Surveyors have for several days past been actively engaged in marking out the new line to Richmond, and estimating the value of the various properties through which this line will pass. According to present arrangements, the railway will be commenced in the Broadway, Richmond. It will then run nearly parallel with the Richmond-road, as far as East Sheen, leaving Kew a mile and a half on the left. It will afterwards cross Barnes-common, having a station as near the high-road leading to Hammersmith-bridge as convenient, and running alongside the Upper Richmond-road, will cross Putney High-street, by a cutting of from 12 to 18 feet in depth, over which a bridge will be thrown to continue the old thoroughfare. This cutting will be continued to North-fields, Wandsworth, where a viaduct will be commenced and carried across the road leading from Wandsworth to Putney, through a row of houses called Point Pleasant, across some marshy land to an extensive osier bed. Here the excavation will be carried 18 feet deep before a foundation can be obtained for the viaduct, and in consequence of the tides overflowing this part, it will be the most difficult undertaking on the whole line. Continuing the viaduct, a double-arched bridge will cross the Wandle, after which the works, meeting with little engineering difficulty, will be rapidly continued to their termination at Falcon-bridge, Battersea, where it will join the South Western. There will be stations at Putney and Wandsworth, and the whole line will be opened on 1st May next.—At a special meeting of the Greenwich Company last week; a dividend of 4*s.* 6*d.* per share was declared, the directors are to be reduced from nine to five, and expenses are to be regulated as economically as possible.—A strong contest is proceeding between two companies that have started projects for railway communication to Manchester direct. The route of road chosen appears certain to bring in the opposition of other companies, so that in the next session of Parliament there is likely to be an investigation of importance on the actual necessity of an independent line to this seat of trade. The Birmingham Company will, of course, for the sake of its own traffic, appear against these lines; and as one of them is supported by an influential body of manufacturers, and by the directors of railways opposed to Birmingham interference, a long struggle may be expected.—Meetings have been held in the country in favour of the proposed Southampton and Manchester Railway, and in favour of the North Kent. At the latter a deputation from the South-Eastern Company attended, and stated their plans for accommodating the whole of Kent with increased conveyance.—The Report of General Pasley, the Inspector-General, on the late accident on the London and Birmingham, was published on Wednesday. After stating that the irregularity in the arrival of one train and the departure of the other was the primary cause of the accident, he says that—

"Mr. Creed, in his official report, states that he considers the policeman on duty at the Chalk Farm-bridge, to blame, in not having gone to meet and stop the coming mail in foggy weather, at the mouth of the tunnel, according to his instructions, but this man explained to me that the down goods train had actually crossed his post at the bridge 15 minutes before the Lancaster mail was there, which he knew by the clock in his cabin, and, therefore, he did not anticipate the possibility of a collision, notwithstanding the fog. Unfortunately, the goods train, after passing the bridge, as aforesaid, did not proceed on its course, but stopped to have a break waggon put on in the rear of the whole, after which the number of waggons was 50, which curved so long that it obstructed the crossing from the 'siding' where the goods trains are always marshalled, which crossing laid over the up line of rails on to the down line. Whilst this break waggon was being added, the mail train proceeding rather slowly passed the bridge and ran into the goods train, smashing two of the goods waggons to pieces, breaking down a third, and injuring three others; by which the engine, as well as the tender and luggage-van of the mail train, was forced off the rails, &c."

Gen. Pasley, in conclusion, says:—

"I am of opinion that the chief cause of this accident was the neglect and want of judgment on the part of James Unsworth, the engine-man of the Lancaster mail train, who knew that the goods train had not passed him, which it ought to have done several miles before he reached the tunnel, and therefore, considering the thick fog, he ought not on any account to have passed the bridge, on the other side of which the crossing from the goods siding is situated, at the distance of 44 yards beyond it."

A frightful but fortunately not a fatal accident happened at Preston on Sunday. A train of nearly 30 carriages was starting slowly from the Preston and Wyre station for Fleetwood, and was crossing the Lancaster line, which is close to it, when before it had got half over, a train from Lancaster dashed into it. The engine threw up and damaged two of the Fleetwood carriages, containing nearly 100 persons, got off the rail, and was almost immediately brought to a stand-still by the weight of the two carriages, which hung across it like a pair of panniers. The carriages were crammed with human beings. The consternation was very great, but providentially the injury to the passengers were not serious. The accident is attributed to the Lancaster train leaving Lancaster much past its time, and coming almost into Preston at nearly thirty miles an hour, instead of seven or eight. Signals were made for it to stop, but the efforts of the driver were ineffectual to check the engine.—Another melancholy and fatal accident occurred on the North Midland Railway, at Masborough, on Saturday, by which a poor man named Francis Dain, of Rotherham, lost his life. It appears that one of the goods trains from Derby had arrived at the Masborough station at half-past 1 on Saturday, when six of the carriages laden with iron, were detached from the train in order that they might be run or "shunted" into one of the sidings. A fireman named Turner was about to do this, when deceased unfortunately attempted to cross the line, just as the train was backing. He was knocked down, three carriages passed over his legs and thighs, and he died the same afternoon. An inquest was held on Monday, when the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death," accompanied by a request that the coroner would write to the secretary of the Midland Company, and say that it was the opinion of the jury that a man should be always stationed on the last carriage of the train when shunting. The jury were also of opinion that the Masborough station was too cramped and limited for the business done there, and ought to be enlarged.—On Monday evening the express train from Leeds to Manchester, which leaves Leeds at 6 P.M., ran off the line near Methley, a station on the Midland Railway about eight miles from Leeds. The engine ran down an embankment of 30 feet in depth, and was completely smashed to pieces. The only carriages attached to it was one of the first and one of the second class, the former being next to the engine. This was broken away from the engine, and the impulse it received sent it down the embankment with a dreadful crash. The second class was not propelled off the road, but merely overturned on the line with slight injuries to the passengers or the vehicle. The total number of passengers in the train was only half a dozen, and three of these were in the first class carriage. They were Mr. Clegg, a cotton spinner of Manchester, with his wife and daughter, proceeding to Manchester. It appears miraculous that parties occupying a carriage under such circumstances should escape without dreadful injuries, yet all three, though much cut and bruised, escaped without being hurt in a manner sufficient to give cause for alarm. The other passengers were removed to town by a train which passed soon after the accident, and medical treatment was procured for those whose condition required it.—Another accident happened on Tuesday to the day mail train, on the Northern and Eastern Railway. The train left Shoreditch at half-past 11 A.M., proceeded safely to Cambridge and on arriving about 2 miles beyond Waterbeach, 7 miles beyond Cambridge, the engine ran off the rail, dragging the tender and the whole of the carriages after it. Fortunately the whole of this particular part of the line is devoid of anything like embankments, being a perfect level, and the engine had not travelled more than 30 or 40 yards over the ballast, before it completely turned topsy-turvy, with the tender, into a kind of ditch, pretty full of water. The whole train was then brought to a stand-still. The alarm that immediately ensued among the passengers, who were much knocked about by the concussion, may be well conceived. Fortunately, however, with the exception of one who was slightly hurt, they all escaped uninjured. Active measures were immediately adopted to raise and place the carriages on the line, which in the course of two hours was accomplished, and at four o'clock the train resumed its journey to Norwich.—On Wednesday an accident occurred on the South-Western Railway. As the slow train was standing at Walton station on its down journey, an explosion took place, the fire-box having given way to the pressure of steam within. The engineer, who was unfortunately under the engine oiling the working parts of it, came within the direction of the steam which issued out of the door of the fire-box, and was severely scalded; the passengers, who were numerous, were unhurt; but a person standing on the platform was hit by a piece of coke on the back of his head, sustaining only a slight injury.

Ireland.

Lisburn.—The Ulster journals are crowded with announcements respecting the general organisation of the Orange Society, and especially in reference to the demonstration which took place in Lisburn on Wednesday last, the 20th inst. Five deputy lieutenants and magistrates had signed the requisition; and the Marquis of Downshire had promised to preside. In the evening a public dinner was to be given to Mr. Watson, at the Assembly-room, Lisburn, at which T. J. Smyth, Esq., a deputy-lieutenant and magistrate, was to take the chair. The first of these demonstrations took place in a field overlooking the town, and occupying about 3 acres, which was completely filled with a very respectable body of men, who appeared to be composed entirely of yeomanry. There were also a few private carriages and other conveyances, occupied for the most part by ladies. Among those present were the Marquis and Marchioness of Downshire, Earl and Countess of Annesley, Hon. Hugh Annesley, Col. Verner, M.P.; Mr. Isaac Corry, J.P. and D.L.; Mr. Reilly, J.P. and D.L.; and a large number of other magistrates and gentlemen. The numbers present are variously estimated; but the Whig Journals give them at from 15,000 to 20,000 persons. The Marquis of Downshire was called to the chair amidst great applause. His lordship said that if the requisition signed by so many and respectable of the inhabitants of Lisburn and the surrounding country, had not been presented him, requesting him to take the chair at that meeting, which afforded him so great a pleasure, as its principal object was to condole with his friend Commodore Watson, he would have offered his services for that purpose. He was prepared to say, and he spoke advisedly, that a more unjust, unconstitutional, and tyrannical proceeding had never been adopted by any government than that which had been used towards their friend. He was not in the habit of defying any one, but if he were, he would defy the Government to prove that it was a constitutional act. He would again repeat that, if he had not been called upon to preside, but lay, he would have offered his services, which he thought would be a sufficient reply to the various opinions expressed by both sides of the press; and he would add further, that he was prepared to take the responsibility of the act. The noble lord then expressed his hope that, on the termination of the proceedings, those persons who were there assembled would depart quietly to their respective homes, without insulting or wounding the feelings of any one. The Dean of Dromore moved, and Mr. Blackwood, J.P., seconded the first resolution, asserting the indefeasible and unquestionable right of every British subject to express, in a lawful manner, his opinions of the conduct and measures of the Ministers of the Crown. The other resolutions were moved by magistrates and gentlemen of influence, and were remarkable as condemning the entire policy of Government in regard to Ireland, and especially denouncing the removal of Mr. Watson from the commission of the peace. The meeting also pledged themselves "to associate, as Protestants, by every lawful means within their power, in support and defence of what still remains of the venerated Constitution, and in the sure conviction that such a course is become essential to the security of their lives and properties, to the maintenance of the throne, and to the preservation of the empire." An address to the Queen was then adopted, praying the Queen to take into consideration the case of the loyal Protestants of Ireland, and to command that Mr. Watson be restored to the magistracy, &c. One of the remarkable events of the meeting was the reception of this gentleman. Mr. Watson, it appears, is a venerable, hale old gentleman. He arrived amid the most vociferous exhibitions of delight and attention, and advancing to the front of the platform was lifted bodily from the floor by the noble chairman, and placed on the table, where, with uncovered head, he received renewed proofs of regard and sympathy from the whole meeting. Lord Downshire left the chair as soon as the address to the Queen had been agreed to, and the meeting then marched off by lodges in perfect good order and quietness, and dispersed to their respective districts. This meeting is, of course, the chief topic of interest in Ireland, since it is considered to prove that the Orange leaders have adopted a new plan of operation. No deputy lieutenants or magistrates are to follow the example of Mr. Cleland, by resigning; but as many as possible will be mustered at the meetings, leaving to the government the alternative of dismissing them. The Newry Telegraph contains the following:—"The Marquis of Downshire and the magistrates of the Lisburn district—who so manfully convened the meeting—have set an example to the magistracy of the province which, we trust, will not fail to be beneficial in its effects. It ought to be followed. We know that many of the most esteemed magistrates of the counties of Down and Antrim have resolved to attend the Lisburn meeting. All whose hearts are in the right place ought to make it a point of honour to be present." The Warder says that this meeting at Lisburn was to be "the largest that has ever taken place in the north of Ireland." Respecting the general Orange organisation the Evening Mail has the following announcement:—"We are now enabled to announce, upon authority, that summonses have been issued for holding a meeting of the Grand Lodge of Ulster, in Enniskillen, on the 27th instant. There is every reason to believe that this meeting will be attended by the leading and influential noblemen and gentry of the country, whose names stood high as officers in the Grand Lodge, before the voluntary dissolution of that body. There are already, in connection with that of Ulster, 167 lodges, and steps are in progress for county meetings, to protest against Sir Robert Peel and his measures, in Derry, Antrim, Tyrone, Donegal, Leitrim, Cavan, Monaghan, &c., so that those who complain that the recent meeting at Enniskillen was a failure in point of numbers—which it was not—will find that abundance of work will be provided for them during the next two months."

Dublin.—The trial of Mr. Duffy, the police magistrate, for an aggravated assault, after having occupied the Commission Court for several days, has terminated in the discharge of the jury, as they were unable to agree to a verdict. They were locked up all night, and during the greater part of the time were divided half and half, but towards morning the preponderance was in favour of the Crown, the numbers being—for a verdict of guilty, 7; not guilty, 5. Mr. Duffy was then allowed by Judge Jackson to stand out until the next commission on the same recognizances as before. It should be observed that the Roman Catholic Bishop of Derry, and a large number of Protestant clergymen and gentlemen, came forward as witnesses to character on behalf of Mr. Duffy, and unanimously declared their belief that he was incapable of the act imputed to him. On leaving the court during each day of the trial, Mr. Duffy was vehemently cheered by hundreds of persons who thronged the streets through which he had to pass; the people generally having an impression that the charge is the result of a conspiracy in which the detective force have had the principal share.

The Weekly Meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday, in Conciliation Hall, and was very thinly attended. Mr. LAW, of Philsborough, took the chair. Mr. J. O'CONNELL read a long letter from his father on the appointment of Repeal wardens and other matters connected with his plan for returning Repealers to Parliament. In this letter Mr. O'Connell repeats that as soon as 70 Repeal members are seated in St. Stephen's no Ministry can longer refuse "to postpone the discussion of the terms on which to found the restoration of the Irish Parliament." Mr. J. O'CONNELL, M.P., urged upon the Repealers an immediate attention to the registry. It should form the paramount object of their exertions, and he even wished it to take precedence of the collection of the repeal rent, but it would be most desirable that both should proceed at once.—Mr. STEELE having entered into some explanations with regard to his appearance in Enniskillen when the late Orange demonstration was held, urged on Government the immediate abolition of the oath which declared the Roman Catholic religion to be damnable and idolatrous. To the continuance of that oath he attributed the dissensions which existed between the Protestants and Catholics.—Mr. J. O'Connell adverted to the recent trial, in which Mr. Duffy, the police magistrate, was defendant, and pronounced the accusation made against that gentleman to be the result of the spy system. He then alluded to the important speech of Archbishop Crolly, at Armagh, and said, that as this speech was quite at variance with the views of the Catholic Members of Parliament who opposed the Education Bill, he hoped that some authoritative expression of their combined opinion would at once be given by their prelates, and thereby set the public mind at rest. Let that decision be what it might, they would submit to it most heartily; but he hoped that the people would not be left any longer in a state of uncertainty and doubt on that important question. He concluded by expressing an expectation that the Orangemen would see the folly of disunion, and would ere long co-operate with the Repealers in endeavouring to achieve that which alone could benefit their common country—a domestic legislature.—The rent for the week was announced to be 224*l.* 14*s.* 3*d.*

Armagh. — The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Armagh (Dr. Crolly), and a deputation from that city, had an interview with the Lord Lieutenant last week to present a memorial adopted on the 7th inst. by a meeting of the clergy and gentry of all religious denominations, praying that one of the three colleges for Ireland be erected in Armagh. Archbishop Crolly's speech in addressing the meeting, was in many respects remarkable. He said: "When the Bill for establishing the provincial colleges first made its appearance, he entertained serious apprehensions respecting the morality of the students, who appeared to be left without any moral superintendence, subject to their own inclinations and propensities, at a period of life the most critical, when the passions were most violent and dangerous. Under that impression, he called a general meeting of the Catholic prelates, who were willing and ready to co-operate on fair and reasonable terms with the Government. They discussed the provisions of the Bill, and after mature deliberation, went to the Lord Lieutenant and represented their objections, and the amendments they deemed advisable. The Lord Lieutenant received the memorial, and forwarded the state of the case to the Government, who made such amendments as were calculated to afford general satisfaction. By the Bill, as it at present stood, no pupil could be received into any of the new colleges, unless he would lodge with his parent, a relative, a guardian, or in a house duly licensed by the President of the college, for the very purpose of protecting his morality. Besides, the Bill gives full power to have chaplains of every religious persuasion duly appointed, for the purpose of superintending the moral conduct of the students, and giving them proper moral instruction, at such hours as will not interfere with their scientific studies. This being the most important point in the measure, and one to which most objection was urged, at the outset, he was determined, as far as he was concerned, to give their provincial college a fair trial, which could not be done, unless it were placed in such a situation that the students, from the nine counties in Ulster, as far as possible, would have equal access to it, and which could be evidently best accomplished, by erecting it nearly in the centre of the province, a situation it would occupy, if situated in the ancient city of Armagh. If the college were placed at Armagh, he felt no hesitation in stating, that he would consider it his imperative duty to make a proper provision for the moral instruction of the students of his communion; and he was convinced that the proper authorities would make a similar provision, respectively, for the students of their persuasions."

Scotland.

The Moors.—After a long period of disagreeable wet weather, the important "12th" was ushered in by a fine dry bracing morning, and continued throughout to be in every way well calculated for the pleasure of the sportsman; and the returns received of the sport show that this favourable circumstance has not been allowed to pass unimproved. The birds, on the Scotch Moors generally, are reported to be in prime condition—strong on the wing, and affording uncommonly fine sport. It appears also that on the fells and other preserves of Cumberland and Westmoreland grouse are pretty plentiful, the pouts being fine strong birds, but the old ones, especially the hens, are only small, and not so plump as in former years. The coveys are tolerably numerous, numbers are already packed together, and being wild and strong on the wing on some moors, it was with difficulty that they were come within range of; but, hitherto, the sport has been excellent.

Edinburgh.—After raising 600 000*l.* or 700,000*l.* for churches, the Free Church of Scotland determined recently to have a college, and 20 individuals instantly put down their names for 1000*l.* each for the purpose. Since then they have commenced a subscription to build parsonages for their ministers, and in a few weeks 40,000*l.* or 50,000*l* have been raised for that purpose.

House of Lords—Appeals.—The Master, Wardens, &c., of the Skinners' Company v. the Irish Society, the Lord Mayor and Corporation of London, and the Attorney-General.—The suit in which this appeal originated was instituted in 1832, by the appellants, who claimed to be beneficially entitled, with the other companies of London, to the Irish property now remaining vested in the respondents, the Irish Society, and originally granted to them by King James I., when he founded his colony or plantation in Ulster, the appellants insisting that the property was not subject to any public or general trust, but that it was held in trust for the private use and benefit of themselves and the other companies who were shareholders in the adventure, and who were consequently entitled to any surplus, after payment of necessary expenses. The governors of the Irish Society, on the other hand, insisted that the appellants and the other companies of London could have no claim to the surplus, if any, arising from this property, which might remain after fully providing for all such purposes as the public interests of the colony or plantation required, according to their discretion and judgment in the exercise of the power and authorities given them by the charters of James I. and Charles II., which purposes, as they maintained, constituted a public trust still existing, and which called for the application of the whole of the revenue. The respondents, the corporation of London, insisted on the same proposition, contending that the property in question was held upon and subject to a public trust for the support and general benefit of the plantations, and was applicable in the first instance, according to the discretion and judgment of the Irish Society, in fulfilling those purposes; the mayor and aldermen of the city further insisted that by the charter they were constituted governors, comptrollers, or visitors over the Irish Society, and that if any question arises as to the undue application of the revenue by the Irish Society, the final decision and judgment on the subject rested with the corporation, by virtue of the powers which the charters required them to exercise over the society. And these powers of government the mayor and corporation of the city claimed to be entitled to in a capacity distinct from the Irish Society. The direct and more immediate question raised in this suit, and by this appeal, was, whether the directors of the Irish Society were ordinary trustees of the property for the private use of the companies of London, or trustees of it for the public purposes of the establishment founded by King James in Ulster. The Lord Chancellor now went into a history of the facts connected with the subject under consideration, from the granting of the charter to the Irish Society, in the reign of James I., to the present time. The great object of the charter was to establish and maintain the Protestant religion in the province of Ulster, including the city and county of Londonderry. The Irish Society had, therefore, public duties to perform: the funds of the institution were at their command, as regarded the discharge of those public duties, and they had a discretionary power in the exercise of those duties. They were public officers, and could not be called upon by the different companies in London, in their separate capacities, to account to them for any surplus funds. If they misconducted themselves, they might be called on by the Crown to give an account of their conduct. They might be called upon, too, by the city of London, but they were not amenable to the separate companies. The noble and learned lord recommended the House to affirm the judgment of the Master of the Rolls with costs. Lord Campbell entirely concurred in the opinion expressed by his noble and learned friend. —Judgment affirmed with costs.

Northern Circuit—Lancaster.—Richard Bennett, aged 30, was indicted for having, on the 2d inst., shot at the Rev. Richard Moore, with intent to murder him. The circumstance was noticed in this paper last week. Mr. Moore stated that he is a clergyman and magistrate of the county, residing at Lund, near Kirkham. Prisoner was a shoemaker at Kirkham, and had been brought before witness in his capacity of magistrate some years ago. Witness, on the 2d inst., was going down Fishgate towards the Town-hall, Preston. He heard the discharge of a pistol, and was immediately enveloped in smoke. Directly afterwards he was struck by some hard substance on the left breast. He looked round and saw the prisoner, who was then four or five yards off, on the same side of the way. Witness seized him, and told the people in the street to call a policeman. A man then came up and produced a pistol. Three other persons corroborated the testimony of Mr. Moore, and clearly proved that it was the prisoner who had fired the pistol. One of them said, that it was presented straight at Mr. Moore, and that if it had been loaded with ball it must have hit him. Another said that he saw the pistol discharged, and at the moment heard something whiz past him. Search was made in the street to find the ball, if there were any, but none had been discovered. Mr. Shaw, surgeon, of Kirkham, stated that the prisoner had long exhibited symptoms of insanity. Mr. Shaw considered that he was at times in a state of great despondency, and quite insane. The prisoner was acquitted on the ground of insanity, but it was directed by the Court that he should be kept in confinement during the pleasure of the Crown.

Western Circuit, Devizes.—George Woolford, 57, a travelling showman, was indicted for the wilful murder of his wife by drowning her in the river Liffey, near Salisbury. The case excited great interest, and the court was crowded to excess. It was proved that the deceased and the prisoner lived unhappily together, and that deceased had left the house on the 16th March, and was last seen alive on the same day on the banks of the river, crying and running fast, as if frightened. A man, whom the witnesses identified as the prisoner, was also seen near the same spot, and looking over the bridge into the water. Nothing further was heard of the woman till the 9th April, when the body was found 200 yards below the bridge. No marks of violence of any kind were found on the body, which presented the ordinary appearance of a drowned person who had been a long time in the water. Upon a coroner's inquest being held, the prisoner was apprehended at a village some miles from Salisbury, having left that place with his family for some time. Several witnesses were called to prove statements made to them by the prisoner after the poor woman was missing, but they were all to the effect that he had been looking for his wife, but could not find her, and that he believed that she had either drowned or hung herself, and that he was sure he should not see her again. One witness, however, who was called to prove a statement of this kind, proved a very material fact for the prisoner, which was that, on the 12th March, the deceased woman, whom he had known for some years, had called on him in Salisbury, and on his remarking that she was much altered and looked nervous, she said, "I have had a deal of trouble of late, more than I can bear. I am sure I cannot bear it long, but shall either hang or drown myself." The case for the prosecution having closed, Mr. Justice Erle summed up, pointing out that although it might be that the prisoner had not lived happily with his wife, and might have, by his ill-conduct, driven her to commit suicide, yet it was far from being satisfactorily proved that in any way he had been the active mover to her death by violent means; but that, upon the evidence produced before them, it was much more probable that she had been driven by despair and misery to commit suicide. He then read over the whole of the evidence, and the jury, after about half an hour's consultation, found the prisoner Not Guilty. During the whole of the trial the prisoner repeatedly cross-examined the witnesses, some of whom he charged with perjury and with coming there to swear away his life. At one time, during the examination of the landlord, he became so much excited that it was with difficulty that the judge could pacify him: he walked up and down the dock, exclaiming, "I never saw the woman that night, on my soul! as I live, I never cast eyes upon her on the Sunday! It is no use to listen to that man, he is perjured. I am innocent—innocent—innocent! He has perjured himself—he has perjured himself." Upon being asked if he would say anything in his defence, however, he answered quite calmly, "All I have to say is, that I am innocent of the charge." Upon the verdict of not guilty being returned, his fortitude quite gave way, and he fell back in a chair in the dock and burst into a fit of weeping, apparently inconsolable for some time.

News of the Week.

The leading topic of our foreign news is an outbreak in Wallachia occasioned by the oppressive operation of a new system of taxation introduced by the Minister of Finance. The new taxes appear to have proved with many people, as the working classes who had previously the liberty to purchase the exemption of the labour, finding at the same time that small taxes and much light labour should be guaranteed to them, appear to have risen in a body against the authority and the measures of the Government. A considerable number of persons were killed in the affray, and the rebellion, no sort than 6000 men, was said to be assisted on the morning of the 19th. The rebellious chiefs of course fled, but the affair is serious, and the results were speedily filled with crowds of people threatening the Government. The authorities took all means in this circumstance to aid and put the troops in a state of defence, and a fleet of steamers was ordered to the Danube. The Russian papers, which have evidently been prepared to make the most of the affair, state that the rebellion was instigated by the agents of Austria, and that the Austrian Government has given secret orders to the Austrian officers in the Wallachian service to join the insurgents. Whether this be true or not, it is certain that the Austrian Government has been for some time past endeavouring to establish a predominant influence in the Principalities, and the Russian Government is evidently much annoyed at the success which has attended its efforts. Russia has also been making considerable progress in the Danubian Principalities, and it is said that the Hospodar of Wallachia is about to be deposed under the convenient pretence that he has not paid the Russian loan. Several Englishmen who managed the salt mines have been arrested, and many Austrians were expelled in consequence. At the date of the last accounts the tranquillity of the capital had been restored, and orders were sent to have some companies taken prisoners, we may conclude that the energy of the authorities has prevented Madrid from being the theatre of a sanguinary revolution.—From France we have accounts of the disastrous storm which destroyed many of the most valuable crops in the valley of the Seine on Tuesday the 19th inst. The storm spread over a great part of Europe, and its effects in Holland were almost as severely felt as in France. At Rome, however, it seems to have expended its great violence. In that city three extensive manufactories were destroyed by the whirlwind, while all the hands were [illegible] and two lives [illegible] perished in the ruins, and the [illegible] severely that the lives of many are despaired of. From Germany we learn that the religious disturbances at Leipzig have not been quelled, and that the popular irritation has been [illegible] by the King's prompt compliance with the request of the citizens in regard to a commission of inquiry. The presence of the troops and loyalty of the people to the Sovereign has prevented [illegible] during these disturbances, and there is no doubt that the peace of the country will be effectually re-established.—Accounts from Turkey state that the Porte has decided upon a plan for the pacification of the Lebanon, which has received the approval of the representatives of the Five Great Powers. By this measure the independence of both the Druses and Maronites will be maintained, and the free exercise of [illegible] secured. We have late accounts from the United States and the Brazils. The former contain the important intelligence that Mexico, on the 4th ult., was on the point of declaring war against the United States; and there is reason to fear that this step was taken within a few days of the departure of the packet. The Brazilian news is regarded as alarming, that the forces of a troop of gaiety and excitement have been [illegible] upon by the British and Brazilian governments, and that the ample fruit of this treaty has arrived for the appreciation of our Cabinet.

Recent News.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO GERMANY.—Our last report brought the movements of Her Majesty down to her departure from Hanover. On Monday the [illegible] the royal party left Hanover at 9 o'clock, and in the accustomed order of the previous days, the procession was to consist of the escort of 14 miles an hour. The Queen arrived at Pattensen at 1 past 10; [illegible] Her Majesty proceeded to refreshment, the old and [illegible] were again in the line. At [illegible] were drawn up to receive Her Majesty; [illegible] and the [illegible] were [illegible] o'clock the whole party proceeded to Coburg, and alighted at the Residenz, where they remained whilst the school-children of the town, according to annual custom, promenaded through the streets of Coburg attired in white dresses with green ribands, the young boys being decked out in all sorts of fancy costumes. After the procession the children were regaled with cakes and wine, and each of them received a present of 12 kreutzers, about 3d. English. The Queen, with her illustrious host and hostess, and the whole of the royal party, arrived on the ground at a quarter to four o'clock; when Her Majesty alighted and walked into the field, and through the lines of children, amidst the cheers of the people. Her Majesty then returned to a tent, upon the ground, where dinner was served; and thus Her Majesty partook of both dinner and breakfast in the open air. During dinner the children danced before the tent. Then followed a gay and happy scene of youthful revelry. The children, unrestrained by the presence of royalty, romped and danced and sung, and after the dinner they burst forth into "God save the Queen," and sang some of our national airs. The Queen caused several of them to be brought to her, and addressed them in their own tongue, much to their delight and astonishment, for many of them could not conceive it possible for the Queen to speak any other than her native language. At a quarter to six this happy and pretty scene was brought to a conclusion, and the royal party retired. In the evening a ball was given at the Palace, the invitations being confined to the immediate members of the Court, and the several royal and ducal Households. On SATURDAY her Majesty, the Prince, and the Duchess of Saxe Coburg, drove out for a short time. They went into Coburg to see the museum and picture gallery, while the rest of the party dispersed on pedestrian excursions to view the beauties of the surrounding scenery. In the evening the Queen and the chief visitors at Rosenau attended the theatre in Coburg, the performance being one of Schiller's plays. On SUNDAY morning the royal party attended divine service at the Church of St. Maurice, in Coburg. Her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Coburg Princes, the King and Queen of the Belgians, and the suite, arrived at the church at a quarter to 11 o'clock. They were received by the clergymen in their robes and conducted over a carpeted way to the royal pew. The service then commenced, the church being crowded with people. The service began with the chanting of a few verses by the clergymen standing at the Communion-table, to which there were responses from the choir. Then the congregation generally joined in a hymn; then portions of Scripture were read, then another hymn and a short prayer, and then followed the sermon; after which there was a blessing from the Communion-table, as in a Roman Catholic church. A military brass band was stationed in the church, and accompanied with their music the chanting of a Te Deum. The service lasted till 12 o'clock, and the Royal party left the church to return to Rosenau. From the foregoing sketch it will be seen that there was much in this performance of divine worship quite different from our English custom. Still more strange was it to see a great part of the congregation adjourn to the outskirts of the town, where in the course of half an hour a fair was in full operation; many were riding on hobby-horses, or witnessing the exploits of the conjurors, while the little boys and girls were waltzing away in happy ignorance that there could be any impropriety in that sort of enjoyment. On Monday it was expected that her Majesty would make an excursion to some of the pretty scenes around Coburg. On Tuesday Prince Albert's birthday was to be celebrated. The Court were to leave the next day for Gotha, where they would remain four or five days, returning by way of Fulda and Frankfort to the Rhine, on their journey home. It is expected that there will be a grand stag hunt at Gotha, or rather a battue on a very large scale.

THE COURT.—The infant royal family remain at Osborne House, and are quite well. Tuesday, being the 26th anniversary of Prince Albert's birthday, the day was kept at Windsor and in London with the usual honours, and in the evening the royal tradesmen and club-houses illuminated. There is a rumour abroad that the Queen shortly intends to pay a visit to Essex. It is said that, in pursuance of her purpose of visiting all the Lord Lieutenants of counties, Her Majesty will honour Viscount Maynard with her presence at Easton Lodge; and that the noble lord is already making preparations for the reception of the royal party.

Parliamentary Movements.—Mr. Baillie has been returned for Linlithgowshire without opposition, in the room of the Hon. C. Hope.

Official Appointments.—Sir James Graham has appointed William Blamire, Esq., one of the Tithe Commissioners, and George Darby, Esq., M.P., for East Sussex, Inclosure Commissioners for England and Wales.

The Experimental Squadron —Accounts from the squadron to the 10th inst. have been received, which state the Surveyor's Queen to have proved herself the best of the three-deckers, and the Canopus (an old French ship captured at the Nile) the best of the two-deckers, in all the trials which had taken place up to the date of these letters. It is also stated that the Trafalgar, Vanguard, and Superb, were the stemmost ships of the squadron, the latter universally so, and that her performances altogether had been throughout the revered of her name.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Paris papers, with the exception of the details of a dreadful catastrophe at Rouen, during the storm of Tuesday week, contain but little news. The particulars of the storm are given at great length in all the papers. It appears that on Tuesday the 19th, a tremendous storm of thunder and lightning, accompanied by violent gusts of wind, visited Paris and the neighbouring country. In Paris the damage was limited to the demolition of chimneys and roofs, but in the neighbourhood of Rouen the effects were much more severe In a valley about three leagues from Rouen three manufactories were thrown down, while the people were at work within them. The Mémorial de Rouen contains the following sad account of the effects of the storm:—

"About half-past 12, a furious whirlwind arose in the valley beyond Deville, commencing at the Houlme. It first carried away a part of the roof of the factory of M. Rouff; then, gaining force as it proceeded, it overthrew several small buildings, broke down trees and hedges, and destroyed crops. Farther off buildings were unroofed, and others literally crushed in. We have seen some in which the ruins, the furniture, and the corn, hay, &c., were so confounded with the uprooted trees of the field, or gardens which surrounded them, that it is impossible to say where the buildings stood, or where the garden. The scourge moving with the speed of lightning carried to a distance some parts of the ruins, then uprooted the highest and largest trees, and at last struck three of the principal factories of the valley. Lightning is in fact less rapid than was the destruction of these establishments. The destruction is so complete that the imagination cannot conceive it, and no description could give an idea of it. They have been literally reduced to crumbs. To crown the fatality the event took place at an hour when the greatest activity is going on, and the hands are most numerous. Of the three establishments which have been destroyed one is in the commune of Malaunay, viz., that of M. Bailleul, and which was carried on by M. Neveu; the two others were situated near Monville, viz., those of M. Picquot and M. Mare. At M. Neveu's 120 persons were at work. The roof fell in, and the walls gave way before any person could escape. At M. Mare's the number of hands at work was 70. The calamity was not less sudden than complete. At M. Picquot's the number of persons at work was 180. The roof being first carried away, all those within rushed to the doors, and they became so crowded that only a few comparatively could get out. This factory was finished scarcely a year ago, and the proprietor was blamed for erecting it in a more solid manner than any others of the valley. The chimney, which was 150 feet high, fell down to within a few yards of the ground, and was thrown across the river. The third floor, cut off with wonderful precision, was also carried into the water. The two other stories next gave way, and at last the ground floor was so completely demolished that scarcely two bricks remained in their place. All this was accomplished in less than two minutes; people from all parts hurried to render assistance; all the manufactories and workshops in the neighbourhood sent out their men and at once began to clear out the ruins to save those under them who might be yet alive. Nothing can equal the scene presented at the three principal theatres of this vast disaster. Machinery-looms and bars of iron were fractured, enormous pieces of timber were broken as if they were mere straws, and all lying together in one confused mass. Torn fragments of clothing were seen amongst flocks of cotton wool, with arms and legs protruding from the heap; pieces of flesh were adhering to the irons; and many parts dyed with blood. Now and then deep groans were heard; some men and children, preserved as it were miraculously by an overhanging beam, were taken out uninjured, but more frequently some severed limb or dead corpse, or a body so mutilated that death would have been preferable to the torture it endured. On the road nothing was to be seen but litters or carts carrying away the dead or wounded. Temporary hospitals were established. Surgeons from Rouen bestowed their care upon all, even those of whom no hope could be entertained. The master of the Hotel of the Cheval Noir placed at the disposal of the faculty the largest room in his house, with all the linen and every other useful thing at his command. Twenty-six of the sufferers were laid in the ball-room and the orchestra. A number of the clergy came to bestow the consolations of religion, and the curé of Monville, in his surplice, recited the last prayers for the dying over those whom the faculty despaired of saving. Men, women, and children were weeping over their relations, many of whom were expiring in the most cruel agonies. This dreadful scene was rendered even still more harrowing, when the medical men, for the sake of such of their patients of whom they entertained hopes, required that all persons who could not be made useful should withdraw. This necessary demand was executed by the authorities with the most affecting kindness and consideration, but the cries and lamentations it caused were rending to the hearts of all present. At the guard-house at Monville were placed all the bodies taken out of the factory of M. Picquot. We have seen 17. Two were those of young girls, one that of a woman, and the rest of men and boys. Among these last several had been taken out of the river, into which they had been precipitated from the third floor. Some were entirely crushed, others had their heads and chests driven flat, and some had their heads severed from the trunks. Need it be said that the spectacle was most horrible. When we withdrew from the seat of the catastrophe, at 10 at night, we found at M. Picquot's house, 25 dead and more than 50 wounded, part of whom could not be expected to live through the night. It was believed that there were 10 more victims still under the ruins. Out of three foremen one was killed, the two others saved alive, but severely injured. The loss in money is estimated at 120,000f. At M. Neveu's there were nine killed and 15 wounded, but how many remained under the ruins was not known. His loss is estimated at 250,000f. At M. Mare's there were six dead and a great number wounded. His loss is put down at 120,000f. In all 40 dead and 100 wounded—many of these last mortally. The aggregate loss is computed to amount to 620,000f. for these three establishments only. From one of those phenomena of which these storms present so many varied examples these buildings were not destroyed regularly one after the other, but the whirlwind seemed to have moved in angular directions, and less solid buildings between the spinning mills were left standing. The effects of the hurricane extended upwards of a league and a half in length. The communes which have chiefly suffered by it are Le Houlme, Malaunay, Monville, Eslettes, Clères, and Anceaumeville. Over the whole of the crest of the hills which inclose the valley of Monville the trees have been destroyed. At Anceaumeville buildings have been blown down, the trees uprooted, and a number of sheep and cows killed. A gigantic tree was raised upwards of 40 yards, and transported to a considerable distance. Roads are rendered impassable by trees laid across them. Carts, waggons, and other carriages have been blown over, and many persons carried far away out of their paths."

The last accounts, written when the exact numbers had been better ascertained, state that upwards of 60 lives have been sacrificed, besides 120 persons wounded, many of whom are not expected to recover. Another account of the catastrophe gives some curious details of the effect of the whirlwind upon the trees.

"On the top of the ravine dozens of trees were snapped across about 10 or 12 feet from the ground. Lower down the side of the 111 huge forest trees were torn up by the roots so completely as I have seen a plant raised from a flower-pot with a round compact mass of earth adhering to it. [illegible] within the road is prostrated, most of the [illegible] branches. Cabins and hovels close to it are buried beneath the wreck of the trees on the heights blown down upon them. An immense poplar near to the factory of M. Picquot, at the point where the whirlwind made the turn to the right to gather strength, it may be said, is a curious object. The [illegible] still stands 10 or 12 feet high. The under-spreading branches had been seized by a giant hand, which essayed to tear it from the earth, but failing in that, and still bent upon its destruction, yet too much hurried to repeat the effort, twisted it until the trunk resembled a rope of many threads, and [illegible] head upon the ground. On the same day, but a little later in the afternoon, a precisely similar occurrence took place in the garden of the Irish College, near Arcueil, Paris. In this instance, however, the tree was of smaller dimensions—a very pretty mountain ash. Other phenomena, which I have not time to recount, are observable here, among which is that out of a hundred large poplars that line a road near the last-mentioned factory was cut across about eight feet from the root, while not one of the others appears to have had a leaf ruffled."

The following is the account given by the French papers of the storm in Paris:—

"On Tuesday, about one o'clock, there was a very heavy shower of rain in Paris with thunder. The shower was followed at intervals by gusts of wind, which increased in violence till towards three o'clock, when it blew a tremendous hurricane, by which damage was done to an incalculable extent. At the Tuileries, the Pavillon Marsan was partly unroofed—the trees in the garden and on the terraces, particularly those by the water side, were stripped of numerous branches, and the ground was strewed with these, as were the boulevards. Tiles, slates, and iron chimney pots fell into the streets, but happily we have not learnt that any personal injuries were sustained. In the Champs Elysées and on the outer boulevards several trees were blown down; some of them were the most deeply rooted. On the Place de la Concorde, during two minutes, the water from the fountains was carried up to the clouds, not a drop being suffered by the whirlwind to fall into the basins. This phenomenon was witnessed by numerous spectators. All this, however, is nothing compared to the damage done in the country around. Fields covered with corn in the sheaf were so completely swept by the storm, that very little if any part of the harvest will be recovered. Several carriages are said to have been blown over."

We learn by the Havre journals that the storm has caused several disasters on the coast near the mouth of the Seine. Two English vessels were forced from their anchorage and driven ashore, and a sloop from Newcastle, bound for Rouen with coals, went down near Leure. The crew was saved in the boats. An English schooner, from Caen, laden with stones, went down in view of the town, and the crew, who had taken refuge in the rigging, owed their safety, in a great measure, to the exertions of M. Leméthéyer, the lieutenant of the port, who, with a crew of six Englishmen, and a French pilot, succeeded in rescuing them.—The Duke and Duchess de Nemours arrived at Bayonne on the 20th inst., and were received with loud acclamations, and the usual military honours. They were expected to set out on the 3d Sept. for Pampeluna, where they will arrive on the 4th; sleeping on the 3d at Tolosa, on their way.—The Prince and Princess de Salerno, father and mother of the Duchess D'Aumale, have arrived at the Chateau d'Eu.—The erection of Algeria into a vice-royalty for the Duke d'Aumale was again talked of, and believed to be intended to take place shortly after the return of Marshal Bugeaud to France.—A paragraph, probably of official origin, is published in the Débats, which states that the Duke de Montpensier left Alexandria on the 9th for Constantinople, whence he will return to France, touching at Athens and Malta; and that Ibrahim Pacha, Mehemet Ali's son, will shortly proceed to the baths of Lucca, performing his quarantine at Malta, and landing at Leghorn. The Constitutionnel says that the Count de Montfort, Jerome Bonaparte's son, who has spent some months in Paris, has been ordered to quit France within the space of eight days.—M. Thiers, who had just returned from the baths of Vichy, was to start on Sunday for Spain, where he is to visit the fields of some of the most celebrated battles, preparatory to his publishing his history of the war in the Peninsula. He purposes also to visit Lisbon and the lines of Torres Vedras, and will return to Paris by way of London.—The Abbé Chardavoine, of the diocese of La Rochelle, has just embraced Protestantism. The Bishop of Rochelle published a pamphlet upon the subject, in reply to a Protestant clergyman.—A telegraphic dispatch received in Paris on Saturday announced that a violent fire broke out, on the 22d ult., at Bordeaux, in the brandy stores of M. Tasted, which consumed several adjoining stores and houses. The fire lasted three hours, and might have caused still greater ravages had it reached some neighbouring stores, containing upwards of 3000 hogsheads of brandy. The commander of the firemen, the adjutant-major, a lieutenant, and three soldiers, were killed by the falling of a wall, and three others were wounded. The damage occasioned by the disaster was estimated at 3,000,000f.

SPAIN.—Our accounts from Madrid present much interest. Disturbances of a serious nature have broken out in that capital, in consequence of the new system of taxation adopted by M. Mon, the Minister of Finance. This scheme, according to which the taxes are to be uniformly assessed and collected throughout Spain, has given great displeasure to several provinces, such as Catalonia, Aragon, and Valencia, which will have to pay much higher taxes than they have hitherto been accustomed to. Navarre and the Basque provinces have manifested still more hostility to M. Mon's system; and in the capital itself it has been viewed with much aversion, that the resistance of the mercantile classes to the new taxation has become so determined as to threaten the peace of the whole country. At the time the last accounts left Madrid, the place was in a state of complete insurrection. Some days before, a petition from the shopkeepers of Madrid was presented to M. Mon, praying that the new system of taxation should be modified, or at least that it should not be put in practice till the opinion of the Cortes had been taken upon it. M Mon refused to listen to the petitioners. A meeting of the shopkeepers was therefore held on the 18th, at which it was resolved that they should shut their shops on the 19th. The Government threatened to punish those who should not open their shops as usual, and several were accordingly arrested. The city was in a state of the greatest excitement. On the morning of the 19th no less than 4000 shops remained closed, and crowds of people assembled in the streets. The Government called out the military to disperse the people. The cavalry charged, and the infantry fired on the people, several of whom were killed, and two officers and a serjeant severely wounded. The garrison of Madrid was placed under arms, and all the military posts were doubled. Reinforcements had been obtained from Cuenca and Guadalaxara. The Government had given General Mazaredo, the captain-general, power, in case of necessity, to place Madrid under martial law. On the 20th, the peace of the city was in some measure restored, but the people were in a state of great excitement. The Political Chief had published a severe proclamation, ordering the shopkeepers to re-open their shops, and threatening those who refused to comply with imprisonment. A court-martial was sitting upon those who were arrested on the previous day, and two persons, who were accused of assassinating an officer with a poignard, had been sentenced to death. It was expected that several more would meet with a similar fate. A considerable number were sentenced to the hulks for various terms, varying from 8 to 12 years. The number of persons arrested were 78, most of whom are tradesmen. The general opinion appears to be that the Government will be able to keep down the movement, but that it will be obliged to abandon M. Mon's new taxes, which appear to fall very heavily upon the mercantile classes. By the last accounts Madrid was tolerably quiet.—The Queen and her mother arrived on the evening of the 16th at Mondragon, and alighted at the Count de Monserron's residence. On the 17th Her Majesty attended high mass; and afterwards repaired to the village of Santa-Aguada, the waters of which place Her Majesty began to take on the 18th. In passing through Bergara, the two Queens had stopped a moment before the monument erected there in commemoration of the convention concluded between Espartero and Maroto. The interview between the Duke and Duchess de Nemours and the Queen of Spain is still fixed for the 4th September, but there is some reason to believe that a preference will be given to Saint Sebastian, because that place is less distant from the frontier, and can be reached by sea in a few hours, whereas the road from Bayonne to Pampeluna presents obstacles which it may be prudent to avoid. The finest regiments of the Spanish army have been ordered to Pampeluna, and in the meantime, numbers of deserters from that army are arriving at Bayonne. The Infante Don Francisco de Paula and his family are about to proceed to Pampeluna, whither the celebrated Montes and 14 other Taureadors are also to repair, in order to impart the greatest éclat to the bull-fight to be given by the Queen in honour of the Duke and Duchess de Nemours.

GERMANY.—We have accounts from Leipsic of the 17th inst. The students had continued up to that time to do military duty, but they were now relieved of it, and replaced on all the points they occupied by the communal guards. The town authorities had sent a humble request to the King that M. de Languin should be nominated president of the commission sent to inquire into the causes of the late disorders. This appears to have been complied with, for we learn by accounts from Leipsic of the 17th inst, that on the previous day the municipal councillors and officers of the communal guard met to receive from M de Languin, as the King's commissioner, the answer of his Majesty to the addresses which had been presented to him. The Commissioner having been introduced, read the King's answer, which was to the following effect:—

"I have received the deputies of the town of Leipsic, sent to testify to me the pain which the unhappy events of the 12th and 13th current have given there, and to give me the assurance of your fidelity and devotion. I think it right to communicate what follows to the town of Leipsic, and I wish the public to be informed of it. I was happy and proud to reign over a faithful people, who respected law and justice, and who often testified its fidelity and devotion to the dynasty under the most difficult circumstances. Supported by the constitution of the country, I might have hoped that the Saxon people, penetrated by the same spirit, would have remained faithful to that constitution even in stormy times, and would not wander beyond the limits of the constitution and the laws. I was, on that account, the more pained that the second town of the kingdom, where I loved to reside, and in which I have so often received testimonies of fidelity and devotion—a town so happy and flourishing as Leipsic, should have been the theatre of an unheard of outrage, and that the law should have been violated in the person of my beloved brother, who to fulfil a patriotic duty, had gone into the midst of the citizens of Leipsic, full of benevolence and confidence. I am profoundly afflicted to find that people have not blushed to excite the opinion of the public by reports equally wicked and unfounded. I paternally and seriously recommend that no faith should be placed in such reports. I regret deeply the perhaps innocent victims who have fallen by the necessary intervention of the armed force. A searching inquiry and an impartial examination of the conduct of the authorities will throw light upon this affair, and if the loyal citizens will unite their efforts, order will be maintained, and severe measures will not be required to enforce obedience to the law. But I must say, with profound sorrow, that my former confidence in a town, in whose bosom the thought of such an outrage could have originated and be executed, is shaken. It is on that account I firmly, but kindly, address this message to the many loyal citizens of Leipsic, who have at heart the good of the country and the town, and the honour of the Saxon name. May they draw round the throne and the constitution, and resist with force and dignity the efforts of those whose object is not constitutional order, but domination without any limits. May they act in a manner that the laws may continue inviolate, and that my ancient confidence in a town which has always been dear to my heart may be re-established.—FREDERICK AUGUSTUS. (Countersigned) FALKENSTEIN. Pilnitz, August 15, 1845."

At the end of the sitting the President of the council cried out "Long live the King," which was responded to by all present. Next day the answer of the King was placarded in all the streets, and the municipal council announced the appointment of an extraordinary commission to receive the propositions which private individuals might wish to make to it. On the same day the municipal council published a document forbidding, under the severest penalties, all popular meetings without a special permission of the authorities.—The Débats says that the Prussian Government is about to take some measures to arrest in Germany the progress of the new sect of Catholic dissenters. A circular has been sent by the Minister of the Interior to all the censors of the kingdom, directing them to strike out every article having the slightest tendency to promote these religious movements, which may be proposed to be inserted in the journals or rather periodicals which are not authorised expressly to treat upon these questions.

HOLLAND.—The storm and whirlwind which did so much damage in the neighbourhood of the Seine on Tuesday the 19th inst., was felt with very great severity in Holland. Letters of that date from Amsterdam state that the environs of that city did not escape, but the damage was confined to the uprooting of a few trees. At Leige Zwaluw, however, it was much more severe. About ½ past 5 P. M., a furious hurricane or waterspout from the south-west beat down some large and strong barns, some to the very foundations. The houses, too, suffered enormous damage—the roofs were carried away, the windows dashed to pieces, and many so much injured that they are in danger of falling. It is impossible to estimate the damage, for not only the stock in the barns, but also what corn was mown and still in the fields, was taken up and scattered far and near. At Aarlenderveen, the waterspout did great damage. On the road near Alphen it tore up a bridge, and threw it to a great distance. A farm-house was much injured, and many large trees uprooted. A small vessel on the Rhine, on board which were a man and his wife and three children, was turned upside down, and the mast fixed in the bed of the river; but all on board, except one child, were saved. The accounts from Zevenberger are of a similar nature; more damage seems to have been done there, and it was feared that several lives were lost

GREECE.—The intelligence from Athens is highly important. It announces a measure, on the part of the Coletti Ministry, that brings the country one step nearer to the crisis, at which our readers may feel regret, but not surprise. The proceedings of the Government of King Otho, for some time past, have made it plain that the existing system must, at no remote period, give way; and events are evidently making rapid strides towards the consummation which has so long been threatening. On the 5th inst., the King yielded to the solicitations of Coletti, and swamped the Senate by the creation of sixteen new Senators, two of whom are King's men, and the rest mere creatures of the Minister and entirely destitute of all personal influence. Immediately on his Majesty's signing their diplomas, Metaxa, the Minister of Finance, gave in his resignation, which was accepted. He stated that his reason for resigning was, that he considered the nomination of the new Senators as prejudicial to the throne and to the nation. It is the general opinion at Athens that a violent crisis is approaching, as it is clear that a determined conspiracy exists against the Constitution; which is warmly supported, and almost openly, by the Ministers of France and Austria.

TURKEY.—Accounts from Constantinople give hopes that the Syrian disturbances will be at length put down. The Porte has sent to the representatives of the Five Powers a long note on the affairs of that country. The note, after expressing the anxiety the Government feels for the re-establishment, upon a permanent basis, of the tranquillity of the Lebanon, and of its determination to take efficient measures to prevent such disorders as have recently occurred, in consequence of the disputes between the Druses and Maronites, informs the Powers that Chekib Effendi, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, is to be sent into Syria to arrange the disputes. In order that Chekib Effendi may be supported in his mission by a sufficient force, Namik Pacha, the commander-in chief of the army in Arabia, is to have his cantonment in the neighbourhood of Aleppo, and to proceed towards the Lebanon, with a number of troops sufficient to awe the inhabitants, which, however, are not to be called into use until the last extremity. The independence of both Druses and Maronites is to be maintained, and vakeels of the two religions are to be appointed to the mixed districts, who in case of need may appeal to the Caimakans, while the Moukatedji, which is more especially to represent the interests of the Government, will be the medium of communication between the district and the Porte. It is said that this document has given great satisfaction to all the representatives of the European powers.—A change of great importance has taken place in the Turkish Ministry. The Seraskier Riza Pacha, who had for five years borne an almost unlimited sway in the Cabinet, and to whom the re-actionary spirit displayed by that Government has been attributed, has been dismissed, and replaced by Suleiman Pacha, who was President of the Council of Justice, and whose name is associated with the measures relative to public instruction, and the recent convocation of the delegates of the provinces at Constantinople.

BRAZILS.—The Express packet has arrived from the Brazils, with news from Rio Janeiro June 22, Bahia July 8, and Pernambuco July 14. She brings about 20,000*l.* on freight, in gold and diamonds. It is said that she also brings the rough draft of a treaty of amity for the approval of the British Cabinet, and it is generally understood that one of the articles stipulated for is, that England is to be placed on the same footing as the most favoured nation. The treaty, however, is conditional on the admission of certain claims, arising out of some of the early seizures of Brazilian ships under the treaty of 1826. With that exception, it is stated that the terms of the treaty, as far as it goes, have been definitively agreed upon by both parties, and that its ratification by the Brazilian Government will depend only on the result of Mr. Hamilton's application to our Government on the subject of those claims, concerning which he was without instructions. At the departure of the branch packet from Buenos Ayres it did not appear that Mr. Ousely had made any progress in the settlement of affairs in that quarter.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Accounts from the Cape state that Mr. John Reas Thompson, late naval store-keeper and agent victualler at Simon's Town, was tried at Cape Town on the 3d May, for having embezzled the sum of 10,920*l.*, the property of the Queen. Mr. Thos. Collings, chief clerk in the Imprest-office, Somerset House, stated that, having arrived in Simon's Bay on the 9th February, under directions from the Admiralty, he proceeded immediately to Green Point and arrested the prisoner, who shortly after was conveyed to Simon's Town, to be present during the investigation into the state of his cash account, which Capt. Eden, of Her Majesty's ship Winchester, and Mr. Collings, had been ordered to commence. The result of this inquiry proved that the prisoner had taken up large sums of money from the commissariat, unauthorised by the Admiral, and had omitted to debit himself with the same; that two requisitions for money, duly approved by the Commander-in-Chief, had never been used, but were found in Mr. Thompson's own office during the examination of his accounts; that fictitious entries had been made, evidently for the purposes of deceiving the Admiral, when that officer should come to inspect the balance of cash in hand; that the prisoner had sworn, before a Justice of the Peace, to the truth and correctness of his accounts, knowing that he had falsified them, and that they were incorrect; that Mr. Thompson had kept back five quarters' accounts, which should have been sent to England, with the view of delaying detection as long as possible. The defendant's counsel endeavoured to make it appear that the fact of his client having appropriated to his own private purposes nearly 11,000*l.* of the public money was ascribable to a sort of general confusion in the dockyard officers, and the want of clerical assistance. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty, and on the 4th May he was brought up to receive judgment, when the Court sentenced him to be transported to Van Diemen's Land for a term of 14 years.

UNITED STATES.—By the arrival of the Cambria steamer, we have news from New York to the 15th inst. The steamer Great Britain arrived at New York on the 10th inst., after a rough passage of 14 days 21 hours; being Sunday, her arrival was witnessed and welcomed by the cheers of assembled thousands. The Cambria herself made the most rapid passage out yet known (10½ days); the anxiety at New York to get news by her was so very great, that 300 dollars was asked for a copy of the European Times of July 19. The news from Mexico by this arrival is of the highest importance. Until within three days of the Cambria's sailing, the aspect of affairs remained much the same as at the last accounts, except occasional mention of small bodies of troops being shipped off from New Orleans to the frontiers of the "annexed States;" but intelligence of the movements of the Mexicans reached New York on the 13th and 14th inst, via New Orleans, involving, it would seem, an all but certainty of an immediate display of hostilities against the States. The latest dates from Vera Cruz received at New York, when the mail left, were to the 23d ult., and the Mexican newspapers, as well as numerous private letters, assert positively that war will be immediately declared, though whether any actual hostilities will take place depends much upon the extent to which the Mexican resources can be developed, an extent which, from all accounts, would be likely to be but very small. Up to the 23d ult. no declaration had been made, but at the last accounts from the city of Mexico, which date 22d, the Senate had assembled in order to discuss the question of peace or war, and in the meantime no doubt of the result of their deliberations appeared to exist, either among the citizens or the American residents; for the latter were preparing to quit the country immediately, and preparations to some extent were going forward at Vera Cruz, in order to put the city in a defencible state against a bombardment, great quantities of cannon and ammunition being transported from the Castle St. Juan de Ulloa to the wharfs of the city, as an apprehension existed that the castle would fall into the hands of the Americans, being at present in a very defenceless state. A letter, received at New Orleans from Matamoras, dated July 17th, says:—"Troops are approaching this place from various quarters, and not a single doubt remains in my mind of the intention of the Government to declare war, although it will be impossible for them to push it with vigour or with the least prospect of success." Another communication, dated Mexico, July 22d, states that war is inevitable. The Washington Union, the Government organ of the United States, says, that though no hostile declaration has yet reached the Government, that such is daily expected, all their relations in the south tending to that point. The Mexican Consul at New Orleans has refused all clearances and closed his office—an act which is taken to portend either war or non-intercourse. It is, at least, the general opinion in New Orleans that war had been declared by Mexico; and the intelligence which has come from other quarters, confirms the belief that the crisis has at length arrived. We should not be at all surprised to hear in a few days of some decisive blow having been struck by Mexico, and that the war had indeed commenced. This step, however rash and ill-advised it may be considered in this country, has, it is believed, been taken. The accounts from Aransas Bay, Texas, state that the first planting of the American flag, and arrival of American troops in that territory, had taken place there, with some ceremony and rejoicing, on the 28th ult. The Texan Convention was actively forming a state constitution, and President Jones had issued a proclamation for the election on the first Monday of September of senators and representatives to the United States Congress. The ruins of the late fire at New York have been cleared away with surprising rapidity, and in a few months it may be expected that no trace of the fire will be observed among the handsome uniform streets which are being laid out. The negotiations about Oregon were in progress, and the acquisition of California was in contemplation. The Americans had turned their attention from emigration to Oregon to California. The soil of the former place had not given satisfaction, so that many who had emigrated there had gone to California, the "land flowing with milk and honey." "That paradise," says the New York Herald, "will soon be more inhabited by Americans than any other section on the continent, out of the 26 United States, and must, of course, be shortly annexed. The impetuosity of the people of the Great West for the acquisition of all the territory to the Pacific is irresistible. Indeed, California may be the test question at the next presidential election, as Texas was in 1844." We are sorry to observe that fires have broke out in Newport, Rhode Island, and in the city of Albany. In the former place much damage has been done. Ocean House, the large hotel, has been completely demolished, and some lives were lost. Little injury has been done in Albany. Fresh troubles have occurred in Philadelphia, and some damage has been done by a lawless and dissatisfied mob.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Weather.—For the last fortnight, the weather, with the exception of a few heavy showers, has been very favourable to the harvest, and a great breadth of corn has been cut in good condition in the four metropolitan counties. It is remarkable that M. Arago, the French astronomer, whose prediction that the Seine would be frozen over this year on the 8th of March, was so singularly realised, has been equally right in his anticipations as to the very day when the wet summer (which he also predicted) would end. He foretold that the weather would change on the 20th Aug., and so it did, after a storm, which has left behind it fearful traces in France. M. Arago now announces a brilliant September, and agriculturists will of course be rejoiced if this prophecy be also fulfilled.

East India House.—A special general court of proprietors of East India Stock was held on Friday, in Leadenhall street, to take into consideration certain papers relative to the case of the Rajah of Sattara, which were ordered by the House of Commons to be printed on the 4th ult. The Chairman, Sir Henry Willock, took the chair, and acquainted the Court that it had been specially convened on the requisition of nine proprietors for the purpose above stated. Mr. G. Thompson then rose and addressed the Court at great length, contending that the Rajah had been convicted and punished on evidence that was utterly unworthy of belief. He said that the Rajah had been deprived of all opportunity of defending himself from the charges that had been brought against him by the Government of India, and called on the Court to give him an opportunity of proving his innocence. Mr. Thompson concluded by moving a series of resolutions embodying his views of the case, affirming the necessity of reviewing the decision of the Court on former occasions, and severely censuring the conduct of Colonel Ovans, late resident of Sattara. Mr. Sullivan seconded the resolutions. Rungoo Bapogee, a native of India, addressed the Court in favour of the resolutions. The Chairman moved as an amendment, "That there is nothing in the papers recently published to induce the Court to depart from the resolutions agreed to in July 1841, and confirmed by subsequent Courts." The Deputy Chairman seconded the amendment. Major Oliphant and General Robertson, two directors of the company, supported the motion for further inquiry. The Court was ultimately adjourned to Saturday, when an unusual scene of confusion and irregularity took place. Shortly before the commencement of business, Mr. Peter Gordon and Mr. G. Thompson entered the Court, and the former seated himself in the place usually occupied by the chairman, and the latter took one of the seats within the bar, which have hitherto been exclusively occupied by the directors. Such was the state of things when the chairman entered the Court, accompanied by Mr. Hogg, M.P., the deputy-chairman, and several other directors. On seeing the manner in which the chair was already occupied, he appeared perfectly astonished, and before he could recover from his surprise, Mr. Gordon rose, and said, addressing the proprietors without the bar: Gentlemen, is it your pleasure to appoint a chairman of this meeting? Mr Thompson rose, but was interrupted by Sir H. Willock, who, advancing towards the chair, said—"It is a privilege that has always been conceded by the Court of Proprietors to the Court of Directors, that the chairman of the Court of Directors should preside over their meetings. A breach of decorum has been committed by the proprietor now in the chair, which is not warranted in any one respect. I am by law entitled to take that chair, and if the proprietor does not leave it, I must order him to be removed by one of our officers." Mr. Thompson said he would offer no factious opposition on that occasion, and would therefore move that Sir H. Willock do take the chair. Mr. Gordon seconded the motion. Mr. Hogg, the deputy-chairman, repudiated altogether the motion that had just been made, and was sure the chairman would not take his usual place in pursuance of any such motion. He was entitled to that seat, not as chairman of the Court of Proprietors, but as the legally-appointed chairman of the East India Company, and could not take the chair in any other capacity. Sir H. Willock then ordered the officers to expel Mr. Gordon from the chair, which was done forthwith, but Mr. Gordon continued within the bar, close to the chair, and refused to retire. The debate on the Rajah was then resumed amidst very great confusion. Mr. Lewis, after speaking at some length, moved the following amendment:—"That it is the opinion of this court that the paper containing the charges against the Rajah of Sattara ought to be submitted to him, and an opportunity afforded him of being heard in his defence." General Briggs next addressed the court at great length in favour of the original resolutions. Mr. Clarke, Mr. Sergeant Gazelee, and Mr. Sergeant Storks also spoke in favour of the original resolutions. The question was then put, and the original resolutions of Mr. Thompson were negatived by 34 to 12. The amendment of Mr. Lewis was then put, and negatived by 30 to 15. The amendment of the Chairman was then put and carried. The Chairman then alluded to what had passed at the commencement of the sitting, and complained that the person who had been expelled from the chair that day had stationed himself, during the remainder of the debate, between the chairman and the secretary, in such a manner as to prevent any private communication from taking place between them. He hoped that the exclusive possession of seats within the bar was a privilege which the proprietors would continue to the directors. Mr. Poynder moved a resolution to that effect, which, was, however, not put; the general understanding appearing to be that there was no occasion for any motion on the subject. Several proprietors complained of the want of proper accommodation without the bar, for their papers, &c.; and the inconvenience to which they were subjected by the present construction of the court. The Chairman promised that the complaint should meet with immediate attention.

Mr. Bonham.—A paragraph stating that "Sir Robt. Peel has settled out of his own private purse 400*l.* a year on Mr. Bonham," was copied last week into the Globe from the Limerick Chronicle, and has since gone the round of the papers. The Globe now states that they are assured by a personal friend of Mr. Bonham's, that the statement is without foundation.

The Bushmen Children, or Pigmy Race.—Among the latest visitors to the metropolis are the Bushmen children, now exhibiting at Egyptian Hall; specimens of a pigmy human race brought from the interior of Africa. They are curious creatures, the male being only 44 ins. high, though 16 years old; and the female but 32 ins., although in her eighth year. They are well-formed intelligent little folks, and whether seen in the costume of their tribe, or in the characters of a corporal and his wife, or in those of a gentleman's "tiger" and a lady's-maid, they are equally interesting. The Bushmen tribe are unmercifully persecuted by the Kafirs, and this pair have been rescued from destruction, and brought up at the Cape of Good Hope, whence they have just arrived in England.

Highway Robbery is becoming frequent in many of the suburbs which are not so frequently traversed by coaches as they were before the opening of the railways. On Tuesday week as Mr. Raynor, of Walthamstow, was walking along the road between the Infant Orphan Asylum and Whip's-cross, about half-past eight, he was suddenly stopped by a man presenting a pistol and demanding his money; but Mr. R. making some resistance with his umbrella, and at the same time calling loudly for the police, the fellow ran off into the wood. The horse patrol coming up soon after made diligent search, but did not succeed in apprehending the offender.

New Prison on the Solitary System.—The Middlesex magistrates have determined to pull down the New Prison, Clerkenwell, and to erect on its site an enlarged prison on the solitary system, similar to the Model Prison, Pentonville. The demolition of the present prison will commence immediately, and the rebuilding will, it is anticipated, occupy about 18 months. In the mean time, the prisoners usually sent to the New Prison, consisting of prisoners on remand from the police courts and petty sessions, and those convicted at the Middlesex sessions, will be confined in the Westminster Bridewell, which, under the new act of Parliament, is now a county prison. Notices to that effect have been sent to the clerks of the police courts and petty sessions, with instructions to commence doing so from Tuesday, the 2?th instant.

Mr Green's Albion Balloon.—The remnants of this balloon were found on Thursday week in the water off the "flats," or sands, at Cliffe, near Gravesend. The car and one of the grapnels were also recovered, and Mr. Green's cap was picked up near the spot where he descended. The balloon is almost destroyed, and the netting is greatly injured by the havoc made in it by Mr. Green in his endeavours to escape from its meshes. Notwithstanding this untoward accident, Mr. Green made an ascent in the Nassau Balloon on Monday evening, accompanied by his brother and son, and several other persons. The balloon left Cremorne gardens at 6 P.M., and descended safely before 8, in the neighbourhood of Waltham Abbey, having passed over Epping Forest and High Beech in its course.

The late Fire in Aldermanbury.—Messrs. Bradbury, Greatorex, and Co. have written to the daily papers, stating that the amount of property represented to have been on their premises at the time of the fire has been greatly overstated. "As far," they say, "as we can at the present moment ascertain, we do not anticipate that the amount of property destroyed beyond the amount insured will exceed 20,000*l.*" The papers state the firm are insured nearly as follows:—Sun Fire-office, 16,000*l.*; Royal Exchange, 15,000*l.*; Manchester, 10,000*l.*; Phœnix, 9000*l.*; Globe, 7000*l.*; Alliance, 6000*l.*; Union, 5000*l.*; London, 5000*l.*; Norwich Union, 5000*l.*; Scottish Union, 5000*l.*; Kent, 2000*l.* Total, 85,000*l.*

Accident to Colonel Lascelles.—On Monday afternoon, an accident attended with serious consequences occurred in South-street, Grosvenor-square, to Colonel Lascelles, of the Grenadier Guards. The unfortunate gentleman, who is very corpulent, was riding a spirited horse, when, in turning the corner of Park-street, the animal stumbled, and the gallant officer was thrown violently to the ground, the left side of his face coming in collision with the edge of the kerbstone. On being raised from the ground he was insensible, and his left eye was severely bruised and cut. He was immediately conveyed to his residence in Upper Grosvenor-street, where he remains in a precarious state.

Foreign Fruit.—The Continental fruit season may now be considered at its height, and large quantities arrive by the various steam-ships from different parts of the Continent. The Columbine, from Rotterdam, on her last voyage brought, in addition to 30 oxen, 10 cows, 100 sheep, 20 lambs, and 6 calves, a quantity of yeast, melons, cheese, and other articles of Dutch produce, nearly 300 baskets of plums, of good quality. The Neptune, from Hamburgh, also had 30 oxen, a quantity of poultry, vegetables, &c. The Soho, from Antwerp, had 132 baskets of fruit; and the James Watt, from Havre, brought an immense cargo of fruit, consisting of nearly 1700 packages of plums, Pears, &c., and upwards of 160 packages of nuts, in addition to a large quantity of eggs and other French produce. The whole of the fruit brought from the Continent by the vessels belonging to this country is landed at and delivered from the St. Katharine's-wharf, in consequence of the superior facilities afforded for the landing and examination of the same, and the easy means of removing it to the markets. The fruit brought from France is of good quality, and will render the supply of the article plentiful and obtainable at a moderate price.

The Murder of Eliza Grimwood.—At the Dublin police court last week, a private soldier of the 67th Regiment, now lying at Portobello Barracks, was charged with being absent from quarters without leave. On being given into custody he asked for pen and paper, remarking to the inspector that he would surprise him. His request being complied with, he stated that his name was George Hill, was a native of London, and son of a silversmith residing near Temple-bar in that city; that he was the murderer of Eliza Grimwood, whose death caused such a sensation in London some years ago. The prisoner at the time was under the influence of liquor. Next day the prisoner was brought before the magistrates. After proper caution being given, he was asked if he had any communication relative to his disclosures of the previous evening to make. He replied, after some minutes' hesitation, that he had nothing further to state at present; but he begged it to be understood that he retracted nothing that he had stated. In consequence of this occurrence the Dublin inspector of police has come to London and had an interview with the magistrates of Southwark police court. The magistrate considering that the officers who were engaged in the previous investigations into this mysterious murder, should have an opportunity of seeing Hill, has ordered them to proceed to Dublin for the purpose, and, if necessary, to bring him over in custody to this country, the principal witnesses being still in existence, and living in the neighbourhood of London.

Sham Attorneys.—In consequence of the disgrace brought upon the profession by sham practitioners, several attorneys have resolved to prosecute such persons, and enforce against them the penalty of 50*l.*, to which those practising as attorneys without being duly qualified are subjected.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Aug. 23:—West Districts, 108; Northern, 146; Central, 168; Eastern, 224; Southern, 198; Total, 844; males, 446; females, 398. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1129; males, 576, females, 553.

Provincial.

Andover.—The adjourned inquiry into the conduct of M'Dougal, the master of the Andover Union, took place on Monday in the Union, before the Assistant Poor-law Commissioner, Mr. Parker. The board-room being found too small for the purpose, the meeting adjourned to the spacious chapel of the Union. There were present, amongst many other gentlemen, guardians and ratepayers, Mr. Etwall, M.P. for the borough; Mr. Dodson, chairman of the Andover board of guardians; Mr. Emmett, chairman of the Stockbridge board of guardians; about 20 guardians, and about 200 ratepayers, comprising the principal farmers and others in the district. The inquiry has been continued daily during the week, and it is not likely to be concluded for some days.

Bath.—The adjourned inquest on the body of Lieut.-Gen. Dick was resumed on Friday and Saturday last. On Friday the only witness examined was Joseph Cuff, butler to deceased. His evidence was lengthy, but the facts may be briefly stated. The General was in his usual health on the morning of the 13th March, 1844; he took his breakfast at eight o'clock, and his chocolate and cigar at a quarter past 11. The chocolate was left in a cup in the bed-room of Mr. Thomas, the General's son-in-law, where the deceased was sitting. In about an hour Capt. Henderson was announced as a visitor, and on witness going into deceased's room, he observed his master looking rather pale. He was leaning back in his chair, with his mouth open, and his eyes appeared very dim or drowsy. Miss Dick, the General's daughter, was in the room at the time. Shortly afterwards witness, having left the room, was called by Mr. Thomas to the assistance of the General, whom he found on the floor at the bedside, Mr. Thomas endeavouring to lift him up. Witness succeeded in raising deceased, and placed him on his knee. He immediately heaved a long sigh, his head fell back over witness's shoulder, and he expired. Medical assistance was called in, and an endeavour was made to bleed him, but without success. Whilst the medical man and Capt. Henderson were present, some mention was made of an inquest being held upon the body, when Mr. Thomas said that he did not want to disturb the house, and should be glad if an inquest could be done without. The General was buried without an inquest being held, a certificate of the physician being given that death was occasioned by apoplexy. On Saturday the medical men were examined on the results of the post mortem examination. Mr. Barrett, surgeon, proved that all the organs were sound and healthy with the exception of some inflammatory spots in the intestines, which he minutely described. In regard to the brain, he was prepared to say that death was not caused by sanguineous apoplexy; whether it was caused by serous apoplexy might be matter of opinion. All he could say was, there was no serous effusion. Mr. W. Herapath, of Bristol, philosophical chemist and lecturer on toxicology, deposed as follows:—He made an examination of the stomach, intestinal canal, and liver of deceased. He commenced the chemical examination with the contents of the stomach, and then proceeded with the contents of the intestines. He then examined the texture of the stomach itself; then the substance of the intestines, and lastly he examined the liver. The result was, that no metallic or mineral poison could be found. He particularly examined the yellow spots which had been described by Mr. Barrett. He dissected them out, and, after a most rigid analysis by three or four different processes, he succeeded in finding that the yellow stain was entirely occasioned by the colouring matter of the bile; the appearances of those spots were so very suspicious that of course he devoted considerable time and trouble to ascertain, not only that they were not caused by poison, but what they were caused by. There were some poisons which he could not have found: prussic acid nor morphine, if it had been absorbed. It might have been absorbed in less than 24 hours, from the circumstance of opium being very rapidly absorbed into the system. Any organic poison soluble in water, he should not have expected to find, because the fluids of the stomach and intestines had passed away. Dr. Dariel, who had been called in when deceased died, and had given a certificate that death was caused by serous apoplexy, deposed that he had seen cases of spontaneous inflammation where there had been no previous disease, which had caused so great a shock to the nervous system as to produce syncope and death—death quite as sudden as that of General Dick. The coroner summed up at great length, observing, that Mr. Dick had acted from no improper motive in instituting the inquiry, and that he was fully justified in causing it to be made, the only object being to ascertain the cause of death. If they were of opinion that the death was natural from serous apoplexy, they would return a verdict of died by the visitation of God. If they were not satisfied, they could find that he died suddenly from some cause unknown. The jury having consulted for a few minutes, returned the following verdict:—"Died from inflammation of the stomach and bowels, but how produced there is no evidence to show."

Cambridge.—Much surprise and regret were occasioned last week by the appearance of the following notice, announcing the closing of Messrs. Humfrey's bank:—"To the public—As, under existing circumstances, I do not feel that I should be justified in paying or receiving any money on account of my bank at present, business will be suspended for three or four days. On Monday next business will be carried on in the usual manner, and such arrangements made as will satisfy everybody that the property I possess is much more than double the amount of all the just claims united that can possibly be made upon it.—Charles Humfrey, Cambridge, August 13, 1845." The bank has ceased to issue notes for a considerable time, and the inconvenience which will fall upon the depositors, it is said, will be but temporary. The London and County Joint-Stock Bank have taken the premises, and are now carrying on business.

Harwich.—Government have appropriated 25,000*l.* of the grant for the improvement of harbours to that of Harwich, and the works will be commenced immediately.

Ipswich.—The Brandeston Hall estates in this county, which were purchased by Mr. George Robins, as an investment in June last, for 30,000 guineas, have been sold by that gentleman to Mr. Charles Austin, the eminent counsel. It is said that the bonus for assigning the contract is 5000 guineas. The purchase money of 35,000 guineas it is said is not more than the fruits of Mr. Austin's retainers before railway committees during the last session of Parliament.

Manchester.—We hear that the corporation of Manchester, in a spirit worthy of the present age, and with a liberality and munificence only to be paralleled in the past, has resolved to avail itself of Mr. Ewart's Bill, for the purpose of immediately establishing in that town a Museum illustrative of all the industrial arts, with the various applications of Science and Art to economic purposes. It is proposed to erect a splendid building at the cost of 100,000*l.*—the galleries of which are to be so arranged that, whilst they accommodate the permanent collection, they will afford ample space and convenience for an annual exposition of British Art. Two lecture rooms are to be connected with the building, and lectures by men of eminence are to be delivered at stated seasons. It is proposed that all the advantages of the establishment shall be open to the labouring classes during the evenings at a charge of a penny only for each individual. Some of the most influential manufacturers are interesting themselves zealously to secure the completion of this design upon the broadest basis of liberality.—Athenæum.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—On Thursday of last week an explosion, attended by the most fatal and disastrous effects, took place in the colliery called Brown's Wallsend, at Jarrow, a small mining village on the Tyne, about 6 miles from this place. The colliery is the property of T. D. Brown, Esq., of Jarrow. It is a very old colliery, and the shaft is of considerable depth. 45 men were at work in the Bensham seam when the explosion took place, and 35 in the Low main, the former being at the depth of 175 fathoms from the surface, and the latter 195 fathoms. The loss of life has been chiefly in the Low main, where the explosion must have occured though its effects are visible in every other part of the mine. The explosion commenced in the low seam, and its cause it is as yet impossible to ascertain. The Davy lamp and candles were used by the miners. The brattices, which divided the shaft into three portions, having been blown down by the explosion, the current of air was destroyed, and 39 individuals perished from the after-damp. The greatest efforts were made to bring the bodies to bank; the pitmen made almost superhuman exertions to rescue their companions, and one of them, an overman, named Defty, lost his life from the after-damp, in attempting to save the lives, or to extricate the bodies of his comrades. It appears, from the lengthy accounts in the local papers, that as soon as possible after the explosion Mr. Jopling, the viewer, and Mr. Defty, the overman, descended to ascertain the fate of the poor creatures below, and, after considerable difficulty, succeeded in rescuing from the Bensham seam 48 human beings; but, as may be imagined, in a dreadful state of suffering from the effect of the noxious air, and the fright attending the explosion. The dead bodies, however, of two men and one boy were found in this seam, that being all that perished in that particular part of the pit. During the confusion that prevailed, in endeavouring to preserve those that remained in the pit, Mr. Defty came twice to the surface in a state of great exhaustion. He was warned to be cautious how he periled his own life, but he persisted in going down in company with his son. In less than half an hour afterwards he was brought up dead. The unfortunate man had missed his way in the workings, and perished. His son was also considerably affected. About 30 of the bodies were on Sunday consigned to the grave, in Jarrow churchyard, the funeral being witnessed by upwards of 3000 spectators, many of whom had come from a considerable distance. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Accidental Death, stating that they meant to attach no blame to any one.

Northfleet.—Considerable interest has been excited in this neighbourhood by an inquest upon the body of a pauper, who died, as was believed by the overseers of the parish, in consequence of the neglect of the medical and relieving officers of the Union of North Aylesford, including the parish of Northfleet. After being twice adjourned, the inquest was resumed on Tuesday. Some additional evidence being obtained, the coroner summed up, and the jury having deliberated about half an hour, returned the following verdict:—"Our verdict is, that John Tuckwell died from natural causes, namely the small-pox; and we much regret that so little attention had been paid to the patient in the early part of the disease, apparently in consequence of the undue interference of the local guardian with the overseer and relieving officer." The room was crowded during the whole of the proceedings. The poor rates of Northfleet parish are 1570*l.* a year, and the relief given to the poor, it is said, amounts to the expenditure of 200*l.* a year.

Oxford.—The Oxford Herald contains a long correspondence between the Bishop of Oxford, Dr. Phillimore, and the Rev. J. Jordan, of Eustone, in consequence of a reprimand from the Bishop to the latter gentleman for presiding at a meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society.

Portsmouth.—The appointment to the command of the Excellent, gunnery ship, vacant by the appointment of Captain Sir T. Hastings to the Ordnance Department as storekeeper, has been conferred upon Captain Chads, late second in command on the China station, in the Cambrian, 36, with the broad pendant of Commodore. The naval papers state that it is intended to have 16 line-of-battle ships, and eight or 10 frigates, with screw propellers, as block ships for our sea-ports. The armament of each line-of-battle ship will be 26 42-pounders, 26 32-pounders, and four 56-pounders. They will have the masts and yards of a 46-gun frigate, and a crew of 568 men, including officers, seamen, marines, and stokers. Each ship will only take six weeks' provisions and water and be made to act both offensive and defensive. The engines are to be 450 horse power. The frigate will have the masts and yards of a 26-gun frigate, and be armed with 20 42-pounders and three 56-pounders, with engines of 300 horse power, and a crew of 3 6 officers, seamen, marines, and stokers. Tenders for machinery are to be advertised for; the other part of the work will be done by the dockyards. The 30 sail of the line at the Nore, Portsmouth, and Plymouth, brought forward as advanced ships, are ordered to be further advanced by having the breechings for the guns fitted complete forthwith, two main, fore, and one mizen topmasts, and a jibboom, to be put on board each ship, and all the small stores not already provided to be furnished immediately. The Royal William, 120, and Wellesley, 72, are to be fitted immediately at Plymouth, as advanced ships, to make up the number there; and the Nelson, 120, and Carnatic, 72, have been taken in hand at Portsmouth.

Plymouth.—The Hon. Granville Knox, son of Lord Ranfurly, was drowned while bathing in the Tamar, on Monday the 18th inst. Deceased was 16 years of age, and was a pupil of the Rev. Mr. Vallack, of St. Budeaux.—The fortification of Staddon Heights commenced a few weeks since. The defences of Drake's Island and Maker Heights are rapidly progressing.—An application having been made on behalf of a newly-formed company in this town, for the construction of a new floating basin inside the pier at Millbay (a survey for which was made in 1838), the Lords of the Admiralty have directed the Port-Admiral, harbour-master, and master-attendant, to view and report on the proposed site. The space chosen is about 20 acres.—Mr. Snow Harris of this town has been presented with an elegant china vase by his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia, as a mark of respect for Mr. Harris's known researches in electricity, and the practical application of them in protecting ships from lightning, to which his Majesty was led to direct his attention on board the Black Eagle steam-yacht.

Tynemouth.—The colossal statue of Lord Collingwood, for the monument at Tynemouth, was landed on Tuesday last, at Newcastle-quay, and will be immediately placed upon its pedestal. It is the work of Mr. Lough, weighs 30 tons, and is 21 feet high. The pedestal is now up to its intended height (about 45 feet), but the terrace and steps on which it stands will be left incomplete until the figure is placed. The whole height will be 66 feet. The terrace will be approached by a flight of stairs from the south, 30 feet in width, and on each side of which there is intended to be a pedestal for the support of two cannons which were used in the ships at the battle of Trafalgar.

Winchester.—The Morning Post states that, on account of the late exposure at Andover, the price of bones has fallen from 3*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* per cwt. in Winchester, and several other towns. The chief source of supply to the former has been from Winchester, and on Tuesday week a contractor sent over 22 cwt. to the workhouse, the purchase of which was, however, declined, with an intimation that no more would be received. It is added, that the workhouse at Andover was chiefly supplied with bones from Winchester, and that these being principally from the barracks, are what are called "barrack bones," and that in consequence of the quantity of marrow, fat, gristle, &c., which they contain, they are esteemed of much greater value than common bones. Sometimes they are sent over fresh, but at other times in quite a rancid state. The parish of Andover used to purchase the bones at 3*s.* 6*d.* per cwt., and after they had been broken by the paupers into "chump bones" they were disposed of for agricultural purposes, the parish receiving the profits. The practice of bone-crushing has been discontinued at the Winchester union poor-house.—The British Archæological Association will hold their meeting at Winchester in the week commencing Monday Sept. 8, under the presidency of the Marquis of Northampton. A numerous meeting of the local committee was held on Friday, at the Town-hall, for the purpose of making the final arrangements. In point of numbers the attendance at this meeting will, it is anticipated, be much greater than the last.

Worcester.—The 122d musical festival of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester, commenced on Tuesday. The first morning's performance consisted merely of the cathedral service, interspersed and diversified with the Dettingen Te Deum, Purcell's Jubilate in D. Dr. Crotch's anthem (psalm xcvii.), "The Lord is King," and Handel's coronation anthem, "My heart is inditing." In the evening, at the College Hall, the performances included Handel's Acis and Galatea, Herr Staudigl being the Polyphemus, and Miss Rainforth Galatea; followed by a selection of songs and concerted music On Wednesday the second morning's performance commenced with a selection of anthems by Tallis, Wise, Dr. Crotch, Dr. Blow, Dr. Boyce, Purcell, Mendelssohn, and the Rev. W. B. Havergal, a resident of Worcester; followed by Spohr's Last Judgment, admirably performed, by the Misses Williams, Miss Rainforth, Messrs. Staudigl, Pearsall, Hobbs, and Machin. In the evening there was at College Hall a miscellaneous concert, comprising songs, madrigals, glees, and instrumental pieces. On Thursday, the third and last morning's performance, was the Messiah, which attracted a larger number of visitors than even the masterpiece of Spohr on Wednesday, as many as 1200 persons being present. The concert in the evening was a miscellaneous selection, of which Mendelssohn's Walpurgis Night was the principal feature. The receipts and contributions at the doors on each day were above the average.

York.—The great Peter Bell in York Minster is now safely suspended in its own tower. The weight of the bell and its appendages, together with the frame, is calculated to be 29 tons, but the strength of the tower is equal to triple that weight. The bell is the largest in the kingdom, being 5 tons heavier than "Old Tom" of Oxford, and 7 tons heavier than the celebrated "Tom" of Lincoln. The cost of it is above 2000*l.*; its height 7 feet 4 inches, and its diameter 8 feet 4 inches. It is placed (at a height of nearly 200 feet) diagonally in the tower, for the greater security to the building, and above 300 cubic feet of timber have been used for its support. It may be rung with two wheels, and will revolve entirely, if necessary.

Railways.

Meetings of the Southampton and Dorchester, the Lynn and Dereham, the Leeds and Thirsk, the Londonderry and Enniskillen, the North Wales, the South Staffordshire, the Huddersfield and Manchester, the Eastern Union, the Chester and Holyhead, the Birmingham and Gloucester, and the Blackwall Companies, have been held during the past week. The Southampton and Dorchester has been leased by the South-Western at the rate of 4 per cent. on the cost of the line, and equal division of surplus profits.—The Lynn and Dereham have made arrangements with several of the competitive projects for mutual benefits to insure success to each interest; the three Lynn lines, it is said, will before long be united and worked under one management, and the Leeds and Thirsk have joined with the Leeds and Dewsbury in erecting a station at Leeds, and also with the Leeds and Bradford for using their line of junction with the North Midland branch.—The Londonderry and Enniskillen goes forward steadily, and several new schemes are afloat connected with it for securing a direct communication from Londonderry to Dublin. The sum raised by deposits was 25,000*l.*, and the expenditure amounted to 4150*l.*, leaving a balance of 24,850*l.* in the hands of the company.—The Blackburn and Preston have resolved to raise additional capital to meet the expenses of their works. An issue of 25*l.* shares is to take place, one new share being allotted to every two old shares: the capital will then stand at 180,000*l.* Negotiations are in progress for an amalgamation of this company with the East Lancashire.—The North Wales have obtained their act of Parliament for 7500*l.*, and the balance to the credit of the company is 12,107*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* The works from Bangor to Carnarvon will be finished, it is said, by next summer.—The contracts on the Huddersfield and Manchester line have been let at a sum below the engineer's estimate; the Sheffield and Manchester have taken a lease of this line for 7 years. A branch line to Oldham, notwithstanding reported difficulties, is strongly recommended by the directors. The purchase of the Rumsden Canal and the Oldham branch will render an additional issue of shares necessary at no distant date. The railway will occupy three years before it can be completed.—The works of the Chester and Holyhead between Chester and the Menai Straits are presented as making satisfactory progress, and those in the neighbourhood of Anglesea will be immediately commenced. The call of 5*l.* per share is postponed till January next. Government, it is said, will lay down an electric telegraph on this line. The accounts presented to the shareholders were accepted as satisfactory.—The Norfolk Railway exhibits considerable prospects. The amalgamated companies work well, and a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. has been declared on the shares of the late Norwich and Yarmouth Company.—The Birmingham and Gloucester have announced a dividend of 1*l.* 16*s.* per 100*l.* share. The report was merely a recapitulation of the agreement which had been entered into between the Midland and Birmingham and Gloucester Companies.—The Blackwall have declared a dividend of 2*s.* per share free of income-tax. The report was very favourable, and the prospects of the company continue to improve. The junction with the Eastern Counties Company is regarded as one of the best strokes of policy achieved by the direction. It appears the line is working well in conjunction with the steam-boat traffic, which increases the revenue of the general concern. The chairman, in reply to a proprietor, said the directors would go on with the Epping scheme next session, if the Eastern Counties did not. By the agreement between the two companies of July last, it had been arranged that "the promoters should proceed in the present session with a Bill for the junction at Stepney, and that the Blackwall should not make any application for a line to or towards Loughton, Chigwell, or Epping, next year, unless the Eastern Counties Company should decline to make any line for the accommodation of these districts." No great expense would be incurred by the proprietors in the case of the Epping line, and, in fact, the people of the locality said, that if neither company undertook the extension, they would take it up themselves.—The frauds practised upon the Dublin and Galway Company by parties assuming false names and addresses have, by no means, been confined to that particular railway. Last week the police magistrates committed two persons for trial on the charge of obtaining shares in the South Midland Company under false pretences,—one case being no less than the forgery of the name of Mr. De Lisle, the merchant, of Devonshire-square, Bishopsgate, and the other the assumption of the name and address of Colonel Howard Stanley, of Home Park, Windsor, no such person being in existence either at Windsor or elsewhere. Letters were also forwarded last week to Exeter from town in envelopes, to be posted at Exeter, for the provisional committee of the London and Birmingham Extension and Northampton, Daventry, Leamington, and Warwick Railways, 11, Finsbury-place South, London, thus bearing out the evidence given before the railway committees on that practice being generally in operation.—The Board of Trade have issued circulars to the London and Croydon and Eastern Counties Companies, recommending the abolition of assistant-engines behind a train.—Captain Charlewood, the superintendent of the Dover line, has resigned his appointment, in consequence, it is said, of a report of the Board of Trade against him.—A series of experiments have been made, during the last 10 days on the London and Croydon, as to the power of ascending inclines. A train was brought to the foot of an incline of 1 in 50, and stopped so as to deprive it of any power it might have acquired from the previous impetus. It was then propelled by the atmosphere up the incline, and that which many eminent engineers declared an impossibility was accomplished with the greatest ease. Among other results that have been obtained, it is mentioned that the 5-miles' length of tube has been exhausted in its whole extent, the barometer being at the time 27¼, and that the piston has traversed its whole length. The experiments, as far as they have gone, demonstrate not only the practicability but the superiority of the atmospheric mode of propulsion. The train was frequently propelled at the rate of 80 miles an hour.

The chronicle of new schemes for the week, taken in conjunction with the innumerable ones that have preceded it, almost lead to the conclusion that the prediction delivered in the House of Lords, that "every village will soon have its railway," was about to receive its fulfilment. Numbers of new schemes have made their appearance, the "direct" feature being the prevailing one. The Direct London and Exeter proposes a direct communication between London, Plymouth, and Falmouth. Starting from its central terminus at Hungerford, the line is to branch off to Hammersmith, Turnham-green, Brentford, Isleworth, Hounslow, Staines, Egham, Bagshot, Ascot, Bracknell, Binfield, Wokingham, Kingsclere, Andover, and Salisbury; Shaftesbury, Sherborne, Yeovil, Crewkerne, Axminster (or from Salisbury to Cranbourne, Blandford, Dorchester, Bridport, Axminster), and Honiton, to Exeter. It is to adopt the old mail-coach track, and avoiding the circuit taken by the Great Western, save 30 miles between Exeter and London. Its proposed capital is, 3,000,000*l.*—A direct competition to the preceding, called the Direct Western, from London to Falmouth and Penzance, is also in the field, with a proposed fund of 3,000,000*l.*, to run on the wide gauge of the Great Western from Newbury to Taunton, Tiverton, Crediton, Okehampton, Hatherleigh, Launceston, Truro, and Falmouth, with a continuation from Truro, via Redruth, to Penzance, accommodating the agricultural communities of Devizes, Lavington, Ludgershall, Marlborough, Warminster, Westbury, Bradford, Trowbridge, Frome, Bruton, Wells, Glastonbury, Shepton Mallett, Castle Cary, Somerton, and Langport.—The London, Warwick, Leamington, and Kidderminster line is backed by the London and Birmingham, who propose to carry it at a cost of one million, by a direct line along the valley of the Nene, through Weedon, Daventry, Southam, Leamington, Warwick, Henley-in-Arden, Redditch, Studley, Alcester, Feckenham, Astwood-bank, Stoke-works, and Bromsgrove.—The Boston, Newark, and Sheffield, is to unite by a direct line the agricultural counties of Lincoln, Nottingham, and Derby, with the manufacturing districts of West Yorkshire, Lancashire, and Cheshire. Capital one million and a half. It is a modification of the Newark and Sheffield line, which failed in the last session.—The Lincoln, Louth, and Great Grimsby is to connect Grimsby with the Nottingham and Lincoln at Nottingham, passing through Wragby and Market Raisen to Louth.—The Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Stour Valley is promoted by the London and Birmingham, to compensate them for the loss of the London and South Staffordshire line, and they divide with the Great Western the mass of metal traffic in that district. It is to accommodate itself to the banks of the Birmingham Canal as far as Wolverhampton, where it will throw off a branch to Dudley.—The Liverpool and Leeds Direct is for the construction of 35 miles of line, commencing at Bolton, and running viâ Halifax to Leeds.—The Manchester, Huddersfield, Barnsley and Goole is to embrace in its route the Saddleworth and Marsden Valleys, and form a continuous communication by means of the existing line with the Irish and German oceans.—The Leicester and Tamworth Junction is to connect Leicester and the Midland Counties with the mining districts of South Staffordshire and open a direct communication with the Staffordshire Potteries and Liverpool and Manchester. It will commence at Leicester, and running to Market Bosworth, will join the Trent Valley near its intersection with the Birmingham and Derby at Tamworth, giving a direct communication by way of Lichfield to Walsall, Wolverhampton, Dudley, &c.; and by the Grand Junction and North Staffordshire railways to Liverpool, Manchester, and the Potteries.—The Surrey Grand Junction proposes an extension of the South Eastern, Brighton, Portsmouth, South Western, and Richmond, to the City and West-end Railway at Chelsea, and thence by means of that line to Hungerford-market and the City; and also to effect the junction of these lines with the Great Western and Birmingham, enabling passengers and goods to be carried from all parts of the north to all parts of the south, viâ London, and furnishing a thorough line from one end of the kingdom to the other.—The Devonport, Bristol, and Dover, proposes to commence at Reading, running by Farnborough, Guildford, and Dorking to Reigate, and ultimately forming a union between the Great Western, South Western, South Eastern, and Brighton lines, thus connecting Dover with Portsmouth and Southampton, and Dover and Brighton with Bristol and Plymouth; also the western and north western parts of England with Brighton, Dover, and the eastern coast.—The Great North and South Wales and Worcester line is to connect the north and south of the principality with the London and Birmingham, and to reach Carnarvon by a route of 130 miles.—The Churnet and Blythe, or Macclesfield and Lichfield Junction, is to furnish the shortest possible route between London and Manchester, in connection with existing lines. It is a resuscitation of the Churnet Valley scheme of last session, which was rejected on standing orders, and will be 30 miles long.—The Scottish Western is a great integral trunk scheme, to connect Edinburgh and Glasgow, and the east and south-west of Scotland with Argyleshire and the north-west. Starting from Oban, the central point of communication between the mainland and the western islands, it will proceed thence by Loch Etive, Loch Awe, Dalmally, Tyndrum, and Loch Lomond, to Balloch, where it will terminate by a junction with either of the proposed lines from Glasgow to Dumbarton and Balloch, and, by means of the lines centering in Glasgow, form an unbroken chain of communication from the whole north-western coast. The fisheries and agricultural produce will form the staple of its trade, in connection with the north-western Highlands. As a landscape line it will introduce the tourist to the sceneries of the Highlands, winding through Loch Lomond, Glenfalloch, and Loch Awe, skirting the base of Ben Cruachan, bordering on the pass of Brander, and giving access to Staffa and Iona.—The Tring, Reading, and Basingstoke is to unite the Birmingham and South-Western; and the Waveney Valley is to run from Yarmouth viâ Lowestoft and Bungay to London.—The General Post-office and Regent's Canal is to connect the Great Western, Birmingham, and Eastern Counties with the Post-office, the City, and the Thames.—The Somersetshire Midland is to be a connecting link between the Wilts and Somerset and Bristol and Exeter, uniting Frome with Highbridge, the South and Midland Junction, and Brecon, Wootton Basset, Devizes, and Salisbury, its original point being Bicester, is to afford facility of intercourse with the Metropolis in one direction, with Stafford, the Potteries, Birmingham, Liverpool, and Manchester on the other; and near Woodstock, where the Oxford and Rugby line crosses, it is to enter the two great arteries of the kingdom—the Great Western and the London and Birmingham—the former at Wallingford, and the latter at Rugby.—The Direct Norwich is to run from Bury, between the Northern and Eastern and Eastern Counties, through Dunmow, Chipping Ongar, Woodford, &c.; and enter the metropolis by Farringdon-street, so as to bring Norwich within 100 miles of London.—A new line has also been determined on by the proprietors of the Kennet and Avon Canal, who are about to convert 57 miles of their canal, viz., that part between Newbury and Bath, into a railroad. At Newbury the new line will meet the Newbury and Reading Junction of the Great Western, and will thus shorten the distance from London to Bath by 3½ miles, and avoid the Box-tunnel.

Dublin.—The Protestant Operative dinner to Mr. Watson, at Belfast, has been postponed from the 28th inst to the 4th of September, at the request of Lord Roden, who has promised to preside on the occasion. The several railway companies which obtained Acts of Parliament last session have now held all the meetings prescribed to be held by statute within one month after the passing of their respective acts of incorporation, and all have had from their boards of direction very encouraging reports. They promise to commence their respective works without any delay; so that there is likely soon to be abundant employment for Irish labourers at home. The Limerick and Waterford line commences to be worked between the town of Tipperary and Limerick; the line adjoining Waterford awaits the opinion of Sir John Rennie and the fiat of the Board of Works. New lines of railway are almost daily projected; so that in a few years Ireland will be most essentially altered in all that regards inter-communication.—An evening paper states that, by special direction of Sir R. Peel, the Commissioners of Inquiry respecting the erection of asylum harbours, fishing piers, &c, commence their labours in Ireland, and that Captain Washington, Mr. Hume, and other commissioners, have left London in fulfilment of their mission. It may be added that they have arrived in Dublin, and will proceed at once on a tour of inspection.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday in Conciliation-hall, Town-councillor O'Reilly in the chair. There was a very scanty attendance of members. The CHAIRMAN, in his opening address, hinted at what he deemed to be the great danger of the present crisis. The Government were now trying to draw away some of their young men by the lure of place and office. The new colleges would supply tempting situations to young men of literary talents; and in Maynooth itself an effort would be made to bias the minds of the rising generation of the Catholic priesthood. There was a peril in these regards which they must prepare against. Already he feared that some wavering individuals had been drawn away from them. For the present he would say no more, but he reserved himself for a future day, when he would speak out more openly, and denounce in the strongest terms all flinchers from their sacred cause.—Mr. J. O'CONNELL informed the meeting that, conformably with the advice of his father, they had prepared another address to the Protestants of the north of Ireland, on the subject of the Orange meetings. They might be sneered at and traduced for still endeavouring to conciliate men who had given so little encouragement to their overtures, but they would never desist from the blessed work of conciliation, nor ever omit doing anything which had a tendency to promote it. This address, which was read to the meeting, concluded by saying—"What benefit to any party amongst us is there in these our sad and ruinous dissensions? What advantage are you reaping from them, or has there been to us? Alike we are laughed at and contemned—in turn we are oppressed. Your meetings now are as odious to the Government as ours in 1843. The same unconstitutional means are being resorted to, to put them down. The same injustices are being done to you now, as then to us. We can end this, if we will; we can make our demands be attended to—ourselves be respected—our country be restored to her rights. We can do this again, as it was once before done, in the glorious era of 1782, when your forefathers in arms shook hands with our forefathers in chains, and both vowed together to make their country a nation. We can do this, if, in the name of our common Creator, we forget and bury our miserable differences, and make a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether for old Ireland." Mr. J. O'CONNELL also adverted to a letter which he had received from the Right Rev. Dr. Cantwell, which he deemed particularly valuable, as showing how repugnant the Infidel Colleges Bill was to the feelings of their prelates, or at least of some of them. He moved a vote of thanks to the Bishop for his admirable letter, which was of course agreed to. A long letter from Mr. S. O'Brien was read, enclosing his subscription for the present month, and repeating "that nothing would tend so much to advance the cause of Repeal as that a large majority of the Irish representatives should appear in Conciliation Hall, or in the House of Commons, in the character of uncompromising advocates of the legislative freedom of Ireland." The rent for the week was 207*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.*

Clare.—The county Clare is said to be much disturbed at present. Several very atrocious Whiteboy outrages were committed there last week. At Ballybricken, Mr. John Williams, an English engineer over the silver and lead mines of John M'Donnel, was attacked at his house by a band of ruffians in pursuit of fire-arms, and grievously wounded.

Scotland.

Dunfermline.—Last week in the night between Wednesday and Thursday the town of Dunfermline and neighbourhood were the scene of very unexpected outrages. Ever since the riots of 1842, a company of soldiers had been stationed in Dunfermline till about four weeks ago, when they were removed by orders from head-quarters, in opposition to the remonstrances of the local authorities. Those who were best acquainted with the reckless and desperate character of some of the inhabitants, looked on this removal as the signal for an outbreak of the most terrible kind in Dunfermline, and people became alarmed. Towards night all on Wednesday the streets of Dunfermline presented the usual sight of a great number of working people walking and standing in groups, but there was nothing to be seen to put the police on the alert, and far less to suggest the calling in of any extra force to keep the peace. About 9 o'clock, however, a person in disguise began beating a drum at the west end of Golfdrum-street, and soon collected a large crowd, the beating of the drum being evidently a signal that had been agreed on. The drummer and the crowd, which increased as they went along, proceeded to the premises of Mr. Alexander, manufacturer, in Canmore-street, where they stopped, and with slabs and stones knocked in or smashed to pieces all the windows in the house, the frames as well as the glass. The magistrates and police were soon on the spot, but there was no adequate force at hand capable of dispersing the mob. In these circumstances, Provost Ronaldson, went forward with Baillie Birrell and Mr. Macdonald, the Fiscal, and attempted to seize the drummer, when a ruffian, with a stick, came behind him and felled him to the ground. On Provost Ronaldson being raised up his head was found to be severely cut, and he was otherwise so much injured that it was not till Friday that his medical attendants could report that he was doing well. As soon as the tumultuous assembly seemed satisfied with the work of demolition on Mr. Alexander's property in Canmore-street, the crowd, which might now consist of 2000 persons, proceeded about seven at least to the dwelling-house of Mr James Alexander, on his estate at Balmule, about 3½ miles from Dunfermline. On leaving Dunfermline the drummer ceased his beating, and the mob moved on in great silence—scarcely a word being spoken. It was about 11 o'clock when the crowd, in quietness and in order, reached Baimule-house, having crossed the fields to it, in order to come all at once in a body upon it, instead of walking up the avenue in a line. No voice or sound gave intimation to the inmates till a shower of stones demolished the window-panes. The inmates, however, succeeded in closing the shutters within. At this time Mr. and Mrs. Alexander were asleep in bed, as well as their five children, the oldest only 7 years of age. The other inmates were four women. The crowd, after demolishing every pane of glass in all the four sides of the house, and above the front door, besides breaking the window-frames, and in some places the panelling of the inner shutters, and the iron rails at the front of the door, burst into the lobby by smashing the door with a large stone, and thus breaking open the lock. The servants flew up stairs to save themselves, and the rioters now set about their murderous work with deliberation and quietness. There was a screen before the kitchen fire with clothes upon it, and to these clothes the ruffians set fire, and at the same time brought in the hats, cloaks, and other articles in the lobby, and tore them to pieces, and added them as fuel to the flames. One of the women, hoping to divert the fury of the mob from their intended victim, said, that if it was Mr. Alexander they wanted, they could not find him, as he had left that morning for Edinburgh; on which one of the ringleaders, with a horrid oath, said that he had seen Mr. Alexander that day, and that he knew he was then in the house. They had two watchwords—"Fire," which seemed to mean, "There is danger," and "White," which seemed to mean, "There is no danger." When a few servants appeared from a neighbouring farm, the word "Fire" was given by the scout about the lodge. When they were known to be only servants, "White" was vociferated. It is now believed that there were the strictest injunctions given to utter no names, under the penalty of death. Mr. Alexander escaped to the roof of his house, where he hid himself, having wrapped himself in a blanket, and there he remained till after the crowd dispersed, in which state he was nearly suffocated by the smoke. In the mean time the servant-girl, by the direction of Mrs. Alexander, told the mob they were at liberty to take what they pleased from the house, if they would grant her and and her family their lives. But anything so innocent as housebreaking and robbery seemed far from their hearts. Mrs. Alexander, in her night-gown, and her children in the same condition, had now descended, and were making their escape. About the door she lost the slippers she had on her feet, and some of the rioters dragged her across the gravel walk, now thickly strewed with the window-glass of the house. One or two of the crowd, it is said, used her roughly, and the mother and her five children had to cross the fields at midnight in a state of nakedness, to save themselves from being murdered by a mob of ruffians. Mrs. Alexander and her children took refuge at Balmule farm. On the alarm being heard in Dunfermline, the Sheriff Shireff, Procurator Fiscal, and Inspector of County Police, drove off for Balmule-house, but the mob had left and dispersed, and all was quiet before they could reach the place. A despatch was immediately sent off to Edinburgh to Mr. Sheriff Monteith, and to Piershill-barracks for military; the Sheriff arrived on Thursday with a troop of the 4th Dragoon Guards, who were soon landed at Queensferry, and rode into Dunfermline early in the forenoon. On Thursday evening great numbers of persons were seen in the streets, but they were soon dispersed by the police. It was rumoured that an attack was meditated on the property of some individuals in the employment of the Messrs. Alexander. However, the exertions of the police were such as to prevent any assembling, and Dunfermline since the riot has remained perfectly tranquil. The cause of this riot appears to be an alleged breach of faith of the Messrs. Alexander with the other manufacturers in not adhering to the table of prices agreed on by the manufacturers in 1843 or 1844. It is reported, however, that the Messrs. Alexander never signed that agreement with the rest of the manufacturers. On Monday the justices of the district met, and resolved to memorialize Government on the necessity of making Dunfermline a permanent military station, and having barracks built for the accommodation of the men.

Renfrew.—The local papers state that if proof were wanting to show what an extraordinary increase has taken place in the value of land in this country during the last half century, they might point to the great price which the sale of each successive estate brings that is put into the market. In the "Scots' Magazine" of 1792, it is stated that the estate of Kelly, in Renfrewshire, was sold in that year to John Wallace, Esq., for 10,750*l.* The same estate, when sold the other day, brought 65,000*l.*, although denuded of a valuable part of the shore ground, which has been retained by the late proprietor.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—Post-office Robbery.—George Smith, 22, postman, was indicted for stealing a letter containing a brooch and a pencil-case, the property of Her Majesty's Postmaster-General. From the evidence adduced, it appeared that a travelling jeweller, named Blumenthal, had been employed to get a brooch and a stone of a certain pattern for a customer, and he sent to Birmingham to obtain them. The person who received the order could not obtain [illegible] at Birmingham, but eventually they were obtained at Northampton, and were posted in a letter addressed to London. This letter did not come to hand, and shortly afterwards, when the lodgings of the prisoner, who had been taken into custody upon another charge, were searched, the stolen articles were discovered. The jury found the prisoner Guilty. There was another charge against him of a similar description, but it was not proceeded with. Mr. Justice Wightman sentenced the prisoner to be transported for 15 years. Robbery on Buckingham [illegible], was indicted for stealing a quantity of [illegible] and a China vase, the property of the Queen. Prisoner was employed as a cabinet-maker, with several other workmen, in Buckingham Palace in June last, and the property in question was supposed to have been abstracted on the [illegible] month. On the evening of that day the prisoner was seen to leave the palace with a bag, which was supposed to contain his tools, therefore no suspicion was excited. Prisoner afterwards called at a short distance from the palace and proceeded to the shop of Mr. Seymour, a silversmith, in Long-acre, where he offered the silver in question for sale. Mr. Seymour, having some suspicion, asked him his name, and he replied that it was John Johnson, and he gave an address; [illegible] Mr. Seymour gave him a portion of the amount, and directed a policeman to watch him, and on finding that he went to a different address to the one he had stated, the policeman took him into custody. In addition to these facts it was proved that the prisoner left, in the cab which he had hired to convey him to Long-acre, a vase, and upon his not returning in the course of three hours the driver took this vase to the Hackney-coach office at Somerset-house, where it was identified as having formed part of the property stolen from the palace. It was likewise proved that while the prisoner was in custody at the police-station in Bow-street, he wrote a letter to his wife requesting her to state that a foreign gentleman who had been lodging with them had left the old silver in their charge two years before, and had told them that, if he did not return in three months, they might apply it to their own use, and also that he had told them to give the name of Johnson as a reference for the party for whom they sold it. The whole of the property was produced and identified by the Inspector of Palaces as the property of her Majesty. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty, but strongly recommended the prisoner to mercy on account of his previous good character. Sentence, 12 months' imprisonment, and hard labour.—FORGERY.—Thomas Parker, aged 51, carpenter, was indicted for uttering a forged order for the payment of 130*l.*, with intent to defraud Henry Bosanquet and others, and George James Aungier, aged 32, author of the "History of Sion Monastery," and editor of the "French Chronicles of London," in the Camden Society's publications, was indicted for counselling and abetting Parker in the commission of the offence. The prisoner Aungier was likewise arraigned upon a charge of forging the order in question, but to this indictment he pleaded guilty. From the evidence adduced, it appeared that, on the 26th July, Parker went to the St. James's-branch of the London and Westminster Bank, and presented a cheque, purporting to be drawn by Mr. Nicholls, the printer, who kept an account with the bank, for the sum of 130*l.* The cheque was at once discovered to be a forgery, and on Parker being questioned he said he had received it from a person named Murray, but he subsequently mentioned the name of the prisoner Aungier, and gave his address in the City-road. The officer proceeded there and apprehended Aungier, and on searching his house some documents were discovered which left no doubt of his guilt. As Aungier pleaded guilty, the only question for the Jury was whether the prisoner Parker, at the time he presented the cheque at the bank, had a knowledge of its being forged? In order to show this, evidence was adduced that the two prisoners and their wives were on very friendly terms, and that they frequently visited each other, and appeared very intimate. There were no other material facts adduced in evidence against the prisoner Parker, and it appeared that when Aungier was under examination at the police-office he declared that he alone was guilty, and that he had merely sent Parker as a messenger to obtain the money for the cheque. The jury at once Acquitted Parker, and found Aungier Guilty. Mr. Justice Wightman then sentenced him to transportation for life.

Miscellaneous.

The Slave Trade.—The Hampshire Telegraph mentions that it has received a private letter from Gibraltar, stating upon good authority that 20,000 slave shackles, for men, women, and children—in all 14 cart-loads, have been fished up from the wreck of the American war-steamer, Missouri, lately burnt at that port.

Malleable Glass.—The Segusian Mercury states that a most marvellous discovery has been made at St. Etienne, of rendering glass as malleable when cold as when first drawn from the pot. The substance, which is called silicon, combines with various substances, producing the most brilliant colours, and can also be obtained opaque or transparent as crystal. Its specific gravity is 2.85, water being 1.00. It is very ductile and malleable, and neither air nor acids act upon it. The idea of discovering malleable glass is only ranked second to that of the philosopher's stone among alchemists, and the latter will doubtless be the next discovery made, for one is as probable as the other.—Commerce.

Home Civilisation.—John Adams, ex president of the United States, being called upon for a contribution for foreign missions, said, "I have nothing to give for that purpose; but there are here in this vicinity six ministers, not one of whom will preach in the other's pulpit. Now, I will give as much or more than any one else to civilise these clergymen."

Nice Calculation.—One of the official assignees at the Bankruptcy Court has lately declared two dividends upon an estate, the first being to the amount of eleven-sixteenths of a penny in the pound, and the second a farthing and half farthing in the pound.

A Town Lighted by Natural Gas.—Fredonia, a town of 1200 inhabitants, with neat white houses, and six churches, is lighted up with natural gas, which bubbles up out of the ground, and is received into a gasometer, which I visited. This gas consists of carburetted hydrogen, and issues from a black bituminous slate, one of the beds of the Hamilton group of the New York geologists, or part of the Devonian formation of Europe. —Lyell's Travels in North America.

A Thing that Ought to be Known.—The beech tree is said to be a non-conductor of lightning. So notorious is the fact, that the Indians, whenever the sky wears the appearance of a thunder-storm, leave their pursuits and take refuge under the nearest beech tree. In Tennessee the people consider it a complete protection. Dr. Becton, in a letter to Dr. Mitchell, states that the beech tree is never known to be struck by atmospheric electricity, while other trees are often shattered into splinters. May not a knowledge of this afford protection to many when exposed?—American paper.

A Light in the East.—A newspaper is about to be established in the city of Jerusalem. Solomon, with all his wisdom, never dreamt of such a thing.—Globe.

Ascent of the Wetterhorn.—It appears from the Berne and Zurich journals that the central or great peak of the Wetterhorn, one of the highest of the Oberland Alps, has been lately ascended by a young Englishman, a son of Dr. Speer. This is a feat hitherto unaccomplished, and was attended with great difficulty and danger, it having been the season of the avalanches.—Examiner.

The "Electric Gun."—In consequence of a communication made by Mr. Beningfield, the inventor of this instrument, to the authorities of the Ordnance, a deputation from the committee of the Royal Artillery at Woolwich, accompanied by Colonel Chalmers, the secretary, attended some days ago at the piece of ground on the south side of King-street, Westminster, where the gun is placed, to see the experiments. As the gun is not made an object of public exhibition, and as the inventor does not allow any close inspection of his invention, it may not be without interest to those who have no opportunity of seeing it to describe, in the words of Mr. Beningfield himself, its appearance, powers, and properties. It was seen by many persons in Jersey, but in London by only a very few friends of the inventor, and a few scientific and military men. The barrel is placed "on a small carriage running upon a pair of wheels, and may be drawn by one horse at 10 miles an hour. When in position it has a third wheel attached, by which it traverses with ease and steadiness. It is light and elegant in appearance; the barrel for discharging the bullets is over the body of the machine, being about 5 feet from the ground, so that the engineer who works it can take a true aim; it is supplied with balls by two chambers, one of which is fixed, the other a moveable one, which is called the volley chamber, and may be made to contain any quantity of balls. From 1000 to 1200 balls could be discharged per minute. These volleys are shot off in quick succession, and while being reloaded, the stationary chamber continues to supply the barrel, so that a constant discharge is maintained. The bullets are five-eighths of an inch in diameter (those used in the experiments on Saturday were not so large); but in actual service, the apparatus being but little enlarged would discharge balls 1 inch in diameter with increased force. The bullets now used are calculated to kill at the distance of a statute mile; they pass freely through a 3-inch plank, which in volley-firing is torn to atoms by their force, but if discharged against an iron target they are dashed to pieces, and if into a solid log of wood are often found welded together, appearing to be united by a semifusion." In the experiments on Saturday the distance of the target was 40 yards from the gun; at that distance the effect was tremendous; a 3-inch plank was perforated, and the balls which struck the iron target flattened as thin as half-crowns—indeed, to mere plates of metal—and frequently beat to atoms. The rapidity of the discharges was very surprising; and the discharges were kept up without intermission apparently as long and as continuous as the engineer thought fit. What the report of the deputation will be of course cannot yet be known. To the engineers, and to the military and naval officers who have been present at the trials, the results have been satisfactory, and the most unqualified praise has been given to the inventor, and the highest testimonials of the efficacy and importance of the invention. The cost for keeping the machine in a continual discharge for 18 hours, resting a few minutes every four hours, has been estimated at 10*l.*; during which time more bullets would be discharged than from the fire of two regiments of musketry firing at their greatest rate of quickness.—Times.

Parsey's Air Engines.—The inventor of these engines, it appears, is sanguine enough to imagine that he has accomplished an object which will work a complete revolution in the mode of drawing or propelling trains on railroads, and in the manner in which the rotatory motion of paddle-wheels in ships is produced. Mr. Parsey's invention is, he thinks, applicable to all the purposes of setting machinery in motion for which steam-engines are now employed. Thus it will act as the motive power in locomotive or stationary engines of all kinds. The engines are worked by means of condensed air. The elasticity of air when compressed into receivers is raised to any power. The engines, according to the description furnished by the patentee, can be filled at a terminus with highly condensed air, previously generated, and replenished from stationary receivers at the various stations of railroads as often as occasion may require. To the receiver or receivers of the engine so filled, to obviate the excessive force and gradual decline of pressure as the working cylinders draw it off, a receiver is attached, into which the air passes till it reaches a given working pressure, which it cannot exceed but by adjustment of the engineer, as the self-acting regulator belonging to the working receiver shuts or opens the inductive passage from the high-pressure receiver or receivers uniformly with the discharges from the driving cylinders, by which means as much power is carried by the engine as will propel it and a train any distance. It has an advantage over steam, inasmuch as steam must be used as it is generated, whereas condensed air may be generated at leisure, and can be kept any length of time without losing its elastic or expansive power, and therefore can be used at any time it is required. In generating steam there is a considerable waste, and there is also a loss in blowing it off when the engine is stopped, but in condensing air there is no waste whatever, neither is any waste incurred by stoppages. From the official report of Mr. Stephenson, the engineer to the London and Birmingham line, it appears that the expenses of steam locomotive power for the line for the year 1843 amounted to 63,834*l.*; out of which enormous amount nearly 30,000*l.* were for coke, coals, and fuel, and the remaining items for expenses incidental and necessary for the repairs of engines, and for things connected with the present system, all of which would, as Mr. Parsey states, be saved if the air-engines were substituted for the steam-engines. Mr. Parsey courts the fullest inquiry into the pretensions of his invention, and is most anxious that it should be fully investigated. The model has been seen in operation at No. 2, Spur-street, Leicester-square, by many mechanicians and practical engineers, and they have spoken of it in terms of enthusiasm, and all persons connected with railways, navigation, and machinery, are invited to go and see it. Whether it will succeed or no we cannot undertake to affirm, but it is certainly of sufficient importance to arouse attention, and deserves to be fully and completely tested.—Times.

Major-Gen. Robertson.
Daniel Sutton, Esq.
O'B. B. Woolsey, Esq.

THE ATTENTION OF ASSURERS is particularly directed to the detailed Prospectuses of this Company. Assurances can be effected on a profit or non-profit scale, and for short periods, at a very moderate rate. When on the life of another, the Policy may be rendered secure, notwithstanding the life assured may go out of the limits of Europe without the necessary permission of the Directors having been previously obtained—this plan makes a Policy an absolute security.

Credit of half the premiums for the first five years allowed on Policies effected for the whole term of life.

Advances are made to Assurers on real or undoubted personal security, for terms of years, repayable by instalments.

WILLIAM RATRAY, Actuary and Secretary.

SCOTTISH WIDOWS' FUND AND LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Constituted by Act of Parliament. Head Office, No. 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh. The Earl of ROSEBERY, K.T., President.

The Funds of the Society now accumulated and invested amount to One Million Five Hundred and Ninety Thousand Pounds Sterling. The Annual Revenue to upwards of Two Hundred and Thirty-three Thousand Pounds Sterling per annum.

The investigation into the affairs of the Society, as provided for by the Articles of Constitution, will take place on the 31st of December, 1845, and all who effect insurances on their lives before that day, which closes the current septennial period, will secure a certain greater benefit than will be obtained by those who delay doing so till the commencement of the following year.

The whole surplus profits belong to the assured, and may be applied either by being added to the sum assured, by reducing the future contributions during life, or by their value in money being given over to them at once.

Further information, with forms of proposal, may be obtained on application at the Head Office, or at any of the Society's Agencies. HUGH M'KEAN, Agent.

London Office, 7, Pall-mall.

News of the Week.

By the arrival of the Overland Mail we have accounts from Calcutta to the 9th, and from Bombay to the 19th of July. The only item of political news is that from Lahore, which is important as supplying the solution of the strange conduct of Gholab Singh, whose ready submission to the power of the young and inexperienced brother of the Ranee had hitherto seemed so unaccountable to every one acquainted with the state of parties in India. It now appears that this powerful and wily chief was only biding his time, and awaiting a convenient pretext for subjecting the Punjaub to his undisputed sway. This pretext was afforded him by a rebellion got up by the young Sirdar Jowahir Singh, for the avowed purpose of assassinating Gholab. A sanguinary battle was the result, in which Jowahir was overthrown, with the loss of 3000 men. The cholera has continued to rage since the last accounts with unabated violence. The oldest European residents, it is said, do not remember any period at which this frightful malady has manifested itself at so many points at once—Madras, Bombay, many subordinate stations of both presidencies, and numberless towns in the Bengal and Agra provinces, have all suffered more or less. These are all looked upon as sporadic outbreaks of the malady, while its appearance along the Sutlej and the Indus is considered to mark its connexion with the frightful migratory form in which it has stalked from Central Asia to Affghanistan, and thence across the Punjaub to our north-west frontier. In Scinde its ravages have been so severely felt that the bazaars had been deserted, and the natives had fled in all directions to escape its attacks. The near approach of cold weather was, however, anxiously looked for, as affording the only sure prospect of a decrease of mortality. There is no news from Affghanistan, excepting the singular announcement that Akhbar Khan is about to undertake a pilgrimage to Mecca.—By the same packet we have recent news from Egypt and the Levant. Ibrahim Pacha, whose arms spread terror and desolation a few years since in Greece and Syria, has been compelled to visit the South of Europe, for the restoration of his health, which has been shattered by his long and arduous career as the head of the Egyptian army. In Turkey, the recent change of Ministry has created an immense sensation among all classes. The fallen Cabinet has found but few partisans among the great bulk of the people, although it might have been expected to enjoy the sympathies of the old Turkish population, seeing that its whole policy was to isolate Turkey, and prevent every attempt to extend European habits and civilisation. The composition of the new Cabinet is a great improvement upon the last, although it obviously wants a vigorous head, and for that reason does not inspire much confidence in its stability.—The news from France contains the Report of the Commission appointed a few months since, under the presidency of the Prince de Joinville, to inquire into the State of the French Steam Navy. The Report is remarkable in many respects, and will be read with interest. It states that all the conclusions advanced in the celebrated pamphlet of the Prince de Joinville have been adopted by the Commissioners without reserve, and that France "does not possess a steam fleet, and scarcely anything resembling it." Our own steam fleet is reported to be equally deficient in all the elements necessary for successful warfare. The Commissioners state that the British steam navy is very little more advanced than that of France, and that the private builders of this country have alone made any progress in improvement, while the Government builders show by "experiments at once onerous and unfortunate" that they have been left far behind.—The accounts from Madrid state that the late insurrection of the shopkeepers has been effectually checked. One unfortunate man has been executed on very slight grounds of suspicion, and numerous arrests have been made, to insure, it is said, the tranquillity of the capital.

Home News.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO GERMANY.—Our last report of her Majesty's progress came down to Sunday, the 24th ult. On the next day, MONDAY, the royal party again breakfasted on the lawn, in the open air. After breakfast, her Majesty transacted business with Lord Aberdeen; and Prince Albert, with his brother the Duke of Saxe Coburg, rode out on the road towards Gotha. In the afternoon, the Queen and Prince Albert, and the rest of the royal party, went to see the wild boars at Munnechsreden, near the Rosenau. They drove to the edge of the forest, and then walked under the shade of its trees to the fetterung, which lies deep in the wood. This fetterung is a large area, strongly palisaded round, with occasional openings at the sides; in the midst is a rude hut, perched up on high, and looking much like the Duke of Athol's bothies in Glen Tilt. Her Majesty and the rest of the royal party ascended into the hut, and the keeper spread around potatoes and oats, and then concealed himself. This feeding process, it appears, is repeated daily in all the wild boar preserves of Germany; and the appetite of the porkers keeps such good time, that they never fail to congregate at the usual feeding-places at dinner-hour, which is half-past five. It seems, however, that these erratic specimens of the porcine species are so very tenacious of their freedom, that they will forego their dinner rather than have their wild beauties investigated if they know it; so the anxious visitor is compelled to hold his breath on pain of losing his sport. A whisper is too much noise for the delicate ears of these susceptible swine. Her Majesty had not long to wait before troops of these swinish rangers of the forest scampered into the inclosure, and munched at the potatoes with considerable gusto. In they came by twos and threes, and sometimes in a throng, but always gently, trottingly, friskingly, like good farm-yard pigs, completely dissipating all the romance which the imagination has so long associated with the habits of the wild boar. One of the accounts state that, "out of more than 100 of these 'wild' boars who found their way into the inclosure and gobbled up the potatoes, there was not one who had a tusk, or who, rather than run on a boar-spear, would not have turned tail and scampered away at the sight of a toasting-fork. They were a very plump, clean, gentlemanly-looking race of half-civilised pigs, with a strong smell certainly, which suggested the idea of a gridiron and fried eggs, but not one spark of the ferocious or the romantic. And those who spent their hour in the hut spying through little holes while the brutes were munching their dinner, might as well have spent it in a farm-yard peeping into a pigsty." Meantime Her Majesty and the royal party remained in perfect silence in the hut, whilst the swinish multitude were over their evening meal; but at length the sun's departing rays warned the party to withdraw, and Her Majesty drove back to the Castle in order to attend the theatre in the evening. The entertainment was Gutzkow's amusing comedy, entitled "Zopf und Schwert," which might be literally rendered "Queue and Sword," its object being the illustration of some of the eccentricities of Frederick William I., the father of Frederick the Great. After the play the orchestra played "God Save the Queen," and some complimentary additional stanzas were handed to Her Majesty and the ladies of the Court. Whilst our national anthem was being played, the audience joined in the chorus, singing the German stanzas, during which Her Majesty stood up in the centre of the box; and when the orchestra ceased playing, she bowed several times, and was handed out of the theatre by her illustrious host, amid loud cries of "Long live the Queen." On TUESDAY morning the anniversary of Prince Albert's birth-day was ushered in by a salute from some of the few guns that could be found in these peaceful dominions. The Prince received the congratulations of his friends as soon as he appeared in the morning, and a larger party than usual was assembled at breakfast, which was again served in the open air. The breakfast party consisted of Her Majesty and the Prince Albert, the King and Queen of the Belgians, the Duke and Duchess of Saxe Coburg Gotha, the Duchess of Kent and Prince Leiningen, the Count Mensdorff, with his three sons, the Grand Duke of Baden and his son, and the Prince Leopold of Saxe Gotha. After breakfast the peasantry, decked out in holiday attire, came tripping on to the lawn, and presented a garland to the Queen, and a bouquet to Prince Albert. They were accompanied by a rustic band of musicians, and the village dance was forthwith commenced, and carried on with untiring spirit. Her Majesty and her illustrious friends looked on at these simple sports with pleasure and interest. The Queen afterwards walked with her host and hostess to the Schweitzerei cottage, which the Duke and Duchess have occupied during the sojourn of their royal guest at Rosenau. The Queen and Prince returned to Rosenau to luncheon unattended. The Duke afterwards drove out Her Majesty with his beautiful team of chesnuts, and returned at six o'clock to the Rosenau. There was a large dinner party at the Castle in the evening, at which the whole of the breakfast party were present, as well as several noble and distinguished personages who were formerly friends of Prince Albert, when he resided at Rosenau. Besides these royal festivities the Duke gave a ball in the open air to those of the people of Coburg who chose to attend it. The scene of this amusement was the meadow where the children's festival was held the other day, which, at night, once more presented the aspect of a fair, with a dash of the gipsy encampment infused into it by the sausage-friers. On WEDNESDAY morning the royal party left Rosenau, at 8 o'clock, on the route to Gotha, and reached Reinartsbrunn at half-past 8 o'clock in the evening, remaining there till the afternoon of the next day, partly on account of the fatigue of so long a journey and partly that Her Majesty might enter Gotha by daylight. The road traversed by the royal party was in many respects very interesting. The first place of any size, after leaving Coburg, is Rodach, where a very pretty triumphal arch was prepared, and the houses were tastefully festooned. Crowds of people assembled to see the Queen. A few miles further on, the territory of Saxe-Meiningen intersects that of Saxe-Coburg, and there, within a short distance of Hildburghausen, on the top of a hill commanding a fine view, the authorities of Meiningen were drawn up to receive Her Majesty on her entrance into the duchy. Hildburghausen itself exhibited a scene of great animation. The houses were all festooned, and in the principal part of the town the children were all drawn up by the road-side—the girls dressed in white with ivy wreaths; and these, together with a body of the burgher guard, and an immense crowd of people, greeted the Royal party as they passed through. At other places on the road, a great part of which runs amongst the Thuringian Forest, and commands some very fine mountain and pine forest scenery, there were similar preparations, and particularly at Saxe-Meiningen, where the Royal party stopped and lunched with the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Meiningen. Shortly after the arrival of the Queen at Rheinartsbrunn, the near neighbourhood of the forest afforded the opportunity for a very striking and picturesque effect. A large body of miners issued from the recesses of the hills soon after dark, and formed themselves in a sort of procession by torch-light, threading their way around the grounds of the palace, in and among the woods, and along the lawns, and drawing a tortuous chain of lurid light through the gloom. On THURSDAY morning, the Duke of Saxe Coburg drove her Majesty in the direction of the old Thuringian forest, which contains so many places rich in historical associations, and this, too, in the same simple style that characterises all the movements of Royal personages in Germany, except on state occasions. There was no ceremony; no outriders cleared the way, but a very plain pony phaeton (turned out in a style that would not be eclipsed by the most perfect equipage in England) was driven by the Duke himself (his servant sitting by his side on the box); and only those who happened to be familiar with the features of the Royal driver, or could guess at the rank of those within the carriage, would have been able to discover that they were more entitled than private persons would be to that profuse courtesy which is the graceful habit of the people in most parts of Germany, and particularly in this duchy, where the rich and poor alike salute each other as they pass. The forest also affords sport in the shape of deer-stalking. The Duke of Saxe Coburg and Mr. Anson went out early in the morning to enjoy it, and a fine buck was brought home. It was shot by the Duke. The Royal party left Reinhartsbrunn between three and four o'clock in the afternoon for Gotha, where very general preparations had been made to welcome them. Almost every house was festooned or garlanded in a very tasteful way. That they were not similar to those at Coburg seemed to show that they were in both places spontaneous offerings of welcome, and not suggested by the authorities. At the entrance of the city, from the side of Reinhartsbrunn, a very elegant triumphal arch was erected, and the long street leading from this point to the place in which the Queen was to take up her abode, was one long avenue of festoons and garlands suspended across the road from the lines of trees on each side of the way. As the hour at which the Royal party were expected approached, the population of Gotha and the neighbourhood began to throng the streets in multitudes. It was surprising how so comparatively small a place could yield so many people; but, in fact, it was a general holiday, and every man, woman, and child came out to see the sight. And a most picturesque crowd they made. The peasant girls from the surrounding villages mingled in the throng, with their antique and picturesque costumes, long since abandoned in the towns, but clung to by the villagers with rustic tenacity. Shortly before six o'clock a succession of salutes announced the approach of the royal cortège, and the band struck up the national anthem. In a few minutes a procession was seen moving among the living mass that crowded the road. First came a large body of the municipal police on horseback. Then came, also on horseback, the burgher guard, a party of mounted gendarmes, and a band of postilions in their gay dresses. A body of 200 or 300 citizens and gentlemen of the town excellently mounted, followed, and then the Duke's chasseurs, all in uniforms of green and gold. After these came the Queen's carriage, containing besides Her Majesty, the King and Queen of the Belgians and Prince Albert. The Duke of Saxe Coburg rode on horseback by the carriage from Reinhartsbrunn. Two other carriages, with the suite, closed the procession. When the Queen's carriage came opposite the tribune, the chief magistrate stepped forward and delivered a speech, of which the following is a translation:—"Happy in the consciousness of the presence of your Majesty in our city, we lay our humblest and most heartfelt devotions at the feet of the Sovereign of the great British empire. Happy we are that the kind and natural sympathies of the mother and the wife have never lost their intensity amidst the splendours of the greatest throne in the world. To those sympathies we are indebted for the incomparable satisfaction we feel on this occasion. Welcome to the home of a beloved Prince of our House. Welcome as his consort, O mightiest, and at the same time most amiable of Queens! Little are we able to convey to your Majesty our unfeigned deep-felt joy at welcoming such illustrious guests to our unpretending town. Still, however far we could have carried the outward showing of our attachment, it never could have equalled our desire to offer homage and best love to Victoria Queen of Britain!" Her Majesty bowed very graciously, and the cortège then passed on, amidst deafening cheers from the people to the Palace of the Duchess of Saxe Coburg. Crowds of people lined the way, and filled the area opposite the Palace. After alighting, Her Majesty came forward and bowed repeatedly to the people, who remained outside the palace gates until nightfall. In the evening there was a reception, at which there was a great number of presentations. On Friday morning the royal party were present at the festival of the Rifle Society, which is held annually at the distance of about a mile from Gotha. It is called the "Vogel Schiessen," because, from time immemorial, it has been the custom of the reigning Duke, or the Prince of the house of Saxe Coburg who may happen to be in Gotha at the time, to open the sport by firing the first shot at the figure of a bird, which is the principal target for the marksmen. There are three crowns on its head, all of which it is the especial privilege of the Duke to shoot away, and then the general sport begins. The reader will at once perceive the resemblance of this game to some of our own old English rural sports at home. We should, probably, call it shooting at the popinjay. On arriving at the ground the royal party took their stations in a spacious gallery overlooking the scene, and a singular scene it was to most of them. There was first all the din of a fair,—showmen puffing their exhibitions, brazen trumpets, cymbals, gongs, automaton bands—in short, all the uproar, the mingled sounds of Bartlemy fair crowded into half the space ever allotted to that neglected festival. Add to these elements of ghastly discord three or four thousands of people of all ranks, some in the oddest possible costumes, smoking, beer-drinking, laughing, shouting, so that the reader has some idea of the scene that assailed the Queen's eyes when she mounted her high post of observation, if indeed it was to be seen at all through the crowds of dust. With the arrival of the Royal party came the novel part of the festival—the procession of peasants. A description of one section of the endless line of horsemen and vehicles that wound itself past the Royal party will serve for all. The procession was headed by a large body of peasants, farmers, and small proprietors on horseback, dressed in their close-fitting coats of green, black, or blue, the little German cap, with its long front, stuck on their heads. These strolled along two abreast, most of them puffing the eternal pipe, as they defiled before the Royal party, saluting them as they passed. After these came the lumbering waggon peculiar to the country, consisting generally of a few boards nailed together rudely into a form resembling a boat. These were sometimes decorated with garlands, and were filled with the peasant women in their national costume, and especially the towering head-dress with its hearse-like plumes. The village bands followed, and politely persisted in playing "God save the Queen" with a discordant unanimity, which even royal ears could not torture into flattery. These horsemen, bands, and waggons, multiplied endlessly, formed the long and apparently interminable procession which passed before the royal party, and what with the din of the fair, the roaring of the bands, and the clouds of dust, long before the last heavy vehicle had passed the royal party, the whole had become sufficiently wearisome. This part of the festival over, the royal party returned to Reinhartsbrunn to dinner, and in the evening there was a grand reception or levee at Friedenstein Palace, at which a great many of the elite people of Gotha attended. On Saturday the royal party made an excursion to the Thuringian forest to witness a grand deer hunt. They left Gotha in six carriages and four, and galloped rapidly through the beautiful little village of Schnepfenthal to the Duke's palace of Rhonarsbrunn, and on through the little town of Friedrichroda, winding slowly up to the steep ascent which leads to the Duke's hunting lodge of Fauzbuch. This lodge is a small place of modest pretensions; but it is situated in one of the most lovely spots in the world. It lies embosomed among lofty trees in the heart of the forest, and is surrounded by scenes of surpassing beauty, which, however, lack grandeur and sublimity. All is on a small scale, for even the highest hill which Her Majesty has yet seen in Germany, the Niederstromberg, one of the Schwarzeberge, is only 1460 feet high, whereas the mountain opposite to her bedroom at Blair Athol, the Ben-y-Ghlo, was nearly four times as high. This portion of the forest is, however, remarkably beautiful; the pine trees rise to a height of nearly 300 feet, and the produce of the building timber alone produces a revenue of 100,000*l.* sterling to the Duke. The "deer hunt" little accorded with an Englishman's preconceived notions of such a sport. The deer were driven by the keepers within a fence or netting, from which they had no more chance of escape, than they would have from the pens of Smithfield; they were there shot by the Royal sportsmen, and the whole scene is described as a complete battue, sickening to the sight. The carriages drew up at the netting, a portion of which was propped up, and her Majesty and the whole of the Royal party were ushered into the lodge. Three small tables were also erected in various parts of the ground, and here the sportsmen were placed; but Prince Albert killed several stags from the house in which the Queen and the ladies were seated. The King of the Belgians killed the largest stag shot in the course of the day; parties of soldiers were also placed in the enclosure, and the carriage was enlivened by a military band, who played waltzes and polkas whilst the noble animals were panting in their last agonies upon the heather. The slaughter was carried on for two hours without intermission, when her Majesty and the ladies withdrew. When the signal to cease firing was given, the servants went round with long stout poles, to which netting was suspended, and in these they bore up the bodies of 48 noble animals, of which 25 were stags, and 2 roe-deer. The Royal party returned to Gotha to dinner, and in the evening there was a display of fireworks in the town. On Sunday the Queen and Prince Albert and some of the suite attended divine service at the church of St. Augustina. There was nothing very remarkable in the service, which is conducted according to the Lutheran mode. The church itself is not one of the ornaments of Coburg—plain even to ugliness outside, and within disfigured with whitewash, paint, whitewash, and gilding. Three galleries running round it give it the air of a playhouse. In the afternoon, before dinner, the Queen and Prince Albert, together with the Queen of the Belgians and the Duchess of Saxe Coburg, drove out to see two ruined castles in the neighbourhood—Tenterhausen and Molsdorff. The rest of the day was passed in quiet and retirement as far as the inmates of the Palace were concerned, but not so with the inhabitants of Gotha, where, as at Coburg, the Sunday is kept in a manner very different from our observance of it in England. After divine service is over in the morning, the people give themselves up for the remainder of the day to enjoyment. Music is to be heard in almost every house. Crowds of gaily dressed people parade the streets, and the hotels and eating-houses are all filled with merry groups, smoking, drinking, and dancing, among whom the peasant women, with their singular head-dresses, are conspicuous. Yet with all this there is the most perfect good order, not the slightest symptom of drunkenness or disturbance. The final arrangements of Her Majesty's movements, at the date of the last accounts, were as follows:—On Monday a grand concert was to be given in the open air, at which nearly nine hundred singers were to assist. On Tuesday evening there was to be a grand ball at the theatre; and on Wednesday morning her Majesty would leave on her return to England, sleep at Fulda on the first night, and at Wiesbaden or Frankfort on the second. From thence to Cologne, and perhaps pass a day at Brussels, or at the Palace of Laeken, with King Leopold; but the ulterior portion of the route had not yet been definitively arranged, although it is certain that her Majesty had arranged to embark at Antwerp this day (Saturday) in the Victoria and Albert yacht, to proceed this evening to anchorage ground off Flushing, where the Royal yacht will remain during the night, to-morrow morning to start for the Isle of Wight, where the vessel will again anchor, and disembark on Monday morning at Osborne House.

The Experimental Squadron.—The Albion steam-vessel, has arrived at Plymouth from the experimental squadron. From the details which she brings we learn that the fleet has had no trying weather, but in the trials which had taken place in light and baffling winds, the Queen, 110, three-decker, commanded by Captain Sir Baldwin Walker, and constructed by the Surveyor of the Navy, had the advantage of all the others, but it was very slight; the Albion, 90, Captain Lockyer, another of the Surveyor's ships, was second on some points; but the Rodney, 92, Captain Collier, constructed by Sir R. Seppings, was second on other points of sailing; the Canopus, 84, Captain Moresby, the old French line-of-battle ship, built in 1794, was fourth; the St. Vincent, 120, Captain Rowley, the flag-ship of the commander-in-chief, Rear-Admiral Hyde Parker, built by Sir W. Rule in 1815, and the first in the experimental cruise last year, was fifth; the Trafalgar, 120, Captain Martin, built in 1841, by Mr. Lang, of Woolwich dockyard, on the lines of the St. Vincent, was sixth; the Superb, 80, Captain Carry, the newest ship of the squadron, built by the Surveyor, was seventh; and the Surveyor's Vanguard, 80, Captain Willes, sister ship to the Superb, and called the crack ship of the Mediterranean in 1838 and 1839, although lighter than any of the others, was last. They were to go into Cork, and then proceed on another six weeks' cruise, to try their rate of sailing on a lighter draught of water. The Queen and Albion have much larger sails and lesser armaments than the St. Vincent, Trafalgar, and Rodney. The Canopus, also, has a heavier armament than the Vanguard and Superb.

The Naval Retirement.—Parliament having granted money for the purpose of covering the expense of providing retirement to 300 Captains of the Royal Navy, who shall be above the age of 55, or in some instances above the age of 52, the Admiralty issued a notice of the terms on which this retirement would take place, and required all Captains who wished to take advantage of it, to send in their names before the 1st October. It appears that the list of captains who have notified their desire to accept of the proposed retirement already amounts to about 140, including four holding good service pensions and eight Companions of the Bath.

Wheat Returns.—Lord J. Russell has obtained a Parliamentary return, which was printed a few days since, showing the quantity of wheat in bond on the 1st July during the last eight years. The paper shows that, on the 1st ult., there were 630,394 quarters of wheat in bond. The following is the account rendered from 1838 to 1845:—In 1838 there were of wheat and wheat-flour in bond, 618,730 quarters; in 1839, 1,251,217; 1840, 753,952; 1841, 579,852; 1842, 1,213,436; 1843, 297,118; 1844, 604,122; and in 1845, 450,304. A return has also been issued, showing the importation of wheat from Ireland. The imports into Great Britain from Ireland, of wheat, were respectively—112,196 quarters in 1842, 193,477 qrs. in 1843, and 200,270 qrs. in 1844, and 149,043 quarters in the half year ended on the 5th ult. The barley in 1842 was 10,297; in 1843, 119,449; in 1844, 90,876, and in the half year, 26,242. The oats in 1842 were as much as 1,274,826 quarters, 1,061,997 quarters in 1843, 1,500,870 quarters in 1844, and in the half year mentioned, 976,644. Of wheat meal or flour 414,111 quarters in 1842, 773,463 in 1843, 820,567 in 1844, and in the half year, 346,462 quarters. The oatmeal was 1,561,172 quarters in 1842, 1,750,628 in 1843, 1,140,810 in 1844, and 667,641 quarters in the half year.

New Churches.—The 25th annual report of the Commissioners for Building New Churches (which was presented to Parliament) has just been printed. It extends to 70 pages. It appears that 343 churches have been now completed and provision has therein been made for 402,650 persons, including 235,217 seats appropriated to the use of the poor. There are 36 churches now in the course of building, to the erection of which the Commissioners have contributed pecuniary aid from the funds placed at their disposal. The Commissioners state that sites for 25 churches have been approved to be built at the places mentioned in the report. Applications have been made for further church accommodation to the Commissioners from 74 places, which are detailed in the annual statement.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—M. Guizot has returned to Paris with restored health, and on Saturday resumed the duties of the Department of Foreign Affairs. The Constitutionnel announces the close of the commission appointed some months ago with the Prince de Joinville at its head, to inquire into the state of the French steam navy, and to consider whether any and what steps should be taken for its improvement. Most of its sittings were presided over by Prince de Joinville, and every point was maturely and carefully investigated. We subjoin the article from the Constitutionnel, observing by the way that the steamer is the same vessel which attracted so much admiration last year at Portsmouth, and which has been since pointed out by Sir C. Napier and other judges of naval architecture as a model worthy of imitation in England, and that the Asmodée and Infernal are two of the most powerful steam ships that have ever been constructed. There is one admission, however, in the article, which is not a little strange, coming from that quarter. It admits that the steam fleet of England is very little more advanced than that of France; a fact which forms a curious sequel to the late debates in Parliament on the state of the navy. The Constitutionnel says :—

"The first point submitted to the examination of the committee was the present state of the steam force of France and everything connected with the merits of her flotilla. There was only one opinion on this subject—our present matériel was unanimously condemned. The conclusions of the pamphlet of the Prince were admitted without reserve and to their fullest extent. It is not a steam fleet which we possess, or scarcely anything resembling it. Our two largest specimens have far from realised the opinions formed of them, and the frigates of 450 horse power are wanting both in force and speed. There is no one of them which can be considered as a fighting vessel capable of contending with advantage against an enemy. They are more useful for purposes of transport than those of war. The Gomer, the Asmodée, and the Infernal, the only ones of this class of vessels afloat, have none of the qualities on which confidence can be reposed. If steam power is to be used as an offensive arm, models should be sought for in which the motive power should be more in harmony with the purposes for which the vessel is required, and where the exigencies of speed should not be constantly opposed to those of armament. This criticism of the members of the commission on the first-class vessels enables us to anticipate pretty correctly what their ideas of the inferior class would be. The only steamer of 320 horse power, the Cuvier, has been already judged of, and amongst those of 220-horse power, there could scarcely be an exception made in favour of the Pluton, the Archimède, and the Veloce. It is the same with the mass of vessels of 160 horse power, which only cut a figure in the navy list, and which vessels, it is known, have become, on account of their small dimensions, scarcely available as transports. Thus throughout the whole scale of our steam-vessels, from 450 down to 160-horse power, weakness, want of harmony between their force and their speed have been fully and clearly pointed out by the commission. With regard to the large transatlantic steamers, which a recent ordonnance has removed from their original destination, and devoted to another service, their whole construction has been misunderstood. The idea of the Government, which presented the bill to the Chambers, was more particularly to form a fleet capable of being used for purposes of war; their pacific destination being a secondary object. They were called packets, and were to be employed during peace in the transatlantic service, but it was in reality frigates which were to be constructed. This had not been sufficiently understood; the Government which succeeded that which introduced the bill has only built packets very costly, but of very mediocre qualifications. Considerable sums have been expended in their internal fittings up, and everything has been studiously avoided which could make them serviceable for purposes of war. The result of this has been that we have eighteen vessels which it would be very difficult to turn to any useful purpose, and which will remain as a sample of a bastard fleet. The commission has not hesitated to condemn these packets, both with regard to their construction and the fittings. Justice should nevertheless be done; these attempts, these mistakes, are almost inevitable with regard to a new force like steam. In turning its attention towards England, the greatest maritime country in the world, the commission has had to point out the same faults, the same weakness, the same errors. The steam fleet of our neighbours is little more advanced than our own. There have been on the other side of the channel as on this, several experiments at once onerous and unfortunate. Several steam frigates have been rebuilt as many as three times, and others have met with the mortifications at sea which are common to vessels of inferior speed. Private builders have alone improved in England; those of the Government have been left far behind. It is private builders who have built vessels capable of going at the rate of 13 or 14 miles an hour; it is they who have applied the screw, and who are every day making fresh improvements."

The official evening paper of Saturday announces that the Government has received despatches, to the 23d April, from the Governor of the French establishments in the Pacific. Up to that period no new rising had taken place among the natives of Tahiti; but a considerable number of them still remained in their intrenched camps at Panavia and Papenoo. Accounts from the Marquesas Islands state that on the 28th Jan., one of the tribes of Neuka-Hiva, in revenge for a fine inflicted upon it on account of a robbery of cattle, attacked five soldiers in garrison on the island, and assassinated them. The murderers were arrested and tried, one being condemned and executed, and the others banished from the island. The Océanie publishes a curious address or proclamation by Governor Bruat on receiving the news of the victories of Mogador and Isly, and the exchange of visits between the Sovereigns of France and Great Britain. It was made with the view of creating at the same time a strong impression of the power of France, and of the friendly relations between that country and England, so as to remove the belief on the minds of the natives that the English were disposed to give them encouragement and support in their resistance to the French authorities at Tahiti. Notwithstanding this, it is currently rumoured in Paris that Tahiti will very shortly be abandoned.—The Government journals contradict officially a rumour that Admiral Cecille had taken possession of the island of Basilan, one of the Philippine islands, by order of the Government, and says that no such order was ever given by the Government. The Constitutionnel of Sunday, however, repeats the assertion, and says that though Basilan was not specially mentioned, orders were given to Admiral Cecille to seize upon that or some other island in those seas.—The Paris papers of Saturday publish the treaty concluded on the 18th March last between France and Morocco, which fixes the boundary line between the two states. This is a new version of the treaty of delimitation and commerce of Lalla-Maghnina, announced some months ago, but which the Emperor of Morocco refused to ratify, on the ground that it went beyond the powers entrusted to the negociators, and that it had been obtained by fraud and corruption, General Delarue, the French commissioner, having bribed the negociators of the Emperor of Morocco. In the present treaty the commercial stipulations have all disappeared, and it appears simply as a treaty defining the territorial limits of the two countries.—The papers gave an account of an outrage, to which the British and French residents in Madagascar have been subjected from the Queen of that island. Three of our countrymen and 14 Frenchmen were killed in the affair.—Unfavourable rumours were still current respecting the King's health, but a letter from Eu states that His Majesty and the Royal family have this week set out for St. Cloud; and hence we may presume that it was merely a temporary indisposition. The Duke and Duchess de Nemours, after passing two days in viewing all the objects of interest at Cauterets and its environs, took their departure on the 28th ult. for Luz, with the intention of visiting St. Sauveur and the other hot springs in that part of the country. At a dinner given by the Prince previous to his departure from Cauterets, the Duke de Rianzares, the husband of Queen Christina, was present, and was seated on the right hand of the Duchess de Nemours. Lieut.-General Lamoricière is appointed Governor-General of Algeria during the absence of the Marshal Duke d'Isly, who has leave of absence from the 1st September; and M. Thiers has taken his departure for Spain, whither he is repairing, in order personally to inspect the fields of battle he will describe in his next volumes of the "Histoire du Consulat et de l'Empire."—The Northern railroad was adjudicated on the 25th ult. to the only company which had fulfilled the required formalities. This company was in fact a fusion of the others which had started in opposition, and it includes the names of Rothschild, Hottinguer, Baring, Laffitte, Goldsmid, Masterman, Chaplin, and other well-known capitalists both of France and England. In consequence of the fusion of the companies, the sub-division of the shares for the French subscription alone comprised 24,000 subscribers. The capital for the Northern Line, fixed at 150,000,000f. is to be augmented to 170,000,000f. in the event of the junction of the Fampoux line, and to 200,000,000f. should the company obtain that of St. Quentin. A first instalment of 50,000,000 f. had been lodged, representing one-third of the capital of the principal line. Two lists were deposited for the Fampoux and Hazebrouck line, the one by a special company, composed of the above members of the Northern Company, with a special capital of 20,000,000 f., and the other by a company formed by Mr. O'Neill, with a capital of 10,000,000 f. It is said that the concession of the Paris and Strasburg and the Tours and Nantes Railroads would be adjudicated in October. An action brought against M. Pepin Lehalleur, by certain shareholders of a railroad company which he started for the Northern line, came on before the Tribunal of Commerce on Monday. The plaintiffs argued that the company had acted illegally in refusing the money of the shareholders for the shares which the company had agreed to accord them. The defendant maintained that as the money had not been paid within the time specified in the prospectus, the company was virtually dissolved, as far as these shareholders were concerned, and was not bound to receive their money afterwards. The Court decided that as the subscribers had not paid their deposit-money within the time fixed by the company, and as any further time afterwards allowed by defendant was a matter of indulgence on his part, the demand of the plaintiffs must be considered as unfounded; that in consequence the court decided them to be nonsuited, and sentenced them to pay the costs.—The National states, that according to the returns of the various provincial savings'-banks which have been sent into the Treasury, it would appear that the reimbursements for the last five months have exceeded the deposits by more than 1,000,000f. weekly. There is every reason to suppose that the money which is thus drawn from the savings'-banks goes to the railroads, and thence passes into the hands of the stockjobbers and bankers. The Paris Bourse has latterly been crowded with small railway speculators. The precincts were thronged by female gamblers, who were to the full as much animated as the male speculators within.

Spain.—By the accounts from Madrid, of the 26th ult., it appears that the provinces have not yet followed the movement of the capital in opposition to the new taxes. The excitement is, however, everywhere great, and it is only the expectation of a modification of M. Mon's measure that keeps the larger towns quiet. Madrid continues tranquil, but the spirit of disaffection shows itself in various ways. In the Calle del Carmes, one of the principal streets, several shops on the 23d were entirely open, others with the doors only half open, and many still remained closed. "The proprietors of those that are open," says a private letter, "have recourse to every means to prevent people from buying their goods. For instance, for a pair of shoes the ordinary price of which might be 18 or 20 reals, 200 (2*l.*) are asked; a pair of gloves, 100 reals; a pound of oil, 60 reals; and so on." The late disturbance, as we anticipated, has been followed by bloodshed, although as yet only one prisoner has been executed. This was a young man named Manuel Gil, only 24 years of age, a journeyman tailor, who was shot on the 21st for having thrown a large stone from his house at the Political Chief, as he was passing, and being afterwards engaged in an attack upon three officers. The Political Chief, Gen. Mazarredo, made strenuous but vain efforts to save the prisoner's life, and it is said he threatened to resign, if he was shot for having thrown the stone at him. It is rumoured that the confessor of the young man has since declared to the Captain-General that he was innocent of the act laid to his charge, and his widow has since died of grief. Several persons who were arrested for participation in the disorders of the 19th have been restored to liberty; and the individuals sentenced to various terms of imprisonment for the same offence were removed on the 22d to Toledo, where they are to undergo their penalty. The last tidings of the Court were dated the 23d, and had left it at Mondragon. All the persons belonging to the royal household had left Madrid for Pampeluna, where grand fêtes were preparing in honour of the Queen, and Her Majesty was to give a magnificent reception to her French guests, the Duke and Duchess de Nemours. Sir R. Inglis, and several English families have also arrived at Bayonne on their way to Pampeluna to witness the festivities on the occasion. Advices from Catalonia give a very bad account of that province. The removal of General Concha and the appointment of General Breton are regarded as public misfortunes, and the insurrectionary spirit which the moderation and firmness of the former completely checked, is again showing itself in several districts. General Ametler, the Centralist chief and old opponent of General Prim, has again escaped from his depôt in France, and is trying to enter Catalonia, if he has not already done so. Letters from Malaga, of the 20th, state that General Fulgosio, the new captain-general of the province, had arrived there on the previous day with the order dismissing his predecessor, General Camnero, and ordering that officer to quit the city without delay, and to take up his residence at Almeria. The only charge against General Camnero is that he did not execute the prisoners condemned to death as participators in the late disturbances in Malaga at once, and that he recommended to the respectable inhabitants to petition the Government for mercy.

Germany.—The Municipal Council of Leipzic published a notice of the 23d ult., declaring that the extraordinary committee composed of certain members of the college and of delegates of the city was dissolved. The inference to be drawn from this act is, that tranquillity has been completely restored. The Municipal Council has also revoked the extraordinary measures which were enjoined, relative to the time of closing inns and private houses. The Dresden Commissioners, who had not all assembled on the 22d, will immediately commence their investigation. Several persons who made speeches in the meetings that had been held have been reprimanded and cautioned, and the soldiers who were ordered to fire have been examined as to what took place.—In the meantime the new Reformation appears to be spreading rapidly in various directions. Letters from Breslau state that on the 15th and 16th the Synod of the deputies of the Christian Catholic communities of Silesia was opened by an impressive speech of Dr. Theiner. Professor Regenbrecht then read the names of the deputies, from which it appeared that deputies had been sent by above 40 Silesian communities. The Synod proceeded to choose a president, and its choice fell on Professor Regenbrecht. The confession of faith was then discussed. The Liturgy hitherto used in Breslau, with improvements, was adopted, and the assembly then proceeded to deliberate on the organisation of the Silesian communities. The Elberfeld Gazette states that the conversion of Roman Catholic priests to the German Catholic church is increasing daily. At Sarbruck, a converted priest has been installed pastor. From Manheim we learn that the German Catholics had invited the celebrated preacher Loose to preach to them; the authorities interfered, but as the law was against them, the congregation assembled to the number of only 300. The censor prohibited the local journal to put in even an advertisement of the arrival of Mr. Loose. The Frankfort Journal notices the arrival of Mr. Loose in that town. He had hardly commenced his address to a large congregation, when a police agent interfered, and ordered the assembly to disperse. The order was at once obeyed; but when a gendarme laid his hands on Mr. Loose, the people interfered and secured him. Mr. Loose then presented himself to the chief magistrate of that town. The Catholics of the Grand Duchy of Hesse are about to address to the reigning Prince a petition to allow them to hold public worship in the Evangelical churches offered to them by their Protestant brethren. The Prussian Government, while prohibiting Ronge and his fellow-labourers from leaving their parishes, nevertheless affords them full protection against persecution. Near Brunswick, an assembly calling themselves "Protestant Friends" met on the 20th to the number of between 4000 and 5000. The pastors Hessen, Muller, and Steinmeyer directed the discussions of the assembly. A meeting of the Protestant Friends will be held at Brunswick on the 1st October. At Sondershausen the first meeting of an association has been held, calling itself the "Gustavus Adolphus Association," for promoting Protestant evangelical principles, reason, and the Holy Scriptures. The Swabian Mercury mentions that, in order to prevent the movement breaking out in Bohemia, the Austrian Government have "signified to the Catholic clergy to take care not to alienate the people by intolerance or scandalous conduct, lest they should detach themselves from the religion of their fathers." "The best effects," adds this journal, "have already been produced, for the Catholic priests are acting with extreme prudence."—The Princess Royal of Bavaria was delivered on the 25th inst. of a son.—It is stated that a Customs Union is in contemplation between Hanover, the Grand Duchies of Oldenburg and Mecklenburg, and the Hans Towns, in order to protect the interests of the northern parts of Germany against the encroachments of Prussia. It is also said that the Prussian Government has yielded to the wishes of the southern states, and has given instructions to its delegate to the Congress of the Zollverein to agree to the increased duties on manufactures; and that Mr. Wheaton, the United States minister at Berlin, has again opened negociations with the Zollverein for a treaty of commerce. Mr. Wheaton, it is added, has already acted on this direction from his government, and it is not unlikely that his proposition may be laid before the Customs' Conference, at present sitting at Carlsruhe.—Letters from the Rhine state that the expense of the fêtes given upon the occasion of the Queen's visit to the Rhine amounted to 5,000,000f. (200,000*l.*) The musicians alone were paid 400,000f. (about 16,000*l.*)

SWITZERLAND.—The Swiss Diet held its last sitting on the 23rd ult. The President in his address stated that the Diet had done all that was possible under existing circumstances, but that much still remained for another Diet. In the meantime, he recommended harmony and good-will among the States of the Confederation.

ITALY.—A Marseilles paper of the 18th states, from Naples, that the Government of the Two Sicilies has definitively abolished the tax on sulphur.—The commune of Saratena, in the island of Corsica, has been frighted from its propriety by the following bold act of brigandage. A boy named Pierre Marabotti, on the 14th ult., was seized in the environs of the town by two banditti armed to the teeth, and carried off to the mountains. Three days afterwards, on the 17th ult., a letter was found in the letter-box, addressed to the father of the boy, telling him that unless they received 5,000 francs (200*l.*) within five days, as ransom, his son would infallibly be immolated, adding, he was securely concealed in the forest of Cagna. The father, it is said, finds it impossible to raise such a sum, and the issue is looked for with great anxiety.

SWEDEN.—In the last Swedish Parliament several bills, containing organic and radical improvements in the constitution, were thrown out by the lords and clergy, in opposition to the votes of the burgesses and peasantry, who are all represented in Sweden. The King was, it seems, reluctantly compelled to yield to such a powerful impulse. In one case, however, he did not, and gave his assent to a bill equalizing the law of marriage and inheritance in all classes of society, which the nobles had protested against. This is the first step towards the abolition of primogeniture and the entailing of property. The Swedish papers are full of praise of King Oscar, and consider this act as an indication of a liberal reign, like that of his late father.

GREECE.—Letters from Athens, of the 20th ult., state that three pirate boats having appeared in the neighbourhood of Eubœa, the Greek Government had applied to the Ministers of the allied Powers for assistance, and a French and an Austrian steamer had sailed in pursuit of them. M. Metaxa, who lately retired from the Cabinet, had been appointed Minister at Constantinople, but it was believed that he would not accept that post. Admiral Canaris continued to direct the affairs of the Marine Department, although he had not withdrawn his resignation, and M. Balbi, the Minister of Justice, continued charged ad interim with the Ministry of Finance. A fire broke out at Egripo, the ancient Chalcis, on the night of the 11th August, which, but for the prompt assistance of Commander Graves, of the British navy, and the officers and crew of H.M.S. Beacon, on surveying service at Egripo, would most probably have destroyed the whole of the houses within the fortress.

RUSSIA.—Accounts from St. Petersburgh of the 18th August state, that the Emperor, after much hesitation, had at length consented to the journey of the Empress to Italy, which had been recommended by her medical advisers. The Empress it is stated was to leave St. Petersburgh on the 2d September, and go direct to Berlin. She will pass eight days at Potsdam with her brother the King of Prussia, and afterwards go by Milan and Genoa to Palermo, in which latter city she will remain until the month of March. The Grand Duchess Olga will accompany her mother. The Emperor will likewise quit the capital about the same period, and repair to Sebastopol, in order to inspect the Imperial fleet, and to be moreover nearer to the theatre of war in the Caucasus. A St. Petersburg paper, of the 6th Aug., states that the Emperor, in consideration of the services of Count Woronzoff in the Caucasus, has conferred upon him and his family the hereditary title of Prince. The last accounts from the seat of the war, while they show that Count Woronzoff has displayed great activity at the head of the Russian troops, also show that he has met with a most obstinate resistance from the mountaineers, and that his progress in subduing the country has been accordingly small. They announce, however, the capture of Dargo, the residence of Schamyl. As this place was defended by 26 barricades formed of felled trees, each of which had to be carried by the bayonet, this success cost the Russians dear. It is said that they had two Generals killed and a great many superior officers wounded. The Caucasians, on their part, had succeeded in taking 900 mules laden with provisions, and would have taken the whole convoy had their ammunition not failed them. Count Woronzoff had disposed his troops in cantonments in the line of observation. In short, the campaign was considered as almost fruitless as far as regards the domination of Russia in the interior of the country. The Grand Duke Constantine arrived at Odessa from Constantinople on the 3d ult., in the Bessarabie frigate.

INDIA AND CHINA.—The Overland Mail from India arrived on Saturday with news from Calcutta to the 9th, and from Bombay to the 19th July. The accounts from Lahore solve the mystery which has so long hung over the policy of Gholab Sing, who seems to have merely made an appearance of submission in order to complete his purposes, which have now apparently been effected. Jowahir, having attempted to seize Gholab, and put him to death, the partizans of the latter rose, and in the conflict between their military partizans, Jowahir was defeated with the loss of 3,000 men. This delivers the Punjaub, undivided to a wily, wealthy, and able chieftain. At Sukkur the bazaars were deserted. There is nothing of importance from the southern Mahratta country. The troops at Ferozepore have suffered a good deal from cholera, and this terrible malady has this year afflicted almost the whole continent of India. In the Madras Presidency, and at Bombay, Poona, &c., its ravages have been most extensive; the setting in of the rainy season, however, will, doubtless, now relieve them of the calamitous visitation. The controversy respecting the merits or demerits of Sir C. Napier raged as fiercely as ever, and was now no longer confined to the newspapers. A memorial to the Court of Directors from the Civil Service of the Bombay Presidency, complaining of certain passages in the General's work, "The Conquest of Scinde," has been sent home by this mail. The salt duties were also a subject of discussion, and of unfavourable comment. The Hon. John Bird had retired from the service of the Company, his term of council duty having expired. A flattering tribute of respect had been paid to this distinguished public servant upon his resignation by the Governor in Council. Mesmerism was amusing and astonishing the people of Calcutta, who seemed to have displayed almost as much gullibility as others nearer home. From Affghanistan we have no news of interest. The notorious Akhbar Khan had expressed his intention of performing a pilgrimage to the shrine of the Prophet at Mecca. Private letters from Mauritius of the 28th May state that in consequence of the scarcity of rice at Bourbon the Government had offered a premium on the importation of that article.—By the China mail of the 15th May it appears that Keying, who had been degraded last year, has received a seat in the Cabinet, as Assistant-Minister, an honour which his predecessor Keshen held.

TURKEY AND SYRIA.—Letters from Constantinople, of the 17th ult., announce that the dismissal of Riza Pasha from office had been followed by other changes in the Ottoman administration. Raouf Pasha is the new grand Vizier; Suleyman Pasha, Seraskier; Nafiz Pasha, Minister of Finance; Ali Effendi, Minister for Foreign Affairs. Mehemet Ali Pasha, who lately married a sister of the Sultan, has been named Capitan Pasha, and is, at the same time, to retain the direction of the police, and Achmet Fethi Pasha, another brother-in-law of his Highness, is the new Chief of the Artillery. Riza Pasha had not been ignominiously dismissed, as stated by the German and French papers. The Sultan had granted him a pension of 30,000 piastres per month, and expressed himself highly pleased with his services and loyalty. The Duke de Montpensier arrived at Constantinople in the Gomer steamer on the 16th. The Prince and his suite landed at St. Stephano, where they were to perform a quarantine of observation of six days in the imperial kiosk, fitted up for the purpose by order of the Sultan. Accounts from Syria of the 31st July, state that the peace had not been broken since the previous accounts. The meeting of the Druses and Maronites, however, had produced no result. The murderer of the French priest, Friar Charles, had been arrested, and had arrived at Beyrout.

EGYPT.—Accounts from Alexandria state that Ibrahim Pacha, who has been for some time suffering under a complaint which has baffled the skill of the faculty in Egypt, embarked at Alexandria on the 12th inst., on board the Egyptian war steamer Nile, for Malta, there to perform quarantine; whence he proceeds to Italy, hoping there to obtain such surgical advice and aid as may effect his cure. His Highness arrived at Malta on the 17th, and was received with the customary salutes. Some fears are entertained with regard to his return to Egypt, on account of the very delicate state of his health, and, in the event of his death, Abbas Pasha, Mehemet Ali's grandson, and only son of Toussoun Pasha, who died of the plague in 1816, will be the heir-apparent to the Pashalic. However, Mehemet Ali continues to enjoy excellent health, and looks hale and strong, and rarely fails to take his morning and afternoon exercise, either on horseback or in a carriage. The splendid silver fountain, manufactured in London by order of the East India Company, at an expense, it is understood, of upwards of 7000*l.* sterling, as a present to the Viceroy, was presented to his Highness at Alexandria, on the 16th, by Captain Lyons, agent to the Company. Mehemet Ali expressed much admiration at the mechanism and workmanship, the beauty and the solidity of this unique production. After the ceremony of presentation, Capt. Lyons gave a déjeuner of forty covers, at which were present Artin Bey, Kekekyan Bey, and the principal English residents, with their ladies. The Viceroy on this occasion has also issued invitations for a dinner, at which will be present the English Consul-General, Capt. Lyons, the principal English merchants, and the Egyptian Ministers of State. Nothing further appears to have been decided respecting the conveyance of the Indian mails through Egypt. That something must be done is evident from the recent fact of two of the boxes of the Calcutta mail having been lost in the Desert between Cairo and Suez, owing to the camel on which they were laden having strayed in the night, and were not found until after the Hindostan was compelled to start from Suez without them. The only wonder is that some irregularity or other does not occur in the transit of each mail, as the passage of the Desert is performed mostly at night; and with so many camels to manage it is a most difficult task from their noiseless tread upon the sand, to keep them together or trace them if they stray.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The Frocas at the India House.—At the Mansion-house, on Monday, the investigation into this case, which was adjourned from last week, took place before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen. Mr. Parry appeared for the complainant, and Mr. Clarkson attended for the defence. The matter excited a good deal of curiosity. Mr. Parry, in stating the case, observed that it was of extreme importance that gentlemen having a right to attend a Court of Proprietors of East India Stock, not convened by the directors, should know whether they were to be liable at the caprice, or in consequence of the irritated vanity of any individuals, to be placed in an ignominious situation before their fellow-proprietors and the public. Mr. Peter Gordon and Mr. G. Thompson then stated the particulars as they appeared in our report last week. Their chief object was to obtain summonses against the chairman of the East India Company and the officer who had expelled Mr. Gordon from the chair, with the view of having it decided whether the chairman was authorised by law to take that step.—Mr. Clarkson, on behalf of the chairman and directors, submitted that a more miserable case was never brought forward. Indeed he could scarcely suppose it possible, while he was listening to the statement of the complainant, that the individual who made it could be in his sober senses. He could not at all conjecture who had been pulling the wires of the machine which Mr. Gordon had been made, in so extraordinary an exhibition; but it must strike every one that the behaviour of Mr. Gordon and Mr. Thompson towards the chairman and directors was unparalleled through the whole proceeding.—The Lord Mayor said that he had consulted with his brother aldermen, and they fully agreed in the opinion that Mr. Gordon had been himself an intruder, and they therefore dismissed the case.—Mr. Lawford, solicitor to the East India Company, then applied to the Lord Mayor for a certificate to prevent any further proceedings in this case.—The Lord Mayor intimated that there could be no objection whatever.—Mr. Parry said that it was the full intention of Mr. Gordon and several other proprietors to have the important question decided elsewhere.—It is worthy of remark that Mr. Gordon, by his own evidence, has only been a proprietor of East India stock (to the amount of 1000*l.*) since June last, and that Mr. Thompson stated that he is a proprietor only to the amount of 500*l.* stock, and has not the power to vote except in cases of adjournment, and of that he is doubtful.

Election of Judge to the Westminster Court of Requests.—By a new Act of Parliament, the Commissioners of the different Courts of Requests are required to appoint a Judge or Assessor to their respective Courts, to whose jurisdiction nearly all small debts under 20*l.*, will be transferred. From the decision of the new Judge there will be no appeal, and when we add that the salary will vary from 800*l.* to 1,000*l.* a-year, it may be imagined that there will be no deficiency of candidates, especially as barristers and attorneys are equally eligible. On Monday the election for the Westminster Court, which has for some weeks excited great interest in the nine parishes of Westminster, and also with the gentlemen "learned in the law," was decided. The poll was by ballot. The number of commissioners was 288, but only 152 had qualified, which number was further reduced by death and removals to 127. At the termination of the contest the numbers were for Mr. D. C. Moylan, 44; Mr. Le Breton, 26; Mr. A'Beckett, 23; Mr. Keane, 20; Mr. Campbell, 14; Messrs. Thomas, Horry, Morton, Bebb, Langslow, Austin, and Hawortho.

Registration of Deaths.—The daily papers announce that measures are being taken by the Registrar General to obtain a more complete and exact account of the causes of death than the registration returns have yet furnished. Amongst other arrangements, books of printed certificates have been prepared, of which one or more copies will be placed in the hands of every medical practitioner in England. This will render compliance with the provisions of the Registration Act so little troublesome to medical men, that neglect on their part will be without excuse. The medical attendant of a deceased person will merely have to write a line or two on one of his printed forms, specifying the cause of death, and leave the certificate, so filled up, with some member of the family in which the death has occurred, to be delivered to the local registrar. By this means the medical attendant will be saved from a number of troublesome inquiries, and he will at the same time fulfil his duty to the community, by furnishing information which bears in various important respects on the general welfare.

Improvements, &c., of Public Edifices.—Workmen are at present engaged in painting the outer iron gallery at the top of the cupola of St. Paul's Cathedral; it is done in stone colour, and has a very good effect. At the British Museum workmen are employed in levelling the dead wall and old gateway, to throw the front open to Great Russell-street. The foundation has been laid of the new Money Order Office of the General Post. It is situate in Aldersgate-street, between the French Protestant church and that of St. Botolph, Aldersgate, and is to be completed within six months.

Wesleyan Conference.—At the late conference it was resolved not to admit to the Theological Institution any married student, or any person under engagement of marriage. The reason assigned for this prohibition is, that young men so circumstanced eagerly snatch at any means of getting a livelihood. At the same conference the Wesleyans determined for the first time to avail themselves of the New Marriage Act, and to have their marriages celebrated by their own ministers in their chapels.

Metropolitan Asylum Districts.—On Friday the Board of Directors and Guardians of St. Marylebone assembled for the purpose of considering the order recently issued by the Poor Law Commissioners for the formation of Marylebone with other parishes into a union, for the management of asylums for the houseless poor, under the title of the "North Western Metropolitan Asylum District." The Secretary read the communication and order of the Commissioners, which directs that the following parishes shall be formed into a district, and elect members to form a board of management for the control of asylums for the houseless poor, viz.:—St. Marylebone, St. George's, Hanover-square, St. James's, Westminster, St. Martin-in-the fields, St. Margaret's and St. John the Evangelist, Westminster, St. Luke's, Chelsea, St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, and Paddington. After the reading of this document several of the guardians rose in succession, and declared their positive determination to resign rather than carry out the order of the Poor-law Commissioners, contending that if they consented to obey this order, they would be admitting the introduction of a foreign power, the interference of which they had as yet resisted. A resolution was proposed to this effect, but it was ultimately postponed, in order that a special meeting might be convened to give greater effect to their decision. This meeting was held on Tuesday, and as anticipated, the chairman, directors, and guardians, severally in succession, emphatically declared that they would refuse in any way, either directly or indirectly, to act under the authority of the Poor-law Commissioners, and no power they possessed should compel them to do so. A requisition was then drawn up, calling upon the vestry clerk to "call a special meeting of the vestry, to co-operate with the directors and guardians in preserving the independence of the parish." The guardians of St. Luke, Chelsea, a parish included in the same district, have also met and agreed to a resolution deprecating the proposed union, and expressing a hope that the Commissioners will rescind their order.—A meeting of the board of directors and guardians of St. Pancras parish was held on Tuesday, to receive the order from the Poor-law Commissioners for comprising that parish in the "Central Metropolitan Asylum District," but less determined opposition to the order was manifested, though the measure was strongly objected to. The following resolution was adopted:—"That considering the extent of the parish, the amount of its rental, and the consequent sum of money it will have to contribute to the central metropolitan asylum district, as compared with those of the other parishes in union comprised in the district, this board is of opinion that the parish is justly entitled to be represented by five instead of three guardians, as provided by the order of the Poor-law Commissioners, dated August 21, 1845."—In addition to the above, an order has been issued by the commissioners for the formation of "The Western Metropolitan Asylum District," to consist of the Brentford, Fulham, and Richmond unions, which will comprise the parishes of Fulham, Hammersmith, Chiswick, Acton, Ealing, Hanwell, Greenford, Heston, Isleworth, Twickenham, New Brentford, Mortlake, Kew, Richmond, Ham, and Petersham. The board of management is to consist of nine guardians, viz., four for the Brentford union, three for the Fulham union, and two for the Richmond union; the election to take place by the board of guardians of each of those unions on the 9th inst.

Aurora Borealis.—A splendid specimen of the Aurora Borealis was visible in the metropolis on Friday evening. The first appearance was a pale thin ray of light visible in the W.N.W., which was soon followed by a beautiful curtain of light, extending about 90 degrees along the horizon from nearly due north to due west. From this light thin divergent rays continued to corruscate, rising to an angle of about 45° from the horizon. The river between Blackwall and Woolwich was illuminated by its power similar to that of a soft clear moonlight. The aurora lasted between three and four hours, during which time the atmosphere was intensely clear. The same phenomenon was seen in Edinburgh, in very great brilliancy.

Hackney Carriages.—During the past six months no less than 100 coats and 200 umbrellas and parasols have been left in different carriages and cabs, and have been forwarded to the Hackney Carriage Office, in accordance with the Act.

The Crown of England.—The Imperial crown, which met with so serious a fall from the hands of the Duke of Argyll, in the house of Lords, at the late prorogation of Parliament, was last week conveyed by his Grace, in his private carriage, and safely deposited in the Jewel-house; his Grace humorously remarking that he was glad he had got it there. All the diamonds and other jewels that were displaced, and fell on the floor of the House of Lords, were found, and have been firmly re-set in their original positions by Her Majesty's jeweller.

The Royal Exchange.—The bells which were placed in the New Exchange at its opening, will be removed in a few days, a new set of fifteen having been prepared and completed by Messrs. Mears, the bell-founders, in Whitechapel. The weight of the entire set is about 257 cwt. (the former being about 131 cwt.) The key note of the largest is C natural. This, which weighs 54 cwt., will be the hour bell. The weight has been increased by order of the Gresham Committee, the former set having proved a failure in not having a tone sufficiently powerful for the noisy neighbourhood of the Exchange. The new chimes are expected to be in action in the course of the present month.

Middlesex Magistracy.—Sir I. L. Goldsmid, Bart., has been appointed magistrate for Middlesex, of which county he has long been one of the Deputy-Lieutenants.

Steam for the Million.—Boats are running from the City to the west-end for one penny each passenger.

The Late Robbery of Bank Notes.—A circumstance has just been made public which may throw some light on this robbery, if not lead to the discovery of the thieves. Three of the notes stolen from Messrs. Rogers were paid to an hotel-keeper at Naples by persons staying at his hotel in discharge of their bills. The parties who passed the notes to him were of such rank and station as to preclude the possibility of their complicity in the robbery, or of their having received the notes otherwise than in exchange for checks or for larger notes. This hotel-keeper arrived in London two or three days ago with the notes in his possession, and with the determination of presenting them at the Bank of England for payment. He knows the parties from whom he received them, so that a clue will thus be obtained by which the notes may be traced from hand to hand, until the first possessor after the robbery is reached. It may be mentioned, that a list of the stolen notes was communicated to this hotel-keeper by the British Consul at Naples, but not until four days after the notes in question had been taken by him.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Aug. 30:—West Districts, 141; Northern, 113; Central, 154; Eastern, 211; Southern, 216; Total, 835; males, 413; females, 422. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1291; males, 644, females, 647.

Provincial.

Andover.—The Poor-law inquiry in this town continues without any prospect of approaching its termination, and from the rambling and disconnected manner in which it proceeds, it is very difficult to make out the purport of the evidence extracted from the witnesses. Yesterday was the tenth day of the investigation, and as it is impossible to condense the evidence within any reasonable limits, we shall reserve our further account of the proceedings until the Commissioner makes his report.

Bodmin.—Superstition in various forms still lingers in the provinces. The Cornish papers mention that after the late execution of Benjamin Ellison, at Bodmin, the executioner sold the rope with which he was hanged to great advantage, obtaining a shilling for the smallest fragment from persons who bought it to cure fits and the king's evil.

Chelmsford.—On Wednesday week a fire broke out in the farmyard of Mr. Pigot, of Boreham, owing to a spark from the engine of the down train falling upon the thatched roof of a cart-shed. Three engines speedily arrived; but the wind was blowing so strong, and the fire had got such hold upon the buildings, that the firemen confined their exertions to saving the house and barn, the latter of which caught fire several times, but was saved by the efforts of the firemen. The damage done is considerable, all the outbuildings, with the exception of the large barn, having been destroyed, with a quantity of hay and corn, three hogs, and two or three carts. This is the second time Mr. Pigot has had his premises set on fire by the same cause, and the buildings which have been destroyed had been built since the last fire. The damage is estimated at between 500*l.* and 600*l.*—Essex Standard.

Cromer.—We quote the following from the Bury Post: "In spite of all that has been said and done to prevent the inroads of the ocean on this healthy watering-place, we regret to say that it continues to make so much way that there is now very little doubt that, unless something be speedily done of a more substantial nature, the whole of this delightful village on the cliff will be swallowed up in the ocean. It is little more than half a year since we recorded some very important shoots that then took place, which, though they were denied at the time, were but too true. Those shoots and the force of the tides washed away the entire jetty with large portions of the cliff, and in part undermined some cottages on the Sherringham side of the town. We regret to add that on Wednesday week last, by the power of the land springs and of the high tides (the moon being at the full on Sunday), other portions of the cliff fell, and several of these cottages, belonging to a Mr. Rust, toppled into the vortex below. The cottages had been unoccupied since the former shoot took place, and were about to be pulled down; indeed, the men employed to do so had only a few minutes before they fell left the premises. A wall, recently built by Mr. Steppings, the proprietor of the Hotel de Paris, was also washed away, and has left that part of the town unprotected. We know not what degree of fear may be felt by the inhabitants, but when we reflect on the large shoot that took place on the 15th January, 1825, when 12 acres of cliff were engulphed in the ocean, we own that we feel some alarm for the safety of the town. The proposed protection walls, with tunnels behind to carry off the land-springs, would in all probability have secured the town; but after spending 1200*l.* for an Act of Parliament, there is scarcely a chance of the money necessary to effect these projects being raised. It is quite out of the power of the inhabitants to do it, and without the assistance of the benevolent they must commit themselves, their lands, their houses, and their handsome church, to the chapter of accidents; and, in that case, Cromer will assuredly follow the fate of Shipden."

Devonport.—The borough of Devonport, after a long struggle, has obtained the grant of sufferance quays, which has passed the Lords of the Treasury. Formerly all foreign goods had to be landed at Plymouth, where the Custom House is situated, but these may now be unloaded at Devonport, and delivered to the consignees. The circumstance is looked upon by the inhabitants of the latter borough as of great importance to its commercial progress.

Liverpool.—A new steam-ship, called the Marmora, is expected to arrive shortly in this port from New York, on her way to Constantinople. This will be the first American trading steamer which has crossed the Atlantic, and it is said she is the first of a new line about to be established. The Liverpool Times also states that the firm of James Hodgson and Co, iron ship-builders, of this town, are building, amongst other vessels, an iron ship of 1200 tons burden, the first of a new line of steamers to ply between New York and Liverpool, with engines of 180 horse-power; also one of 600 tons burden and 100 horse-power, to ply between Liverpool and Rio Janeiro, the first of a new line of seven; also one for Buenos Ayres, all fitted with screw propellers and Grantham's patent direct-action engines. The same paper observes that new lines of steamers from this country to distant parts of the world are constantly forming. On Wednesday last the Novelty sailed from Liverpool for Constantinople, as the first of a monthly line of steamers between that port and the Turkish capital. British enterprise has now established steam communication with the following countries:—To Russia, Sweden, and Denmark, by the Hull line to St. Petersburg; to North Germany, by the Hull and London lines to Hamburg; to Holland, Belgium, and France, by the General Steam Company's vessels; to the north and south of Spain and Portugal, by the Peninsular Company's vessels; to Italy, by the new line just started from London to Leghorn; to Malta, the Levant, and Constantinople, by the new line from Liverpool; to Egypt, Arabia, Ceylon, India, Singapore, and China, by the Oriental Company's vessels; to British America and the United States, by the Cunard and Great Western lines from Liverpool; to the West Indies, Mexico, and the north coast of South America, by the West India line; to Peru and Chili by the West Coast line. To Brazil and the River Plate by the line now building in Liverpool. The only British colonies of any importance which have not now the advantage of steam communication with the mother country are the Cape, the Mauritius, and Australian colonies.

Oxford.—The Rev. Mr. Ward, whose degradation from his degree of M.A. caused so much excitement last year, has at length announced his intention to secede from the Established Church. This, it appears, has been known amongst his personal friends for the last fortnight, but it was not until Saturday that the public were aware that he had taken this step. A long correspondence, which appears in the Oxford Herald, explains the reason of his doing so. It is expected that other defections from the Church will immediately follow by members of this university who belong to the Tractarian School.

Portsmouth.—The declining health of Admiral Sir Charles Rowley, Bart., has induced that gallant officer to retire from the command-in-chief at this port, in which he has been succeeded by Admiral Sir Charles Ogle, who will hoist his flag in the course of the week. Captain Sir Richard Grant will be Sir Charles's flag-captain, and the present secretary, Mr. Haig, will be continued in that office.

Winchester.—On Saturday last a fire, which has consumed several dwellings, and deprived seven respectable families of their homes, occurred at a village called Mitcheldever, seven miles from Winchester, on the Basingstoke road, and within two miles of the mansion of Sir Thomas Baring, Bart., Stratton Park. The fire originated from the falling of sparks from the flue of an oven belonging to a baker, who at the time was raking the wood embers. Pieces of these fell upon the thatch of an adjoining cart house, which instantly ignited, and the fire communicating itself to the long line of continuous thatch, the whole was speedily in a blaze. The excitement caused in the village was greatly increased by a rumour that an aged cripple was in one of the houses, burning to death; but this happily proved without foundation, the poor creature having been preserved by the interposition of a neighbour. Soon after the outbreak of the fire Sir T. Baring, and the Rt. Hon. F. Baring immediately repaired to the scene, having given orders that the engines belonging to the mansion should be promptly conveyed to the spot, with 22 men employed upon the domain, who were despatched to work them. Meantime, while these arrangements were effected, the flames extended from house to house with such rapidity that it was impossible to stay their fury. The fire continued to burn until every particle of furniture and stock was destroyed, the houses gutted, and several pigs, poultry, and domestic animals consumed. The loss will be severely felt, as the occupiers are none of them insured. The owner of the houses, Sir T. Baring, is insured in one of the county offices.

Railways.

A return obtained by Mr. Gibson Craig was printed a few days since, of all railway bills introduced last session, with the amount of the estimates of the capital stock, and of the sum allowed to be borrowed for each railway, and the total amount of the estimates, capital stock, and sums authorised to be borrowed for all such railways. It appears that the estimated expense of 52 railways set forth in the return is 43,339,325*l.* The capital stock is stated at 44,741,200*l.*, and the money authorised to be borrowed 14,872,326*l.* Mr. Moffatt, M.P. for Dartmouth, has also obtained a return of the number of acts which have passed in the session; the length of each line; the number of shares, and the amount of capital subscribed for each; the number of new shares that each line is empowered to create; and the sum of money each line is empowered to borrow. The lengths of the lines are 2746 m. 6 f. and 4 c. The number of shares subscribed for is 723,819; the amount of capital subscribed, 31,890,474*l.*; the number of shares empowered to be created, 927,697; and the money empowered to be borrowed, 13,678,038*l.*—The following companies have declared dividends during the past week:—The Pontop and South Shields pays a dividend of 30*s.* per share. The revenue of the line is increasing, particularly as connected with the traffic in coal. An application from the colliers to reduce the tolls is to receive the consideration of the directors. — The Hull and Selby pays a dividend of 30*s.* per share, and the accounts show an increase in receipts compared with last year to the extent of 4222*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* The legal proceedings adopted in reference to the fire at Hessle last September not having been concluded, the directors have not considered it prudent to declare a larger dividend. The branch line to Bridlington has been commenced, and it may be opened in the course of next summer.—The Dublin and Drogheda pays a dividend of 24*s.* per share. The working expenses have been reduced to 31 per cent., and the traffic, notwithstanding unfavourable weather, has slightly increased. To meet the expenses of the proposed Belfast Junction, the company's capital is to be raised to 150,000*l.*, distributable in shares of 25*l.* each.—The Bristol and Exeter pays a dividend of 1*l.* 8*s.* per share, and the revenue of the company has increased.—The Eastern Counties pays a dividend of 3*s.* per share. A considerable portion of the company's debt has been paid off by capitalizing the loan into shares, amounting to 710,400*l.* To meet various expenses on the extension lines, the directors seek to apply and call up the extension stock, No. 2, the whole of which will be absorbed by these requirements, and the construction of further lines.—The Edinburgh and Glasgow pays a dividend of 30*s.* per share on the original shares, of 7*s.* 6*d.* on whole quarter shares, and 1*s.* 6*d.* on new quarter shares. The extension to North Bridge and the North British Railway will be opened to the public early next summer. The receipts from traffic on the line show an increase compared with last year of upwards of 10,000*l.* It is intended to capitalize the whole mortgage debt of the company by creating new half shares of 25*l.* each to the amount of 703,123*l.*—The Great North of England pays a dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. The affairs of the company are in a flourishing condition.—The accounts of the Maryport and Carlisle show a very satisfactory position. The line has only been opened throughout since the 10th February, and the receipts are nearly 500*l.* a-week. Ultimately a double line of rails will be laid down.—The Diss, Beccles, and Yarmouth, propose an amalgamation with the Waveney Valley. The original proprietors of the Diss and Beccles will have the option of either receiving back 1*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* per share, or taking stock in the Waveney Valley, at the rate of 20*l.* per share.—The survey of the Dunstable line is in a forward state, and the Birmingham Company will prosecute the works with all despatch. A branch line from Watford to St. Alban's and Luton, to join the main line at Dunstable is projected, and will it is understood be well supported.—The Cornwall Central has revived under the influence of important patronage. Mr. Brunel is appointed engineer, and has commenced his labours. A junction with the North Devon line is suggested.—The East Dereham and Norwich have authorised a provisional committee to arrange with the Norfolk for the lease of the former line.—The Limerick and Waterford are proceeding as fast as possible with that portion of the line between Tipperary and Limerick. Deposits have been freely paid, but the expenses were also rather large. A call of 5*l.* per share has been decided on, to be paid in October next.—The Midland (Irish) Great Western is proceeding satisfactorily; as also the Dublin and Belfast Junction and the Cork and Bandon Companies.—The South Devon is also proceeding favourably. The engineers' report represents the state of the works to be very advanced, all the tunnels are nearly complete, a considerable portion of the permanent way has been laid, and portions of the atmospheric pipes are also ready to be laid. Resolutions were passed, authorising the directors to contribute 200,000*l.* towards the Cornwall Railway, 375,000*l.* towards the North Devon, and also authorising the directors to assist in the formation of the branch lines as they might deem advisable. All the reports of these undertakings are written in the highest spirits, and branches and extensions are spoken of as offering additional attractions to the prospects of revenue for the shareholders.—A double accident, and by far the most fearful one which has yet occurred on the Bristol and Birmingham line, took place on Saturday night. At a road station called Defford, near Pershore, situate in a deep cutting about 20 miles on the up line from Gloucester, a goods' truck was placed just across the up line at the "points," about 50 yards beyond the station, ready to be shackled to a down third-class train, leaving Birmingham at half-past 7 p.m. It appears that there were three red or stopping signal lights at the station, neither of which was a stationary light, and consequently it was necessary to trust them to three persons. A special train was expected to pass, and as some change from line to line was rendered necessary, by repairs in progress about two miles from Defford, the contractor dispatched a man in his employ named Shaw to the Defford station with a red signal lamp, directing him to acquaint the station-master of the fact, in order that the trains might receive proper intimation. The station-master, upon receiving this message, directed Shaw to take up a position under or near the Defford-road-bridge, and exhibit his red lamp to stop the special train; and when the mail had passed, Shaw did so. The station-master also took a red lamp, and the only other railway officer at Defford (John Murphy, a porter) took a third. Shaw, however, was the only one of the three who attended to this part of his duty. The station-master was compelled to set down his lamp on the platform, in order to give a second-class passenger by the expected "down" train a ticket, and Murphy, the porter, having been directed to forward a goods' truck to the Eckington station by the same down train, thought he might economise time by pushing the same from the "siding" on to the "crossing," connecting the "up" and "down" permanent lines. Both these officials were thus engaged, when they first heard the rush of an "up" train close upon the station. The station-master ran out of his office and seized his lamp, while Murphy, doubtless, terrified at the approaching danger, left the truck he had been engaged with about midway upon the "crossing" and the "up" line, and then exhibited his red lamp. Neither the one nor the other appeared to have been observed, however, and at a quarter-past ten o'clock, at which time it will be remarked, the "down" mixed passenger train was already twenty minutes over due, a special luggage train, consisting of twenty trucks loaded with metals, and drawn by a six-wheeled engine, driven by Joseph Ward, dashed past the station at the rate of 30 miles an hour, and immediately after came into collision with the goods' truck, before alluded to as having been left partly on the "up" line by Murphy and turned it over on the down rails; the shock causing the engine to spring off the rails across both sets of rails, thrusting the tender up the bank of the cutting. The engine-driver, Ward, was killed, being literally cut to pieces and buried amongst the ruins of the engines, carriages, and trucks. The stoker was very much cut and scalded, but escaped with his right arm broken in two or three places. At the same moment the third-class down-train arriving at the spot drove over the luggage-train, engine, and truck, dragged a passenger carriage on the top of the engine, which set fire to it, and smashed to pieces the next carriage. The passengers, mostly of the poorer class, were thrown about in all directions; one, a man of the name of Williams, a carpenter, going home to his wife and family at Cheltenham, was so much cut, bruised, and scalded that he did not live more than a few hours. Six or seven others were severely cut and scalded, and all in the train very much shaken. One of the carriages was burnt to a cinder, and two or three others crushed to pieces. The engine-driver of this train perceiving some obstruction on the rails at a short distance from the points, shut off his steam, reversed the engine, and both he and the stoker jumped off just as the concussion was about to take place. How he could see the obstruction on a night not very light remains a mystery; but it appears he had slackened speed considerably prior to arriving at this place, as he was about to stop at Defford station. Had these men remained on the engine, their lives most probably would have been sacrificed to the reprehensible conduct of the officials in placing a truck, especially a loaded one, on the main line of rails just as two trains were expected. The passenger train was detained about four hours and a half, as the passengers could not be forwarded until an engine and carriages had arrived from Gloucester, both lines of rails being completely torn up for several yards. Gen. Pasley immediately visited the spot to investigate the cause of the accident, and an inquest on the bodies of the persons who were killed was at once commenced, but adjourned to the 15th inst. for the evidence of the stoker, who is too ill at present to attend. Another accident occurred on Monday morning, but was attended with little or no danger, and no other inconvenience than a slight detention of the passengers. The engine attached to the short train leaving Cheltenham for Gloucester at 30 minutes past 9 A.M. burst a tube when it neared Badgworth, a police-station about two miles from Cheltenham. Some consternation was manifested by the passengers, but in about half an hour all was made right, and the train proceeded.—Considerable anxiety prevailed on Tuesday evening at the Paddington terminus of the Great Western, in consequence of the non-arrival of the train due at 35 minutes past 8 P.M.. At 20 minutes past 10 the missing train arrived, when it appeared that the delay had been occasioned by the bursting of the boiler of the engine which had the train in tow between the Swindon and Shrivenham stations. The train had already lost half an hour from Exeter on its arrival at Bristol, and the delay at Shrivenham was but the crowning grievance of a journey commenced with inadequate materials.

Ireland.

Dublin.—Mr. Archdall, father of the county member for Fermanagh, has been dismissed from the deputy-lieutenancy of that county, for having attended the Orange meeting at Enniskillen on the 12th inst. Another deputy-lieutenant, Mr. James Lendrum, attended at the Enniskillen Orange meeting, but the order for his dismissal has been suspended, owing to a representation from Lord Erne, the Lieutenant of Fermanagh, that he had attended merely to preserve the peace.—For many years past nothing has caused so much sensation throughout Ireland as the fact that the Times newspaper, following out the system which led it to send a reporter into Wales at the time of the Rebecca riots, and latterly into Sutherlandshire to inquire into the alleged grievances of that county, has just sent a special reporter, or, as he is now called, a "Commissioner" to Ireland, personally to investigate the condition of the people, and explain the causes of what may be amiss in it. He has commenced operations in Cavan, and several communications from him, there dated, have already made their appearance. The reasons assigned for this step are, that books of travels in Ireland give only a superficial view of the state of things, and its causes; and that the reports of the Land Commission, like similar reports, are too voluminous to be popularly readable. It is also a remarkable fact that the Irish newspapers of all parties, with very few exceptions, have hailed the appearance of the Times Commissioner with cordial satisfaction, stating that the English people will now for the first time have a practical insight into the real grievances of Ireland.—In pursuance of the promise of Sir J. Graham, given towards the close of the last session of Parliament, a patent, granting a charter to the National Education Society, has just passed the Great Seal of Ireland, constituting his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin, the Most Rev. Archbishop Murray, Dr. Sadler, Provost of Trinity College, the Right Hon. Anthony R. Blake, Mr. Robert Holmes, Sir Patrick Bellew, Mr. R. W. Green, Rev. Dr. Henry, D.D., Mr. Corballis, barrister, Mr. Alexander M'Donnell, and the Marquis of Kildare, into one body corporate and politic for ever, to be called the Commissioners of the National Education in Ireland, and empowering them to sue and be sued, and to hold property not exceeding 40,000*l.* per annum. Of the commissioners four are Roman Catholics—viz., Archbishop Murray, the Right Hon. A. Blake, Sir P. Bellew, and Mr. Corballis; two Presbyterians, Dr. Henry, and Mr. Holmes, the eminent lawyer; and the remaining five members of the Established Church. There is to be an investiture of the Order of St. Patrick on the 17th inst., at which the Marquis of Ormonde and the Earl of Clare are to be installed.—In regard to the new Provincial Colleges it is announced that his Grace the Lord Primate has communicated to Lord Heytesbury his Grace's desire that one of the new provincial colleges be founded in Armagh. His Grace has also subscribed the munificent sum of 1000*l.* towards founding a Divinity chair in the college, and the Duke of Leinster has given 500*l.* for the same purpose in one of the other colleges. It appears also that Mr. O'Connell's statement respecting the unanimous condemnation of the measure on the part of the Roman Catholic prelates, was at least premature. In addition to the open defection of the Primate Archbishop Crolly, Dr. Ryan, Bishop of Limerick, Dr. Egan, Bishop of Kerry, and Dr. Murphy, Bishop of Cork, have given in their adhesion to the measure, and as a compliment to Dr. Ryan (a very amiable man and unobtrusive politician) it is understood that Limerick will be selected as the site for one of the new colleges, to the prejudice of the town of Galway, as well as to the archdiocese of Tuam generally. It is also intimated that Dr. Murphy, Roman Catholic Bishop of Cork, will hand over his splendid library, containing 130,000 volumes, for the use of the new provincial college in that city.—When the debates on the Maynooth Bill were in progress, a county meeting was held in Kerry to afford the gentry and inhabitants of that county an opportunity of expressing their opinions on the measure. The High Sheriff, Mr. Galwey, a Roman Catholic, presided; and the meeting, comprising several of the principal land proprietors, Protestant and Roman Catholic, were unanimous in approval of the Bill. A resolution, thanking Sir R. Peel for proposing a measure "so admirably calculated to promote religious peace in the country," was unanimously adopted. Mr. Herbert, of Muckruss Abbey, one of the most extensive proprietors in the county, in politics a Conservative, and Mr. John O'Connell, of Grena (brother of Mr. O'Connell), a decided Reformer, were the most prominent speakers at this meeting, and both expressed their cordial approval of the address to Sir R. Peel in relation to the Bill. In the reply of the Premier, acknowledging the receipt of the address, Sir R. Peel says; "I beg to assure you that no effort on my part shall be wanting to promote feelings of reciprocal goodwill between all classes of Her Majesty's subjects in Ireland, to inspire them with confidence in the just and equal administration of the law, and to unite them in common sentiments of loyal devotion to our gracious Sovereign, and of zeal for the interest and honour of the country."—Dwarkanauth Tagore is making an extended tour in Ireland, and has been latterly visiting Belfast, Armagh, and Athlone.—A feeling very generally prevails that the Dublin Society will soon be induced to follow the praiseworthy example of the Royal Hibernian Academy and the Zoological Gardens, which recently threw open their exhibitions to the public at a penny admission; and the excellent conduct of the people in the access afforded to them at the latter places gives them a just claim to the indulgence.

The Weekly Meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday in Conciliation-hall. The building was scarcely half full. Mr. T. Atkins was called to the chair.—Mr. J. O'Connell gave notice that the address to the Orangemen of Ulster, contrasting their conduct with that pursued by the Repealers in their respective courses of agitation, would be brought forward next week, and read a letter from Northumberland enclosing a small contribution from some repeal miners. He then brought before the association a charge brought against the town council of Dublin, of malversations of the city funds, by Mr. J. Reynolds, a few days before, and commented with some severity on the conduct of that gentlemen. Mr. Reynolds replied with considerable warmth, and at length the subject dropped.—Mr. Broderick alluded to the course taken by the Times in reference to Ireland. That journal was well known for its greatness, being the most influential newspaper in the world. They had despatched the very talented gentleman who had been the commissioner in Wales, to investigate the condition of Ireland, and bring members of the fourth estate, he supposed, to legislate upon it. He wished that they had selected some person not imbued with strong English prejudices; but his recent communications had shown him either very deeply imbued with them, or compelled to write in order to satisfy the prejudices of his journal. The Liberator had been brought to task for talking of the Saxon by the Times, and yet its commissioner had the impudence to assert that the population of Irish were inferior to those of English descent. He (Mr. Broderick) knew the people well, and he asserted that the people of the north were not superior to the people of the south, or those of Fermanagh to Leitrim, or the Saxon to the Celt. He denied, too, that the Irish people had been content with their misery, or that there was any other cause for their inferiority in comfort than the misrule of England, the suppression of the one class and exaltation of the other; and concluded by declaring that the people were acting upon the advice of the commission, and looked to themselves for the redress of their wrongs.—Mr. J. O'Connell attacked the Evening Post for ridiculing the holy coat at Treves, "which commanded the reverence and firm belief of a great proportion of Catholics." It was not necessary, he said, for Catholics to believe the authenticity of relics. He proceeded to comment on the German Catholic church, which he derided as the production of three or four different priests, who set up as so many Popes, supported by the infidelity and immorality, and fanned by the French Revolution. Popery, which this movement was said by the Times to have killed, was worth two dead men yet. The Times advocate this movement, because they conceived it would injure the religion of the people of Ireland. The very circumstance of their sending over a commissioner, who certainly was a very able writer, proved the little regard they entertained for Ireland. They sent him because they would not believe Irishmen. They had been told the very facts he stated, and many more, over and over again, but they turned a deaf ear to them. The hon. gentleman then enlarged upon the injustice of England, the virtues and wrongs of Ireland, the wholesale murders of the landlords, and retail homicides of the tenants, and the inevitable necessity of repeal. The rent for the week was announced to be 23*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*

Enniskillen.—A meeting was held in this town last week, for the purpose of considering whether the late Orange Institution should be revived under its original name and forms, or whether a new association, based on the same principles, but modified in such wise as to be in strict accordance with the letter and spirit of the existing laws of the country, should not be preferred. The meeting being merely preliminary, and strictly private, the papers cannot give a copy of the resolutions agreed upon; but the Orange journals state that there was no difference of opinion upon the necessity of adopting either one or the other of the courses above-mentioned, and that after mature discussion, the latter, embodied in a series of resolutions, was unanimously adopted. The resolutions being merely preliminary, it was thought advisable that they should be submitted to the several districts into which the province is divided, and receive the general sanction of the Protestant community, before they should be made the basis of future organisation. Amongst those present on this occasion were, the Earl of Enniskillen (who took the chair), Sir Arthur Brooke, M.P., D.L., J.P.; the Hon. Somerset Maxwell, J.P.; Colonel Verner, M.P., J.P.; Colonel Barton, J.P.; the Rev. Loftus Reed, J.P.; Henry Richardson, Esq., D.L., J.P.; the Rev. H. Hamilton; A. Nixon, Esq., J.P.; Thomas Nixon, Esq., J.P.; Rev. Messrs Hamilton, Frith, Moffat; Nicholas Archdall, Esq.; Charles Faucet, Esq., &c.—Another meeting to sympathise with Mr. Archdall on being deprived of the lieutenancy of Fermanagh, will shortly be held in Enniskillen. The district Orange lodges have been summoned to frame resolutions and make other preparations for a county meeting. Mr. Archdall will also be invited to a grand banquet.

Scotland.

Inverness.—The Glasgow Constitutional contains 12 columns of a report of the General Assembly of the Free Church, in this town, which met on Thursday the 21st, and continued until the 27th ult. The meetings were held in a spacious wooden pavilion built for the purpose. It is capable of comfortably accommodating 3,000 people, but when crowded it contains 4,000. It measures 140 ft. long by 75 broad, and has three roofs. It is lighted with 261 jets of gas. The fine suite of rooms in the adjoining institution, through which is the entrance to the platform, together with the site for the Pavilion, were granted to the Assembly by the magistrates and town council free of expense. The attendance of members and of ministers and elders not members was much greater than was anticipated, considering the distance which a large proportion of both classes had travelled. Every Presbytery was represented, some more or less numerously. Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen, each sent a strong contingent. The influx of strangers was also excessive. A local newspaper states that the town was more thronged than it probably ever was on any former occasion.

Law.

Vice-Chancellors' Court.—Piracies of Railway Papers.—Holmes v. Fowler.—This was an application to the Vice-Chancellor of England, on the part of the printer and other proprietors of the Railway Chronicle, to obtain an injunction against the printer and proprietor of a new Saturday evening paper, for having pirated a large portion of the original matter of the Railway Chronicle, and for selling that matter at a low price, in a new shape, within a few hours after the original publication. Mr. Giffard stated the case of the plaintiffs. This was a similar case to one in which his Honour had previously granted an injunction. A paper, calling itself The Thief, had once started on the express principle of presenting to the public all the best articles stolen from contemporary journals, and had been suppressed by his Honour's injunction. The printer of the paper against which this application was made, had also started on the principle of living by the wits of others; for he had set up a railway paper, published in the afternoon of Saturday, at a low price, and advertised his paper as containing "the opinions of the most eminent railway men of the day." For this purpose he waited until the most respectable morning railway papers had appeared, and then collecting out of them all their most important original matter, he set it up in type, and reproduced it in the shape of another journal in the course of the same day; so that the same evening mails which carried those journals into the country, carried also these select piracies at a cheaper rate. This was a system which it required neither talent nor capital to conduct, and it was merely necessary that the stock of principle which the parties possessed should be a minimum. The Railway Chronicle had been the favourite subject of these piracies, no less than ten columns of original matter having been in one week transferred, the greater part without any acknowledgment, in the said piratical journal. Amongst others, a weekly collection of business and money tables, forming notices of the week, given exclusively by the Railway Chronicle, employing nearly the whole time of one person in its preparation, and forming nearly two columns of matter, was pirated wholesale. A couple of columns of French official papers, translated by an accomplished contributor of the Railway Chronicle, and exclusively given in it, was copied in like manner without acknowledgment. Weekly tables of the prices of shares in the French market, sent expressly from Paris by their correspondent there, and converted with much labour into English money, were taken in like manner. The entire table of traffic on the English railways, showing the weekly official returns, and exhibiting at one glance the comparative state of revenue of each line at the present period and at the corresponding period last year, together with three columns showing the total receipts from the commencement and end of each half year, which had been exclusively invented and constructed by the Railway Chronicle, was abstracted entire. These, together with a variety of original essays and leading articles, formed altogether above ten columns of original matter, which had been provided by great labour, time, cost, and talent, and which were pirated and sold along with a variety of similar plunder from other respectable and original railway journals. His Honour at once granted the injunction.

Northern Circuit, Carlisle.—Graham, Bart. v. Tweddle.—This action was brought to recover for one half-year's rent the sum of 24*l.* 0*s.* 0*d.*; and for over-cropping, in 1843, 5*a.* 2*r.* 6*p.*, at 1*l.* per acre, 5*l.* 7*s.* 0*d.*, ditto in 1844, 8*a.* 0*r.* 26*p.*, at 1*l.* per acre, 8*l.* 15*s.* 0*d.* Making a total of 16*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* The rent had been paid into court, leaving the penalties alone to be litigated, and at the suggestion of the judge the case had been referred to Mr. Otter, as arbitrator. It was arranged that the arbitrator should include in his award a half-year's rent, which became due after the commencement of the action, and was not disputed. Defendant on his part claimed damages for an illegal distress, and the value of the seeds. It appeared that the farm comprises 16 acres, divided into three enclosures, and had no buildings upon it. The agreement under which defendant was alleged to hold was put in. It was signed by James Tweddle, defendant's father, and contained 22 conditions, many of which were totally inapplicable to the land in question. For instance, the tenant was bound to reside on the premises, insure and whitewash the building, consume the vestures on the land, reclaim the moor land, "and generally to comply with all and every custom, rule, and regulation established, or that might be established, by the Lord of the Manor or his agent, for the improvement of the country." The course of management pointed out in some of the clauses was so much at variance with others that the tenant, in observing one, must necessarily violate the other, and thereby incur a penalty of 5*l.* an acre, to be paid not by way of penalty, but as "particular" rent. The whole was drawn up in the most stringent terms in favour of the landlord. It bore date 2*d* May 1822, and was for a term of 19 years. The rotation cropping required by the agreement was what is termed amongst agriculturists a "six years' course;" that is, two white crops before fallow, in the following year a green crop, fourth, wheat or barley, and sixth pasture. To follow out this course, it was necessary to divide the fields to be of equal size, that in every alternate year the tenant would have at least 10 acres out of 15 in tillage, and in every six years the whole would be in tillage. [illegible] was a penalty of 5*l.* per acre imposed upon him for [illegible] more than one half in tillage. John Tweddle, [illegible] plaintiff and brother-in-law to defendant, stated that in the spring of 1844 he carried a letter from Mr. Yule (plaintiff's steward) to defendant, requiring him to [illegible], and to give arrangements about the taking-in of the farm, to which defendant sent for answer, "That he declined going, as his was accommodation land, and he had done nothing wrong." Henry Braithwaite, of Kirkby Lonsdale, said he was a tenant under plaintiff, of the lands adjoining defendant's [illegible] years, 1844. He spoke to the cropping of defendant's [illegible] years past, as stated by plaintiff's counsel. Understood the term "six years' course." Defendant's land was so laid as not to be capable of a six years' course. There were three fields only of the farm. To make it suited to a six years' course, it would be necessary to put up a fence in each field. The plan produced by plaintiff shows a six years' course. Cross-examined.—I occupied the adjoining farm nine years. A single field might be so divided as to make it suitable for a six years' course. My land was kept in middling condition. Defendant was in as good if not better condition than mine. I cannot say a word against defendant's management. I generally managed in the same way: never so much as half in grass. I [illegible] two years' croppings. I never attended Netherby agricultural meetings. Mr. Yule examined my lands in 1841 or 1842. He was now and then about our lands at all times. He passed through the town every day. Defendant's land lies half a mile from the road, and was much nearer the road [illegible] from Longtown to Arthuret. I know that defendant voted [illegible] Liberal candidates at his house last election, and I believe he voted against Sir James's party on that occasion. I know another tenant named Saunders. I did not know if he voted against Sir James's party, but he left his farm shortly afterwards. Re-examined.—Defendant's lands were very well managed. Two white crops are always injurious to lands, more so if not well limed or manured.—Matthew Brown, under-steward to plaintiff, produced plans of defendant's lands, and showed croppings for the years 1843 and 1844. I first discovered that the lands were overcropped in January, 1844, when I made a survey. I had noticed the overcropping by defendant before that. I have been under-steward three years. It was not my duty to look over farms unless told to do so. Defendant quitted at Candlemas. No vestures were left for the in-coming tenant. The lands were re-let for 50*s.* an acre. This was less than defendant paid. They let under an agreement in writing. I went over the land after the crop was cut last year. No part was in grass. If part had been in grass, it would have been more advantageous to an in-coming tenant, and better to let. Cross-examined.—I gave no notice to Mr. Tweddle of his overcropping till June. (A book produced stating an account with defendant, wherein neither the rent nor the times of payment corresponded with the agreement.) Witness said the credit side is in Mr. Yule's writing, and the debit side is partly in mine and partly in Mr. Yule's. I cannot account for the discrepancy. (Plaintiff's ledger produced, corresponding with account-book.) Defendant paid his rent regularly. Last payment on the 18th June, 1844. Mr. Addison (plaintiff's counsel).—I shall call Mr. Yule to explain it. On further consideration, however Mr. Addison again declined to produce Mr. Yule. Mr. Robinson then proceeded to address the arbitrator on behalf of defendant. The claim put forth was for what is called pactional rent, in other words, a penalty—the most odious claim which can be made against a respectable tenant; but more especially where, as in this case, plaintiff has not shown that he has sustained one farthing damage. There was not a tittle of evidence to show that defendant knew of the existence of any agreement, neither had any notice of it been given to him, and yet penalties to the amount of 17*l.* were sought, in the teeth of the statement of their own witnesses, that its condition and cultivation were undeniably faultless. It was monstrous to seek to enforce penal clauses under this agreement against defendant, not as executor, nor as assignee, but in his individual character, without the least proof that he knew of the existence of such a document. Our defence is, that defendant never did hold under such an agreement, nor was it ever intended by plaintiff. Even as between the late Sir James and defendant's father (deceased), it could never have been intended to be binding, and clearly could not be so in fact. Mr. Robinson then read the agreement, remarking on the several clauses, showing the impossibility of a tenant's compliance—such as residing on the premises, insuring the buildings, and reclaiming the moors. The clause upon which the action was grounded was equally as impossible to be performed as those he had mentioned. Why not bring an action for defendant's breach in not residing on the land. If defendant was bound to erect sub-division fences to enable him to adopt a six years' course, it was equally incumbent on him to build a house in which to reside. Their own witness had proved this to be accommodation land, and yet they had not dared to explain the terms upon which such lands were held. Did not their evidence show that defendant was entirely ignorant of his holding under these terms? for when he received Mr Yule's message, did he not at once answer, "My lands accommodation land, and I have done no wrong." Was it not reasonable that he should have been told he was doing wrong before he was pounced upon for penalties at once so odious and unjust? He would show the character and terms of management of these holdings. The late Sir James had great part of his boundless possessions let out in small parcels, for the accommodation of the tradesmen of Longtown. These holdings were now in a great measure laid to adjoining farms. High rents were paid for the lands, and the tenants cropped them as they thought fit, under the eyes and with the knowledge of Sir James and his steward. Defendant's was one of those holdings, and he, as well as his father, had pursued an undeviating course of cropping from the commencement of the lease to the end of the tenancy, and so far from plaintiff and his steward complaining of them to defendant's father and he had been selected from amongst the tenants with a full knowledge of these breaches, as those who had cultivated their lands in a most praiseworthy manner, and at the meetings of the Netherby Agricultural Society, presided over by plaintiff, a premium had been awarded to defendant for good management, and presented by the hands of plaintiff himself. What could be thought of the man who could first award these prizes, and bring an action for an infringement of the very terms under which the party was managing when these very prizes were awarded, and that, too, without proof of damage even to the extent of 6*d.*? After some allusions to defendant's insubordination in opposing plaintiff's party at the last election, Mr. Robinson denounced the injustice of the present action. To seek a penalty without injury, to go upon the letter of an agreement of which they had not pretended to assert defendant had any knowledge—and to seek to enforce its penalties in the absence of all damage, was indeed "to stand upon his bond," and to "have his pound of flesh." Mr. Robinson next adverted to the unaccountable circumstance of Mr. Yule being withheld from the witness-box—was it mercy to defendant, or was it to escape the disclosures of facts which they dared not bring to light? He would have been forced to admit that he was aware of this overcropping for years and years, and that the present object was not to assert plaintiff's rights, but to punish an honest and independent man. The learned gentleman concluded by stating that all matters in dispute being submitted to the learned arbitrator, he had, on his client's behalf, to claim damages for an illegal distress upon his crop for 14*l.* 10*s.*, made last August without previous demand, he having at the rent-day immediately preceding paid all rent then due, such distress being for the same penalties which were the subject of the present action. The goods had not been removed, but he had incurred expense, and the annoyance of having his goods distrained upon by a common bailiff. He also claimed for seeds to the amount of 4*l.* 8*s.*—William Plenderleath proved that he had worked defendant's lands for three years, and had known them all his life. The course of cropping pursued by him and other holders of the same kind of lands was four or five years' rotation, which necessarily caused more than one half to be in tillage. The cropping was as follows:—First year Oats, second fallow, third Wheat, fourth Barley, fifth hay, and in the following year ploughed again. The large farms were arranged under a different course. Defendant used the whole of the manure produced from the vestures upon his land: he also bought stacks and manure, the whole of which were also laid on plaintiff's lands. Defendant also laid on large quantities of lime. The land was in a superior state of cultivation, well cleaned, and full of management.—Thomas Tweddle, cooper, Longtown, defendant's brother, proved that his father farmed 15 acres from plaintiff's father till 1823, when it was taken from him to be laid to two adjoining farms, and he had substituted the present land of like quantity. My father till his death, cropped the land every year, and defendant since cropped it in the same course till 1844. Defendant had in every year more than one-half in tillage. His father received no manure on entering, and left none on quitting. Was present in 1835 when defendant had awarded to him a prize of 3*l.* for the best managed farm of his class, at which time he was cropping as he had done as well before as since. Sir J. Graham was president, and Mr. Yule vice-president. My father also got a prize for some lands in 1826. Cross-examined by Mr. Addison—There was no agreement for former holding to my knowledge. The prizes are awarded by the farmers. Sir J. Graham receives and adopts their reports. Re-examined—Neither I nor defendant ever heard of the existence of any agreement for present lands. No allusion was ever made to it, either by his father or Mr. Yule. Philip Elliot—I was a holder of accommodation land for nine years. I managed and cropped my lands precisely in the same course in all respects as defendant did, as well as all others holding the same class of possessions. I got two premiums. Mr. Yule was one of the judges on one occasion. [The society's rules for awarding premiums were here produced by Mr. Yule, but not for the year in which defendant was a successful candidate. The one for 1840 was as follows:—"6. To the best managed small possession, on which the farmer does not reside, 3*l.* N.B. In deciding the last three prizes, the judges will examine minutely into the course of cropping pursued," &c.] This was the prize awarded to me, and also to defendant.—Mr. Birrell, of Sarkfoot, land valuer—I valued defendant's land in February last, and found the whole in a high state of cultivation, and with one exception all very clean. The only part to which the least objection could be made, was two acres, which is now growing turnips, and which was rather dirty; this had been laid down in 1836, which was a very wet season. Eight acres, or more than one-half, were sown down with seeds. A farm of three fields cannot be managed according to the agreement, without incurring a very considerable expense in subdividing, which a tenant would not be justified in doing. Defendant could not comply with one of the clauses without violating another. The land in question was worth about 2*l.* or 2*l.* 2*s.* an acre. I have known the accommodation lands, adjoining Longtown, upwards of 20 years. It is for the accommodation of the town people, who pay a very high rent, and cultivate as they like. I farmed Smalmstown, under plaintiff, three years. Part of defendant's father's holding, as well as many other lands, were laid to it in 1823; the whole were in tillage, and no manures or vestures were left. Sir James told me that I was entitled to compensation from the tenants of the farms, which were laid to Smalmstown, but from the tenants of accommodation land I had no claim either for over-cropping and removal of vestures or want of manure. In my opinion, defendant's land on quitting was in a more advantageous condition to an incoming tenant to be continued in the same course than if part had been in clover stubble. I have seen the crops within the last few days. The fences are down, and the land is laid to Mr. Braithwaite's farm. The whole of defendant's land, except two and a half acres, is now growing oats. The crop thereon is most superior, and in my judgment, has more corn by 9 or 10 bushels per acre than that growing on Braithwaite's land, which has been ploughed out of two years' lea. [The piece of land (2a. 1r.) which Mr. Birrell deposed to as at all objectionable was the only part which had been managed strictly in conformity with the conditions of the agreement.] Cross-examined.—I was a farmer of Sir J. Graham's. My reason for quitting before the expiration of my lease was that Sir James failed to perform his conditions. There was no lawsuit, but an injunction was applied for, and ultimately a reference was come to. Re-examined by Mr. Robinson.—Pray Mr. Birrell, gratify my learned friend's curiosity by telling the result. Did you pay or receive damages?—I received damages. Mr. Robinson.—Can you say how much?—I cannot name the precise sum, but it was between 700*l.* and 800*l.*—Thomas Beaty, head husbandman to Mr. Baxter, occupier of another adjoining farm for 12 years past, proved the uniformity of defendant's cropping, and that his management was superior to that of his neighbours. John Forster, horse-dealer, proved selling to defendant straw and manure in large quantities during the last two years, and that he likewise got all the manure raised at the brewery. Witness also spoke to the superior condition of defendant's lands, and to the course of cropping accommodation lands, which he himself had farmed. Mr. Andrew Hill, of Arthur's-cross.—I was judge of one class of holdings in 1839. Defendant was a candidate, and I and my colleagues awarded him the prize. It was our duty to inquire into the course of cropping; we did so, and found it to be in the rotation spoken of by Plenderleath and the other witnesses. We made our report to Mr. Yule, the secretary.—John Lancaster, sheriff's-officer, proved that he distrained defendant's crop on the 31st August, 1844, for 14*l.* 10*s.* He had the papers from Mr. Mounsey, and rode part of the way to the premises with Mr. Yule, in his gig. He kept possession three days. Nothing was removed. Defendant said it was all aggravation. Mr. Carrick, defendant's attorney, proved that he had made frequent applications for a copy and inspection of the agreement, both before and after the action was brought, but on each occasion it was refused, and was ultimately obtained under a judge's order. Mr. Birrell, recalled, proved the seeds to be worth 11*s.* per acre—4*l.* 8*s.* Mr. Addison, for plaintiff, addressed the arbitrator in reply at considerable length. He attempted to explain that his reason for not calling Mr. Yule was, that he expected he would be called on behalf of defendant; but if the arbitrator wished to ask him any questions, he had no objection. (The arbitrator intimated it was not for him to call witnesses to support either side.) The learned counsel then proceeded to argue upon the agreement being in law a valid document and binding on defendant, whether he knew its contents or not, unless he could clearly show that its terms had been abandoned by both parties. There was no evidence to show that Mr. Yule had any knowledge of the mode of cropping by defendant. He laid much stress on defendant's refusal to produce a letter that Mr. Yule had written to another farmer on this matter, which he had no doubt would have thrown much light on the subject. He urged his client's right to recover the 10*l.* an acre for the overcropping for the last two years; he did not mean to say they had suffered any damage. Defendant had violated his contract, and must be made to pay the penalty. It was not to recover damages, but to teach tenants that Sir James was not to be set at defiance, and his agreements set at nought, that this action was brought. Mr. Robinson: Defiance! where have we shown defiance? Are we not dragged here? Mr. Addison again repeated that he had no objection to produce Mr. Yule—that the arbitrator might examine him, and concluded by calling upon Mr. Otter to give him a verdict for the amount sought. Mr. Otter forwarded his award from Newcastle the following day. The following is the result:—Verdict for defendant, which carries costs. Defendant to deduct from the half-year's rent (which became due after action brought, and formed no part of the sum sued for), the sum of 4*l.* 8*s.* for seeds, and 40*l.* damages for making a wrongful distress upon Mr. Tweddle's crop. Plaintiff to pay all costs of the reference and award.—Carlisle Journal.

CORNS AND BUNIONS.

Patronized by the Royal Family, Nobility, Clergy, &c.

PAUL'S EVERY MAN'S FRIEND is a sure and speedy cure for those severe annoyances without causing the least pain or inconvenience.

Unlike all other remedies for Corns, its operation is such as to render the cutting of the Corns altogether unnecessary (indeed, we may say, the practice of cutting Corns is at all times highly dangerous, and has been frequently attended with lamentable consequences, besides its liability to increase their growth); it adheres with the most gentle pressure, producing an instant and delightful relief from torture, and, with perseverance in its application, entirely eradicates the most inveterate Corns and Bunions.

Testimonials have been received from upwards of one hundred Physicians and Surgeons of the greatest eminence.

Prepared by JOHN FOX, in boxes, at 1*s.* 1½*d.*, or three in one for 2*s.* 9*d.*, and to be had of C. KING, Napier-street, near the Albert Saloon, Hoxton, London; and all wholesale and retail medicine venders in town and country. The genuine has the name of JOHN FOX on the stamp.

A 2*s.* 9*d.* box cures the most obdurate Corns.

News of the Week.

HER MAJESTY'S return to her own dominions in renewed health and spirits, after more than a month's absence, will be welcomed by all classes of her subjects with real interest and satisfaction. The courteous and respectful reception which was given to our Queen, not merely by the Royal Houses, but also by the citizens and peasantry of Germany, has elicited in all parts of the kingdom a grateful expression of approbation; and the concluding scene of the tour, in which Her Majesty paid a second and spontaneous visit to the Chateau d'Eu, to offer to the King of the French a fresh proof of her regard, will not be considered the least interesting incident of her progress. It has been the marking feature of Her Majesty's tour, that while it was avowedly a complimentary and domestic visit to the King of Prussia and to the members of Prince Albert's family, the occasion was eagerly seized by the various Sovereigns of Germany to associate themselves in the hospitalities prepared for her, while the ancient cities of the country contributed to give the visit a national character. The flying visit to Tréport derives its principal interest from the fact, that it was a spontaneous mark of Her Majesty's affection for King Louis Philippe, and there is no doubt that it was the more acceptable to that sagacious Sovereign and to the great bulk of the French people, because it was divested of the ceremonies and festivities of Courts.—The affairs of Ireland for some weeks past have been brought prominently into notice by the proceedings of government in reference to the Orange demonstrations, and especially by the dismissal of Mr. Watson from the commission of the peace for having attended one of these meetings in his capacity as a magistrate. The facts of the case are already familiar to our readers, and it will therefore be sufficient to refer to a subsequent column for the details of a great Protestant meeting which took place last week at Belfast, for the purpose of offering to Mr. Watson the sympathy of the Irish Protestants, and of expressing their sense of the conduct of government in dismissing him. The Earl of Roden presided at this meeting and was supported by many of the well-known leaders of the old Orange party. The language used by the different speakers was that of unqualified censure, if not of defiance, towards the Government, and of a fixed determination to uphold the principles of Protestant ascendancy. The effects of Mr. Watson's dismissal, however, are not confined to Ireland. The Earl of Winchilsea has marked his disapprobation of the measure by resigning the deputy-lieutenancies and the commissions which he held as a magistrate for three English counties; and it is rumoured that the example is likely to be followed in other quarters.

From Spain we have accounts of the meeting of the two Queens with the Duke and Duchess de Nemours and the Duke d'Aumale at Pampeluna on the 4th inst. The French Princes crossed the Spanish frontier on the 3rd at Irun, and during every part of their route they were received with marked distinction by the people of Spain. The bull fights, and other national spectacles in honour of their visit, were to commence on the 4th, and for a time the violence of Spanish parties seems to have been cast into the shade by the prospect of these festivities.

Home News.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO GERMANY AND FRANCE.—At the date of the latest accounts which reached England from Saxe Gotha last week, it was arranged for Her Majesty to embark in the royal yacht at Antwerp on Saturday, and land at Osborne-house on Monday. A subsequent intimation that the King of the French was residing, with the Royal family of France, at the Chateau d'Eu, altered all these arrangements, and on Monday last Her Majesty landed for the second time on the shores of France. We shall, however, resume our narrative of the royal progress at the point to which it was brought in our last number, viz., MONDAY, the 1st September. On that day an amateur concert was given at Gotha, by the Thüringer Sängerband, or Thuringian Musical Society, which is composed of musical amateurs from every kingdom, dukedom, and principality in the adjacent country, who meet together every year to sing the national melodies. This was the third annual festival; and the occasion of the Queen's visit to Gotha caused a greater assemblage than on the preceding festivals. The singers from the several States, each preceded by its banner, arrived in Gotha early in the morning. 21 towns sent forth their singers to greet our Queen. Amongst them were bands from Suhl, Georgenthal, Neukirchen, Schmalkalden, Gotha, Erfurt, Sömmerda, Grossbreiterbach, Stadtilm, Eisenach, Schnepfenthal, Friedrichsroda, Chrdruff, and other places in the vicinity. The more distant cities, too, of Hamburgh, Dresden, Munich, and even Frankfort, were represented by their deputies. The concert took place in the open air; the number of vocalists was 900, and that of the instrumental performers 250. The Queen and the rest of the royal party took their seats in a pavilion erected for them about ½-past 3, and the performance immediately commenced. It opened with a congratulatory ode to the Queen of England, set to music by Professor Jacobs, of Berlin. It was sung with very great delicacy of expression, but although there were so many voices engaged, the effect was comparatively lost in the open air. Following this complimentary ode came a speech in honour of the Queen from Professor Dennhardt, of Erfurt, delivered with great energy and expression. It was spoken from the rostrum of the director of the music, and every word was audible. The concert-proper now commenced with Weber's Jubal overture, played by the band with great precision and feeling, and wound up with "God save the Queen." After this came a prayer, composed by Mehul, and sung by the whole body of singers. The second piece was a song entitled "Gruss an den Brüdern," the words by the Duke of Saxe Coburg, and the music by Prince Albert. A song written by the reigning Duke and several others of a national character closed the first part of the performance. In the second part the most remarkable pieces were the "Huntsman's Farewell," by Mendelssohn, and the "Vaterlandslied," by Schneider. To close the whole came a German "Volksgesang," to the air of "God save the Queen." It was composed by Professor Welcker, of Gotha, and sung with real German enthusiasm. As soon as it was over Her Majesty rose and bowed her acknowledgments, and the royal party returned to the Palace to dinner.—On TUESDAY the Duke of Saxe Coburg drove his chesnut team with an open barouche, in which were seated Her Majesty, the Duchess of Saxe Coburg Gotha, and Prince Albert, to Oberhof, a hunting lodge of the Duke, distant a few miles from Gotha. It is a very pretty seat, perched on the summit of a high hill, and commanding a magnificent view of the forest scenery. From Oberhof the royal party proceeded to Reinhardtsbrunn, where they dined at 3 o'clock, and in the evening, at about 7, they came back to Gotha. There was a ball in the theatre in the evening, to which between 1000 and 1500 persons were invited, chiefly inhabitants of Gotha and the neighbourhood. Her Majesty and the Prince went to the ball, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Coburg, the Duchess of Kent, the King and Queen of the Belgians, Prince Ernest of Wurtemburg, the Prince of Leiningen, Duke Alexander of Wurtemburg, the Grand Duke of Baden, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Schwerin, and the members of the English suite. The theatre was fitted up in the Jullien style, and the ball was little more than a promenade concert, in consequence of the crowds of people who thronged the building. The royal party at first occupied the Duke's box, but after the ball had commenced they came down, and passed round the saloon in a sort of polonaise. The Queen and Prince Albert retired at a quarter past 11, and returned to the palace.—On WEDNESDAY morning, Her Majesty set out on her journey homewards. After leaving Gotha the route lay for some few miles in the territory of the Duke of Saxe Coburg, and the Duke and Duchess accompanied Her Majesty to the boundary, and then took their leave to return to Gotha; Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the suite proceeding forward in the direction of Eisenach, where they had breakfast. The Grand Duke of Saxe Weimar was here waiting to welcome our Sovereign to his dominions. As there is nothing particularly worthy of attention in Eisenach, the Grand Duke had several carriages in readiness to convey her Majesty to the castle of Wartburg, which is perched upon the top of a hill, about two miles distant from the town. This Castle derives its chief celebrity from having been the residence of Martin Luther, who was detained in a sort of friendly confinement by the Elector of Saxony in the year 1521-2. The Queen and Prince were shown the chamber appropriated to the use of Luther, when the better to conceal his retreat, he passed under the disguise of a nobleman. They were shown also the celebrated room were Luther performed the greater part of his translation of the Bible: and where, according to tradition, the Prince of Darkness interfered to stop the work, receiving a rebuke in the shape of a stand full of the holy ink in which it was being written. All these matters having been duly explained to the royal visitors, who also enjoyed and admired the fine views commanded by the castle, they returned to their carriages, and, without going back to Eisenach, proceeded on their journey through the Thuringian woods to Marksuhl, Vach and Buttlar, to Hünfeld, when the road enters the territory of Hesse Cassel. The Elector had dispatched two of his ministers to receive Her Majesty on the confines of his dominions; and at nine o'clock in the evening Her Majesty entered Fulda, where the Elector was himself in waiting. Apartments had been provided for the Queen at the Kurfurst Hotel, where Her Majesty passed the night. The town was illuminated in many parts, and was the scene of general bustle and rejoicings.—On THURSDAY the royal party left Fulda at 8 A.M., and reached Frankfort soon after 3. Apartments had been engaged for their use at the Hotel D'Angleterre. They drove up without any outriders or ceremony; but there was a body of the City Guard of Frankfort drawn up before the hotel. The King of Bavaria had arrived a short time before, having travelled thus far to greet our Sovereign, and to express his regret that pressing state affairs should have detained him at Munich, and prevented him from receiving her Majesty in person at his palace at Wurtzburg, which her Majesty passed in her journey to Coburg. Prince Metternich had also arrived to meet the Queen, and with the King of Bavaria, joined the royal party at dinner. In the evening, after dinner, there was a reception or levee, at which the Earl and Countess of Westmoreland, the Burgomaster and the authorities of Frankfort were presented.—On FRIDAY morning her Majesty and the Prince proceeded by the Taunus railway through Wiesbaden to Biberich, where they embarked in the Count of Paris, one of the Rhine steamers, which was lying off the Duke of Nassau's splendid palace on the banks of the Rhine. As soon as her Majesty was on board, the steamer got under weigh and descended the Rhine as far as Bingen, where the Queen's steam-yacht Fairy was in waiting. The royal party then embarked in the Fairy, and descended the river at a rapid rate to Cologne, the fortress of Ehrenbreitstein saluting with 500 cannon as they passed Coblentz. The royal party did not land at Cologne but at Dietz on the opposite bank of the river, where they remained for the night at the Hotel de Bellevue. On SATURDAY, the Queen started for Antwerp, by a special train, passing through Aix la Chapelle, where Her Majesty alighted whilst the baggage and carriages were being transferred from the Prussian to the Belgian train. The station was gaily decorated, and all the civil and military authorities were present to receive Her Majesty. At the subsequent stations on the line, Tirlemont, Louvain, Malines, and other places, guards of honour presented arms as the train whirled by, and military bands played our national anthem. On the arrival of the royal party at Antwerp, the King and Queen of the Belgians conducted Her Majesty to the Palace, where a sumptuous entertainment was prepared. At 9 P.M., Her Majesty embarked on board the royal yacht, which however did not get under weigh, as the change which had been made in the hour of departure in order to allow Her Majesty to dine with King Leopold, caused so much delay, that the tide which was falling rapidly when the Queen arrived, left the yacht aground in the mud until morning. In the evening there was a partial illumination both of the town and shipping.—On SUNDAY the yacht got under weigh, dropped down the Scheldt under the usual salutes, and proceeded without any remarkable incident, towards Tréport. On MONDAY morning, as early as 4 A.M., the distant report of cannon in the offing from the French war-steamer Pluton announced to the inhabitants of Tréport that the Queen's yacht was in sight. All was bustle immediately afterwards. The foot soldiery, the line, the Cuirassiers, the Chasseurs, and all the military in the town, were placed at their posts, although it was evident that two hours must elapse ere the Queen could land. At 8 o'clock the King and Queen of the French, the Princess Adelaide, and all the members of the royal family, arrived in the grand char-a-banc, followed by eight or ten other carriages filled with their distinguished guests and other high personages. The King was in delight, and looked better than he has done for six months. He raised his hat vigorously in return to the salutations with which he was received. Half an hour afterwards the British steamer, with the royal standard of England displayed, was within a mile of the shore. King Louis-Philippe immediately entered a barge, with a few attendants, and proceeded to the Courrier steamer, in which he approached the Victoria and Albert. From the Courrier His Majesty descended into a boat fully manned, and pulled to the Victoria and Albert. Queen Victoria and Prince Albert were distinctly visible on the deck, and immediately after King Louis-Philippe was seen to ascend. Some little bustle took place, and then all the royal party were seen to descend into the barge, in which they were rowed to the shore. An unexpected incident now occurred which caused great amusement to the Queen. As it was nearly low water, it was not practicable to land at the basin, and the strand was distant from the road. A curious but simple expedient to obviate this difficulty suggested itself to the fruitful mind of the King. His Majesty ordered that a horse be attached to one of the numerous bathing-machines on the strand, and by aid of it the Queen was enabled to reach the shore from the royal barge. At a quarter past 9 our Queen landed, and was received by the Queen of the French, who warmly embraced her. Never did Queen Victoria appear in more magnificent health; Her Majesty wore a violet dress, a black mantilla, and a yellow "drawn" bonnet. Prince Albert looked a little pale, but was evidently in high spirits. A few moments only elapsed when they entered their carriages amid deafening cheers, and the still more deafening thunder of the guns of the battery close by, and of all the ships of war in the offing. At half past 9 the char-a-banc in which were Her Majesty, Prince Albert, the King and Queen of the French, Prince de Joinville, the Prince of Salerno, &c., entered the grand court of the Chateau d' Eu. The Queen most animatedly acknowledged the cheers of the privileged few who were admitted within its precincts, and the salute of the troops, whose cries of Vive le Roi were heard above the band, which, immediately on Her Majesty's appearance, commenced playing "God save the Queen." M. Guizot and some other persons of distinction were at the great entrance of the chateau, and were first to hail the Queen's arrival at Eu. After a moment or two Her Majesty, accompanied by her illustrious hosts, appeared in the balcony over the entrance, and again, with much apparent warmth, expressed her sense of the hearty goodwill with which all around had cheered her. A splendid déjeuner was then served, after which the King introduced Her Majesty to the new Victoria Gallery, built to commemorate her first visit to the chateau. In the afternoon the royal party drove into the new park and forest, and returned to an early dinner to which all the civil and military authorities of the place were invited. In the evening the Opera Comique company which the King had sent for from Paris performed in the theatre of the chateau, the "Beau Seignor," and "Richard Cœur de Lion."—On TUESDAY morning, about noon, the royal party left the Chateau for a drive, in the char-a-banc. There were the King of the French and Queen Victoria on the first seat, the Queen of the French and Prince Albert on the second, and on the other seats were the Princess of Salerno, the mother of the Duchess d'Aumale, and the Duchess d'Orleans. M. Guizot, Lord Aberdeen, and the suite followed in other vehicles. The royal party were loudly cheered by the troops and people assembled, and the King of the French looked as happy as if he had never known what anxiety meant. After a drive round the forest and meadows which encircle the Chateau, the royal party returned at half-past one, and the Queen and Prince Albert afterwards walked in the grounds of the Palace. Shortly before six P.M., Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and their suite left the Chateau d'Eu for Tréport, to embark in the Victoria and Albert, on their return to England. A body of infantry was drawn up in the court-yard of the Chateau, and a military band played from the commencement of dinner (four o'clock) until a few minutes before the hour of departure. A body of cavalry was stationed opposite the chateau. His Majesty Louis Philippe and the members of the Royal Family of France, accompanied the royal travellers to the coast. They went in the char-a-bancs, which formed quite a brilliant procession. The band played "God save the Queen" as Her Majesty was handed into the carriage by the King, and as the royal party drove off the troops shouted "Vive le Roi!" "Vive la Reine d'Angleterre!" A considerable number of people witnessed the departure and joined in the cheering. The distance from Eu to Tréport is very short, and was accomplished in less than half an hour. Great crowds of people were assembled to witness the embarkation; in fact, almost all the population of Eu, strangers included, seemed to have passed down to Tréport. As the royal carriage approached salutes were fired, which were answered from Eu. All the fishermen of Tréport and their fair companions seemed to have poured out to see the embarkation, and the pretty costume of the women, with their characteristic caps and short blue petticoats, was not the least interesting part of the scene. Tréport looked quaint and pretty in the sunlight, and the sea was calm and glossy as a lake. The Victoria and Albert lay off the port, and the Black Eagle, Fairy, and Porcupine at a little distance. The French steamers, Caiman, Courrier, and Pluton, also lay off the port, and there were also a few French brigs and other vessels. As the royal carriages drove up, preceded by an escort of dragoons, the church bells rang a merry peal, and salutes were fired. A band stationed at the landing-place struck up "God save the Queen," and in a few moments more the King of the French handed Queen Victoria into a barge lying alongside, which immediately pulled out to sea. In the same barge with the Queen were the King, the Prince de Joinville, Prince Albert, Lord Aberdeen, M. Guizot, and Lord Liverpool. The other members of the suite followed in other boats. The vessels in the offing manned their yards, salutes were fired from the batteries, and the cheers of the people were deafening. By half-past 6 the royal party were on board, and the King of the French and the Prince de Joinville took their leave, and returned to Eu. The Victoria and Albert lay to during the night off the French coast, in order not to make the land before morning. At daybreak, on WEDNESDAY, she was under weigh, and the passage from Tréport to Spithead was made under eight hours. The weather was favourable in the extreme, and the water as smooth as glass. At an early hour in the morning the Porcupine steam-sloop arrived with the royal baggage, and brought intelligence for the Commander-in-Chief that Her Majesty might be expected to arrive about 11 o'clock this morning. Precisely at that time the Victoria and Albert, with the royal standard flying from her main, accompanied by the Fairy and the Black Eagle, and followed at a little distance by the French steamer Pluton, hove in sight through the haze off the Nab Light, upon which the royal standard was instantly mounted on the King's Bastion; the Victory, flag-ship, hoisted flags at her masthead, and, together with the platform battery, fired a royal salute as the royal squadron slowly passed through Spithead towards Osborne, where her Majesty arrived a little before 12. It was remarked that her Majesty did not appear the least fatigued after her lengthened journey, extending over nearly five weeks, but that on the contrary she looked exceedingly well and improved in health by her Continental trip. It is not yet known what stay her Majesty will make at Osborne, or what portion of the kingdom she may visit during the autumn; at all events she will remain here some days, for a Cabinet Council is to be held at Osborne House on Monday next. During her Majesty's absence the infant Princes and Princesses have been residing in the Isle of Wight, and are in excellent health.

Official Resignations.—The Earl of Winchilsea has addressed a letter to the Lord Chancellor resigning the commission of the peace for the counties of Kent, Northampton, and Lincoln, and similar letters to the lieutenants of the same counties resigning the office of deputy lieutenant. His lordship has taken this step, he states, on account of the "arbitrary and unjust" conduct of Ministers in the dismissal of Mr. Watson, and because he "cannot subject himself to similar treatment in the course which he may deem it his duty to pursue in advocating those great Protestant principles which are, in his estimation, beyond all earthly value." The Lord Chancellor in acknowledging the letter, states that he has directed the necessary supersedeas to issue, at the same time saying that he "very much regrets that his lordship has taken this step."

Parliamentary Movements.—The election of a member for Southwark, in the room of the late Mr. B. Wood, took place on Thursday, and terminated in the return of Sir W. Molesworth. The numbers were for Sir. W. Molesworth, 1,943; Mr. Pilcher, 1,182; Mr. Miall, 352.

The Late Session.—From the official records issued by order of both Houses of Parliament it appears that no fewer than 666 different documents either in the form of reports and blue blooks (some extending to upwards of 1,000 folio pages each), or returns, statistical or otherwise, have been directed to be printed by the House of Commons alone. By far the greater number of these have been already issued; but a long list of documents, including many of public interest, still remain to be printed and distributed; and the like is the case with respect to the papers of the other branch of the Legislature. No fewer than 22 reports, returns, &c., were moved for or presented in the House of Commons only on the last day of the session, and some time must elapse before they are ready for publication. The House of Lords sat during the late session 95 days; and the House of Commons 125. The official records of the proceedings of the former occupy 1,048 pages; those of the lower House of Parliament 2,078 pages, the last two of which contain 16 notices of motions, which now stand in the order-book of that House "for the next session." There were altogether 170 divisions during the past session in the House of Commons.

Standing Orders of the House of Commons.—There has been issued, by order of the House of Commons, a copy of its standing orders as they are at present framed, and introducing all the more recent alterations and amendments. The earliest of these orders were made in 1685. The document extends to 64 folio pages.

Criminal Statistics.—A parliamentary blue book has just been issued, containing an account of criminal offenders in England and Wales in the course of last year. It appears that, in 1844, the commitments numbered 26,542, which was a considerable diminution compared with the preceding year, when the commitments amounted to 29,591. In 1841, there were 27,760 commitments for trial; in 1842, 31,309; in 1843, 29,591; and in 1844, only 26,542. For the last five years, however, the numbers have increased; the commitments for the last five years numbering 142,289, and in the previous five years 112,864. From the appendices to the Circuit Regulation Commissioners' Report, just laid before Parliament, it appears that the average annual number of causes tried on the circuits as at present arranged, on an average of the last ten years, is 1303; the average number of prisoners tried before Judges, 3561; before other commissioners, 381.

Decrease of Marriages.—It appears from an official Return, that the number of marriages in England and Wales has greatly decreased of late years, though the population is annually increasing. Thus, in 1833, there were 120,127 marriages in England and Wales; in 1834, 121,884; in 1835, the number fell more than 2000, being 119,598; in 1836 they rose again to 120 849; but in the following year decreased more than 8000, being only 112,727; in 1838 there were 113,123 marriages; in 1839, 116,677; and in 1840, 115,548. The number of burials in 1837 was 336,994; in 1838, 292,650; in 1839, 286,855; and in 1840, 304,407. The number of baptisms in the latter year was 364,440, some 5000 fewer than in 1823.

Religious Instruction in the Colonies.—From a voluminous return issued by the House of Lords, it appears that, according to a schedule of the grants, endowments, and appropriations, made for the purpose of religious instruction or of education in the colonies (the gross total population of our colonial dependencies amounting in the aggregate to 4,705,739 souls), there was paid in 1842 a total sum of 226,902*l.* to the clergy of the churches of England, Scotland, Rome, and to Methodist and Dissenting ministers, of which 46,964*l.* was paid by the British Treasury, and 176,938*l.* from colonial funds. The grants from the British Treasury to schools during the same period amounted to 26,117*l.*, and that from colonial funds to 146,230*l.*, making a total of 172,107*l.* Of the sum of 49,964*l.* granted by the Treasury to the clergy, the Anglican establishment received 44,593*l.*; the Scotch, 347*l.*; the Roman Catholic, 2,024*l.* Of the sum of 176,938*l.* granted from colonial funds, 118,443*l.* was received by the Anglican clergy, 29,645*l.* by the Scotch, 4,634*l.* by the Wesleyans and Dissenters, and 24,216*l.* by Roman Catholic priests. The sums were thus appropriated among the colonies, including both clergy and schools: East Canada, 41,994*l.*; West Canada, 40,003*l.*; Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, 18,972*l.*; New Brunswick, 18,116*l.*; Prince Edward Island, 1,649*l.*; Newfoundland, 2,545*l.*; Bermuda, 2,695*l.*; Jamaica, 35,736*l.*; Honduras, 1383*l.*; Bahamas, 5163*l.*; Barbadoes, 13,858*l.*; St. Vincent, 2133*l.*; Grenada, 2508*l.*; Tobago, 1935*l.*; Antigua, 12,107*l.*; Montserrat, 633*l.*; Saint Christopher, 3202*l.*; Nevis, 1108*l.*; Tortola and Virgin Islands, 790*l.*; Dominica, 618*l.*; British Guiana, 20,316*l.*; Trinidad, 8,856*l.*; Saint Lucia, 428*l.*; Negro education of emancipated slave colonies, 26,000*l.*; Gibralta, 1313*l.*; Malta and Gozo, 6215*l.*; Cape of Good Hope, 16,502*l.*; Sierra Leone, 1276*l*; Gambia, 41*l.*; Heligoland, 100*l.*; Saint Helena, 1491*l.*; New South Wales, 52,898*l.*; South Australia, 354*l.*; Western Australia, 1221*l.*; New Zealand, 861*l.*; Van Diemen's Land, 29,330*l.*; Ceylon, 14,470*l.*; Mauritius, 8823*l.* The detailed statements of these various accounts occupy nearly 80 folio pages of print.

Tithes Commutation.—Returns of all agreements and of all awards for the commutation of tithes which have been confirmed by the tithe commissioners of England and Wales, and also of all appointments confirmed from the 1st July, 1844, to the 1st January, 1845, have been printed, on the motion of Mr. Manners Sutton. From the summary it appears that the total composition and rates in England and Wales amounted to 12,071*l.*, total rent charges being 12,489*l.*; increase of rent charges, 669*l.*; decrease of rent charges, 250*l.*; rent charges, for which the compositions cannot be ascertained, 2769*l.*; rent-charges of the present return, 12,259*l.*; rent-charges of former returns, 2,425,959*l.*; and total rent-charges, 2,441,218*l.*

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Paris papers, with scarcely an exception, regard Queen Victoria's visit to the Chateau d'Eu as a marked compliment to the King of the French. They express regret, however, that Her Majesty should land a second time on the shores of France without going to Paris to enjoy the splendid hospitalities of the Tuileries, and survey the beauties of Versailles. Private letters add that, in spite of the hostility of some of the journals to this country, the people generally express the highest satisfaction at this second visit of Her Majesty. "The visit of the Queen," says the Presse,

'is quite spontaneous. On her departure from Germany Her Majesty wrote to the King that since he was at Eu, she would not pass so near him without going to offer him a new testimony of her affection. We have been, moreover, assured that Queen Victoria returns little satisfied with her journey to the banks of the Rhine, which terminated more abruptly than was expected." The Commerce, however, which is almost the only paper that ventures any speculations on the subject, trusts that Her Majesty has not come to revive the dropped negotiations relative to a commercial treaty between France and this country.—The adjudication of the Great Northern railroad from Paris to the frontier of Belgium, and the branch line from Fampoux to Hazebruck took place ou Tuesday, before the Minister of Public Works. The allied company of Messrs. Rothschild, Hottinguer, Laffitte, and Co., being the only party that sent in a tender for the larger railroad, was declared to have obtained the line, at a lease of 38 years. The Fampoux to Hazebruck line was adjudged to the company O'Neill for a lease of 37 years, 316 days, being 45 days lower than the company Rothschild, whose offer was for 38 years, the same as for the main line. On the Bourse the effect of the adjudication is described as not so great as might have been expected. All the promises of the Northern line, however, have improved, and Rothschild's closed at 900f., after being done at 920f.—On Saturday week the Prince de Joinville, accompanied by M. Dumon, the Minister of Commerce, and M. d'Houdetot, the King's aide-de-camp, arrived off Havre in the Pluton Government steamer. His Royal Highness had been in this vessel from Tréport to Brighton, and other points on the English coast, and had inspected at Brighton the damage lately done to the floating breakwater. The Prince, on returning to Tréport, found he could not land from the state of the sea, and therefore ran along the coast to Havre, and landed at M. Normand's building yard. After examining the framework of a beautiful iron yacht being built for the King, his Royal Highness went to the Hotel Frescati, where he had a long conference with the chief naval engineer on the projected improvements of the port. At 7 o'clock his Royal Highness set out by land for the Chateau d'Eu. The King, it appears, was so pleased with the account of the breakwater given to him by the Prince that he immediately ordered a number of sections from the importer of Captain Taylor's invention, to form a port of refuge at Tréport. A similar harbour on a larger scale is being established at La Ciotat, near Marseilles, under the special direction of Admiral Baudin.—"The vessels intended to act against the slave-trade are not," says the Constitutionnel, "yet ready to proceed to the coast of Africa. They are not to set out for six weeks or two months. Meanwhile communications are exchanged with England every day on the subject of the mission which the two navies are to fulfil together. Recently the Admiralty has drawn up regulations for day and night signals, which the English and French cruizers are to make use of, in order to mutually recognise each other. It appears that we have approved of all the dispositions of these regulations. It is divided into two parts; the first concerning sailing vessels, and the other steamers."—We learn from Toulon that the squadron of evolution returned to that port on the evening of the 31st ult., and that Admiral Leblanc was on the following day to commence his inspection of the ships composing it. The municipal, naval, and military authorities of Toulon having been unable to discover the incendiaries who lately set fire to the Mourillon arsenal, M. Allard the chief of the "Police de Sureté" of Paris, and two of his ablest auxiliaries, have been dispatched to that port. According to the Constitutionnel, M. Allard has already sent up a report to the Government which dispels all the suspicions as to the convicts having been concerned in the conflagration. "Who then kindled it?" asks the Constitutionnel, no doubt searching for the incendiaries out of France.—On the 1st inst., a Moorish prince, Mohammed-Ben-Serroor, whom the Emperor of Morocco is said to have sent to the Court of Louis Philippe, landed at Marseilles. This diplomatic personage is a near relation of the Emperor, about thirty-five years old, of a jet-black complexion, but favoured with features quite unlike those of a negro. He was present at the battle which has conferred the dukedom of Isly on Marshal Bugeaud. Mohammed-Ben-Serroor immediately left for Toulon, with the members of his Legation, consisting of a cook, two slaves, and a secretary. Marshal Bugeaud was to embark for France on the 4th inst.—In consequence of the late negociations relative to the French Jesuits, and the measures adopted against them, the Débats bestows much importance on the circumstance of the Pope and eighteen Cardinals having attended the celebration of the fête of St. Louis in the French Church at Rome. "This solemnity," says the Débats, "in the present state of affairs, had a peculiar bearing and importance, which neither the friends nor the enemies of the French Government can misunderstand. Since the last negotiations with the court of Rome, numerous reports and commentaries have been spread as to the nature of the arrangements made relative to the position of the Jesuits' Society in France; and the Pope, who in that affair only acted according to his profound conviction, wished, by the accomplishment of an august and pious ceremony, to make a public demonstration of the sentiments which animate him with regard to the King and to France." The Débats then describes the ceremony; M. Rossi, the French plenipotentiary, opened the door of the carriage at the church door, and thanked his Holiness for the honour he had deigned to confer on the French Church. The Pope, in a voice so loud that he could be heard by the crowd assembled around him, replied that he had great pleasure in performing the pious duty, and he should be happy that that expression of his sentiments were known to the King of the French.—The Marquis de Villafranca is expected at Paris to solicit authorisation for Don Carlos and the Princess to proceed to Rome, the climate of Bourges being injurious to the health of the Princess, who was born in Brazil. If M. de Villafranca does not obtain passports for Italy, he is directed to demand from the French government permission for Don Carlos and the Princess to fix their residence in such town of the south as they may choose.—One of the most distinguished Generals of Don Carlos, Balmaseda, died a few days ago at Chagny, in France, where he had fixed his residence for some time past.—The eminent M. Royer Collard died on Friday week at Chateauvieux, his seat near St. Aignan, at the advanced age of 82. M. Royer Collard was for some years president of the Chamber of Deputies; he was also a member of the French Academy, and professor of philosophy in the University.—Baron Achille de Maynard threw himself, on Saturday morning, from the top of one of the towers of Notre Dame, and killed himself on the spot. He was about 25 years of age, the owner of a fine fortune, and he had only a fortnight before married the daughter of the Count d'Espagnac. Every one is lost in conjectures as to what could have been his motive. He was the author of two volumes of poetry, dedicated to M. de Lamartine, and he had for a few years furnished several articles to the Gazette de France and to La Nation.—The Bourse of Paris continues to be crowded to overflow during business hours. More than double the number of persons ever congregated in that vast hall before dealing in shares commenced, are now daily packed within its walls. Even under the peristyle without, hundreds of speculators carry on their transactions, independently of the lady gamblers, so uncourteously excluded from the house. New companies, particularly with a view to compete for the Lyons line, or, possibly, with the hope of being admitted into a fusion, are hourly starting into existence.

SPAIN.—The Duke and Duchess de Nemours and the Duke d'Aumale entered Spain on the 3d inst. by Irun, where they were received with the greatest distinction by the authorities and inhabitants. They arrived at Tolosa on the 4th inst., and were received with equal enthusiasm by the inhabitants of that town. The junior members of the most distinguished families of the place executed, in honour of the event, several national and mythological dances on a theatre erected for the purpose. A splendid banquet was also prepared for the illustrious visitors. In all the towns through which their Royal Highnesses passed they had been received with cries of, "Long live the French Princes," "Long life to Louis Philippe." The houses and public edifices were everywhere ornamented with flags and coloured drapery. On the afternoon of the same day the Princes arrived at Pampeluna, where the Queen of Spain, Queen Christina, and the Infanta, had arrived on the previous evening from Bilbao. The Duke and Duchess de Nemours and the Duke d'Aumale were received by the two Queens and the Infanta with demonstrations of the highest satisfaction, and were, after having alighted at the hotel prepared for them, visited by the Queens, the Infanta, the President of the Council of Ministers, M. Martinez de la Rosa, and the Duke de Rianzares. The arrival of the royal Dukes and the Duchess was hailed by the people of Pampeluna with loud acclamations. The festivities and bull-fights in honour of their arrival were to begin on the next day, and the whole country was alive with the expectation of enjoyment. Troops were taking up their quarters either in the city or the neighbouring villages; the veteran Montes was organising his bull-destroying company; the handsome equipages of foreigners arriving by the French road contrasted strangely with the "cacolets," and other primitive conveyances of the country proprietors, who were seeking with but indifferent success anything in the shape of lodging from house to house. The Court of Spain has made great efforts to appear on this occasion with a splendour suitable to the ancient grandeur of the nation; magnificent services of plate and other valuable objects have been brought from Madrid, new liveries have been made for the servants, the handsomest of the royal carriages have already arrived, and the Queen's stud boasts of horses of extraordinary beauty. Among these are three Andalusian horses intended as presents for the royal guests, the proportions of which are faultless. The only regret is that so much trouble and expense should have been incurred for festivities which at the utmost will not last more than three days. The arena for the bull-fights is a very substantial building, after the plan of the Roman Amphitheatre, capable of containing upwards of 10,000 spectators. It was completed last year, and is on the site of an ancient monastery.—Letters from Bilboa, of the 31st ult., state that the two Queens and the Infanta entered that city on the 29th, cheered by the inhabitants, who with their magistrates at their head, went to the limits of the place to meet them. The following day the royal party visited the public institutions, and in the evening the city was illuminated. They made an excursion to Portugalette on the 30th, and to Santiago on the 31st, returning in the evening to Portugalette, which was partially illuminated, but the people remained perfectly silent, and no cheers welcomed Her Majesty in any part of that town. The royal party took their departure on the 1st inst. for Pampeluna, where, as stated above, they arrived on the 3rd, visiting Bergara by the way.—Accounts from Madrid, of the 31st ult., state that the capital was quiet, and the excitement of the previous week seemed to have passed away. To the combination of the shopkeepers to resist M. Mon's new taxes by closing their shops, has succeeded a new and extraordinary combination on the part of the agents doing business at the Bolsa, who are determined to resist the new tax laid upon them, which is one-eighth per cent., on the amount of their operations. The consequence has been that hardly any quotation of business done has appeared for several days past, and on the 30th the official list appeared a perfect blank, no business at all being quoted. The Journal des Débats of Wednesday publishes the following telegraphic despatch, dated Madrid, midnight, on the 5th inst.:—"An attempt at insurrection was made this evening at ten o'clock, but was promptly repressed by the troops. Only one officer was killed."

SWITZERLAND.—The Journal des Débats publishes a letter from Berne of the 4th inst., announcing that the Council of State had suddenly convoked the Council General of that canton for the 10th inst. "After having encouraged," says the correspondent of that journal, "all the anarchical attempts which took place of late in the different states of the Confederation, particularly during the last year, the Government of that canton, finding itself seriously menaced in its turn by the revolutionary movement, has resolved to resist it. It was the protector of the ultra-Radicals, it now disowns and discards them. It tolerated and favoured the patriotic associations and popular assemblies when they meditated the overthrow of a Conservative Government, or the ruin of Lucerne; now that they endanger its own existence, it wages war against them."

PORTUGAL.—We have accounts from Lisbon to the 1st inst. Although a fortnight has elapsed since the result of the elections became known, and the Ministerial triumph was undisputed, they still are the universal topic. To the province of Alemtejo has fallen the lot of returning as representatives the ten leading men of the Opposition. The Minister of Justice, Senhor José Cabral, arrived from Oporto on the 25th inst. His Excellency made warm acknowledgments for the really enthusiastic reception given him by his friends in that city at a grand public dinner, and renewed his vows of fidelity to the Queen, the Charter, and the men of Oporto. The Queen has been advised to confirm the late expression of the nation's will in favour of the ministry, by going on a visit to the Premier, Antonio Cabral, at his castle at Thomar. Funchal papers to the 9th ult. state, that the bishop of Madeira has just concluded a visitation throughout his diocese, during which he had "almost entirely destroyed the effects of Dr. Kalley's erroneous doctrines, and uprooted their pernicious seed."

GERMANY.—It is stated in the Bremen Gazette that "A supposed intention is talked of, which, if it should be carried into effect, will create an extraordinary sensation. It is well known that the Queen of England, when she was here, gave 3,500 dollars for our cathedral. A very different sum was expected from the Queen of three kingdoms; but, apart from this, as the Queen does not seem in general to have any particular taste for the grand in art, the matter is now taken up in a very different point of view, and a society has been formed here to return the gift to her Britannic Majesty. It is said that considerable contributions have been subscribed for this purpose, and chiefly by manufacturers, for the people's eyes are opened, and notwithstanding all the fine phrases of the freedom of trade, they see that England, like a vast nightmare, keeps down all our manufacturing and commercial efforts. This is the ground of a demonstration, which otherwise might appear ridiculous, nay, childish."

Upon this the Hamburgh papers of the 5th observe "This demonstration, if it should be really intended, may be justly called ridiculous and childish. Our manufacturing gentlemen would play the part of a pug-dog which would frighten a bull-dog by his yelping, and certainly nobody would dispute with the glory of such a heroical defence of the national system. As for the amount of the sum given by the Queen of England, it must be remembered that she is not an absolute sovereign, who can dispose of the public money as she pleases, but must measure her gift according to the means at her disposal, which are in proportion far from considerable, and that a contribution of £500 towards building a Roman Catholic Cathedral exceeds the usual amount of contribution for building churches, and other charitable purposes in her own country."

The anniversary fete of the constitution was celebrated at Leipsic on the 4th inst., with great rejoicing. Large bodies of men and women passed through the streets as early as five in the morning, singing patriotic songs. Later in the day there were public services in the churches, after which the Communal Guards assembled on the Rossplatz, and went through a series of evolutions. They afterwards filed off in front of the Hotel de Ville, on the balcony of which the authorities showed themselves. Everything passed off with great calmness and propriety. The commission of inquiry is pursuing its researches, but it is not yet known who gave orders to the troops to fire on the people. The report of the commission is looked for with some impatience.—Advices from Brunswick of the 3d inst. state, that during three consecutive evenings collisions had occurred between the Chasseurs of the Battalion of the Guard, and the journeymen shoemakers in that city. The soldiers had drawn their swords and seriously wounded several persons. The police at length, assisted by the military, succeeded in restoring order. A report having gone abroad that the other trades were about to come to the assistance of the journeymen shoemakers, the soldiers had been ordered to remain in their quarters, to be in readiness in case of need.—It is rumoured that the Congress of the German Customs Union, which is now sitting at Carlsruhe, has agreed to increase the duties on several articles of foreign manufacture introduced into the states forming the Zollverein, and among them upon thread and cotton. The list of the articles to be subjected to the new duties is not yet published, and, in fact, the new duties are not to be imposed till the first of January next.—The Frankfort Journal mentions that the King of Wirtemburg had been twiced fired at, at Meran, in the Tyrol, but fortunately without being injured. The Carlsruhe Gazette publishes the same report, and adds that the Jesuits were not strangers to the attempt.

ITALY.—The Journal des Débats announces in a leading article what it calls "a real event in the commercial world," which is, however, more remarkable for its nature and origin than for its consequences. It is that the Papal Government, resolutely entering the path of customs' reforms, has just proceeded to a reduction of tariffs to the amount of 30, 50, and even 60 per cent. on the most important goods imported into its dominions. The exportation of various articles hitherto prohibited is also henceforth to be permitted. The Débats adds, however, that these measures must not be considered as a mere homage to the principles of commercial freedom, but as a necessity to which the Roman Court has given way, a contraband trade of the most extensive and flagrant description, which had its depôts in the Duchies of Tuscany and Modena, having, from time immemorial, infested the eastern frontiers, and even the free ports of Ancona and Civita-Vecchia, and stopped up the sources of the public revenue.

RUSSIA.—The Constitutionnel publishes letters from Taganrog of the 10th August, which state that Count Woronzow, since his expedition upon Dargo, has resorted to a new kind of warfare. As the immense forests which cover the mountains of the Caucasus serve as shelter to the Circassians, both in their forward and retrograde movements, and at the same time incommode the manœuvres of the Russian troops, Count Woronzow has given orders for them to be burnt. A transport of more than 50 waggon-loads of pitch, turpentine, and other inflammable materials have been despatched from Taganrog to Stavropol. The following details upon the affair of Dargo, taken from the Cologne Gazette, and said to have been received from a Russian officer present during the expedition, will be found very different from the accounts which the Russian Government caused to be published:—"News from Tiflis up to the 3d of August acquaint us that General Woronzow has been compelled to abandon his expedition against the mountaineers, and retreat in great haste upon the Russian territory. After the General-in-Chief had sent to Andy a transport of provisions and considerable reinforcements of troops, the army on the 17th of July moved against Dargo, where it was erroneously supposed Shamil resided, for Shamil has no fixed residence, but moves about as circumstances may require, his family residing further in the interior of the mountains. For some days the mountaineers had remained quiet, but their inaction was but apparent, for they were occupied making great preparations of defence. The Russians met with a reception which they little expected. They could not advance a step without fighting such sanguinary battles that the boldest recoiled. Bullets rained down from all quarters, and entire ranks were laid low. The prospect of a rich booty, and the fact that fresh troops were at hand to support them in case of need, alone supported the courage of the soldiers in that moment of danger and trial. After great losses, they at length reached the village of Dargo, but instead of the anticipated treasure they found a mass of ruins, and nothing to satisfy the cupidity of the soldiers. Meanwhile the Circassians had taken possession of a height behind the camp, whilst other detachments continued the combat without interruption. The General-in-Chief ordered the soldiers to take possession of the height, but he very soon found that it was impossible. The army then made a side movement, and the ground being very uneven, the troops advanced slowly, fighting as they moved forward. In the meantime a corps of 10,000 men, which the General had sent to meet a transport of provisions, was attacked by the enemy. The Russians lost 1000 men, some say 2000, and 30 officers; among whom were several Generals, and a part of the convoy. This news was not of a nature to raise the spirits of the troops. This circumstance, added to the difficulty of procuring provisions and the intelligence that Shamil was awaiting considerable reinforcements, determined the General to beat a retreat. This retreat was made with a rapidity resembling a flight. The rear-guard suffered severely. Many soldiers, overcome by fatigue, were left upon the road. Upon arriving at the nearest Russian fortress the troops were in such a deplorable condition that they might have been taken for the wreck of a defeated rather than a conquering army. The loss of the Russians is stated at from 6000 to 10,000 men, whilst that of the mountaineers, even according to the statements of the Russians themselves, could not be more than 600 or 1000 men. The expedition, counting the reinforcements which the General received, was about 45,000 strong."—The city of Saratoff, on the Volga, was recently the scene of a spectacle which could scarcely be equalled by the cities of Western Europe. 130 Jews, recently enrolled in the army, having expressed a desire to embrace the Greek Catholic faith, they were, the 4th June (O. S.), received into the bosom of the church. The banks of the Volga were crowded with people of all nations and religions—Catholics, Lutherans, Mohammedans, and Pagans—who viewed this novel spectacle in amazement.

WEST INDIES.—By the Trent mail steamer we have accounts from Jamaica to the 8th ult., and from the other islands to corresponding dates. The Jamaica railway was fully expected to be opened on the 1st October. Not one of the English labourers had died, which was attributed to their abstaining entirely from drinking rum. The weather at Jamaica had been exceedingly dry and warm generally throughout the island, and the heat at Kingston very severe. The accounts from the agricultural districts continue satisfactory with regard to the soil, but great complaints are made of the total cessation of labour, in consequence of the labouring population devoting part of their three weeks' holidays to the anniversary of freedom—a serious affair to those parishes in which the present year's crop had been retarded by the dampness of the earlier portion of the sugar crop. The Trinidad Gazette publishes a long article in favour of a railroad in its locality, and speaks of the eastern road to Bande l'Est, about 50 miles, having 40 miles on a water level, and to Naparima a dead level the whole way. The papers generally are advocating railways in the islands, and calling for capital to construct them. At Havannah all was quiet, and but few cases of yellow fever. The Romney slave-depôt, which was to have been moved from Havannah, had her orders countermanded, in consequence of the local government refusing to grant the Commissioners of the Slave Court an establishment on shore, with the sole management vested in the Commissioners. It was understood that the matter was referred to the Home Governments, and the Romney was to be detained until their decision was known. At Nassau a number of cases of small-pox had made their appearance, but it was chiefly confined to the coloured population. When the Trent left it had nearly disappeared: about 25 deaths had taken place out of about 200 cases. At Kingston, Jamaica, fever was very prevalent, as well as at Port Royal. At Demerara and Trinidad great hopes were entertained of a good crop, which was generally the case throughout the West Indies.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The New Asylum Districts.—The recent order of the Poor-law Commissioners has thrown the metropolitan parishes into a state of high excitement. The special meeting of the Vestry of Marylebone alluded to in our last as having been convened by the Board of Guardians took place on Saturday, Mr. Daniel, the churchwarden, in the chair. Several leading members of the vestry took part in the discussion, and it was resolved unanimously that, "having observed the course pursued by the Board of Directors and Guardians with reference to the monstrous proposition of joining this parish with seven other large parishes for the purposes of providing a district asylum, and believing this union to be totally uncalled for in fact, unconstitutional in principle, and detrimental to the best interests of the ratepayers, as contrary to and subversive of the local acts which guarantee the unity and self-government of this parish; the Vestry approve the conduct of the Directors and Guardians, and determine to support them by all legitimate means in resisting the present attempt to destroy the rights and privileges of the inhabitants of St. Marylebone." It was also resolved, that a deputation wait upon the Poor-law Commissioners to point out the inutility of the present order as respects this parish, and that the Rector, Churchwardens, and District Rectors be requested to form part thereof, with Lord Montford, Rev. E. Scobell, and other members of the vestry.—In St. Pancras the excitement is scarcely less, throughout the parish, especially as it has come to the knowledge of the rate-payers that the directors of the poor had agreed, on the condition of having five representatives in the Union Board, to surrender the right of the rate-payers to local self-government, which, in common with the parish of Marylebone, they have so long maintained. A special meeting of the vestry took place on Monday, for the purpose of considering the matter, and to call upon the directors of the poor not only to withhold the appointment of persons to represent the rate-payers in the Asylum Board, but to give the order of the commissioners every resistance possible. The meeting was a very strong one, criminations and recriminations passing between the rate-payers and directors. After considerable discussion, which ended in nothing, a communication was read from the Poor Law Commissioners, in answer to an application from the directors, at their previous meeting, to be allowed to send five instead of three members to the Union Board, stating that the commissioners had the subject under consideration. Upon this it was urged that there was sufficient ground for the Board to withhold proceeding to appoint the three members, and it was moved that such proceeding be suspended until the decision of the commissioners be received. This having been seconded, was strenuously resisted, and, on a show of hands, was negatived by a large majority. The nomination of the managers of the asylum then took place, and three persons having been elected, the proceedings terminated; but it is understood that a general meeting of the entire parish will be immediately called on the subject. In addition to the above, the Poor-law Commissioners have issued an order to the guardians of the Greenwich Union to elect guardians for a new asylum, to be called the South Eastern Metropolitan District, and to embrace the parishes and unions of Greenwich, Lewisham, St. Olave's (Southwark), St. Giles's (Camberwell), St. Mary Magdalene (Bermondsey), and St. Mary (Rotherhithe). The guardians met on Thursday to consider this order, and by a majority of 9 to 3, agreed to the following resolution:—"That this board having been at great expense in providing a refuge for the houseless poor, and finding the same answers the purpose intended by the Legislature, do not consider it necessary that we should be annexed to any other parish or union, whereby great and unnecessary expense would be grievously entailed upon this union." The board of commissioners who constitute the local authorities of Woolwich also met on Tuesday, to consider this measure, which is loudly complained of in consequence of the expence it will entail upon the parish, and its entire removal of the vagrant poor from local superintendence. It was resolved, after a lengthened discussion, that a public meeting of the inhabitants be called to memorialise the commissioners against the measure.

The Late Duke of Sussex.—A crowded meeting of the members of the grand lodge of Freemasons was held last week at the Freemasons' Tavern, at which the chairman, Rowland Alston, Esq., Provincial Grand Master for the county of Essex, presented, by direction of the Duchess of Inverness, to the Freemasons of England, the magnificent candelabra which had been, about eight years since, presented by that body to the Duke of Sussex.

Marriage of Sir Thomas Wilde to Mdlle. D'Este.—Sir Thomas Wilde was married about three weeks since to Mdlle. D'Este. The event was announced in the simplest form in the papers of the 30th, and copied by this paper last week. This union, which appears to have been for a long time in contemplation, has been frequently alluded to in the public papers, and as frequently contradicted "by authority." The church in which the marriage was celebrated was that of St. Alphage, London-wall. The only persons present, besides the bride and bridegroom, were the Right Hon. Dr. Lushington (who gave away the bride), the Rev. Mr. Hutchins (who performed the ceremony), and the parish clerk. The bride arrived quite privately from Tunbridge Wells, and was elegantly attired, and wore a profusion of diamonds. The ceremony was performed by special license. The bride has just entered her 50th year. Sir Thomas Wilde, who is a widower of about 60 years of age, is reputed to be extremely wealthy. Lady Wilde has hitherto derived her income from allowances made by the Crown. During the past year Her Majesty granted to her an annual pension of 500*l.* charged upon the Civil List. It may be observed that in the tabular form of the certificate of marriage, wherein the name of the father of the bride is required to be inserted, "the Duke of Sussex" is simply placed opposite to his daughter's name, without any honorary addition (such as "His Royal Highness") declaring him to have been of the blood royal.

Casting of the Wellington Statue.—On Saturday afternoon a number of scientific and literary gentlemen, together with several ladies, witnessed the casting of 17 tons of metal at the studio of Mr. Wyatt, Dudley-grove, Paddington. The bronze casting was for the fore-part of the colossal horse intended for the Wellington statue at the West End. The hinder part has already been cast, and is now in progress of being finished. The immense body of metal was occasionally seen through the iron door of a huge furnace, intensely brilliant and perfectly fluid. A deep "run" led from the door of the furnace, and conveyed the liquid metal to a large pit wherein the model was deposited. At a given signal an aperture in the front of the furnace was opened, and the metal, in a complete state of fusion, glided forth like a stream of lava, hissing and spitting as it went along to the model pit. A thick whitish smoke entirely filled the studio to the roof, while the red burning river of metal continued to send forth an almost insupportable heat. In about half an hour the whole 17 tons had run into the pit in a continuous even stream, giving indication that all was right below. It will take five weeks before the mass can be sufficiently fixed and cool.

The Booksellers' Provident Retreat.—The first stone of a building about to be raised as a home and refuge for those members of the trade of booksellers and publishers who may become reduced in circumstances by the vicissitudes of business, and for their widows and assistants, was laid a few days since with the usual ceremonies on the site at Abbot's Langley, Herts, close to the line of the Birmingham railway, by the Earl of Clarendon, in the presence of several hundred ladies and gentlemen, who were accommodated with seats beneath a temporary building run up for the occasion. After the stone had been lowered, the company adjourned to a déjeuner provided by Mr. Staples, of the Albion Tavern, beneath a large marquee. Here Lord Clarendon acted as chairman, supported by the Hon. B. Ryder, M.P., Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Longman, Alderman Kelly, and many of the most eminent members of the book trade. The building is to be of red brick, with stone copings and borders in the Tudor style, and it will be a very appropriate and commodious building. The munificent benevolence of Mr. Dickinson has provided the site for the houses and gardens, and the funds, with the amount of contributions added at this ceremony, are sufficient for its completion. There are funds to the amount of 15,000*l.* for the support of the intended inmates, the property of the Booksellers' Provident Institution, of which the "Retreat" is a branch. These funds, considering the short time since the formation of the parent institution, speak well for the exertions of the trade.

The Calcutta Cathedral Organ.—Public trials of the tone and power of this magnificent instrument destined for the new Cathedral of St. Paul's, now erecting at Calcutta, took place last week, at Guildhall, before the Lord Mayor, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Calcutta, and a very numerous audience. Messrs. Gray and Davison never manufactured a nobler instrument, and the result of the trials was most satisfactory to the numerous connoisseurs present. During the performance, Mr. Adams, in an air by Handel, introduced a newly-invented stop of the most delicate quality of tone, called the "Keraulophon," with great effect. The proceeds of these performances are to be applied to the building fund, as it is estimated that from four to five thousand pounds may yet be required.

Westminster Bridge.—From 1810 to1838 this bridge cost in repairs, 83,097*l.* 6*s.* 9¼*d.* From 1838 to 1844 the amount was 82,661*l.*, and a further sum of 52,879*l.* was required for further works. The property belonging to the bridge only realises 7464*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* a year.

St. George's in the East.—After a struggle of two years with the churchwardens and the parishioners, the Rev. Bryan King, the rector of this parish, on Sunday announced publicly in the parish church that, in compliance with directions from the bishop of London, the use of the surplice and the reading of the bidding-prayer should be discontinued.

Baths and Washhouses.—It is stated by the Builder that there will be in the St. Pancras establishment about 30 single baths, fitted up in separate rooms, with all necessary conveniences, six vapour baths, and two plunging baths of large dimensions. The washing department will be quite distinct from the baths, and suitable accommodation is to be provided. The prices will be 1*d.* for a private cold bath containing 60 gallons of water; and 2*d.* for a warm bath containing the same quantity. The establishment in Glasshouse-street, East Smithfield, for enabling the poor in that vicinity to use gratuitously an apparatus for bathing, and for washing and drying of clothes, is in full operation. The eagerness with which its benefits were availed of far surpassed anticipation, 987 persons having used it in the short space of 19 evenings.

Balloon Ascents.—Mr. Green's ascents of late have been so numerous, they almost require a weekly paragraph. Last week he made an ascent in the Nassau balloon from Cremorne gardens, which were open on this occasion for his benefit, in consequence of the loss he had sustained by the destruction of the Albion balloon. Mr. Green was accompanied by Colonel Charles, Mr. Granville Mansell, Mr. Kirkham, Dr. Henry, Mr. Moss, of Leadenhall-street; Mr. Butler, of Farringdon-street, Mr. W. Green, and two other gentlemen. The balloon, on being released, rose in a very beautiful style, and upon reaching an altitude of about 400 feet, it was carried in a south-west direction. About ½ past 8 information was brought, by means of some express pigeons which were taken up with them, that the balloon alighted in safety in the neighbourhood of Epsom. On Monday evening, Mr. Green made another ascent in his Nassau balloon from Cremorne House, and it being announced that he would be accompanied by a lady and a leopard, a very large company were assembled, nearly 12,000 persons being present. At half-past six, a female, with a young male leopard, and the keeper made their appearance on the grounds. A car had been prepared for the occasion, and attached beneath the regular one; the three having entered it, Mr. Green placed himself in the upper car, when they proceeded to make several ascents to the height of the trees, at the conclusion of which the aeronaut made preparations for his final ascent with Mrs. Green, Mrs. C. Green, Mr. Salter, Mr. Hardwicke the magistrate, Mr. Littlejohn, &c., in all eleven persons. The balloon having been released took a S.W. direction, in which course it proceeded some time, when entering another current of air, it returned towards the gardens, over which it hovered for some time, and finally descended at Shepherd's Bush about ½ past eight. In consequence of the various currents into which the balloon entered, this was one of the most extraordinary ascents made for many years.

The Murder of Eliza Grimwood.—At Southwark police-office on Saturday, George Hill, a private of the 67th regiment, was brought up for examination relative to the confession which it will be recollected he had made, that he was the murderer of Eliza Grimwood. The prisoner had made the confession in Ireland, and was at once sent to London for further examination. After the police inspector had stated the facts as they were given in our Paper of he 30th ult., the magistrate asked the prisoner if he still adhered to the truth of that which he had not only verbally asserted, but had also transmitted to paper in his own handwriting? Prisoner—That confession was made when I was under the influence of liquor, being heartily sick and tired of the army, thinking it was the only and best mode to obtain my dismissal. I did not look to the future consequences of such a step, and must therefore pay the penalty of it. The magistrate asked if he meant now to assert that there was no truth in the statement made by the inspector? Prisoner: Everything the inspector has stated is correct; that of the documents being read in my presence in Dublin, and of my determination not to retract the statement I had previously made, but I am now willing to tell the whole truth. I retract the words I used as to my being a murderer. I was aware that a murder had been committed upon a young woman between seven and eight years ago in the Waterloo-road, and knowing that the murderer was never discovered, in the state in which my mind was at the time, from the tyranny and oppression exercised towards me in the regiment, I would have said anything to have gained my liberty and got away, and so I made a self-accusation of murder to accomplish my object. My abhorrence of the life of a soldier is so great that I have committed offences since I have been in the regiment with the view of being transported, my hatred to it was so unbounded; and not long since I suffered six months' imprisonment for an act which I committed in the expectation of getting out of the army. The Inspector said that he had ascertained the prisoner was tried in Dublin for stealing a watch, and convicted of the offence, and sentenced to six month's imprisonment. That the prisoner bore a very indifferent character in the regiment, although he was considered a young man of superior attainments, and spoke the French and Italian languages fluently, and that Colonel Bunbury, the commanding officer, had given him every encouragement, and promoted him to the rank of corporal before he had been long in the regiment, but that owing to his misconduct he was again reduced to the ranks. After some further evidence the magistrate remanded him for further inquiry.

Hampton Court Palace.—At the Staines Petty Sessions on Tuesday, the magistrates granted distress warrants upon 21 rates for the poor of the parish of Hampton, due by the residents of Hampton Court Palace. The object of this measure is to decide the question whether the occupants of a royal palace are exempt from rates or not.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Sept. 6:—West Districts, 118; Northern, 127; Central, 120; Eastern, 198; Southern, 199; Total, 762; males, 371; females, 391. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1287; males, 642, females, 645.

Provincial.

Andover.—The Poor Law Inquiry, after continuing for 13 days, has been abruptly stopped, and the Assistant Commissioner has left for London, just as the evidence for the prosecution had closed, and the Master of the Union was prepared to open his defence. The Commissioners have addressed a very vague letter to the prosecutor, in which they express their readiness to "cause an indictment to be preferred against the master in respect of any one case of an assault with an improper intention, or for any one act of embezzlement!" It has, however, been determined that Mr. Westlake shall not, in person, prosecute the master, such a step being considered onerous and unjust; the probability, therefore, is that an early meeting of the rate-payers will be held to take into consideration the best mode of proceeding under the circumstances. In the meantime, the master, Mr. M'Dougal, still continues in his office, and the bone-crushing and out-door labour business go on as usual.

Ely.—Among the many improvements in progress in the cathedral of Ely (says a Bury paper) a magnificent painted window has just been presented to it by the Rev. E. B. Sparke, one of the canons of the church. It occupies the S.E. angle of the lantern, and is of noble dimensions, being 40 feet in height; it is designed to commemorate the foundress of the church, St. Etheldreda, by representations of her marriage and consecration as abbess, whilst the four great lights of the window contain, under gorgeous canopies, the figures of Etheldreda, as Queen; her father, Anna, King of the East Angles: her first husband, Tonbert, King of the Giroii; and her second husband, Egfrid, King of Northumberland. In the second row she appears as Lady Abbess of Ely, with Wilfrid, Archbishop of York, by whom she was consecrated, and her successors in the government of the monastery, Jenborga and Ermenilda. The artist, Mr. Wailes, of Newcastle, has completed this beautiful work in little more than three months, at a cost of 600*l.* The same liberal benefactor proposes to present another painted window, by the same artist, to the south transept; and the church is likewise indebted to him for originating, by a noble gift, the restoration of the S.W. transept, which has added so greatly to the beauty of the cathedral. The design for the eight great windows at the east end of the choir, for filling which with painted glass the late Bishop Sparke left 1500*l.*, is nearly completed. Mr. A. B. Hope has undertaken to restore one of the pinnacles of the east end of the church, and Lady Mildred Hope to restore the beautiful cross in the eastern gable, and the crocketting which leads up to it; and Mr. H. R. Evans, who has been so long connected with the chapter as steward of the manors, &c., has undertaken to defray the expenses of opening and restoring the great lantern of the western tower, which is now concealed by a plaster vault to the floor of the bell chamber, and of thus bringing into view the most beautiful system of Norman arcading which is to be found in any cathedral in this kingdom.

Leamington.—On the 4th July a parcel containing one hundred 10*l.* local notes, was stolen at the Leamington and Warwick banking-house, in Leamington, and it was afterwards ascertained that Mr. W. H. Blaney, one of the clerks of the establishment, had appropriated the stolen property. A warrant was granted by the Leamington magistrates to apprehend the accused, and indorsed by the Lord Mayor, and Daniel Forrester was employed by the solicitors to the Committee of Bankers for Protection against Forgeries, to trace the delinquent and take him into custody. He was traced with extraordinary skill from place to place by Daniel Forrester, who apprehended him at Calais; but whether the French authorities who now have him in custody intend to give him up to be removed for trial to this country has not been ascertained. Elisha Blaney, the brother of the prisoner, is in custody at Leamington on suspicion of having aided in the commission of the robbery.

Leicester.—At a meeting of the sharebrokers of this town, on Friday, it was resolved that a Stock Exchange should be established. It was also determined that each member give security to the amount of 2000*l.*, and that all transactions be for money on delivery of scrip or transfer. The number of sharebrokers' offices here has recently increased from four to ten, in consequence of the increase of railway business.

Liverpool.—The local papers give the most flattering account of the success of the baths in Liverpool, under the patronage of the corporation. The washing department does not appear to have answered so well. The charges for the baths are 1*d.*, 2*d.*, 3*d.*, 4*d.*, 6*d.*, and 1*s.*, according to the times and convenience. They are both cold and hot. The receipts, first year, in the bathing department, were 118*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.*; second year, 229*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*; third year, 279*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*; and for three months this year, from May to August, 118*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, being a very large increase. In Bolton the different societies are coming out to support the men's bath about to be erected. A lodge of Independent Oddfellows has agreed to subscribe 10*l.*, and a lodge of Rechabites 10*l.* —The Manchester Guardian has the following paragraph, headed "'Conference of Evangelical Ministers.' —A proposal having been made that a great meeting of evangelical Christians, of different churches and countries, should be held in London, for the purpose of 'associating and concentrating the strength of an enlightened Protestantism against the encroachment of Popery and Puseyism, and to promote the interests of a scriptural Christianity,' it has been thought desirable that a preliminary meeting of the various denominations in Great Britain and Ireland should be held; and it has accordingly been decided that this preliminary conference shall take place at Liverpool on the 1st October. It is expected that 200 ministers will be present, and that the proceedings will occupy three days."

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Sir Henry De La Beche and Dr. Lyon Playfair have been appointed by Government to inquire into the causes of the late explosion at Jarrow colliery. They have arrived at Jarrow, made a preliminary examination of the mine, and commenced the examination of such witnesses as may be able to furnish information on the subject.

Tavistock.—Mr. Searle, woollen-manufacturer of Tavistock, has been committed to the county gaol on the charge of forgery. Some time since he failed in business for about 3000*l.*, and offered a composition of 10*s.* in the pound. The offer was declined, and the management of his affairs passed into other hands. It is stated that forged bills for 25*l.*, 123*l.*, and 200*l.*, have been discovered. A bill for the latter amount, drawn by Mr. Searle, and apparently accepted by Messrs. Foster and Fison, Bradford, Yorkshire, was disowned by that firm, and returned to the bank of Messrs. Gill and Rundle, of Tavistock, who, last week, had Mr. Searle examined before the magistrate, when he was committed for trial. Mr. Searle has a wife and two children. He has carried on the business of woollen-manufacturer for some years in Tavistock, and is a member of the religious sect denominated the Plymouth Brethren.

Winchester.—The opening meeting of the British Archæological Association took place on Tuesday morning at St. John's room, it having been found necessary from the large numbers who had entered their names at the reception-room, to remove it from the County Courts, where it was originally advertised to take place. At 12 o'clock the President, the Marquis of Northampton, took the chair; and among the large assembly of the nobility, clergy, and gentry present, were the following:—Lord Ashburton, the Speaker of the House of Commons, Mr. Justice Erle, Count Mortara, Sir J. Boileau, Sir S. R. Glynne, M.P.; Sir W. Heathcote, M.P.; Sir R. G. Simeon; Sir R. Westmacott; the Deans of Ely, Hereford, Westminster, and Winchester; the Master of Trinity College, Cambridge; the Master of University College; the Wardens of New and Winchester Colleges, the Principal of St. Mary's College, General Frederick, Colonels Vandeleur and Colville, Mr. A. B. Hope, M.P.; Mr. East, M.P.; Mr. Shirley, M.P.; and a large number of clergymen and members of the Society of Antiquaries. The Marquis of Northampton having opened the business of the meeting in an appropriate speech, the Dean of Westminster, Dr. Wilberforce, read a paper in defence of Archæology, which elicited the most enthusiastic applause from the members present. The Dean said that

The antiquary was looked upon by some as at best a harmless creature, and to a certain extent the reproach and ridicule thrown upon him may have been deserved. How this had arisen they might inquire hereafter, but at present they would turn to other matters. They would look to the noble fellowship of bygone ages, which had made them what they now were, a link in the golden chain from the beginning to the end. Time had been likened to an old beggar putting good deeds into his wallet. They would look with earnestness and love into the wallet to see what those good deeds really were, and how brought about. This, then, was their purpose, to reproduce old times, watch with care over them, as a witness of that which was and is not: not considering the dust as precious as the writing it bore, but setting upon it a true value; with a scrutinizing, but no irreverent eye, to open the barrow, the monument, and ancient grave, to linger over their words and deeds, of the thoughts they were thinking, and help us to reconstruct the busy active past—thus linking past and present. The important results of the past in their own land, the records of their own people supported the patriotism of the nation, and it made them jealous of the character brought down to them. This it was that made the citizens of young America come to the Herald's College to trace their earlier parentage. Nor were these feelings limited to the high, the few nobility. They alike were shared by the multitude and the peasant. Every Briton looked on his birth as his inheritance—its spell was on him, it stirred the spirit within him: the past was present with him as by instinct. The history of the past exhorts all to venture on like noble deeds. Marathon, Thermopylæ, Agincourt, Trafalgar, the bowman of Henry V., and Nelson's sailor, alike made example, and said, "Thou art the child of brave men, who never feared, never yielded;" who would say, "Kill me, but I never will be a slave." Come what danger there will, he was prepared to meet it. But there were also peaceful bonds—one language, one common history, one birthplace, were the sinews that bound the past to the present. There were the seed and the bud, the virtues and the vices. We must know our father lives ere we can live; we must take up the thread and not allow it to slip, or we shall be like children playing with diamonds, or the blank Chinese wandering over the machinery of his fathers. It is the want of this knowledge that make those innovators who would be improvers, destroyers who would be restorers. To improve we must at least be on the shoulders of our forefathers, viewing from the height they have raised for us. Without the past there is no future. We see this even in infancy: to its unformed age all is present. It has no future till it has made a past, and it is on the mouldering monuments of antiquity making our past that we must build our future. There are some who make these precious for themselves such a poor and contracted view must naturally provoke contempt. Against this error we must take care, and valuing not the sere cloth and wrapping of an ancient mummy for itself, but that we may find out all that lays beneath them. The disease is in the abuse, not in the use. The man who is a trifler in antiquity would be a trifler still did his mind take any other turn. Servile he must have been whether he gathered rusted coins, or being a bookworm, became a mere pedant. After alluding to such as those who would have put a stop to the improved beauty of language, the better knowledge of physic, the policy that prevented improvement, and brought on the crisis of a revolution, he spoke of the religious faith of past ages, the external shape of the body spiritual, having at work within it the mighty energy of truth, although corrupted by superstition. There are those who, while ages have rolled away, would cling to their forms, but the spirit having left them we cannot go back to them; we maintain there is a life in the past and in the present which have linked them to each other. These false claimants deny faith in the present life—they point to the liberality of former times, and will not allow we have the same quickening spirit within us now. They would make us unreal: they would dress the old man in the clothes of his childhood, thinking with such would come back the joyous days of youth. How unlike the spirit of one of those revered ancestors, who, if he could rise up among us, would feel compassion for such a one, who could degrade the man to the mere outside shell. After this spirit, strong in the true strength of faith, sure that in traces of the olden times we perceive a nobleness we may emulate, seeing a death and a life casting dice for us, not fearing the death, but caring for the life and truth; saying to death, we eschew thee for ourselves and for our children; to life, we will strive for thee that thou may be life to us as to our fathers. We see in the arrangement of churches much to love and study in their minutest details; but while we notice the hagioscope, we cannot forget the ill view afforded to the spectator; and admiring the intersecting aisle, its external magnificence, and the beauty of the lengthened chancel, we cannot forget that it shut in the clergy and shut out the laity. All this we may love to trace to purify and elevate our own religion from the wild mixture of true faith and superstition, and not to produce the mere copy of an outward form. We may separate the noble from the base, calling into activity our best feelings, but not putting in peril our truth. Forgetting not the life that is in us, pass on to what is beyond. Looking to ancient monuments and matters of history, yielding ourselves to the power within us, let us only use them as incentives to action; let us view them not as worn-out customs, but that we may fashion for ourselves the outward circumstances we need. The Dean sat down amidst general cheering at the conclusion of his splendid essay, of which the above is but a brief and imperfect outline.

The Dean of Winchester moved a vote of thanks to the Dean of Westminster for his very elegant and excellent discourse. Professor Whewell, the Master of Trinity College, seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously, after Dr. Williams, Warden of New College, had also spoken in favour of it. Lord Ashburton moved a vote of thanks to Lord Northampton, for having hastened, while on his travels abroad, at great personal inconvenience, to meet them, and to add the weight of his dignity, as President of the Royal Society, to the proceedings of the present Association. Dr. Plumptre, the Master of University College, Oxford, seconded the motion. Lord Northampton returned thanks, and said he would have come with pleasure from the most distant parts to hear the discourse of the Dean of Westminster. The meeting then separated, some to visit the Museum, and some the College, Wolverley Palace, and St. Cross. The evening was occupied by the reading of an account of Romsey Abbey Church, and other papers.—Wednesday was devoted principally to the Cathedral; its history and architecture being explained by Professor Willis, of Cambridge. In the evening the Dean entertained the members of the Association and other visitors at the deanery, the museum of antiquities and objects of art formed in the gallery being thrown open for inspection. Contributions to the museum from various persons in different parts of the kingdom having been received, the collection was a most valuable and interesting one. On Thursday two sections met at the same time, on either side of the County-hall, which, being fitted up for courts of assize, was admirably suited for the purpose. The historical section was under the presidency of Mr. Hallam. The afternoon was devoted to an excursion to Romsey, the beautiful abbey church of which is now undergoing restoration. In the evening a grand public dinner took place at the spacious assembly-rooms connected with St. John's Hospital. The noble president took the chair, supported by the principal nobility, clergy, and gentry of the town and neighbourhood, besides the members of the association and their friends. Yesterday (Friday) morning there was an excursion to Portchester Castle, the liberal proprietor (Mr. Thistlethwayte) doing all that lay in his power to forward the views of the Association. Other excursions, to Southampton, Netley-abbey, and other neighbouring objects, were arranged for the members who preferred those localities. In the evening a meeting took place at the St. John's Rooms, and communications on the collegiate and other structures erected by William of Wykeham, with remarks on his architectural genius, by Mr. Cockerell, R.A., and the Rev. W. Grey, with other subjects of local or general interest, were brought forward.

Windsor.—The Times of Thursday states that it is Her Majesty's intention to abolish the office of State Housekeeper at Windsor Castle by granting compensation to the lady who at present holds the office, and thereby getting rid of the unpopular tax upon the public in the shape of housekeeper's fees for showing the state apartments at Windsor, which will in future be placed under the custody of the Lord Chamberlain. The Times adds—"We feel truly grateful for this concession to public opinion, and sincerely hope that this excellent example will be followed in all public places where fees have been hitherto exacted."

Railways.

It is understood that the committee of the Stock Exchange intends to take into consideration the system of trafficking in railway promises for the "coming out," and of adopting resolutions with a view of checking, as far as practicable, the continuance of that practice. The Times observes, in reference to this announcement, that "no sooner is a prospectus launched with some taking names, and a plan showing a direct-looking route through a populous country, than business begins, and hundreds—thousands—of shares are bought and sold before a single meeting has been held of a provisional committee, or a single letter of allotment has been delivered to applicants. This is gambling, in the plainest and broadest sense of the term, and no exertion should be spared to put it down as speedily as possible. The committee cannot prevent parties out of doors from continuing to carry on this ideal and pernicious mode of operation on railway promises, nor can it, perhaps, effectually stop it, even within the threshold of their own sanctum, but as regards the latter, the committee can, at least, resolve to take no cognizance of any bargains done between members of the Stock Exchange in railway business for promises of shares, before the scrip is delivered in possession of the parties, and before the letters of allotment are issued, and the deposits paid. The committee can refuse to interfere in the arrangement of disputes respecting all such transactions, and a resolution to that effect would diminish, although it might not eradicate the evil."—Amidst the many projects under the head of "railways," one is now in course of formation for the establishment of a club-house, where gentlemen of all ranks connected with railway projects may daily meet for the interchange of information. A mansion for the purpose has been taken at the west-end.—Several companies have held their half-yearly meetings during the week:—The Manchester and Leeds has announced a dividend of 2*l.* 18*s.* on the 100*l.* shares, of 1*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* on the 50*l.* shares, and of 2*s.* per share on quarter-shares, all subject to the income-tax. This leaves a reserved fund of 36,423*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*, including the balance of the depreciation fund. Although a reduction in fares has occurred, an increase in revenue derived from traffic of 23,892*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.* is noticed, compared with the same period last year. The net profit of the year's business has been 204,851*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.* The balance of the half-year's account applicable to a dividend was 67,901*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.* Power was given to the directors at this meeting to raise further capital, divided into 103,565 shares of 20*l.* each.—The Manchester and Birmingham company have resolved to declare a dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. free of income-tax. The increase of traffic for the last half-year shows an income of 13,606*l.* 12*s.* 7*d.* over the corresponding period of last year. The surplus remaining for division was 30,518*l.* The important question of amalgamation with the London and Birmingham, as recommended by the directors, led to a long and angry discussion, which ended in the adoption of a resolution for no amalgamation; and some unexpected changes in the board of directors immediately followed. After some further discussion as to whether the company was totally to refuse to amalgamate with the London and Birmingham, Mr. David Salomons moved "that the Board of Directors as at present constituted be instructed to renew their negotiations on the part of this Company with the London and Birmingham Company, on terms that are likely to be acceptable to the proprietary, and to take the opportunity of calling a special meeting at an early day to report the result." The motion passed amidst loud cheers.—The Croydon company on Tuesday declared a dividend of 7*s.* per share, and approved of the course hitherto adopted by the directors in reference to railways projected or contemplated for the accommodation of the county of Kent. At the termination of the meeting a special train was in readiness to convey the shareholders on an experimental trip over the atmospheric line. There were present about 70 gentlemen. The experiments were amply sufficient to confirm the power and practicability of the system. The vacuum point, as indicated by the barometer, obtained on this occasion, was 19½; but ultimately it fell to 7½, owing to excessive leakage and inefficient pumping. The total weight of the train with four carriages, including passengers, was about 30 tons, and the distance from Croydon to the Dartmouth Arms, 5½ miles in length without stoppages, was accomplished in about nine minutes and a half, being at the rate of between 45 and 50 miles an hour. The only material diminution of speed was in ascending the viaduct to the of one in fifty. Mr. Lee's new break having, it is understood, twenty-seven times the retarding power of any other, and approved of by General Pasley, Mr. Cubitt, and other engineers, was brought into play, and apparently with success. It acts entirely on the axle-box, and in unison with the wheel, the blocks being shod with copper, which bite the rail and form a wedge between it and the wheel.—Meetings have been held in the country in support of several of the new leading projects. In Cornwall a meeting has taken place, and encouragement been given to a direct and central line of railway from Falmouth and Penzance to London.—Another meeting has been held at Southampton in favour of the Oxford and Southampton Railway, a new project before the public.—The North Devon and South Devon Companies work together, and one line appears likely to be served materially by the other. They also support the Launceston and Tavistock line, recently started. The balance of moneys in hand of the South Devon Company is 37,619*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*—The Whitehaven Junction have, it is stated, made satisfactory arrangements with the owners of land and property required for the construction of the line, and the works will forthwith speedily progress. The cost of land and property already arranged for is 18,134*l.* 18*s.* 5*d.* Other schemes are in embryo for connecting Whitehaven with Hull and Scarborough, and opening a communication with the metropolis and the south of England.—The Blackburn, Darwen, and Bolton works are ready to be commenced forthwith. Between Blackburn and Chapeltown they will soon be in active operation. No opposition is anticipated in obtaining the branch to Bury, which will be a double line, and one with the Blackburn and Bolton.—The Newcastle and Berwick line will be commenced as speedily as possible. 13 miles, beginning at the North Shields line, are already let, and the remaining part to Berwick is shortly expected to be arranged for.—The Clydesdale Junction, it is stated, will be one of the most remunerative of Scotch railways. An alteration is to be made in the site already adopted for the goods depôt and passenger station.—The Brighton and Chichester is expected to be completed to Worthing next month, and to Chichester by the 1st January next. The extension of the line to Portsmouth will be shortly proceeded with.—New shares to the amount of 90,000*l.* are about to be issued from the North Wales Mineral Company, and such has been the speedy progress of the works that another call of 2*l.* per share will be made in the course of October next. An amalgamation with the Shrewsbury, Oswestry, and Chester Railway is spoken of.—The Scottish Central and the Caledonian are both of them proceeding with every success. The whole line of the Dundee and Perth Railway is expected to be completed by October next year, and an amalgamation of interests with the Dundee and Arbroath. The directors give support to the Scottish North-Western, as of great importance to their line. A call for 2*l.* 10*s.* per share has been made payable next month.—The Great Eastern and Western scheme has been considerably modified, and the new line proposes to stop at Rugby. The broad gauge is to be adopted, in accordance with the Oxford and Wolverhampton, which it is to meet at Worcester.—The Grand Junction have determined that after the 15th of this month, a compartment of a first-class carriage will be reserved for ladies travelling alone, and it is believed that other companies will soon follow the example.—In illustration of the mania for railways it may be stated, that within the last 10 days upwards of 20 new companies have appeared, requiring capital amounting to several millions. The following are amongst the number:—

The Westmoreland and Cumberland and Lakes District line, projected to supply the connection between Kendal and Cockermouth, Ulverstone, Keswick, and Penrith. It is intended to link the Furness railway with the Kendal and Windermere and the Lancaster and Carlisle at Kendal, and further connect these with the Cockermouth and Workington, and Whitehaven and Maryport lines; uniting again, as a second point of junction, the Lancaster and Carlisle at Penrith. The length of line to be 63 miles. Capital 800,000*l.*, in 40,000 shares of 20*l.* each.—The North of Norfolk line is intended to form a communication between Norwich, Aylsham, North Walsham, Cromer, and Holt, joining the Norfolk Railway at Norwich, and thus uniting these places with Yarmouth, Lowestoft, the metropolis, and also the northern counties. The line is to be made with the co-operation and support of the Norfolk Company, who will lease it at 4 per cent. on the outlay, and an equal division of surplus profits. Capital 175,000*l.*, in 6300 shares of 25*l.* each.—The Bristol and Dover Direct is projected for affording direct communication between Bristol and Dover, to effect which it is proposed to commence at Devizes, which by other projects is about to be placed in connexion with Bath and Bristol. It will then pass in a S.E. direction through or near Ludgeshall, Andover, Whitchurch, Basingstoke, Oldham, and Farnham, to Godalming, where it will form a junction with other lines, which will complete the communication to the Reigate station of the London and Brighton; or should the projected lines in that locality fail, the present project will be extended to Dorking and Reigate, where the Brighton is united with the Dover. Capital 800,000*l.*, in 2,000 shares of 25*l.* each.—The Dartmouth, Torbay, and Exeter is proposed to commence at Dartmouth and Brixham, pass through or near Paignton and Torquay; thence following the course of the Teign and Newton Abbot, Chudleigh, and Moretonhampstead, proceed direct to Exeter by the proposed line of the intended Cornwall and Devon Central, and by means of the Exeter, Yeovil, and Dorchester, the London, Salisbury, and Yeovil, and the London and South Western lines, open a communication from those districts to the metropolis. Capital 600,000*l.*, in 30,000 shares of 20*l.* each.—The Direct London and Dublin is projected to form a direct communication between the English and Irish capitals. The line will commence by a junction at Birmingham with the London and Birmingham, thence proceed, as nearly as possible, in a straight direction to Bangor, passing through, or close by, Dudley, Much Wenlock, Shrewsbury, Berwick, Llanurmon Pash, Llanderfel, Llangwyng

Penachno, Capel Curig, and Bangor, where it will unite with the railway already in progress across Anglesea to Holyhead. Mr. Brow's atmospheric principle is to be adopted. No financial details are yet given.—The London, Horncastle, Spilsby, and Wainfleet Haven is intended to form a direct communication between the grazing county of Lincolnshire and the large manufacturing districts of the Midland and Northern Counties, and to establish an immediate connection between the East Coast and South Wolds of Lincolnshire, and the various coal fields in Yorkshire, Derbyshire, and Staffordshire. The length of the line will be about 40 miles. Capital 500,000*l.*, in 20,000 shares of 25*l.* each.—The Larne, Belfast, and Ballymena is a line of 20 miles, to consist of two branches the one inland, direct to Ballymena, where it will form a junction with the Belfast and Ballymena, and Londonderry and Coleraine Junction; the other to Carrickfergus, where it will join the Carrickfergus branch of the Belfast and Ballymena. Capital 300,000*l.*, in 15,000 shares of 20*l.* each.—The Chepstow, Lower Dean, and Gloucester Junction is to connect the South Wales railway with various projects in connection with Gloucester, Cheltenham and Birmingham. Capital, 600,000*l.*, in 20*l.* shares.—The Trunk Line is another scheme for connecting the Birmingham, and Great Western, and South-Western. It is to run from Watford to Farnborough. Capital, 350,000*l.*, in 25*l.* shares.—The Great Manchester, Rugby, and Southampton, and Direct Manchester and London, is a scheme for a railway from Manchester, vid Macclesfield, Rugby, Didcot, and Andover, to Southampton. Capital, 2,000,000*l.*, in 20*l.* shares.—The South Union, or Manchester, Potteries, and London, is a line from the Trent Valley Railway at Rugeley to Macclesfield, and thence by the Manchester and Birmingham line to Manchester. Capital, 1,500,000*l.*, in 20*l.* shares.—The Waveney Valley and Great Yarmouth is another line now before the public, the object of which is explained by its title. Capital, 400,000*l.*, in 20*l.* shares.

In addition to the above schemes there is one for forming a communication from London to Dublin on the broad gauge principle; one for connecting the metropolis with Barnet and the northern railways; one for forming a line from the capital of the island of Guernsey to Port St. Sampson and Lancresse Bay; and several for the Continent and the Colonies.

Ireland.

Dublin.—The financial affairs of the Dublin Corporation have of late supplied a fertile topic of discussion. Mr. Reynolds, a member of the Repeal Association, having brought several weighty charges against the Finance Committee, the interest of which was purely local, a debate of thirteen days' duration was the result; after which the corporation agreed to the adoption of the financial report of the committee of the "whole house" by a majority of 27 to 9.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday in Conciliation Hall. Mr. STEELE took the chair, and congratulated the Association on the triumphant position of the Repeal cause, and expressed his conviction that if the principles of peace and perseverance were adopted and fully carried out, Ireland would ere long be restored to the rank of a nation. He perceived by the papers that the Prince de Joinville had been inspecting the breakwaters of Brighton and other places, all by way of amusement, of course, but the moral deducible from the fact was that the time was fast approaching when England would require the assistance of Irishmen. Mr. J. O'CONNELL read a long communication from his father, condemning the late attacks on the Corporation, and emphatically repeating his advice to the Repealers to "register." The letter concluded thus:—"I have the pleasure to acquaint the Association that the harvest, thank God! in this district is very abundant, and almost all perfectly safe; the poor man's harvest, in particular, is this year excellent—blessed be God! I can afford, therefore, to lose several days of my hunting—I never knew weather in which the scent so totally refuses to lie. Although rising at six in the morning, while the dew is yet heavily on the ground, I find the dogs quite unable to hunt; my excellent pack were for the first time totally defeated, and curiously enough it is only by remaining out till four in the afternoon that the dogs are able to develope their instincts, and to hunt as usual. I conclude with 'Register, register, register!'" Mr. J. O'CONNELL, after a few preliminary observations, said it had been stated that some of the Roman Catholic bishops who joined in the unanimous protest against the education scheme, as proposed by government, had changed their minds, and were now favourably disposed towards that measure. That statement had been promulgated by Mr Wyse. The conduct of that gentleman in relation to the Colleges Bill was highly reprehensible, and he felt convinced he had no grounds for stating that any of the bishops who were favourable to the scheme had changed their opinions. Dr. Power had certainly done his best to rank the religion of the people of Ireland, and if evil consequences did not follow, he was certainly not to blame. If there were any consolation more than another which proved the good effects which the Colleges Bill was likely to produce, it was to be found in the estimation of the public. It was thus that the individual who had ever exhibited the least shadow of patriotism was favourably noticed. For his part, he would never be silent on the subject. No matter what vituperation might be heaped upon him; he would endeavour to raise a cry of execration against these colleges, as he believed in his soul they would prove destructive to the morals, and ultimately to the independence of the Irish people. If he were asked whether he would prefer the continuance of the Union or the adoption of this infidel scheme, he would say away with these colleges, and let the Union remain. In conclusion, he adjured the people, in the name of that religion which they had so much at heart, to discountenance the nefarious measure, and to resist it by every means. And, further, to brand the men who took office under the bill as traitors. If they did not adopt that course, they would assist Peel in dividing, corrupting, and tyrannising over Ireland. Mr. Lucas observed that as Mr. O'Connell considered he would suggest that parents who sent their children to these colleges to be educated should be held up to public execration.

Captain Bradshaw read an address "to the people of the north of Ireland," and said that nothing in his mind could afford a nobler subject for gratulation to the Repealers than that afforded by the contrast between their conduct at the monster meetings, and that of the Orangemen at their gatherings. At the former, all was tranquillity and peace: the latter were characterised by lawlessness and violence and bloodshed.—The rent for the week was 17*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*

Belfast.—The Irish papers are filled with the proceedings of the Protestant Operative Association, and of the great entertainment which they gave on Thursday the 4th inst. in this town to Mr. Watson. The Earl of Roden presided, and was supported by Col. Verner, M.P., Mr. Cleland, Mr. Maxwell, Mr. Dolling, and other well known leaders of the Orange Society, including a long list of magistrates and deputy-lieutenants from the north of Ireland. After the preliminary business had been concluded, the chairman said he had been requested by the Earl of Enniskillen and the Rev. Holt Waring, to offer their apologies to the meeting for being unavoidably absent. Letters of apology were also read from Lord O'Neill, Colonel Blacker, Mr. Blackwood, of Saintfield, Alderman Nelson, Rev. A. J. Montgomery, Rev. Townley Blackwood, Major Rowan, Hillsborough; Colonel Bruen, Carlow; and a host of others. After the usual loyal toasts,

The CHAIRMAN said—I have already taken an opportunity of expressing the sincere pleasure given me in being afforded an opportunity of meeting the Protestant operatives of Belfast at the call of justice and gratitude to a Protestant fellow-subject, and I am sure that there are few things which could have given me greater pleasure than this opportunity of meeting my Protestant fellow countrymen in seeking the welfare of our common country. It has been my lot, during my long life, to have attended many public and important meetings of my countrymen, but I think I can undertake to say that at no time have I felt greater pain, mixed, however, with considerable satisfaction, than I feel on the occasion which has brought us together this evening. Ladies and gentlemen, I feel great pain that a Conservative Government, which you and I met on the same platform to support, and which, in our own several spheres we exerted ourselves to put into their present place, should have taken the course which they have taken, with respect to the object that has brought us together, in connection with our esteemed friend Mr Watson. Ladies and gentlemen, when I bear in mind the course that has been pursued by Her Majesty's Government in regard to my friend Mr. Watson, I cannot, I repeat, help feeling the sincerest pain, because I cannot but look upon their act as an attack in his person on the Protestants of Ireland, for he stood up for that principle which is near and dear to us all. After what I have said I hope that the sentiment I am about to propose will be heartily adopted by every individual present, and that we will let it be known that we and the whole Protestant public of Ireland sincerely sympathise with Mr. Watson in the course he has adopted on the present occasion. We are naturally led to ask, what was Mr. Watson's crime? What did he do to deserve dismissal from a situation which he had held for so many years with credit to himself and advantage to his country? We should be at a loss for an answer to these queries; but when we turn to the letter addressed by Mr. Lucas to my honoured friend, we learn that the reason given was, that he had placed himself in a situation in which he would be unable to restrain disorder, or to allay the irritation which the Government had unfortunately raised up in the present day. With these remarks I shall proceed to read the sentiment put into my hand—a sentiment which I am sure you all will receive with satisfaction. His lordship then read the following:—"The independent aristocracy of Ulster, and our high-spirited guest, James Watson, of Brookhill, Esq., the first victim of the assertion of Protestant freedom in these perilous times, at the shrine of expediency." As many as agree to that sentiment will signify their assent by standing up. [The company rose simultaneously, amid deafening and prolonged cheers.]—Mr. WATSON rose, and said:—My lord, my brother Protestant operatives, and my sister Protestant operatives (laughter and loud cheers). You could not have conferred upon me a higher or a greater favour than you have done on this occasion. I am aware that I am only a secondary object in your meeting this evening. I am aware that the Protestant cause is that which is nearest to your hearts. Your object in coming together is to show to Sir Robert Peel that he evidently misrepresented the feelings of the Protestants of the north of Ireland, when he asserted that those feelings were favourable to the Maynooth grant. (Cries of "No, never!") Your object is to show him and the Government that Protestant feeling in Ulster is awake and stirring—that the Protestants of Ireland are determined by all lawful means to look by their rights and privileges—to maintain their position—to hand down to their posterity those valuable privileges derived from their ancestors—purchased with their blood—cheap at any price. I say that they are determined to hand down to their posterity those benefits, unimpaired and scatheless. Allow me, brother operatives and Protestants here assembled, to congratulate you on having the uncompromising champion of Protestantism presiding over you on this occasion—a nobleman, revered, respected, and beloved by all. You have also present with you my brother Protestant Mr. Cleland. In addition you have Col. Verner. (Loud cheering for several minutes and rounds of the Kentish fires). Besides, you have Mr. Maxwell—and many valued and respected friends too numerous to mention. All these gentlemen are zealous and earnest supporters of the great, good, and righteous cause. I beg to tell you that the feeling to which I have alluded is not confined to the north of Ireland alone. I have received many addresses from different parts of the country—from Liverpool—from Dublin—from Cork—nay, I have even received marks of approbation from London, showing that the spirit which animates us is spreading far and wide. My lord and friends, you will excuse my emotion when I feel as I do, you must place yourself in the social situation to which you have raised your humble servant. Entertained by you—placed on the right hand of the host of such a company as this—my heartfelt thanks; and sincerely wishing that every attribute of you may attain [illegible] I beg to propose the health of the ladies of Protestant Ireland. Mr. Watson returned thanks for several minutes. The CHAIRMAN then proposed the health of "Edw. Archdall, Esq., and the Protestant Gentlemen of Fermanagh." Mr. ARCHDALL of Enniskillen [illegible] and that so long as they [illegible] such names as those of Enniskillen, Lottus, Roden, Verner, it could not be asserted, even in Conciliation-hall, that the Protestants of Ireland were without leaders, and, when it was no crime for such men to belong to the Orange institution, it could be no crime for any Protestant in Ulster. He would ask for what [illegible] Archdall been dismissed from the magistracy? For following the example of the venerable Watson—for taking a leaf out of the book of the respected Cleland—for asserting what was the inalienable right of Protestants [illegible] for carrying forward that [illegible] was [illegible] from one end of Ireland to the [illegible] CHAIRMAN next gave "The Protestant Members of the House [illegible] their religious and political principles [illegible] against the State endowment of the Popish College of Maynooth." [Loud cheering and other demonstrations of approbation, mingled with cries of "Colonel Verner" [illegible] Verner [illegible] to the address the meeting who [illegible] the [illegible] as he [illegible] much as they were [illegible] by a tie which never could be separated. He had the satisfaction to state to the meeting that, on the occasion referred to in the sentiment, they had put forward a most respectable minority of 109—respectable, when it was considered that [illegible] were arrayed in opposition to them [illegible] Government influence, combined with the Radical and Roman Catholic parties in the House of Commons, in favour of the atheistical measure of the Government. He attended on the present occasion, as he had attended at a former meeting in Lisburn, for the purpose of giving expression to his sentiments of respect, regard, and affection, towards his valued friend, Mr. Watson. He had also attended there for the purpose of joining them in the expression of their feelings upon the most unmerited and undeserved censure which had been passed upon that gentleman for attending at Lisburn on the 12th July last. He had no hesitation whatever in saying there, in the presence of Mr. Watson, that if the motives which influenced him to be present on that occasion were known by the Government, they would have found them such as ought to have entitled him to credit and honour instead of censure. He attended there for the purpose of giving his advice to the Orangemen who had assembled there in a double capacity—first, as a friend, and, secondly, in that of a magistrate. There was one circumstance attending that meeting which ought not to be forgotten, and that was an expression delivered not many years since by a certain individual with regard to Orange processions. It was to the following effect:—"That it is both unwise and absurd to think to prevent loyal men from commemorating those events to which they owe their liberty and the blessings they enjoy." [Hear, hear, and cries of Ah! Peel, Peel.] This was the expression used by the very individual, not many years ago, who now became the person to pass a censure upon Mr. Watson. It had been stated that Mr. Watson was dismissed from the commission of the peace because a similar line of conduct had been pursued by Government towards certain other persons who had been magistrates, and attended at Repeal meetings. Now he would ask, should loyalty and disloyalty be placed together? Were Orangemen to be classed with Ribbonmen? or were the advocates of Repeal, and those who were the true friends of British connection to be placed upon a balance? He would ask, in a word, if the same course of conduct were to be pursued with regard to the two bodies, as he might term them, or if they were to be treated with equal rewards, and with equal punishments? He had used the word rewards, but it was, in fact, long since any such thing as reward had been accorded to the loyal Protestants of Ireland. The rewards were reserved alone for those who, from their clamour, it might be deemed expedient for the Government to conciliate. (The gallant colonel sat down amidst the most enthusiastic cheering, and repeated peals of the Kentish fire.)—The CHAIRMAN next proposed "The glorious principles of the Reformed Church, having the Bible as her rule of faith," coupled with a toast—"That our ministers and people ever feel interested in maintaining these principles."—The Rev. T. CAMPBELL responded. He would merely say to that meeting, and to the Protestants of Ireland, in the words of one of the Reformers, "Be of good cheer and play the man," for they had this night lit a fire in Ireland which, with God's grace, will never be extinguished.—The CHAIRMAN then proposed "The principles of Protestant Operative Institutions; may they long be maintained in scriptural and constitutional integrity, and form an indissoluble link between nobility and aristocracy, clergy and laity, rich and poor of our Protestant population."—The Rev. W. M'ILWAINE spoke to this toast. The next toast was "Our Protestant Town Council—may sound principles and usefulness ever characterise their proceedings."—Mr. ADAM HILL briefly responded. "Protestant Electors of Ireland."—Mr. JOHN BATES responded. "The glorious, pious, and immortal memory of the great and good King William." [It is impossible to describe the enthusiasm with which this toast was hailed.]—Mr. J. JOHNSTON replied. Lord Roden was then moved from the chair, and Mr. Cleland called to it, when thanks were voted to Lord Roden. The Earl of RODEN rose to return thanks, but the cheering was so great that he was unable to proceed for several minutes. When silence was restored his lordship said he could assure them that he felt the greatest happiness in having that opportunity afforded him of joining with the operatives of Belfast in bearing a testimony of regard to Mr. Watson. Both as a magistrate and as a private gentleman, he had discharged his duty to the satisfaction of all who had known him. This being the case, it was most unwise and harsh on the part of the Government to dismiss such a man, and for no greater reason than they had given. The Government must certainly feel that they had acted a most inconsistent part in dismissing an individual who had ever shown himself most anxious to preserve the peace of the country, and whose influence had been so effectual in preserving order amongst those over whom he had control. The noble earl next called attention to the motives which had actuated Mr. Watson in the course he had pursued, in reference to the proceeding which led to his dismissal. Mr. Watson's reasons for so doing had been fully expressed in a letter to his lordship, and it was only after the people of his neighbourhood had declared their intention of walking—notwithstanding all the advice which he (the noble earl) had deemed it right to give—that Mr. Watson determined to accompany them, in order to prevent any irregularities: and if the same course had been pursued in Armagh, that melancholy catastrophe, of which they had all heard, would not have happened there. So far, then, from being guilty of any act which deserved censure, Mr. Watson deserved the thanks of the country for his conduct on that occasion. With respect to what had been referred to by some of the speakers, but especially by Colonel Verner, that he looked upon him (Lord Roden) as the leader of the Protestants of Ireland, he felt he was unworthy of such an honour; but he gave them what he could—his best advice, and a heart which was full of love to them and to the Protestant interest. It was many years since he first belonged to the Orange Society, and he was proud and happy to belong to that body, whose end and aim had ever been to uphold the principles of the constitution. They all felt attached to those principles—they loved to hear of the glorious memory of King William—and the manner in which the sentiment in reference to it had been received, proved that they were attached to the Orange and the Blue. For his part, he had always felt attached to those colours, and it was a singular circumstance, that these two colours happened to be the ancient livery of his family. I know not," said Lord Roden, "whether it is a crime, but I don't think it culpable that I should carry about my person the image of the glorious William. (Kentish fire.) I have done so for many years, for two reasons. First, from my love and affection for the good and glorious man himself; and next, from my love and gratitude for the man who gave it to me, the Earl of Winchilsea. (Loud cheers and Kentish fire, in the midst of which his lordship took from his breast a miniature picture of William III., and exhibited it to the meeting amidst the most rapturous applause.) This I received from the Earl of Winchilsea, whose ancestor, the Earl of Nottingham, wore it during the revolution of 1688, as the personal friend of our great deliverer. (Rounds of Kentish fire.) I know not whether that I am worthy to be deprived of the commission of the peace; but I do know that no persecution will deter me from giving my zealous support to the good cause. If the Government upholds the principles of Protestantism, so long will the country flourish; but so soon as they deviate from those principles we cannot expect that she will prosper. I never yet, in the course of my life, was present at any meeting where I experienced more happiness than on the present occasion; nor did I ever hear more loyal sentiments expressed—sentiments which, I am sure, will meet with a ready response in the heart of every honest man in the kingdom. The noble Earl then resumed his seat amid loud applause, and the meeting quietly dispersed."

Cork.—It was stated last week that the Roman Catholic bishop of Cork intended to present his library to the New College. Dr. Bullen, on whose authority this statement was made, has taken an opportunity of explaining that he did not mean to convey that it was the intention of the Bishop to give his library to the College, but to express a hope that in the erection of the College a hall would be built worthy of preserving that noble library, the most magnificent contribution to literature and science that had ever been accumulated by any individual in the British empire. The whole of the experimental fleet are now at anchor in this harbour, making, with the guardship and steam-vessels, no less than 13 sail of ships—a rare sight in time of peace. By order of the Admiral, the fleet was thrown open for the reception of the public on Sunday, and the town and harbour presented a scene more easily imagined than described.

Cavan.—A man named Heany has been committed to Cavan gaol charged with the murder of Mr. Bell Booth. He was arrested in one of the islands of Lough Erne.—This county has, for some days, been in a state of great excitement. The friends of Mr. R. H. Southwell having formed a project to raise from the Irish Catholics a sum of £55,000, to re-purchase the Castle-Hamilton estates for him, proclaimed a meeting to be held at Killeshandra on the 8th, to give stability to the project; meanwhile Mr. Southwell and the Rev. Dr. Martin had an angry correspondence, which was made public. The Protestant party announced a meeting on the same day, and determined to take military possession of Killeshandra early on the morning of the 8th, alleging that the meeting of the Catholics was to commemorate and take revenge for the battle of Ballynamuck (8th Sep., 1798). Lord Farnham upon this issued a notice forbidding persons carrying arms to the meeting, and collected a great military force, cavalry and infantry, to prevent a collision between the two adverse meetings. The Protestants, however, lost no time in convening a meeting, at which they resolved to abandon their proposed meeting on the 8th. The Catholic clergy, also, from their altars on Sunday, enforced the duty of obedience to the law, and of avoiding all occasions of strife and disturbance, and the result was, that the teetotallers abandoned their meeting. Although, therefore, the troops were all in readiness, there was, fortunately, no occasion for their services.

ELECTRO PLATE, in great variety, and of warranted quality, only at the establishments of ELKINGTON & Co. {22, Regent-street, corner of Jermyn-st and 45, Moorgate-street, City.

The Patentees, from their great experience in England and France, are enabled to decide the quantity of silver necessary to ensure durability and economy for every article they manufacture, and which invariably bears their marks, E. and Co., under a crown. Having granted numerous licenses to use their patented processes, they beg to intimate to purchasers that they are not responsible for the quality of goods sold as plated by their process, unless they bear the above marks.—Re-plating and gilding.—Old plated and other articles repaired and re-plated, or re-gilt, and the quality warranted, if sent direct to either of the above establishments. No other party in London is authorised to re-plate. Persons infringing these patents by using the processes, or by purchasing goods so plated or gilt, will be proceeded against.

ABERNETHY'S PILL for the NERVES and MUSCLES.—The proprietor of these pills is a medical man. The brother of a patient of his applied to Mr. Abernethy for advice; he gave him a prescription, and those pills are prepared accurately from that prescription. The patient's complaint was a nervous one, and it was utterly impossible for any one to be in a worse condition than he was. Muscular power was also lost in some parts, and his legs fairly tottered under him. He had a box of the pills prepared, and the effects were all but miraculous, for not only did nervousness leave him, but muscular power returned to all parts deficient of it. The proprietor has since tried them on hundreds of his patients, and he can conscientiously state that their effects in restoring nervous energy and muscular power have quite astonished him. The nervous invalid should lose no time in resorting to this truly wonderful medicine. They are so harmless that they may be administered with perfect safety to the most delicate constitutions, as they do not contain a particle of mercury, or any other poisonous ingredient. As before stated, their effects are all but miraculous—one box will prove the truth of this assertion. As regimen and diet are of the utmost consequence in all nervous disorders, the particulars as recommended by the late Mr. Abernethy in such complaints will be enclosed round each box, price 4s. 6d.—Appointed agents for London: C. King, Napier-street, Oxford New Town; Barclay, Farringdon-street; Edwards, St. Pauls; Sutton, Bow Church-yard; Johnston, 68, Cornhill; Prout, 229, Strand; Hannay, 63, and Sanger, 150, Oxford-street. By sending 58 stamps to Mr. King (as above) a box may be had post free.

CORNS AND BUNIONS.
Patronized by the Royal Family, Nobility, Clergy, &c.

PAUL'S EVERY MAN'S FRIEND is a sure and speedy cure for those severe annoyances without causing the least pain or inconvenience.

Unlike all other remedies for Corns, its operation is such as to render the cutting of the Corns altogether unnecessary (indeed, we may say, the practice of cutting Corns is at all times highly dangerous, and has been frequently attended with lamentable consequences, besides its liability to increase their growth); it adheres with the most gentle pressure, producing an instant and delightful relief from torture, and, with perseverance in its application, entirely eradicates the most inveterate Corns and Bunions.

Testimonials have been received from upwards of one hundred Physicians and Surgeons of the greatest eminence.

Prepared by JOHN FOX, in boxes, at 1s. 1½d., or three in one for 2s. 9d., and to be had of C. KING, Napier-street, near the Albert Saloon, Hoxton, London; and all wholesale and retail medicine venders in town and country. The genuine has the name of JOHN FOX on the stamp.

A 2s. 9d. box cures the most obdurate Corns,
Ask for "PAUL'S Every Man's Friend."

FOR CLEANING GOLD and SILVER PLATE, JEWELLERY, &c., &c., without wearing the precious Metals in the slightest degree.—This valuable chemical discovery is now generally used in the establishments of most of the Nobility in London, the Club Houses, and in the principal West-end Hotels. Testimonials of its valuable properties have been received from the eminent chemist, ANDREW URE, Esq., M.D., F.R.S., &c., and from many eminent Silversmiths.—Sold by RIPPON and BURTON, Oxford-street, and at the Manufactory, 201, Strand, in half-pint, pint, and quart bottles, at 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s.; and may be had through all chemists, silversmiths, and ironmongers, in the kingdom. Wholesale Agents—BARCLAY and Co., SUTTON and Co., and EDWARDS and Co., London.

HORTICULTURAL IMPROVEMENTS. — J. READ begs leave to inform ladies, amateurs, and practical gardeners, that he has made such improvements in his NEW PATENT MACHINES, as will warrant him in keeping the valves in repair gratis during the term of the patent, and may be worked with half the labour of any other instruments for the same purpose, for destroying those insects which make such deadly havoc on the choicest fruit trees and plants at this season of the year, which from 31 years' experience in practical gardening in all its branches, and 25 years in manufacturing and improving the above machines, he can safely warrant. They may be seen and proved at 35, Regent-circus, Piccadilly; and to prevent the frauds that have been so long practised, none are genuine except stamped with the patentee's name.

WANTED.—A middle-aged married Man, competent to undertake the improvement and management of a Farm, of 300 or 400 acres, in the south-west of England. The Proprietor resident. He must have a thorough knowledge of the breeding, rearing, purchasing, and feeding Cattle and Sheep; the management of Dairy Stock, and all the modern improvements in Agriculture. A Scotchman would be preferred not to be above putting his hands to the plough or other work; and if his wife is capable of taking the management of the Dairy and Poultry, it will be an advantage.—Letters stating present or past employment, with term of service, salary, age, and references (if any), addressed to J. A. B., Post-office, Liverpool, will meet with prompt attention.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS HEAD-GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 30, who can have an unexceptionable five years' character from the nobleman he has just left.—Direct to H. G., at Mr. Gaines's, Nurseryman, Surrey-lane, Battersea.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 25, who is fully competent to take charge of Greenhouse, Vinery, Kitchen and Flower Garden, and can have an unexceptionable character.—Direct to W. B., at Messrs. Youell and Co.'s, Great Yarmouth Nursery. The counties of Norfolk or Suffolk would be preferred.

AS GARDENER.—D. FERGUSON, Nurseryman, Aylesbury, Bucks, with confidence recommends to any nobleman or gentleman in want of a GARDENER, where a married man is kept, a young man who was employed under him in a Nobleman's Place, as one of the Foremen, for some years, during which time his conduct was very satisfactory.

AS GARDENER.—A young Man, aged 33, a native of Scotland, who perfectly understands his business in all its branches, new ground-work, care of Plantations, &c. Any Nobleman or Gentleman would find him every way trustworthy; he can be highly recommended by the gentleman he is about to leave.—Direct to D. E., Mr. Perkins, Postman, Camberwell-lane, Brixton, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man, without incumbrance, aged 34, who understands Forcing Pines, Vines, &c., and the general management of the Flower and Kitchen Garden, and can have a good character from the gentleman he is leaving.—Direct A. B., Twyford Lodge, Winchester.

AS GARDENER, OR GARDENER AND BAILIFF.—A married Man, without incumbrance, who is about to leave his situation on account of the gentleman going abroad. His wife would have no objection to take the management of a Dairy and Poultry. Also can bake—now fulfilling that situation. The man has a thorough knowledge of Feeding and Breeding Stock.—Direct J. J., Post-office, Cuckfield.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 36, a native of Scotland, who has had a thorough practical knowledge of Gardening in all its branches, particularly in the management of Pines, Vines, Peaches, and Forcing in general; Greenhouse Plants, Kitchen and Flower Garden. Can have a good character.—Direct to M. R., at Mr. Laing's, Nurseryman, Twickenham, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, who has a practical knowledge of his profession in every department. Can have an unexceptionable character from the family he lived with last.—Direct to W. H., at the Office of this Paper. No single-handed place accepted.

AS GARDENER, OR GARDENER AND BAILIFF.—A middle-aged married Man, without incumbrance, who has a thorough knowledge of his business in all its various branches, and has had long experience in the management of Plantations and Laying out Grounds. Can have a good character from the gentleman he is about to leave. His wife can take charge of Dairy and Poultry, if required.—Direct to E., at the Office of this Paper.

AS GARDENER.—An active married Man, aged 32, who has a good practical knowledge of his profession, including Pines, Vines, Kitchen, and Flower Garden, &c.: and has an unexceptionable character from a F.H.S. with whom he lived last. Direct to J. W., 23, Paul-street, Portman-market.

TO NURSERYMEN, SEEDSMEN, AND GARDENERS.

A YOUNG MAN having a knowledge of Gardening would give 4l. or 5l. to either of the above, to procure him a situation at 12s. or 14s. a week, as UNDER-GARDENER, &c., in a small place, where their superintendence would not be objected to. Could milk a cow, or look after a horse, if required. The advertiser can be well recommended.—Direct to J. P., at the Office of this Paper.

TO NURSERYMEN.

AS KNIFEMAN.—A respectable young man, aged 21, of persevering habits, is desirous of engaging with any respectable nurseryman as above, having had very extensive practice in budding, grafting, layering, and the general routine of a nursery. Salary not so much an object as a comfortable situation. Can have an excellent character from his present employer, with whom he has been rather more than seven years.—Direct, stating terms, &c., to J. C. M., 25, New Union-street, Little Moorfields, London.

LAND AGENCY.

MR. DONALDSON, Professor of Agriculture in the Agricultural College, Hoddesdon, Herts, and author of several Agricultural Works, wishes to be employed in the Management of Landed Property, occasional or permanent. Mr. DONALDSON was regularly bred to practical Agriculture, has had a very varied and extensive practice of the art on the estates of Noblemen of the highest rank. Has been much employed in modern Draining and Planting, in the Erection and Repairs of Farm Buildings, in the Letting of Lands and Drawing of Rents, and in the general Management of Landed Property. Mr. DONALDSON may be consulted on Agricultural Subjects on easy terms, and permanent services obtained at moderate rate. High references for character and capability will be given if required.—Hoddesdon, Sept. 13.

PLANTING.—A steady, active Man, who is well acquainted with removing large Trees and Evergreens, forming Plantations, thinning and pruning neglected ones, laying out Flower-garden or Rock-work, and Alterations in general, wishes to engage himself for the ensuing Planting season; would suit any Gentleman who wished to make any Alterations with Economy. Terms moderate.—A. B., 11, Gloucester-street, Vauxhall.

WANTED, a Situation in a Seed-shop by a young Man, who can give satisfactory reference to the Employer he has just left.—Direct to G. L., at the Office of this Paper.

SCOTTISH WIDOWS' FUND AND LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Constituted by Act of Parliament. Head Office, No. 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh. The Earl of ROSEBERY, K.T., President.

The Funds of the Society now accumulated and invested amount to One Million Five Hundred and Ninety Thousand Pounds Sterling. The Annual Revenue to upwards of Two Hundred and Thirty-three Thousand Pounds Sterling per annum.

The investigation into the affairs of the Society, as provided for by the Articles of Constitution, will take place on the 31st of December, 1845, and all who effect insurances on their lives before that day, which closes the current septennial period, will secure a certain greater benefit than will be obtained by those who delay doing so till the commencement of the following year.

The whole surplus profits belong to the assured, and may be applied either by being added to the sum assured, by reducing the future contributions during life, or by their value in money being given over to them at once.

Further information, with forms of proposal, may be obtained on application at the Head Office, or at any of the Society's agencies. HUGH M'KEAN, Agent.

News of the Week.

THE new conspiracy and attempted revolution at Madrid is the leading topic of our foreign news. The exact nature of the movement is not very clearly stated, but it appears to be only one of the many ill-conceived and ineffectual manifestations of popular hostility which have recently been made against the Government. The authorities attribute the outbreak to an extensive organisation of the Espartero party, fomented by England; while the Opposition journals of Madrid dwell with much force on the continued persecution of the trading classes of the capital, apparently inferring that the conspiracy was the natural result of the unconciliatory and oppressive system of the Government. The insurgents had taken measures to tamper with the troops, and had miscalculated their success; for the soldiers, before whose barracks they had assembled and on whose co-operation they relied, were the first to fire on the people. The collision, as usual, was of short duration: the insurgents were speedily dispersed by the military, but not until an officer had been killed by a shot from the crowd, and many of their own party had been wounded. About 30 persons were taken, arms in hand; numerous arrests were effected during the night, and the individuals thus seized were immediately delivered over to a Council of War, by which some were condemned to death, and others, who had made important disclosures, were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. The latest accounts, however, state that the excitement among the inhabitants was so great on the 10th inst. that it was not likely that the Government would venture to put any of the prisoners to death. No subsequent disturbance had then occurred; although the usual precautions of patrols, pickets, &c., were taken to prevent another outbreak. The excitement, however, continued at its height, and all the accounts concur in expressing their apprehensions of a further explosion.—From Germany we learn that the report of the attempted assassination of the King of Wurtemberg is without foundation, and that his Majesty has arrived safely at his beautiful seat on the Lake of Como.—In Switzerland, the attempt of the Free Corps and their partisans to compel the Government of Berne to declare war against Lucerne, with the view of expelling the Jesuits from that canton, has been defeated by a vote of the Grand Council. It appears that the Government of Berne had given too ready an encouragement to the Ultra-Liberals, who at length became sufficiently powerful to defy the law, and to threaten the Government with deposition, in the event of their refusing to undertake another expedition against Lucerne. The authorities, in this emergency, convoked the Grand Council of the canton, and demanded unlimited means of acting vigorously against the Radical leaders and of thus maintaining the existing constitution. After a long and animated sitting, this demand, which was in the nature of a vote of confidence, was granted by a majority of 138 to 42.—The accounts received from Constantinople and from other places near the scene of action confirm the rumours which had reached us through France, relative to the disastrous campaign of the Russian army in the Caucasus. There can now be little doubt that this great expedition, organised by the Emperor himself and intrusted to Prince Woronzow, has completely failed. The Russians, it is admitted, captured Dargo, the supposed residence of the Circassian General, but they paid for their conquest no less a price than the loss of 8000 men, including several general officers, and were compelled almost immediately to beat a retreat, pursued and harassed by the Circassians. Prince Woronzow, with the remains of an army which a few weeks back was 50,000 strong, has found it necessary to retire to Tiflis to reorganise his forces. It is due to this distinguished General to add that he is not responsible for this failure. The plan of penetrating into the mountains was adopted by the Emperor's own command, and was always opposed by Prince Woronzow, who foresaw the difficulties which would result from such a system of warfare.—In South America the long-pending hostilities between Monte Video and Buenos Ayres have assumed a character of great importance to this country. General Rosas and the Argentine Government have adopted measures of unequivocal hostility to our commerce, and have refused permission to our merchant ships to land their cargoes on the shores of Buenos Ayres. Our Minister, Mr. Gore Ouseley, has failed to obtain redress, and has written home for further instructions. In the meantime one of the British vessels has returned to Liverpool with her cargo undischarged, and others are expected to follow—a result which is nothing short of an absolute interruption of our trade with the Argentine republic, and a loss to our merchants which it would be difficult to estimate in its full extent.

Home News.

COURT.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Infant Royal family continue at Osborne House, and are quite well. On Saturday the Queen held a Privy Council at Osborne House, which was attended by all the Cabinet and the great Officers of State. On Sunday her Majesty and Prince Albert attended divine service at Whippingham Church. On Tuesday the Queen Dowager paid a visit to her Majesty, travelling to Southampton by a special train on the South-Western Railway, and returning to Bushy in the evening. During the remainder of the week the Queen and Prince Albert have taken their daily airings either in carriages or on foot, whenever the weather has permitted. The Countess of Gainsborough has succeeded Lady Canning as Lady-in-Waiting, and Lord Byron has entered on his duties as Lord-in-Waiting on her Majesty.

Parliamentary Movements.—At the Privy Council on Saturday, it was ordered that Parliament be further prorogued from Thursday, the 2nd October, to Thursday, the 27th November.

Order of St. Patrick.—A chapter of the Order of St. Patrick was held on Wednesday at Dublin Castle by the Lord Lieutenant (by her Majesty's command) when the Earl of Clare and the Marquis of Ormonde were invested with the Order.

The Experimental Squadron.—Admiral Sir Hyde Parker has resigned the command of the squadron, which has been assumed by Admiral Sir Hugh Pigott until the arrival of Admiral Sir Samuel Pym, Superintendent of Plymouth Dockyard, who is appointed to the command. Admiral Parker has come on shore invalided, having been suffering from a severe attack of gout during the greater part of the cruise. No sailing orders have been as yet received by the squadron, and it is not unlikely their stay in Cork will be prolonged for a few days longer, when they will go to Plymouth to refit.

Post-Office Arrangements.—A contract has been concluded between the Government and the Pacific Steam Navigation Company for the conveyance of mails on the western coast of South America between Valparaiso and Panama. This is an important arrangement, as the mails being taken across the Isthmus to Chagres can be regularly brought by the vessels of the West India Royal Mail company to this country, instead of performing the long circuitous route by Cape Horn.

Parkhurst Prison.—The annual reports relating to Parkhurst Prison presented to Parliament, have just been printed. The establishment was built in 1838, and since the last reports two newly constructed wards (the probationary and junior wards) have been opened. On the 1st January, 1844, there were 284 prisoners confined; and during the year, 361 were admitted from Millbank prison. During the year, 103 boys were removed, of which number 18 were sent to Western Australia as apprentices with conditional pardons, having gained a practical knowledge of trades, with every prospect of getting their subsistence in future by honest industry. As many as 79 have been sent back to Millbank Prison for transportation; they had refused to avail themselves of the opportunity to amend, and their removal was required for the safety of the other boys. There were in the year, 4105 punishments inflicted in Parkhurst Prison, of which number 165 were whippings, 44 confinements in the black-hole, 614 solitary confinements with bread and water, 3247 bread and water for single meals without confinement, and 35 in the penal class. The new ward, called the "probationary ward," consists of 95 cells for the separate confinement of prisoners for the first four months of their arrival; and the "junior ward" is intended for 208 prisoners who have not attained the age of puberty. These wards are considered a great improvement in the establishment. The total cost for the prison last year was 11,755*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.*

Pauperism in England and Wales.—From appendices to the 11th annual report of the Poor-law Commissioners (just presented to Parliament by command of Her Majesty) it appears that the total number of paupers relieved in England and Wales in the quarter ended at Lady-day, 1843, was 1,307,899; and that in the quarter ended Lady-day, 1844, it was 1,249,682—calculated from the 585 unions established. The cost in the former year was 4,589,588*l.*, being the "total expenditure for relief to the poor;" in 1844 it was 4,370,171*l.*, being a decrease of 4*s.* 8*d.* per cent., as compared with the expense in 1843. The number of adult able-bodied paupers relieved in the 585 unions in England and Wales, in the quarter ended Lady-day, 1843, was 394,626; in the corresponding quarter of 1844 it was 364,938. The total amount of money expended from 1825 to 1834 in the relief and maintenance of the poor was 64,559,991*l.*; the total amount from 1835 to 1844 was 47,252,812*l.*, showing a decrease of 17,307,132*l.* in the 10 years subsequent to the passing of the Poor-law Amendment Act, compared with the 10 years preceding the same.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—There is no news of any political moment in the Paris journals; nor do their articles present much that is deserving the attention of the English reader. The Ministerial prints publish details of her Majesty's reception at the Chateau d'Eu, and of the arrival of the French Princes at Pampeluna, and of their return to Bayonne on the 8th. Of these topics the most interesting is that connected with her Majesty's visit to Eu:—

"From Antwerp or Ostend," says the Ministerial Débats, "Queen Victoria could have reached the English shores in three hours. But to come and shake hands with the King of the French she has preferred to so short a passage a stay on board ship of near 36 hours. When she appeared on the Tréport shore, on Monday morning, she had not slept on land since she had left Cologne, that is to say since Friday evening. Therefore did the population testify to her by acclamations which resounded everywhere long after she had passed, how greatly French tact appreciates these striking proofs of friendship given to the august Chief of France, with which it is impossible not to be touched when one considers that this friendship secures the repose and welfare of the whole world."—"The Queen of England," says the Revue des deux Mondes, "came a second time to visit the King of the French at the Chateau d'Eu. That short but gracious visit has been presented by the Ministerial journals in its proper light. On this occasion they did not foolishly make it a subject of triumph; they did not describe it in the style of an epic poem or romance—they adopted a simple and true language, the best suited to celebrate that happy event. France may feel flattered by the testimonies of esteem and affection given by the young Queen of the three kingdoms to the crowned representative of the revolution of July. To confer that mark of friendship, Queen Victoria, sailing from the coast of Belgium, prolonged her sojourn on board by 36 hours—a circumstance which enhanced the value of her affectionate visit. On that account was her Majesty welcome to the coast of France, and saluted by a sincere enthusiasm by the people."

Adverting to a paragraph of a London paper, wherein it is affirmed that Her Majesty has expressed the intention of visiting Paris next year, the Legitimist print, La France, less courteously remarks :—

"We very much doubt the correctness of this piece of news. The Queen of England, as a woman, may wish to see Paris, but besides her own will there is that of her Ministers; and we believe Lord Aberdeen and Sir Robert Peel to be both of them too prudent to yield this point to their Sovereign. France has not the same love for English alliance that M. Guizot entertains for it, and Paris, which is agitated by a thousand passions, may be a less tranquil abode than Tréport. If the Queen of England should come to Paris, we desire that in the absence of affection she may be received with that silent respect which is due to crowned heads; but who can tell whether an isolated wish would be regarded by a population always animated, and sometimes turbulent, and which, since 1830, has learned other things than the consideration to which Sovereigns are habituated in all countries except France?"

A royal ordinance, approving of the adjudication of the Great Northern Railway of France to the Company Rothschild, was signed by the King of the French, at Eu, last week; as also one confirming the adjudication of the Fampoux and Hazebruck line to the company O'Neill. The Constitutionnel states that from the present state of the works on the Northern Railway, it is impossible to say at what period the whole line to the frontiers of Belgium will be opened; but that the portion of the line from Amiens to Valenciennes, with the branch line to Lille, is in such a forward state that in eight months from the present time it will be completely finished and in full operation. The O'Neill Company has given orders to have the Fampoux to Hazebruck line staked out immediately, and it is expected that the works will be completed by the end of 1846. It is now considered certain that the lines voted by the Chambers last session will be adjudicated in the following order:—The Paris to Strasburg, and Tours and Nantes Railways, towards the close of October; Cecil and St. Quentin, about the middle of November; and Paris to Lyons, and Lyons to Avignon, about the middle of December. The report of the Prefet of the Department of the Lower Seine confirms all that has been said upon the satisfactory progress of the works on the Havre and Rouen line, and states confidently that it will be opened in May next.—The treaty of commerce between Belgium and France, which was concluded on the 16th July, 1842, and which gave rise to several warm debates in the Belgian and French Chambers during their late sittings, is the subject of some interest at present. By the terms of the treaty its operation ceases on the 1st January next, if neither of the two Governments should intimate officially before that period its intention to renew it; and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, in answer to questions put to him in the Chamber, stated some months ago that it was not his intention to renew the treaty, unless the Belgian Government consented to important modifications. The time is now approaching when the question must be arranged, and the Belgian Government has sent a delegate to Paris to conduct the negotiation with the French cabinet, but without assigning to him any avowed official character. A Paris paper states that if the negotiations should take a favourable turn, M. Deschamps, the new Minister of Foreign Affairs in Belgium, will himself come to complete them.—The Moniteur contains a royal ordinance promulgating the convention signed by the Kings of France and Prussia on the 21st June last, for the reciprocal extradition of malefactors.—The Moniteur Algérien, of the 4th inst., gives a detailed account of the departure of Marshal Bugeaud, which took place in the afternoon of that day, with unusual honours. The Emancipation of Toulouse, of the 11th instant, states, that Marshals Soult and Bugeaud were expected to arrive in that town on the following day. It was said that the Minister of War would visit the camp of St. Medard, and that the Governor of Algeria would accompany him. This journey in company appeared expedient to induce a belief that the explanations which passed between the two Marshals at Soultberg had put an end to all differences of opinion which had previously existed between them. "It is not known what concessions were made on either part," says the Emancipation, "but one thing appears certain—that is, that the Duke d'Isly will not return to Africa."—Don Carlos and his consort arrived at Marseilles on the 9th inst., and alighted at the Hotel de Noailles, which had been prepared for their reception. Numbers of Spanish refugees went out of the town to meet him, and great excitement has been caused among his partisans by his presence in that city.—The King has conferred the grand cordon of the Legion of Honour on M. Mon, the Spanish Minister of Finance; the same distinction has already been conferred on two of his colleagues, Gen. Narvaez and M. Martinez de la Rosa.—The Moorish Prince Ben Serrour embarked at Marseilles, in the Alexandria packet, on the 11th inst. His object in visiting France was not to establish diplomatic relations with the Government, but to embark in the French steamer for Egypt, whence he will proceed on a pilgrimage to Mecca.—The Bishop of London is making a tour in France, and last week left Paris for Normandy. On Sunday week his lordship preached in the church of the British Embassy to so crowded a congregation that many persons in vain attempted to obtain even standing-room. His lordship afterwards attended the afternoon service at the Church of the Redemption, in the Rue Chaucnat, which was greatly crowded.—The Toulonnais of the 7th inst. announces that the squadron commanded by Rear-Admiral Parseval Deschenes, and composed of seven ships of the line, sailed from Toulon on the 6th. They had taken in six months' provisions, and had on board 5000 marines. The coast of Spain was believed to be its destination. Rear-Admiral De Hell has resigned his appointment of Maritime Prefect of Cherbourg, conceiving that its duties are irreconcilable with those imposed upon him as deputy, which require his presence for several months in Paris.—It is said that the Duke de Broglie is to have the chair left vacant at the French Academy by the death of M. Royer-Collard.—The weather has suddenly changed at Paris. It rained a good deal on Saturday night, and at intervals throughout Sunday and Monday, with every appearance of its continuing. The equinoctial gales were supposed to have commenced, but in most quarters the harvest was completely finished. Letters from Nantes of the 11th inst. state that the harvest was over in that part of Brittany, and that, on the whole, the produce was much greater than had been expected. The quality of the grain, however, had been a little impaired by the inclemency of the season.

SPAIN.—We gave, in our last, the brief announcement conveyed by the French telegraph of another attempt at insurrection in Madrid on the night of the 5th inst. From the details which have since reached us, it appears that the authorities had been previously warned that a popular movement was secretly preparing, although the day on which it was to break out was not specified; it was known that pressing communications from certain influential refugees had arrived, and that some distribution of money had even taken place. According to these communications, time was most precious, and if "the people of the 2nd of May and 7th of July" did not act before winter, they must no longer rely on the assistance and co-operation of the refugees. Instigated by these communications, the conspirators attempted to gain over some officers of the garrison. The report was boldly spread by them that the co-operation of the regiment of Navarre was secured; and that it would declare for the insurrection the moment it broke out. A captain of the Reyna-Gubernadora Regiment suffered himself to be tampered with, and General Mazarredo, before the whole corps, demanded his sword, and degraded him. This is stated to be the only defection, and the officer is sentenced to be shot. The regiment of Navarre remained faithful to the Government. What had determined the leading conspirators to make their attempt was that they reckoned on the impression made on the public mind by the funeral of the journeyman tailor, Manuel Gil, shot in consequence of his participation in the uproar of the 19th ult. A vast crowd had assembled at the cemetery, and the workmen had been much excited. The authorities, aware of the designs of the leaders of the movement, had secretly concerted their means of defence. At about half-past 10 various groups began to muster in front of the Posito Barracks, the quarters of the regiment of Navarre. About 300 persons were assembled there at that hour. A detachment of the regiment, which was patrolling, having cried, "qui vive," a murderous firing was the reply. The officer commanding the detachment fell dead, when all the barrack windows simultaneously opened, and a well-directed discharge of musketry dispersed the insurgents, who did not expect so hot a reception. At 11 o'clock all the troops of the garrison were a-foot; they occupied the positions beforehand assigned to them, and communicated by means of advanced sentinels; various groups of insurgents surrounded General Cordova's residence, where the troops on guard also fired and dispersed them. Everywhere they met with the same reception. At midnight they had vanished, and tranquillity was completely restored. The killed were reckoned at eight or ten, the wounded at about 15. Several persons were arrested by the troops; the leaders have been condemned to death, and others have made disclosures which compromise some persons of note. No disturbance, however, has since occurred, but the authorities still continue to adopt measures of precaution for the maintenance of order. The Queen was expected to arrive about the 15th. In the meantime her Majesty has conferred on the mother of General Cordova the title of Marchioness of Mendagorria, with remainder to her son, as a reward for the measures adopted by the General during the recent disturbances, and it is said that the Ministers of Finance, Justice, and the Interior, are to receive the grand cross of Charles III., in testimony of her Majesty's gratitude for the loyalty and firmness they displayed during the late events in maintaining order and enforcing compliance with the laws.—The Paris Constitutionnel has a letter from Madrid of the 6th, which is deserving of attention, as it is perhaps derived from its patron M. Thiers, who was in Madrid when the commotion occurred. "It is affirmed," says the Constitutionnel, "that this other rebellion is the result of a plot organized by General Espartero, and that some important personages are implicated in it. The Government believe that they have sufficient evidence to prove that Espartero has been the very soul of the conspiracy. Rather considerable sums had been distributed among the garrison to ensure its success; but several officers whom the conspirators had applied to, and who had been ordered to feign an acceptance of their offers, daily apprised the authorities of what was preparing." M. Thiers was expected to leave Madrid in a few days for Toledo, Grenada, Cordova, Seville, and Cadiz. He was to proceed from the latter place to Lisbon, and return thence to France viâ England.—The Bayonne and other frontier papers, give long details of the festivities at Pampeluna in honour of the French princes, who arrived in that city on the 4th inst. It is said that the brilliant reception which they experienced on their entry cannot be compared with anything of the sort in modern times. On the 5th there was a grand bull fight, in which 12 horses were killed, and at four o'clock the Court adjourned to the Plaza, to be present at a tournament, executed with considerable skill by the officers of the garrison. At 8 a display of fireworks took place, which was universally admitted to be exceedingly brilliant. On the 6th, a grand review of the troops was held outside the city gates. The French military spectators did full justice to the soldier-like appearance of the men, and to a file movement, which was executed with great precision. In the evening a concert was given at Court, which was favourably spoken of by the amateurs. In the morning of Sunday, the 7th, their royal highnesses attended mass at the cathedral, where the bishop officiated. In the afternoon there was another bull-fight, which was remarkable for more than the usual amount of cruelty inflicted upon the bulls by means of fire-arrows and other weapons; the whole being described as a sickening spectacle. The Queen, however, and her royal guests witnessed the scene without any manifestation of displeasure, and the French princes made very handsome presents to Montes, the celebrated toredo. The closing fête took place in the evening, when every curtain, bastion, hornwork, and ravelin of the citadel was lighted up with innumerable lamps, which, in the darkness of the night, made the fortifications look like some work of enchantment. On the morning of the 8th, the Duke and Duchess de Nemours left Pampeluna in one of the Queen of Spain's carriages, drawn by six mules, accompanied by Queen Christina. About two miles out of the town the Princes took leave of Her Majesty and entered their travelling carriage. Taking the high road by Tolosa, they arrived at Bayonne about 7 in the evening, having accomplished the distance of more than 90 miles in 12 hours. The Duc d'Aumale left about the same time on horseback by the new line of road forming through the valleys of Ulzama and the Bastan, and inspecting on the way the positions of St. Saurauven and Mayo, the chief scenes of the operations between Soult and Wellington in 1813. He was accompanied by the Duke de San Carlos and M. Azevedo, Prefect of the Basses Pyrenees. His Royal Highness and suite reached Bayonne at 10 at night. Before leaving Spain, the Duc d'Aumale was made a Knight of the Golden Fleece, and the Duchesse de Nemours received from the Queen's own hands the Scarf of the Order of Maria Louisa. Most of the French officers who accompanied the Princes into Spain, have been admitted into the Orders of Isabella the Catholic and Charles III., and General Narvaez presented the Princes with two superb Toledo swords.

GERMANY.—The reported attempt to assassinate the King of Wurtemberg, which was briefly noticed in our last, is not confirmed by the subsequent advices, and it will probably turn out to be a piece of invention. It appears that the Jesuits were considered as the authors of this attack, in consequence of the King's having spoken, when in Switzerland, openly against the influence of that society. His language to M. Siegwart Muller, the head of the Jesuit party at Lucerne, it is said, produced a great sensation.—It is stated in the papers that public meetings of the "Protestant Friends" had been prohibited by the police, in consequence of orders from higher authority. In many places, for instance Konigsberg and Berlin, notice has been given by the consistories of all the evangelical clergy of the country, that on the authority of a supreme cabinet order of the 5th August, issued on the 10th by the department of the Interior, the meetings of the so-called "Protestant Friends" are absolutely prohibited, where, from the number of members, the difference of rank, or by the place of their assemblies, they have the character of popular assemblies. The formation of closed societies, under whatever name they may appear, is also forbidden.—A letter from Berlin of the 7th states that the King of Prussia and the royal family were expecting, at Stettin, the arrival of the Empress of Russia, when a courier from St. Petersburg brought word that her Majesty, on account of the present stormy state of the Baltic, had taken the land route, and would not arrive at Berlin before the 12th instant. She was to stay a week there, and would then continue her journey to Italy, avoiding all the capitals of the German States.

SWITZERLAND.—The Grand Council of Berne met on the 11th inst. The Landamman opened the session by a speech, in which he exposed the situation of the canton since the 1st April, the progress of the popular association, the anarchy of the press, and the reforms which it was indispensable to introduce into the Constitution. He then concluded by calling on the assembly, in the name of the Executive Council, either to approve the measures it had adopted for the preservation of public order, or to permit its members to resign their offices. The Avoyer Neuhaus afterwards addressed the Council at considerable length, and the Council adjourned to the next day, when they adopted the following resolution, by a majority of 138 to 42:—"The Grand Council of the Republic of Berne, after having heard the report of the Executive Council on the actual political position of the country, and confiding in the Executive Council, resolves that it approves of the principles laid down in the present report tending to insure in the economy of the State a sustained progress, at the same time keeping within the bounds of the law, and opposing strongly all tendency towards illegality."

ITALY.—A letter from Leghorn, of the 8th, informs us that a successful operation had been performed upon Ibrahim Pacha by Dr. Torri, and that strong hopes are entertained of his perfect recovery.

Greece.—Letters from Athens of the 30th ult., state that the Coletti Administration and its partisans appeared determined to overthrow the constitution, and made no longer a mystery of their intentions. Several persons known for their constitutional opinions, and amongst others General Calergi, the hero of the last revolution, Colonels Spiro, Milio, and Scavelli, and Major Roditis, had been placed on the half-pay list and ordered out of the capital. M. Metaxa had refused to accept the embassy to Constantinople, and declared, on the 29th, in the Chamber, that he had resigned his seat in the Cabinet on account of the incompatibility of his principles with those of some of its members. The disorganised state of Greek affairs on the shore has extended itself to the high sea, and the small islands of the Archipelago are infested with piratical craft of every size and description. The neighbourhood of the Isles of Scaithos and Scopelo, and Cumé, a town on the eastern side of Negropont, are particularly pointed out as dangerous localities. The Greek Government has sent out two cutters to look after the delinquents, and has addressed an official letter to the representatives of Austria and France, requiring the assistance of their steamers of war to go in search of the piratical vessels which are generally supposed at Athens to have been fitted out by Valenza, whom Lord Aberdeen in the late debate on Greece in the House of Lords, described as a respectable farmer.

Turkey.—Letters from Constantinople of the 28th ult., state that the Duke de Montpensier was still in the Turkish capital, where he was treated with all the deference due to his rank. His reception by the Sultan had been of the most cordial description. On the 27th the Cuvier, steam-corvette, reached Constantinople, having on board M. Piscatory, who was the bearer of a letter from King Otho for the Duke, inviting his royal highness to his court. The Prince replied that he would repair to Athens, but only remain there 24 hours; that he would pay a personal visit to King Otho, dine with His Majesty, and embark immediately afterwards. Chekib Effendi was to leave on the 2d inst. for Syria, with full powers to adjust the differences existing between the Maronites and Druses in the Lebanon.

Russia.—Letters from Constantinople of the 28th August state, that accounts had been received in that capital by way of the Black Sea, which leave no doubt of the failure of Count Woronzoff's expedition against the Circassians. Notwithstanding the triumphant tone in which these operations have been spoken of in the official bulletins published at St. Petersburg, it is now evident that Prince Woronzoff was forced to beat a disastrous retreat, in the course of which he was closely pursued by the Circassians, under Schamil Bey. The Russian army (50,000 strong), had attacked the town of Dargo, the head-quarters of Schamil. After five days' hard fighting the Circassians were obliged to abandon the fortress to the enemy, having expended all their ammunition, not, however, without carrying off their artillery and baggage into the mountains. The loss on the part of Russia is said to amount in killed alone to 8000, among whom are 3 general and 40 other officers, and 4 aides-de-camp of the commander-in-chief. Prince Woronzoff, finding his army so much crippled, for the number of wounded is enormous, was destroying the fortifications to retire to Tiflis, to reorganise his force. Dargo was defended by Schamil's regular troops, consisting of a corps of Dagastan infantry, and the Russian and Polish deserters from the Emperor's service. A letter from St. Petersburgh of the 30th ult., in the Journal des Debats, says that "Prince Woronzoff has been instructed to repair to Bessarabia, in order to have an interview with the Emperor respecting the war. It is affirmed here that Prince Woronzoff was opposed to the plan of the last campaign, but the Emperor insisted on its being executed, and ordered the Prince to penetrate into the mountains. It was with this view that he placed at his disposal forces and resources more considerable than at any other period. According to trustworthy calculations, the effective of the army on all the lines of the Caucasus amounts to 160,000 men, 95,000 to 96,000 of whom only are disposable for war, and cost the State more than all the rest of the army disseminated throughout the empire. Public opinion in general, even in the army, is against the Caucasus war, which imposes such great sacrifices on Russia. The public mind is for resorting to pacific measures, and for leaving time and civilisation gradually to effect the subjection of those tribes; but the Emperor is not of this opinion, and he fears lest the successive reverses his army has sustained in the Caucasus may dispel the prestige it has hitherto exercised over the people of Asia. Thus, notwithstanding the exhausted state of the treasury, and the incomplete condition of the regiments of the Caucasus army, he would have his army resume operations even this year. The details of the last expedition which daily reach this capital excite considerable uneasiness. It is said that the Russian soldiers, despite their blind obedience to their leaders, have refused to march against the enemy, and that it has been necessary to fire on the native auxiliaries to make them fight. The officers have achieved prodigies of bravery, and been cruelly decimated by the enemy. The mountaineers had formed their last entrenchments in the forest of Itchersky with horribly mangled Russian dead bodies. At this sight the soldiers stopped, and it was then that the officers, forming into a corps of volunteers, rushed on and overcame that terrific obstacle. Prince Woronzoff was exposed to the greatest danger, and obliged to use his sword, with his escort, in his personal defence. The army found at Dargo but a heap of ashes; and, if the fire had not spared a few fields of maize in the neighbourhood, it would have been in severe want of provisions."

Cape of Good Hope.—Letters from Graham's Town of the 19th June mention the renewal of the depredations of the native tribes on the Cape frontier. The good effect of the visit of the Governor was fast dying away, and, taking advantage of the long winter nights that had set in, stealing had recommenced. The Kaffirs have taken from near to the spot where De Lange was murdered, about 39 head of cattle, and a party who went in pursuit of the stolen cattle was openly defied by the Kaffirs, and dared to attempt the recapture. Unless vigorous steps be taken by the Government to repress outrage, fresh collisions between the marauding bands of Kaffirs and the colonial farmers, it is said, will be inevitable. A letter from Kaffirland, dated 4th June, states that on the 31st they had one of the severest snow storms ever witnessed in the colony. The mountains were all white, presenting quite an European sight to African eyes.—From Colesberg of the 2d June, we learn that nothing new had transpired over the Orange River. The emigrants who took the oath of allegiance are represented to be patiently waiting the arrival of his excellency to state their grievances, in hopes of being allowed to re-occupy the farms which they had hired from the Griquas.

United States and Mexico.—The Great Britain steam-ship arrived at Liverpool on Monday last, after a passage of 16 days, having left New York on the 30th August. She had very little westerly wind on the passage. One day, with a fine breeze, the ship made 298 miles from noon to noon, being, with loss of time, only twenty-three hours and a half. On her arrival off Liverpool, the passengers presented Lieut. Hoskens with a complimentary address, in which occurs the following passage:—"The question as to the fitness of iron vessels of larger proportions for the navigation of the ocean we hold to be now determined in the affirmative. As regards the Great Britain steam-ship, we beg to observe, that the voyage has not been so rapidly performed as had been expected, because every advantage has not yet been taken of her admirable qualities; and a sufficiency of steam is not produced to work the engines with the power for which they are calculated. In all other respects we consider the Great Britain to be unrivalled; her motions are remarkably easy, her accommodations commodious and airy. We have to express our entire satisfaction with the luxuriant supply of the table, and the excellent arrangement of the steward's department.—Liverpool, September, 1845." The Great Britain brought 600 tons of general cargo, and 57 passengers; but the news is not later than that received by the Hibernia mail-steamer, which arrived at Liverpool on Saturday. The Hibernia sailed from Boston on the 1st, and Halifax on the 3d inst. She therefore brings New York papers to the 30th ult.; Boston, 1st inst.; and Halifax, 3d, inclusive. From the relations at present existing between Mexico and the United States, and from the warlike tone of the advices brought by the previous mail steam-ship, considerable anxiety was evinced for the arrival of the Hibernia. But although her dates extend over a period of 13 days we have no positive information on the subject. Judging, however, from the different items of Mexican news which the papers contain, it would appear that the only thing which can possibly prevent a war between the United States and Mexico is the poverty of the latter. There seems an evident desire on the part of her people to regain their lost territories in Texas. The latest intelligence states that the Mexican Government were making great preparations for war. A large number of troops had marched for the frontier of Texas, the whole force, when assembled, to be under the command of General Bustamente. The Mexicans say that they will march through Texas on their road to the Capitol at Washington, without declaring war. Their Congress had passed the Bill granting to the Government the loan of fifteen millions of dollars to carry on the war, and this amount they confidently expect to raise in England. It was the opinion of prominent men at Vera Cruz that General Almonte would be elected President, in the event of which they say war will be inevitable. The United States, on the other hand, were still engaged in preparing for any rupture that might take place in Texas. The papers contain lengthened and various reports of the movements of the troops of the United States, and of the steps which have been taken by that government to defend its newly acquired territory.—The American papers are filled with accounts of a dispute which had taken place between Mr. Cassius M. Clay, the proprietor and publisher of an Anti-Slavery paper termed the True American, and the inhabitants of Lexington. Mr. Clay seems to have acted with a spirit of firmness and independence, but at last the people rose in a body and took possession of his printing press.—The anti-rent movement still continued. It had assumed a rather alarming appearance, and resembled some of the Irish agrarian outrages. Governor Wright had been obliged to interpose his authority, and has issued a proclamation in which he reviews the origin and progress of the unlawful agitation, and proclaims the county of Delaware, in the State of New York, to be outlawed. The papers teem with frightful details of the mischief perpetrated by the insurrectionists.—The news from Canada is not important. The racecourse at Montreal had been the scene of much riot and confusion on the 23d August, Several Irish labourers had made a general onslaught on the provision and refreshment stands. Considerable injury was done, but happily no lives were lost. The riot was quelled by the military. Prince Henry of the Netherlands seems to have been cordially welcomed by the inhabitants of Newfoundland, and all that hospitality and polite attention could do to make the visit of the illustrious stranger agreeable was done by Sir John Harvey the Governor, and the inhabitants of St. John's.—Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean and Mr. Hacket had reached New York, where the latter made his first appearance as Falstaff. Mr. and Mrs. Kean were to make their début on the 1st inst., at the Park Theatre, in the "Gamester."—The district lately destroyed by fire in New York was rebuilding with great expedition. It is said that in a short time no trace of the sad calamity will be seen. The health of the city was rather unfavourable, and as a natural consequence mortality was very great. With reference to the crops the statements are encouraging, though they have suffered in some districts from the long drought.—We may here notice a paragraph which appears in a Dublin paper, stating that a number of vessels have proceeded to Mexico, to be employed as privateers. The Shamrock, which had been for some years a revenue cruiser on the Irish station, and had been well known at Kingstown as one of the fastest boats in the squadron, was sold by Government some months since, and subsequently proceeded to Liverpool; from whence, two or three weeks since, she sailed for Mexico, the owners intending to take out letters of marque for the privateer service.

South America.—Advices from Buenos Ayres to the 8th July have been received. It was generally believed there that the English and French Ministers had not succeeded in their mission, and that Rosas would not treat with them unless they previously acknowledged his belligerent rights, and allowed the blockade of Monte Video. Mr. Ouseley, it was understood, was not likely to take any hostile steps, notwithstanding the large British naval force in the river, but would await fresh instructions from Europe. It was likewise believed that the French Ministry had been in favour of decisive measures, but that Mr. Ouseley did not find himself in a position to act. Meantime, a Scotch family, named Kidd, living at San Vicente, a short distance from town, consisting of nine persons, adults and children, had been murdered in the most brutal manner, the children having been murdered in the presence of their parents; and it was feared that this was only the prelude to a resumption of former scenes of midnight assassination, which are now directed against the English and French inhabitants, with the full knowledge of Gen. Rosas. The Sultana, which brings this news, after lying four months at Buenos Ayres, not seeing any hope of a speedy removal of the prohibition to land her cargo, which had been issued in consequence of her having touched at Monte Video for a pilot, has brought it back to Liverpool. The loss must be very great. It is stated in private letters that the interference by European powers in the quarrel between Buenos Ayres and Monte Video, with an evident leaning on the part of England in favour of the latter, as indicated by the proceedings of Commodore Purvis, has created a strong sympathy in the minds of the Americans for Gen. Rosas. Monte Video letters of the 2d July state, that things remained without change there.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Bank of England.—At the half-yearly meeting of the proprietors, held on Thursday, a resolution was carried unanimously, declaring a dividend of 3½ per cent., and a sum of 15,353*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.* was carried to the rest account, which now amounts to 3,094,378*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.* A considerable balance appears to the credit of the Government in the Bank statement, which will continue until the payment of the October dividends. In the course of the meeting it transpired that the directors have had in contemplation the establishment of a branch bank at the west end of town, but that, so far, nothing has been determined upon. This information has created an interest in the monied circles on the other side of Temple-bar, but it is probably the great respectability and extensive wealth of the bankers in that locality which has deterred the authorities of Threadneedle-street from carrying out their scheme of setting up a west-end branch for the present.

Dinner to Sir J. Emerson Tennent.—On Wednesday the friends of Sir J. E. Tennent gave him a farewell dinner at Lovegrove's. The Irish Society of London took the initiative in this mark of respect to its founder, and a splendid dessert service, value 700 guineas, was presented by his fellow-countrymen to the new Secretary for Ceylon. Sergeant Murphy, M.P., presided, Rev. Dr. Croly filling the vice-chair. Dwarkanauth Tagore, the Indian Prince, was present at the meeting, which numbered many distinguished artists, merchants, and literary characters. An admirable address was read by R. Bell, Esq., and feelingly acknowledged by the distinguished guest.

The British Museum.—On Monday, pursuant to instructions from the Trustees, the last portion of the old Museum, formerly known as Montague-house, was sold by auction, in order to be cleared away for the site of the new front. This consisted of the centre building with the lofty dome, the entrance hall, the grand staircase, with the various painted ceilings in the different apartments on the ground-floor, about 20 tons of lead, the old library, show-rooms, brick-work, &c. The lead fetched 354*l.*, the brick-work 342*l.*, and the whole realised about 1300*l.* The whole building must be cleared away in 28 working days, when the new stone front will be immediately raised, as the walls are already erected. In the interim the public will be admitted on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at a temporary entrance to the west of the large gates.

Disappearance of Tom Thumb.—A French paper states that a great sensation has been created at Nantes by the sudden disappearance of General Tom Thumb. "The pigmy general wishing to attend the races at Quimper, left Vannes, with his suite, at 6 o'clock, and was expected to have soon returned. Apartments had been previously engaged for him. His carriage broke down near Roasse, a village situated a short distance from Quimperlé, inducing a very disagreeable delay. The postilion refused to wait the requisite time for the necessary repairs, observing that his orders were positive to return to Quimperlé at a particular hour, and vain was all persuasion to change his resolution; but he assured them that he would inform his master, and that another conductor should be immediately sent with fresh horses to continue their route. After waiting a considerable time, the conductor and horses arrived, the repairs were completed, and General Tom Thumb mounted the carriage. Scarcely had they driven a league when the horses stopped suddenly, the conductor descended, and perceived an immense heap of billets of wood; at the same instant four men, masked, seized and bound the driver, and threatened if he uttered a cry to shoot him. During this scene the general and his suite were locked in the arms of Morpheus. One of the four masks mounted the seat of the carriage, and drove rapidly to St. Thurien. It was only at this place that the general learnt his misfortune. The carriage started from St. Thurien—to where is still unknown. Amongst many it is conjectured that he is concealed in some inviolable domicile. Others affirm that a lady, from excess of fantasy, has eloped with him to the neighbourhood of Guilligomach. The most likely version is, that the four men in masks belong to the band of Zino, called Comte d'Avenal, famed for its audacity and temerity. One fact is certain, that the general has not been seen or heard of since his departure."

The New District Asylums.—The project for erecting asylums for the houseless poor in several parts in and around the metropolis has met with strong opposition in Marylebone and Greenwich. A meeting of the ratepayers and others of both parishes was held last week for the purpose of opposing the project, and appointing deputations to wait upon the Poor-law Commissioners. In the first parish 24 guardians were appointed to wait upon the Commissioners, but the latter refused to receive such an imposing array. The number was then reduced to eight, and this body, headed by the Rector, Dr. Spry, had an interview with the Commissioners on Thursday, and stated their objections to the proposed measure. The Commissioners declined any discussion on the subject, but promised to send a reply in writing in a few days. The same result happened in regard to the Greenwich deputation, and on Wednesday the Commissioners sent their answer to the latter, stating that they "regretted differing with the Greenwich Board of Guardians, but saw no ground for excluding the Greenwich Union." A meeting of the board was forthwith held, and after a lengthened discussion, in which every member of the board took part, a motion was made, that this board do now proceed to the election, which was met by an amendment, that the board do adjourn for a week. The amendment being lost, Messrs. Parsons and Bowditch were unanimously elected, together with Mr. Carter, ex-officio managers for the Greenwich Union.

Cost of the Poor in Middlesex.—The appendix to the 11th annual report of the Poor Law Commissioners contains, among other returns, one relating to the amount of money levied and expended for the relief and maintenance of the poor in each union, and for parishes not united under the Poor Law Amendment Act in England and Wales for the year ended the 25th of March, 1844, &c. It thence appears that, during that year, the amount levied by assessment for the poor-rate in Middlesex (consisting of the Finsbury, Holborn, and Tower divisions of the Ossulston Hundred, and the city and liberty of Westminster) was 348,130*l.* There was, in addition to that sum, a further amount of 19,147*l.* received from other sources in aid of the poor-rate; thus making a total received for the relief, &c., of the poor of 367,277*l.* The amount expended during the above period, in relief, &c., of the poor in the said parishes was 175,740*l.* 19*s.*; the sum of 3850*l.* was expended in law charges; a further amount of 508*l.* was paid to the various vaccinators, under the Vaccination Extension Act, besides an outlay of 20*l.* for register and certificate books; 2593*l.* was paid in fees to clergyman and registrars, and 65*l.*, as outlay for register, offices, books, forms, and other incidental expenses, under the provisions of the Registration Act. The payments under the Parochial Assessments Acts (for surveys, valuations, &c.) and loans repaid under the same, amounted to 528*l*; the payments towards the county-rate to 50,846*l.*; and those towards the county and local police forces, 92,319*l.* The money expended for all other purposes amounted to 31,250*l.*; the total parochial rates, &c., 357,724*l.* For medical relief there was an outlay, during the same period of 12 months, of 6273*l.* in the above parishes, which are not in union under the Poor Law Amendment Act.

Destructive Fire in Blackfriars.—On Tuesday afternoon, between the hours of 1 and 2, a fire of a most fearful character, attended with a large destruction of property and fatal consequences to one, if not several persons, broke out upon the well-known premises belonging to Sir Charles Price and Co., oil and colour merchants, situate in William-street, Blackfriars. The premises were of immense extent, and spreading from William-street to the water-side. The fire originated, from some cause at present unknown, in that portion of the premises termed the turpentine warehouse, a large brick building, about 60 feet long and 50 feet wide, situate on the western side of the works adjoining Messrs. Hoppe's extensive coal-yards on Pig's Quay Wharf. At the time the alarm was given the men employed on the works had gone to dinner. From the combustible nature of the stock, the premises were enveloped in a broad sheet of flame before the engines could arrive. The New River mains in the neighbourhood yielded a good supply of water, and the different land engines at once took advantage of it, and threw large streams of water upon and into the burning property; but the firemen were unable to make the least impression upon the flames. Meanwhile they progressed most fearfully, and being perceivable from the different bridges the large floating engine was brought up the river, and, being manned by upwards of 150 men, it was also brought into action. For some time the firemen continued working without meeting with any great obstacle, with the exception of sundry explosions, caused by the bursting of oil and turpentine casks; but towards 3 o'clock a fearful noise was heard to proceed from the premises on fire, caused by the falling of the upper floor of the warehouse and the ignition of one of the turpentine vats, which causing the vessel to burst, the lighted spirit rushed through the windows and doors with the swiftness of lightning, and mounted several feet into the air. At that time about 30 men were employed working one of the brigade engines alongside the fire, and to escape from the fire many of the men had no alternative but to jump into the Thames. The turpentine and oil mixed together flowed out of the building from every aperture in huge streams of liquid fire, spreading over the space between the two warehouses where the engine stood, and which an instant before had been covered with firemen. One or two firemen still lingered, hoping to quench the flames with the water that flowed copiously from the branches; but the fire irresistibly spread across the whole space, and in a moment broke the windows of the opposite warehouses and ascended through every opening, and poured into it in sheets of flame. The warehouse was full of oil and other inflammable matter, and so rapid was the devouring element that it was with difficulty many who were in the warehouse escaped from this second devastation. At the end of the wharf, near the river, now covered with a burning stream of inflammable matter, a general rush was made to the water-side, and into the river many people precipitated themselves; but the burning turpentine ran in the same direction, and on falling into the water it floated along the surface, setting in flames six or seven barges. The scene at that moment was of a most agonising character. At a moderate calculation, there must have been nearly 100 persons standing upon the different craft in the river, and to escape from being devoured by the flames, they also leaped into the river, but they even then became surrounded with fire. A number of small boats quickly put off to render assistance to the poor fellows, and several were rescued and conveyed in safety to the shore. The scene from Blackfriars-bridge can be better imagined than described, the foot-paths being literally studded with human beings, who shouted loudly to the boats to approach and save the unfortunate men, and the horror of the scene was aggravated by the cries of some women, who recognised their relatives on board the burning barges. The progress of the fire was now so great, that the engine before spoken of as standing beside the blazing building, the firemen were unable to draw away, and on the flames receding a little, the machine was found a perfect wreck, every portion of it except the iron work being consumed; and near the wreck was found the body of a man burnt to ashes. There is little doubt that the poor fellow was one of those who were working at the engine, and missing his way had, instead of jumping into the river, become fixed against a wooden gate, and in that situation was compelled to remain until death terminated his sufferings. During the whole time the engines in the streets continued to work most vigorously, and kept up a constant and powerful stream of water. The heat thrown out was so intense, and the city gas-works were so close, that at one period it was feared that the gasometer would explode. A messenger was therefore sent to most of the large establishments in the city, requesting the proprietors to light their burners, and thereby exhaust all the gas they possibly could. The different firemen, under the command of their several officers, exerted themselves to the utmost, and by extraordinary exertions they succeeded in arresting the progress of the flames just as they had laid hold of Messrs. Hoppe's premises. By 7 o'clock the fire was safely extinguished, nevertheless, it was found advisable to keep a number of the engines at work during the night, lest another outbreak should occur. The amount of property destroyed was very considerable; at a moderate estimate it must extend to several thousand pounds. Upon an examination being made by the firemen, they found that the building in which the fire originated, together with its contents, was entirely destroyed: the opposite premises, used as oil stores, are likewise extensively injured, and so are the buildings belonging to the Messrs. Hoppe, coal merchants. Several barges belonging to the same firm, and two the property of Mr. Nowell, of Paul's-chain, are greatly damaged, and the floating-engine has likewise received extensive injury. Sir C. Price's firm are fully insured; the premises are the property of the Bridewell Hospital Corporation. On Thursday an inquest was held on the body of the fireman, who was identified by his friends on the previous day. After a long inquiry, the Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death, caused by a fire, but how such fire originated there was no evidence to show."

Dreadful Explosion at Woolwich Arsenal.—A melancholy accident happened on Wednesday morning in the Royal Arsenal, at Woolwich. A few minutes before 10 o'clock a loud explosion was heard in the Laboratory Department. As soon as ingress could be obtained, a fearful spectacle presented itself. Immediately behind the door, crowded together in a confused heap, lay the scorched bodies of five men and two boys. The building being on fire, the alarm bell was rung, and the engines from the different departments, with the Sappers and Miners and Artillery, were speedily on the spot. The flames were soon subdued, their ravages being confined to the building, the roof of which had been already blown off, and some slight damage done to the roof of an adjacent building. It would appear, from what has been gleaned in other parts of the same department (for not one of the unfortunate beings in the building has escaped to furnish any information), that the men and boys were at the time employed in breaking up rockets, and through some friction the whole mass must have accidentally ignited. The names of the persons who thus lost their lives are Mr. John Crake, the foreman, aged 70, and one of the oldest servants in the department; Henry Butters, an aged man with a large family, and his son, Henry Butters, a young married man; Robert Burbage, and Michael Purtill. Four of these were what is called laboratory men. In addition to these, two boys named Leonard and Henley lost their lives. Purtill was a labourer belonging to the storekeeper's department, and was engaged at the time in loading rockets. A man named Reid, who was engaged with him a few minutes before, had a very narrow escape. It would appear that when the occurrence took place, the unfortunate persons made a rush towards the door. Unfortunately, the door opened inwards, and to this circumstance some of the chief officers of the establishment attribute their destruction. By the side of the door out of which they had endeavoured to escape, their blackened corpses were found. Their clothes, and even their boots, were either wholly or partially consumed, their bodies literally roasted, and the flesh in many cases deeply incised; every vestige of hair was burnt off their heads, and their features so disfigured as to render their identification almost impossible. As soon as the fire was subdued, a party of Sappers and Miners under the command of Colonel Barney, one of the heads of the department, proceeded to pull down the remaining parts of the shed, many of which were in a dangerous state. The remains of a dog were discovered in one corner of the building.

Metropolitan Improvements.—On Monday the new street called Endell-street, formerly Hanover and Belton-street, leading from Long-acre to Broad-street, Bloomsbury, together with the continuous line of thoroughfare, now named Bloomsbury-street, previously Plum-tree and Charlotte-streets, were thrown open for the passage of vehicles, thus giving the long-desired direct line of communication between the northern and southern parts of the metropolis, it being now nearly a straight road over Waterloo-bridge, from the Elephant and Castle to Hampstead.

Balloon Ascent.—On Friday Mr. H. Green made what was announced to be the last night ascent of the season, in the Coronation balloon, with a display of fireworks. The weather was most propitious, and the balloon took a S.W. direction, descending in Surrey.

The Murder of Eliza Grimwood.—On Saturday George Hill, the private in the 67th Foot, who had made a confession that he was the murderer of Eliza Grimwood, seven years ago, was brought before the magistrate at Southwark Office, for further examination. Among those who had assembled on the occasion were his wife and daughter, about five or six years of age. Since last Saturday the inspector had ascertained the previous history of the prisoner, and several witnesses were in attendance to prove that the prisoner could not be the murderer of Eliza Grimwood. Mr. Thomas, the superintendent of the London and Westminster Steam-packet Company, proved that the prisoner had been ticket collector in the service of the company in May, 1838, and produced an account-book with the signature of the prisoner on the day of the murder, and on subsequent days. He had not absented himself from his place of business, nor exhibited any conduct to induce a belief that he had committed a murder. George Hill stated that he was well acquainted with the prisoner at the period when Eliza Grimwood was murdered. They were constantly together at the time. He well recollected that the prisoner manifested the same degree of sympathy on reading the particulars of the murder in the papers as most people did on the occasion. He was sure that the prisoner could have had nothing to do with the murder. The next witness was Joseph Spechnell, the cabman who drove Eliza Grimwood home on the night of the murder with a gentleman, supposed to be the murderer. He said that he had seen the gentleman's face. He had large black whiskers, and was in no respect like the prisoner. Inspector Field said that he had not made any further inquiries, as he considered that the evidence already adduced was sufficient to prove that the prisoner was not the murderer. The magistrate said it was impossible to understand why the prisoner had made the self-accusation. It had been necessary for public justice that a full inquiry should take place, and it appeared that the confession was false. He should therefore discharge the prisoner, and advised him to report himself at once to the Horse Guards, or he would be apprehended as a deserter and punished accordingly. The prisoner did not utter a word during the examination, and left the court by one door while his wife and child went out at another.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Sept. 13:—West Districts, 109; Northern, 138; Central, 165; Eastern, 204; Southern, 224; Total, 840; males, 450; females, 390. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1184; males, 619, females, 565.

Provincial.

Andover.—On Saturday morning the members of the Board of Guardians met at the Union workhouse upon special summons, to consider a variety of important matters connected with the present position of affairs in the Andover Union with reference to the charges against Mr. M'Dougal the master. The reporters were excluded, and consequently no detailed account of the meeting has been published. The board continued their meeting for nearly three hours, and from what has since transpired it appears that Mr. Soper, guardian of Minxton, moved that M'Dougal be dismissed: Mr. Pike, of the parish of Chute, seconding the same. The result was, that 10 guardians voted for the dismissal of the master, and 22 for his retaining his situation. On the same day Mr. Westlake received an answer to his former letter to the Poor-law Commissioners, in which he declined the onerous duty of becoming the prosecutor of the case in a court of law. In this document the Commissioners recommended to the board of guardians to suspend Mr. M'Dougal, stating that they had no wish that he should continue in charge of the workhouse, whilst the charges as set forth in the evidence were pending. The commissioners stated that they considered a prosecution before a jury preferable to a renewal of the inquiry before the Assistant Commisioner, but in either case they urged his immediate suspension, until the charges brought against him be effectually settled. They also expressed their intention of resuming the inquiry before the Assistant Commissioner in the event of Mr. Westlake declining to prosecute. On Monday, Mr. Parker, the Assistant Commissioner, communicated officially to that gentleman that he had been instructed to re-open the inquiry. On Wednesday, this renewed investigation commenced, and evidence was received on the part of the master and matron of the Union workhouse in reply to the charges already investigated. The master, however, requested further time to prepare his defence, and the inquiry was again adjourned to Tuesday next. The re-opening of the inquiry gives general satistaction; Mr. M'Dougal's friends assert that it will give him an opportunity of clearing himself from the weighty charges brought against him; his prosecutors, on the other hand, look forward with confidence for his dismissal, if not further punishment. In the meantime, while the late sitting was suspended, a private inquiry into the bone-crushing business was made by the reporter of the Times and the correspondent of the Morning Chronicle. The parties examined all readily admitted, as, indeed, do the authorities themselves, that it was in many instances want of food which compelled the poor creatures to gnaw the bones they had to crush, so as to appease the cravings of hunger.

Birkenhead.—Four brickmakers were apprehended here on Sunday night on a charge of being the murderers of Mr. T. Peacop, who was waylaid and robbed on the night of the 31st December, whilst on his road from Rock Ferry to Bebbington. The unfortunate man died a day or two afterwards of the injuries he received. The prisoners have undergone several preliminary examinations, and are remanded for further inquiry. Their apprehension was in consequence of the receipt of an anonymous letter from Ireland by the chief of the Birkenhead police, and one of the prisoners who was taken in Dublin has since turned approver against the other three.

Coventry.—The new Catholic church in this city, the nave of which was opened 12 months ago, having been completed, the full dedication and opening took place last week. The consecration, which occupied about six hours, took place on Tuesday, in presence of a limited audience; and, on the following day, a large congregation was drawn together to witness the imposing forms connected with the solemnization. High mass was chanted by Bishop Wiseman, who was assisted by eight bishops, mitred, and wearing the costume of their order. The sermon was preached by Bishop Sharples, and the choral parts of the service were performed by the choir of the Birmingham Catholic cathedral. There were present about 100 of the Catholic priesthood, with a great number of visitors from all parts of the surrounding counties; the morning duties took up full three hours. In the evening, vespers were chanted by Bishop Wiseman, assisted by other prelates; a sermon was preached by Dr. Brown, bishop of Wales; and the whole concluded by a solemn benediction pronounced by Bishop Walsh.

Exeter.—Some fanatics have been preaching at Exeter to immense audiences, announcing that the end of the world is fixed for the 10th October next. A daily paper adds to this announcement that dividends are due at the bank on the same day.

Hounslow.—On Saturday last, Mrs. Theobald, a lady well known in the sporting world, especially by those who hunt with the Queen's hounds, died at Feltham Lodge, near Hounslow, in consequence of the injury she received on the previous day by a fall from her horse. Mrs. Theobald, in company with a Mr. Brettell, on passing by the fields of Mr. Humphries, farmer, of Hanworth, made a request to be allowed to try her horse over the stubble, which was readily granted. She entered, but had not gone far, when the horse fell, and the crutch of her saddle breaking at the same time, she was thrown on her head with great violence. She remained senseless for some time. Mr. Brettell sent immediately for a surgeon, who saw at once that there existed no hopes of Mrs. Theobald's recovery. The unfortunate lady was removed to her residence at Feltham, where an inquest was held on Monday. Several witnesses were examined who deposed to the above facts, and the jury returned a verdict of accidental death. It was stated by one of the witnesses that he had seen a horse fall with the deceased lady while hunting, and she always retained her seat, which no doubt she would have been able to have done on Friday but for the breaking of the saddle.

Moreton Hampstead.—A destructive fire broke out in this place on Saturday morning, and as always happens in those towns and villages of Devonshire where the houses are thatched, the loss of property was immense. The fire broke out in a baker's shop in Cross-street, and although the engines of the town, and others which arrived from Exeter, 12 miles distant, were in full operation, the whole street and a part of Fore-street adjoining were speedily in ruins. No less than 50 houses were consumed. The chief portion of the building property is said to be insured; but most of the inmates, chiefly of the poorer classes, are uninsured, and the destitute condition they are thrown into must be very severe. A similar fire has not occurred in the county for a number of years.

Manchester.—It appears from the Manchester Guardian (a League organ), that the number of letters posted by the League was so enormous, that the Post-office clerks "found it altogether impracticable to sort for delivery on the 25th the thousands of notices of objection which were posted on the 22d, 23d, and 24th" ult., in consequence of which "a great number" of the objections to parties in Manchester and the adjoining townships, and other counties, did not reach the overseers to whom they were addressed till Thursday, the 28th.

Newmarket.—On Saturday week, Mr. Henry Thorns, a hatter of this place, was killed by a blow from Mr. Richard Archer, a clerk to a solicitor in the town, who had become well known as a pugilist. The quarrel in which this occurred had its origin in the bankruptcy of Mr. Edwards, the banker, of Newmarket. It appears that some of the creditors considered it their duty to oppose Mr. Edwards, and in the person of Mr. Thorns he was accordingly opposed in the Court of Bankruptcy. This gave rise to some ill-will between the parties, and Mr. Archer, being a friend of Mr. Edwards, took up his cause, declaring that he would "serve out" the deceased, or something to the same effect. On Saturday they met by accident in the street, and after some angry words, Mr. Archer knocked down Mr. Thorns who died in a few hours. Mr. Archer has been committed for trial on the charge of manslaughter.

Norwich.—The eighth musical festival, held in this city every three years, commenced on Tuesday under very favourable auspices. Every exertion had been made and no outlay spared to secure the services of effective musicians. The principal vocalists included the names of Grisi and Mario, Madame Caradori Allan, Herr Staudigl, and Signor F. Lablache, seconded by Miss Poole, Miss Dolby, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. Machin, and Mr. Hawkins. The orchestral band consisted of the greater portion of the established reputations of the metropolis, including Messrs. Lindley, Puzzi, Harper, Howell, and the Cards. The choral band consisted of 272 performers—84 trebles, 50 altos, 68 tenors, and 70 basses, comprising the strength of the Norwich Choral Society and the Ladies' Choral Society, assisted by the choruses of Exeter-hall. The whole was under that well-known musician, Signor Benedict. The leader was Mr. T. Cooke; and Mr. Turle, of Westminster-abbey, presided at the organ. The performances commenced on Tuesday evening with a concert in St. Andrew's-hall, including Handel's "Alexander's Feast," with selections from Mozart's "Seraglio," the "Zauberflote," and "Semiramide." .. The morning performance on Wednesday consisted of Haydon's "Seasons," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and a "Hymn" by Weber. In the evening there was a selection from "Don Giovanni," the "Puritani," "Acis and Galatea," &c. The morning performance on Thursday consisted of Purcell's "Jubilate," a selection from Mozart's "Requiem" and Spohr's "Calvary." In the evening the performances comprised Beethoven's Symphony of Symphonies, in C minor, and a selection from Mendelssohn's music for the "Midsummer Night's Dream." The third morning performance yesterday (Friday) consisted of "The Messiah," and in the evening the festival closed with a grand ball. The attendance was extremely numerous and select, and the receipts above the average.

Oxford.—During the present long vacation great progress has been made in the restoration of the decayed parts of several colleges. The beautiful tower over the west gate of Christ Church is undergoing a complete repair; one wing of the front of Queen's is nearly finished. Brazenose has been long under repair and enlargement. The whole of the extensive front and side of All Souls has now been cased with Bath stone. This has been continued in consecutive long vacations for several years; the length of front and west side is upwards of 200 yards. Several old buildings adjoining Magdalen are being removed to make extensive additions to that college.

Portsmouth.—A large augmentation in the number of artizans and labourers in all our dockyards will take place immediately. No less than 426 additional are ordered to be entered in this dockyard, and further arrangements are in progress. With the increased force four large war-steamers are to be built upon the designs of Mr. Fincham, the master-shipwright and Mr. White, the yacht-builder, of Cowes. These vessels will be got off the stocks with all possible dispatch. A daily report is ordered to be made of the state of the 30 advanced ships of the line, and all stores not perishable, and furniture not liable to deteriorate by being afloat, are to be put on board as soon as convenient. The steam guard-ships are to be brought forward immediately; in fact, some of them have already been taken in hand. Orders have also been received at Woolwich Dockyard to expedite the building of the Royal Albert, of 120 guns; and a number of shipwrights commenced work upon her last week. The Amphion, 36, converting into a steam-vessel with screw propeller, is ordered to be completed as soon as possible for commission; and the Niger steam-vessel, ordered to be built at that dockyard, is to be proceeded with. These works of course require an extra number of hands. Similar activity prevails at Sheerness to expedite the works at that dockyard, and numerous hands have been recently added, to be employed on task-work.

Stowe.—It was announced, in one of the daily papers of Tuesday, that a serious accident had happened to the Duke of Buckingham, by the explosion of his gun in shooting. This statement was incorrect so far as the Duke himself was concerned, since the accident alluded to did not occur to his Grace, but to Mr. James Hogg, son of Mr. Hogg, M.P. for Beverley, who is an officer in the Guards. Mr. Hogg is going on very well, and it is hoped that the accident will not render the amputation of more than one finger necessary.

Warwick.—An accident happened a few days since to Sir J. Mordaunt, M.P., for this county, while shooting. It appears that Mr. Mills was shooting with Sir J. Mordaunt, accompanied only by the keepers. Before crossing a fence Mr. Mills was uncocking his gun, when the hammer of the left barrel slipped from his finger, and a great portion of the contents glancing from a rail which they shattered, lodged in the leg of Sir J. Mordaunt, who was eight or nine yards in advance. The extraction of the shots, some of which reached the bone, has caused great pain; but though recovery will be gradual, no permanent injury is apprehended.

Winchester.—The British Archæological Association, or as it is now called the "Archæological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland," held their general meeting on Monday, when the rules and regulations under which the association will in future be conducted were submitted for confirmation; the election of the governing central committee was also made, a general statement of accounts laid before the members, and the place of annual meeting for the ensuing year selected. The report stated that there were now 700 subscribing members, with a balance in hand of 529*l*. The President then made excuses for the non-attendance of the following gentlemen, who were expected to have taken part in the proceedings,—the Deans of Exeter, Salisbury, Peterborough, and Chichester, the Chevalier Bunsen, Archdeacon Burney, Rev. Dr. Spry, Messrs. Hardwicke, A. Poynter, A. Acland, R. B. Phillips, Sidney Herbert, M.P., and Mr. Turnbull, Secretary of the Antiquarian Society of Scotland. His lordship then detailed the history of the recent schism, showing that the minority who held their meeting lately under the presidency of Lord A. Conyngham had no right to turn out the majority of the committee. His lordship said that with this feeling, he had no hesitation in accepting the presidency of this meeting, and he did so to mark his opinion as President of the Royal Society, because he thought it necessary to mark an irregularity most dangerous as a precedent. He then announced that as two societies under the same title had been found inconvenient to the public, the Committee had resolved to suggest that the title of their Association should be altered to that of the Archæological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland. This was acceded to unanimously, and the thanks of the meeting were given by acclamation to the Marquis of Northampton, who was also requested to act as President for the year ensuing. It was also resolved that the next meeting be held at York. The thanks of the Institute were then given to the Dean and Chapter, the local clergy, the Recorder, the High Sheriff and Members of the county and city, and to Mr. Way, for the valuable services they had rendered to the meeting, which was shortly afterwards dissolved. From these details, and from those published last week, it is evident that this has been a very successful meeting, not only in the number of enrolled members, but in the rank and talent enlisted in its support. The chief objects of the Institute, as now constituted, are to promote personal intercourse between antiquaries and historical inquirers who reside in various parts of the country, and to afford an agreeable and instructive opportunity for the investigation of subjects of interest, especially such as exist in the locality where the meeting takes place. Each annual subscriber of 1*l.* is entitled to attend all discussions, meetings, and excursions, to introduce one lady, and to receive gratuitously an octavo volume containing a full account of the transactions of the meeting, in illustration of the chief local objects of antiquarian and historical research.

Railways.

The meetings of railway companies held during the week mostly include those of new projects, the merits of which are brought before the public with the view of obtaining increased support. One or two of the old companies have declared dividends, but the greater number of the regular half-yearly meetings have already gone by. The South-Eastern pays a dividend of 16*s.* per share (less income-tax) on the old shares, and of the proportionate amounts of 4*s.* upon the No. 1 shares, and of 2*s.* 2*d.* on the No. 2 shares. The balance to be carried to the credit of the next half-year's account, after discharging the dividend, was 30,372*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.* A considerable increase has occurred in the revenue derivable from passenger traffic, and the reduction of charges on the carriage of merchandise has been attended with considerable success.—The accounts of the Grand Junction show a considerable increase in the traffic of the line compared with 1844. After the payment of a bonus of 2*l.* per share on the old shares, and of 1*l.* per share on the 5*l.* paid up of the 22,033 eighth-shares, there was a small balance of 306*l.* 13*s.* to the credit of the company. All charges are to be abolished on the registration of transfers, or on the issue or endorsement of certificates. The company will create and issue 24,780 shares of 25*l.* each for the purposes of the Trent Valley Railway Act.—The Great Grimsby, the Sheffield and Lincolnshire, and the East Lincolnshire have amalgamated at par with the Sheffield and Manchester; the last mentioned company paying 5 per cent. on all calls upon the three railways until they are made, which will be within two years.—At the meeting of the supporters of the Rugby, Derby, and Manchester held at Derby, resolutions have been passed in favour of the line, notwithstanding opponents were in the field. It was stated that this line could be constructed in the short space of six months from the commencement of the works.—At a meeting in favour of the Leeds, Dewsbury, and Manchester project, it was resolved to form a line from the trunk to Wakefield, and from Wakefield to Oakenshaw, to join the Midland and the Wakefield, Pontefract, and Goole, and also to meet the Doncaster branch of the proposed London and York. To perfect these and other improvements an additional capital of 400,000*l.* will be required, which is to be raised by the issue of 16,000 half-shares of 25*l.* each, in the proportion of seven to each holder of five original shares.—A meeting in favour of the Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Stour Valley line has been held at Halesowen. The projectors stated that they intend to unite the line with the Oxford, Worcester, Wolverhampton, and Grand Junction, but without detracting unfairly from the traffic of either. The line, it is understood, will be worked by the Birmingham Company.—At the Scottish Junction meeting the successful passage of the Bill through the Legislature was the chief topic of discussion. The report stated that the works on the line have all been contracted for, and that operations were commenced.—The works of the North British are making rapid progress, and there seems every reason for believing that it will be opened in the month of May next. The balance on hand in favour of the company, according to the accounts, is 93,291*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.* Early calls will be made to provide the necessary funds for the several contracts on the line. The question of Sunday travelling was introduced, but the proposed discontinuance of the trains found little support.—The Edinburgh and Northern is proceeding with the plans of construction. The projectors were severely opposed in Parliament, but they have now apparently surmounted the chief of their difficulties. The accounts show a balance of 16,122*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.* The amount expended in the contest for the Bill was 17,000*l.*—The shareholders of the Direct Northern line have agreed to reorganise their company, and again to appear before Parliament. Mr. Miller, the new engineer, proposes a railway which will be 10 miles shorter than the London and York. The capital of the new company is to be 4,000,000*l.*, divided into 160,000 shares of 25*l.* each. The contest of the last session cost about 30*s.* per share.—The committee of the Stirling, Dunfermline, and Queensferry Company have issued 24,000 shares of 25*l.* each, all of which have been subscribed for. The amount deposited is 36,000*l.* Branches are to be formed in connexion with the Scottish Central, the Edinburgh and Glasgow, the Edinburgh and Perth, and the Edinburgh and Northern Companies.—At the special meeting of the Preston and Wyre a resolution was passed authorising the directors to take the necessary steps for making a branch to communicate with the Lancaster and Carlisle from Fleetwood to Lancaster.—The Waterford and Kilkenny Company have adopted their first general report, and appointed officers. A fine seam of coal has been discovered in the neighbourhood of the line, which, it is stated, will be highly advantageous to the company.—At the Eastern Union meeting the proprietors were congratulated on the sanction of Parliament to the line between Ipswich and Bury St. Edmund's, comprising 15 miles of the route towards Norwich. The directors support the Yarmouth and Waveney line. The receipts of the company on deposits had been 54,000*l.*, and the expenditure 14,360*l.*—A compromise advantageous to all parties has been agreed on between the projectors of the Devon and Cornwall Central, the Dartmouth, Torbay, and Exeter, and the Bideford and Tavistock Companies.—The Shrewsbury and Trent Valley Company have united with the Shropshire Union, and meetings have been held of the Directors of the Blackburn, Chorley, and Liverpool, and Blackburn, Darwen, and Bolton lines, relative, it is rumoured, to an amalgamation of the two companies.—The surveys for the London, Newbury, and Bath Direct, which is to convert the Kennet and Avon Canal into a railway, have commenced, and a provisional committee has been appointed.—It is stated that if the grand experiment of the atmospheric principle should terminate successfully, it is the intention of the directors of the Great Midland and Western Railway and Canal Company to adopt it upon their line. By a recent survey it has been found that the canal banks will be available for the purposes of the railroad for almost the entire of its course; and serious attention will be given to the feasibility of working the line by the water-power of the canal, in case the atmospheric traction should be adopted.—Several owners and occupiers of land at Windermere and Grassmere have determined to withhold their consent to any line passing through the Lake district, and a vigorous opposition to the schemes already proposed is intended.—A new line called "The Queen's Own," which consists of a branch from the terminus at Gosport into the Royal Clarence Victualling Yard, constructed for Her Majesty's accommodation on her visits to Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight, was opened on Saturday by a special train, which arrived from London conveying the Cabinet Ministers to a Council held at Osborne House. The Ministers expressed their satisfaction at the increased facilities this line would afford Her Majesty for privacy and convenience. The railway originated in a suggestion made to the directors by Prince Albert on one of the royal visits to the Isle of Wight. The length of the rail, from the Gosport terminus to the pier or stage in the Clarence-yard, is about 600 yards, and going through the Gosport fortifications, crossing the moat upon piles, a bridge or tunnel admits the train through the lines; thus the upper part of the works are not interfered with, and the promenade is left for the public, as before. The whole cost of construction is under 8,000*l.*—The model of a very simple but ingenious contrivance for the purpose of enabling the guards of a train to instantly communicate with the engine-driver, in case of any danger being perceived, was exhibited on Saturday evening, at the Bristol terminus of the Bristol and Birmingham line, by its inventor, Mr. J. K. Williams, the superintendent of the line. The machine consists of a large box, having on its top a large and sonorous bell, which is struck like the bell of a clock. Within the box is a piece of clockwork, precisely similar to that of an alarum, and a red lamp for foggy weather or night; and from the box, which is intended to be affixed to the nearest carriage to the engine, ropes proceed over the roofs of the various carriages to the guard's box, who, upon perceiving any signal of danger or obstruction on the line, has only to pull the cord, and the large bell is instantly rung, and the red lamp shown, if at night; or a large board with the word "stop" upon it flies up, so that the engine-driver's attention is attracted both by sight and sound to the impending danger. The model was highly approved of by several scientific persons.—The members of the Manchester Stock Exchange have submitted a case for the opinion of counsel repecting the legality of bargains in letters of allotment of railway companies provisionally registered, in bankers' receipts, and in scrip. The case was submitted to the Attorney-General, Mr. Ogle, of the Western, and Mr. Cowling, of the Northern Circuit, whose opinion is that sales of letters of allotment, bankers' receipts, and scrip, issued by companies provisionally registered, established before the 1st November last, are legal, not being within the provisions of the statute 7 and 8 Victoria, c. 110; but they are also of opinion that such sales are illegal of companies established after the said 1st November last, these companies being within the provisions of the before-mentioned statute; and that to legalise sales in companies established after the date above specified, complete registration is requisite. They are of opinion that sales of scrip are legal after complete registration, before the companies have obtained their acts of Parliament.—The jury empanelled to inquire into the causes of the death of the two persons killed in the late fatal accident on the Birmingham and Bristol line, after numerous adjournments and protracted sittings, returned, on Wednesday night, a verdict of "Accidental Death" in both cases, with a deodand of 1500*l.* (the value of the engine), on the luggage engine driven by Ward.

Ireland.

Dublin.—An extensive movement is now organising in Ireland, which is likely to attract considerable notice for some time to come, being nothing less than the revival of the Orange Institution, which was put down some years ago by the censure of the House of Commons and the Throne. This does not imply merely meetings or processions, such as have recently taken place, but the actual re-organisation of the Orange Society, a measure which has been discussed, resolved on, and publicly announced by men of rank and influence in Ireland. It appears that a secret meeting was held for this purpose on the 27th ult., at Enniskillen. The Earl of Enniskillen, brother-in-law of the late Lord Lieutenant, Lord De Grey, was in the chair, and a series of resolutions were agreed to, which after some delay have been permitted to see the light. They are as follow: 1. Proposed by Col. Verner, M.P.; and seconded by the Hon. S. Maxwell: Resolved—That the circumstances of the times render it absolutely necessary that a closer union should be formed amongst all classes of her Majesty's loyal and attached subjects in this country, in order to preserve inviolate the legislative union, and the blessings of civil and religious liberty; and especially is combination and union necessary amongst all those who are ready to make common cause in upholding the religion of the Reformation. 2. Proposed by Col. Barton, and seconded by H. Johnson, Esq.: Resolved—That in order that any union formed amongst us should be firmly established and productive of beneficial and lasting results, we are persuaded that it must be formed on that precept of the Bible, "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake;" and therefore taking this precept as our guide, our union shall be formed in strict subserviency to the existing laws of the realm. 3. Proposed by the Rev. G. Walsh, and seconded by S. Johnston, Esq.: Resolved that inasmuch as the existing laws render the Orange Institution as originally constituted illegal, we do hereby appoint a committee for the purpose of considering under what appellation the society shall be designated, and upon what legal principles such a union can be formed, and for the drawing up of rules and regulations for the conduct of such union, and that the said committee be empowered to submit such rules and regulations to eminent counsel for their direction and opinions as to their strict legality and conformity to the law, and take such steps as may be necessary to carry out these resolutions. 4. Proposed by E. Atthill, Esq., and seconded by A. Holmes, Esq.: Resolved—That the committee appointed to carry out the foregoing resolutions consist of Reverends S. Smith, G. W. Welsh, H. Hamilton, jun.; N. Archdall, S. Y. Johnston, and J. Wood, Esqrs, whose exertions are to be confined to the county of Fermanagh, and that William Dane, Esq., be requested to act as secretary to said committee. 5. Proposed by Sir A. B. Brooke, Bart., M.P., and seconded by W. A. Dane, Esq.: Resolved—That we look with the greatest confidence to obtaining the co-operation of all classes, from the highest to the lowest, in the carrying out the principles of these resolutions. ENNISKILLEN, Chairman. W. A. DANE, Secretary." It will be observed that in the third of these resolutions it is admitted that the Orange institution, according to its old constitution, is illegal, and that some modification of the system is required, to save the members from penal consequences. The committee named for this object have made the following report, recommending that the name of "Orange" should be retained :—"The committee appointed at the before-mentioned meeting having met, it was resolved that the ancient appellation of Orange is the best by which any union of all classes of loyal Protestants can be designated, and that certain rules and regulations, suggested and agreed to by the committee for the proposed union, should at once be submitted to eminent counsel. G. S. SMITH, Chairman of Committee; W. A. DANE, Secretary." It is stated that Mr. Napier, Q.C., was one of the counsel consulted, and that the "rules and regulations" have been completed. It is stated that oaths, and secret signs and passwords, are to be abolished; but that, in all other respects the Orange system is to be revived, exactly as it was when the committee of the House of Commons discovered that the organisation had extended amongst a large portion of the army. In accordance with the above resolutions, three or four grand lodges have been organised and are now in full operation. An Orange journal, the Derry Sentinel, states that on the 9th inst., a meeting of the district masters and officers of the county of Londonderry was held at Garvagh, for the purpose of electing officers and transacting county business, when several brethren were elected to those posts, and the most anxious determination was exhibited to uphold the Grand Orange Lodge of Ulster as a rallying point for all loyal Orangemen. It states that the Grand Lodges of Monaghan and Cork confine their operations to their own counties; and that the committee of the meeting which was held at Enniskillen on the 27th ult., are bound to confine their organisation exclusively to the county Fermanagh. Votes of confidence in the Grand Orange Lodge of Ulster, and a number of addresses from counties, and cities, and districts, were read at this meeting, all expressive of a determination to stand by the Grand Lodge of Ulster; and it was stated that since the real nature of the Enniskillen meeting and its tendency had become generally known among Orangemen, districts and lodges in all parts of Ireland are sending in their adhesion to the Grand Lodge of Ulster, receiving its warrants, and placing themselves under its protection. The same paper states that a meeting of the county Antrim will be held at Ballymena, on the 11th inst., for the purpose of thoroughly organising that county; and it is in contemplation to call a general meeting of the Grand Lodge of Ulster in Derry, at an early date, to address her Majesty, praying her to dismiss Sir R. Peel from her confidence.—In the meantime the Government are pursuing their policy of dismissal. A supersedeas has been forwarded to Mr. Archdall, by order of the Chancellor, for his removal from the commission of the peace for the county of Fermanagh; and rumours are rife respecting the determination of Government to follow up the dismissal of Messrs. Watson and Archdall by removing from the magisterial roll several other gentlemen who have taken a prominent part in the reconstruction of the Orange Institute. The names of more than one person of high rank are freely mentioned as being likely to come under the Ministerial censure; but, in the absence of decisive information upon a step which would no doubt lead to very marked consequences, it would be premature further to allude to the current reports.—The Queen has appointed the Earl of Rosse, the Duke of Leinster, Lord Kenmare, Mr. Pigot, and Sir Thomas Fremantle, visitors of Maynooth College. A meeting of the board of the College took place on Saturday, on business connected with the extension and repairs of the building, for which plans and estimates had been prepared by the architect, Mr. Pugin. The following members of the board were in attendance :—Archbishops Slattery and MacHale, Lord Ffrench; Bishops MacGettigan, Murphy, and Kinsella. The concursus for the vacant professorships, which commenced on Tuesday, closed on Friday, and the successful candidates were declared on the next day. For the fourth theology professorship, created under the enlarged grant, there was no contest, and the Rev. T. Furlong, who had been successively professor of humanity and rhetoric and belles lettres, was elected. For the two other vacant professorships there were seven candidates. The struggle was very severe. The Rev. Mr. Behan, of the diocese of Meath, who had only just completed the ordinary course of the college, was elected to the chair of logic, and the Rev. Mr. Gargan, of the diocese of Meath, professor of philosophy in the Irish College, Paris, was elected to the chair of humanity. A number of distinguished literary men, unconnected with the college, were present during the concursus.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday, Mr. Conran in the chair; the Hall was barely half full. A letter was read from Mr. O'Connell, condemning in strong terms the late attack of Mr. Reynolds on the Dublin corporation, and pledging himself to demonstrate, within narrow and legible dimensions, the total want of foundation for any of Mr. Reynolds's charges. Mr. O'Connell added, that before he reaches Dublin, he shall have to attend three monster meetings—Tipperary, Mayo, and Kerry, and concluded by again urging the Repealers to register.—The SECRETARY, in reference to Mr. O'Connell's observations respecting the registry, said that, from the accounts forwarded from the various districts, he had no hesitation in saying that at the next election they would be in a position to return 70 Repeal members.—Mr. J. O'CONNELL commented on a letter which appeared in a southern paper, to the effect that the Irish sailors on board the experimental squadron at present in Cork were prevented from going on shore to visit their friends and relatives, and having urged the cruelty and hardship of such a proceeding, which he observed was totally different from the course adopted with regard to English sailors when in English ports, he proceeded to hand in a number of remittances from America, England, and various parts of the country. He then said that the American newspapers just received had expressed the gratification which had been experienced throughout the Union at the glowing eulogiums which had been paid to the memory of Gen. Jackson by the liberal portion of the Irish press. Certainly no one admired more highly than he did, in certain matters, the conduct of the individual he had just named. He was possessed of great courage, manliness, and considerable power of mind; but he was the steadfast and unflinching advocate and supporter of negro slavery. The Irish people could not, therefore, join unreservedly in the praises of a man who had identified himself with a system to which they were so conscientiously opposed. General Jackson had, however, given the English an excellent thrashing, and he supposed that that would cover a multitude of sins in the eyes of the people of Ireland. He wished to allude to another topic before he resumed his seat. Speculations were indulged in by the newspapers as to where Her Majesty's next visit would be directed. If she would condescend to come to Ireland, he conceived he might promise her a cordial and truly hearty welcome, and in saying so he felt he was only giving expression to the sentiments of the entire Irish people. It might have been the royal intention to have come to Ireland, but he felt assured that Sir R. Peel and other ministers prevented her, as they knew full well the reception that awaited them from the Irish people. Let Sir R. Peel, however, perform some act really beneficial to Ireland, and he would tell him that his past transgressions would be consigned to oblivion. Capt BRODRICK having addressed the meeting, Mr. J. O'CONNELL again rose, and proceeded at considerable length to comment on the letters emanating from the Times "commissioner," in whose statements he did not fully concur, but observed that that gentleman would earn the lasting gratitude of Irishmen if he succeeded in raising in England a cry of execration against the heartless landlords of Ireland. At the termination of the proceedings the rent for the week was announced to be 258*l*. 18*s*. 9*d*.

It is observable that a very large proportion of the rent comes from Irishmen resident in England or America. For instance, in the above total were 20*l*. from Liverpool, 8*l*. 7*s*. from Manchester, 15*l*. 12*s*. from Utica, and 35*l*. from Albany, United States—making 78*l*. 19*s*. Indeed, it rarely happens that the weekly contributions of Liverpool or Manchester do not exceed those of Dublin or Cork.

Cavan.—"Molly Maguire" appears to be quite as active as ever in Cavan. The following is a copy of a threatening letter sent to Mr. Hugh Acheson, of Dillagh, near Ballinagh, county Cavan, which he received by post on the morning of the 4th inst. :—"Sir, I strictly warn and beseech of you to leave this county within the space of three weeks; if not, prepare for eternity shortly after, as your death-warrant is signed and sealed by a judge and jury of Molly Maguire's sons, for being a master of the Orange vipers of Satan, or the sons of the devil, as you are one of the most malignant P.L.'s, or imps of Lucifer, for you will shortly be summoned before your county master, George Bell Booth, in the depth of hell, for your expressions on the 12th July, about Molly Maguire's funeral. Likewise, remember what you said in Killnaleck—remember she will not deceive you, so depart in a few days after you get this letter or notice. Death! death!! death!!! Given under my hand. Molly Maguire." (Here follows the figure of a coffin). This letter, or notice, passed through the following post towns: Virginia, Ballyduff, Cavan, and Ballinagh. This is the second notice that has been received by Mr. Acheson. The Newry papers also mention that "The eldest son of the late Mr. Booth was brought into the gaol of Cavan, that he might identify the murderer of his late kind and affectionate parent, when several men were placed before him. He selected the man charged with the deed, and said, 'He was almost confident that that was the person who fired at his papa.' Mrs. Bell has not returned from England; therefore the man thus charged remains in custody. There is not a doubt entertained by those who have seen Heany, that he is the man who assassinated Mr. Booth."

Limerick.—The local papers report some extremely bad cases of Ribbon outrage in this county. On Tuesday week four armed men visited the keepers who were placed on the effects of a man named Keating, of Kilcosgrove, near Shanagolden. A carpenter who happened to be at work on the premises was fired at, and the ball entered at his hip, and went through his body. The man is not dead, but no hopes are entertained of his recovery. It is said he was mistaken for the landlord. The party carried off a gun from the house, and no clue has yet been obtained to their discovery. The Limerick Chronicle also describes a frightful murder committed on a youth named Kenny, the son of a respectable farmer, by a man named Sexton, out of revenge for the boy's father having taken some land which the murderer held, and from which he had been ejected by his landlord, to whom he had also been bailiff. The ruffian first shot the boy with a gun in the forehead, and then shattered the head further by a blow of the gun almost in the presence of the father, who was called to the spot by the report, and saw the offender walk coolly away from the spot where the boy lay dead.

Scotland.

Edinburgh.—Some erroneous statements having been published respecting the Episcopal Church of Scotland, a correspondence has taken place between the Rev. A. Ewing, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishops of London and Exeter. The Bishop of Exeter, it appears, was mentioned as having promised to consecrate a new church now building at Nairn; but in his reply to Mr. Ewing, his lordship shows the inaccuracy of the statement by referring to the fact that no English bishop has authority in any other diocese than his own, and that the independence of the Episcopal Church of Scotland has always been recognised by the English bishops. The Bishop of Exeter takes the opportunity of censuring those clergymen of the Scottish Episcopal Church who are in open schism with their bishop, and declares that they ought not to be allowed to perform any ministrations in England. The Bishop of London says, "I subscribed 5*l*. towards the erection of a chapel at Nairn, having been assured that the plan was encouraged by the bishop, and therefore concluding that the chapel was under his episcopal jurisdiction. Upon learning that this was not to be the case, I desired that my subscription should be refunded, which was done. If it should turn out that the chapel when built will be subject to the bishop in whose diocese it is situate, I shall readily pay the sum above named towards its erection." The following is the letter of the Archbishop of Canterbury: "The Episcopal Church in Scotland is in communion with the United Church of England and Ireland, through the medium of her bishops, as, without referring farther back, will appear from a recent act of the Legislature, the 3 and 4 Vic. c. 33. Of congregations in Scotland not acknowledging the spiritual jurisdiction of the bishop in whose diocese the chapels are situate, yet calling themselves Episcopalian, we know nothing. In order to prove their right to this designation, they should be able to show what bishop in England has authority, by law or by custom, to regulate their worship, and to direct or control their ministers in respect of discipline or doctrine. In default of such proof they cannot be considered as Episcopalian, though the service of their chapels be performed by clergymen who have been regularly ordained by a bishop. In the case of Forres, my subscription was given on the understanding that the chapel was subject to the jurisdiction of a bishop, and I should undoubtedly refuse to contribute to the building of any place of worship which was not under his authority."

Mr. Cook's b m The Shadow, aged, beat Colonel Cradock's b c Jinglepot, 3 yrs, by a length. Cleveland Handicap of 20 sovs each, 10 ft, and 5 only if declared, &c., with 60 added. 21 subs, 8 declared. Mr. Meiklam's Godfrey, 4 yrs, 7st 8lb, beat Lord Chesterfield's ch h Knight of the Whistle, 6 yrs, 8st 12lb; Lord Eglinton's b m Quebec, 5 yrs, 7st 7lb; Mr. Wiggan's b f Fair Charlotte, 4 yrs, 7st 4lb; and Mr. Hornby's b c Cock Robin, 4 yrs, 8st 9lb. Won by a neck.—Sweeps of 500 sovs each, h ft, for two-yr-olds. 3 subs. Lord G. Bentinck's br f Emmi, by Bay Middleton, out of Blue Devil, 8st 4lb, beat Lord Maidstone's b c Tom Tulloch, by Hetman Platoff, 8st 7lb, in a canter, by four lengths.—Plate of 50*l*. for horses that never won Plate or sweepstakes: three-yr-olds, 7st 7lb; four, 8st 7lb; five and upwards, 9st. Heats.—Mr. Dawson's b f by Sheet Anchor, out of Valencia, 3 yrs, beat Mr. Bell's br c Sowerby, 3 yrs, Lord Maidstone's ch f Deuce Ace, 3 yrs; Lord Glasgow's b f by Bay Middleton, out of Impertinence, 3 yrs; Mr. Osbaldeston's b f Petit Morceau, 3 yrs. Won by a length.—Two-yr-old Produce Stakes (reduced to a match) of 100 sovs, h ft: Mr. Jaques's bl c Pedigree by Inheritor, out of Burletta, received from Mr. Brooks's b f (dead) by Hetman Platoff. The weather was most unfavourable all day.

WEDNESDAY. The rain came down in torrents, and altogether the weather gave a very dismal prospect for a "St. Leger Day." The assemblage of visitors, however, was immense. Before the races a declaration was made by Mr. Gully that Old England would not start. This was a thunderbolt to those who but ten minutes before had invested at 15 and 16 to 1.—Municipal Stakes of 200 sovs each, h ft: two-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 4lb. 9 subs. Lord Chesterfield's b c Arkwright, by Don John, walked over; and Colonel Anson's Borghese saved his stake and received two of the forfeits.—Selling Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 30 added: three-yr-olds, 6st 12lb; four yrs, 8st; five yrs, 8st 7lb; six yrs and aged, 8st 10lb, &c. 7 subs. Mr. Vane's ch c Valerian, 4 yrs, beat Lord Miltown's gr f Colleen Bawn, 3 yrs; Mr. Hornby's b c Cock Robin, 4 yrs; Mr. Hesseltine's b c The Helmsman, 3 yrs; Mr. Dawson's b f, by Sheet Anchor, out of Valencia, 3 yrs; and Captain Bastard's ch c Merryman, 3 yrs. Won easy.—GREAT ST. LEGER STAKES, of 50 sovs each, h ft: three-yr-old colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 2lb. Owner of second horse to receive 200 sovs out of the stakes, the third to save his stake. 101 subs. Mr. Watts's The Baron beat Major Yarburgh's Miss Sarah, Mr. Mostyn's Pantasa, and the following, who were not placed:—Major Yarburgh's Red Robin, Sir R. Bulkeley's Chertsey, Lord Chesterfield's Twig, Mr. Gully's Weatherbit, Mr. Ferguson's Clear-the-Way, Mr. Lane Fox's June, Mr. St. Paul's Mentor, Mr. A. Johnstone's Annandale, Mr. Ramsay's Mid-Lothian, Mr. Painter's The Pasha, Mr. Hesseltine's Fitz'allan, and Lord Miltown's Duc-an-Durras. Betting. 16 to 1 against the winner; 5 to 2 agst Miss Sarah (at one time 2 to 1 taken); 10 to 1 agst Pantasa (taken). Won by a length. Annandale a good fourth. A very fast race. After the race, Major Yarburgh objected to The Baron, and called on the stewards to order an examination of his mouth. This was done on Thursday morning by Messrs. Field and Holmes, when he was at once pronounced to be only three years old. The settling, therefore, immediately commenced, and promised to be very easy. Value of the stakes, 2,500*l*. It is stated that Mr. Watts, the owner of the horse, has not won a shilling in bets, but that his son has netted 4,000*l*. or 5,000*l*.—Corporation Plate. There was no race for this Plate, for want of an opponent to meet Pagan.

THURSDAY (BY EXPRESS).—Scarborough Stakes of 30 sovs each: Sir J. Hawley's Comrade beat Mr. Ramsay's Mid Lothian, and Mr. A. Johnstone's Annandale.—Great Yorkshire Handicap; Lord G. Bentinck's My Mary, beat Mr. Meiklam's Trueboy, and Sir C. Monck's Glossy. Eleven ran. Won by a length.—Sweeps of 200 sovs: Sir R. Bulkeley's Chertsey beat Mr. Gully's Weatherbit. Won easy.—Innkeeper's Plate: Mr. Jaques's Semiseria beat Lord Miltown's Colleen Bawn, and Sir R. Bulkeley's Queen Pomare. Several others started. Won by a length.

Miscellaneous.

Carrier Pigeons.—A somewhat novel incident occurred recently at the terminus of the South Western Railway, at Vauxhall. A carrier pigeon was seen in an exhausted state; it was caught by hand, but died shortly afterwards. A label was appended to one of its legs, addressed to the Duke of Wellington, which stated that three pigeons were thrown up at the island of Ichabee, and bore date July, 1845. The distance is computed to be between two and three thousand miles. The bird, with its appendage, was immediately forwarded to Apsley House, and the Duke of Wellington, by an autograph note, the next day, courteously acknowledged the receipt from the party who sent the bird. It has been stuffed, and in the process it has been discovered that the bird was shot, otherwise there can be no doubt it would have reached home, and it is supposed not to have had strength to cross the Thames.—Morning Post.

Artificial Production of Oysters.—A letter from M. Carbonel was read at a recent meeting of the Academy of Sciences, in which he asserts that he has discovered the means of producing oyster-beds in fresh water ponds and basins, so that every man who has a few feet of ground to spare for the construction of a basin, may always obtain fresh oysters!—Morning Post.

Tic Douloureux.—Mr. Gower says that the extract of tobacco will cure neuralgia so that it shall not return, and this with once using.—Medical Times.

The Early Christians in Africa.—The Constitutionnel mentions the discovery of a remarkable cavern, near Guelma, in Africa. This cavern is formed in an immense calcareous rock, and has but one entrance, which is to the northward. It descends to a depth of 400 yards below the surface of the earth, by an inclined plane, the extreme length being 1200 yards. It is furnished with stalactites of a thousand different forms, and the passage is impeded by huge blocks of stone, which have detached themselves from the vault. But that which contributes most to the interest of this immense cavern is the Latin inscriptions which are carved near the entrance, and which belong to the early ages of Christianity. Most of them are illegible; however, among them may be very distinctly deciphered the name "Donatus." No doubt the first Christians of Africa took refuge in this place during the periods of persecution. The Arabs relate the most absurd legends about it, and none of them ever venture in, dreading to be seized by the guardian genius who is supposed to dwell there. However, the French, who explored it, succeeded in persuading the Sheikh Deradji-Ben-Kerad to accompany them, previous to which not a soul is supposed to have disturbed the silence of it for many centuries.

New Method of Protecting Wood from Sea-water Insects.—Captain Sir Samuel Brown, R.N., in a letter to Admiral Sir Byam Martin, states that, from numerous experiments and observations, he is satisfied "that at present there is really no specific remedy against the attacks of the insect called by entomologists teredo navalis, or sea-worm, except iron nails." He proposes to encase the pile with broad-headed iron nails resembling scupper nails, but considerably larger, and says that in the course of a few months corrosion takes place, and spreads into the interstices. He further suggests the adoption of square-headed nails, which leave the smallest possible extent of the surface of the pile exposed. Experiments tried at the Trinity pier, Newhaven, and Brighton pier, have fully established the effectiveness of Sir S. Brown's method.—The Builder.

Sharks in the British Seas.—On the 13th ult., says the Pembroke Herald, as a young lady was in the act of bathing at Marloes, in that county, a large fish was observed by a woman standing on the cliffs, about three waves from her; fortunately her ablutions were completed at the time, or she might have become its prey. On the following day, as some fishermen were hauling their net in the same place, they enclosed a grey shark, about 4 feet in length, and, from the number of its teeth it is supposed to be two years old. The jaw is in the possession of Mr. Davies, schoolmaster, of Marloes, who some years ago lost his leg whilst bathing, by one of these monsters of the deep. The Montrose Review also states, that on Saturday week the fishermen engaged at one of the stake-nets near the North-Esk were surprised to find a captive in their meshes of rather unwelcome mien. It was a shark, about 7 feet long, which they killed, but not before the animal had destroyed a considerable portion of the net. The Scotsman states, that another shark was captured on Saturday last at Greenock.

Skating without Ice.—A crowd was, a few days since, collected in the Place Vendôme to witness the evolutions of a French gentleman upon skates. Each skate, as far as could be observed, for he was rather chary of showing his invention, instead of the usual plate of steel was furnished with two small wheels placed at about 2½ inches apart. His performances, it is said, were surprising. He cut the outside and inside edge, the spread eagle, and a number of other manœuvres well known to skaters, and apparently with the greatest ease and security.

New Operation on the Eye.—The late reports of the Paris Academy of Sciences mention some experiments in what the French call Kiratopiastic, which consists in replacing a diseased cornea by a portion of the cornea taken from another individual, and which, in fact, is a kind of animal grafting. There was also read a communication from Dr. Plouviez, of Lille, in which he states that he recently performed the operation on a female, 23 years of age, and who became blind from the small-pox at the age of three years. He removed the cornea, and substituted by suture that of a young dog, which he sacrificed for the purpose. The grafting process was entirely successful, but it does not appear that much benefit was derived from it. The girl does not see well enough to move about without a guide, and the only difference between her present state and that before the operation is, that she can now just distinguish night from day.

Shower of Dust in Orkney.—A friend just returned from Orkney acquaints us of the following interesting fact:—On the night betwixt the 2nd and 3rd Sept. current, the wind blowing freely from the N.W., there fell upon the whole mainland of Orkney a shower of fine impalpable dust, evidently of volcanic origin. The dust fell in such quantities as to cover the whole island, and admit of being easily gathered. It is presumed to have been caused by an eruption of Mount Hecla in Iceland, as a similar phenomenon which occurred many years ago was ascertained to have proceeded from that cause. We have seen a quantity of the dust, which exactly resembles finely ground pumice stone.—Dundee Warder.

Disease amongst Fish.—A disease has attacked the pike and eels in the river Barrow, during the present season, both being frequently found in a dying state on the surface of the water. The pike seem emaciated, and the inside of the mouth presents a fungus ulceration, covering the teeth, palate, and tongue; and when the body is opened, the stomach is filled with a green slimy substance. Eels are seen with little apparent life for a day or so, and afterwards dead in shoal water (the place where all wounded or sick fish swim to); the under part of the body, from the mouth to the tail, is speckled with blood-red spots, and the mouth is sometimes full of coagulated blood: however, the fish does not seem to be in bad condition, or to have suffered so long as the pike. The same kinds of fish in the canal about Monasterevan have also suffered from the same malady.—Leinster Express.

BAD DIGESTION. WONDERFUL CURE BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT!—T. Gardiner, Esq., of 9, Brown-street, Grosvenor-square, declares that he had been under four of the most eminent physicians, besides five of the greatest surgeons in London. He suffered from a distended stomach, bad digestion, settled pains in the chest, was very nervous, and greatly debilitated, and scarcely able to walk a hundred yards. Not deriving the least relief from the faculty, he set about rubbing large quantities of Holloway's Ointment into his chest, and took Holloway's Pills night and morning, which effectually restored him to perfect health and vigour in the short space of three weeks. Sold at Professor HOLLOWAY'S establishment, 244, Strand, and by all respectable medicine vendors.

HEAL AND SON'S LIST OF BEDDING containing a full description of Weights, Sizes, and Prices, by which purchasers are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding. News of the Week.

THE Overland Calcutta mail has arrived this week with news from that presidency to the 7th ult, Bombay 6th, and Madras the 14th ult. The brief interval which has elapsed since the date of the last advices has not been marked by any event of political importance. The Punjaub remains in the same unsettled state. The Rajah Gholab Singh had escaped a second attempt on his life, while returning from a visit to the Ranee and Prime Minister, and fears were entertained of fresh commotions at the Dusserah, the great festival which occurs in the beginning of October. In the meantime, a subsidiary force had been offered to the Queen Mother by the Indian government, a step regarded as the precursor of more active measures which were expected to follow the visit of the Governor-general to the north-west provinces about the 25th of the present month.—The news from China comes down to the 12th June. The Governor of Hong-Kong had issued an ordinance assessing the lands and houses of the colony for the support of a police force; and Admiral Sir T. Cochrane had brought an action against the editor of the Friend of China for comments on his character in settling a salvage case between a merchant schooner and one of Her Majesty's brigs of war. The cause was tried before a special jury, and the result was a verdict of "Not Guilty."—From France our news is mostly of a domestic character. The Duke and Duchess de Nemours and the Duke d'Aumale have brought their excursions in the south to a close, and are now residing at the Chateau d'Eu, where the King remains in better health than he has enjoyed for some months past.—From Spain we learn, that although the late insurrection has been completely put down in the capital, another conspiracy of the same kind has been discovered at Alicant, where it was to have taken place simultaneously with that at Madrid; a brother-in-law of Zurbano was to have headed the conspirators. The authorities, however, were apprised of their intentions, and the numerous arrests which have been made have checked the insurgents for the present. Rumours of an impending change in the Cabinet have been current for some time, and have been revived since the return of the Queen to Madrid on the 13th inst.; but whatever might take place, it was believed that General Narvaez would continue Prime Minister.—Letters from Dresden state that the late events at Leipsic which have excited so much interest throughout Germany, will be the object of grave deliberation in the session of the States of Saxony, which the King opened in person on the 14th inst. The King's Speech was remarkable for the moderation of its tone: it told the Deputies that the agitation which had manifested itself on several points connected with religious affairs, and which threatened to destroy all harmony and exceed the bounds of good order, merited the most serious attention. So far as the preliminary labours of the Chambers have yet gone, there seems to be a disposition to support the new religious movement, and to offer a strong opposition to the Ministry. The Prussian Government, on the other hand, continue to act on their resolution to keep down the German Catholic Church. The Abbé Ronge, in passing lately through Mannheim, was not allowed to sleep in the city, nor to celebrate Divine Service within its walls; while beyond the Prussian frontier, on his road from Stuttgard to Ulm, his journey is described as a species of triumph.—Accounts from Switzerland of the 16th inst. give a description of an extensive confederacy which has been discovered at Neufchatel, having numerous ramifications throughout the other cantons of Switzerland. The object of this society is described by the Swiss papers to be the overthrow of all religious, social, and political institutions throughout Europe by means of Atheism, the destruction of all moral principle, and even by regicide! The leaders of this horrible association are German refugees, many of whom are teachers or persons of superior education, and therefore the more dangerous as conspirators. One of them, a native of Gotha, was actually officiating as a professor at the College of Chaux de Fonds, in Neufchatel, when the association was brought to light. This adventurer has been expelled with four of his associates from the Swiss territory, and it is hoped that the vigorous measures adopted by the authorities will effectually suppress them. — Recent accounts from South America have been received this week which remove much of the anxiety caused by the last advices from the River Plate. They state that on the 11th July, all the British and French ships of war were preparing for action, in consequence of the British and French Ministers having given Rosas only 48 hours to return an answer to their ultimatum. He had given a reply to their former communication, but they declined accepting it, and they therefore gave Rosas 48 hours as a further time for considering what conclusion he would come to. The plenipotentiaries appear determined to settle the dispute between Buenos Ayres and Monte Video.

COURT.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert with the royal family and Court left Osborne House on Thursday for Windsor, travelling from the Royal Clarence Victualling Yard to the Farnborough station by a special train of the South-western Railway. The royal party arrived at the Castle at 2 P.M., and were loudly cheered. The stay of the Court at Windsor is expected to be prolonged until the month of February next. During the past week, the Queen and Prince Albert have taken their usual walks and rides in the neighbourhood of Osborne. On Sunday Her Majesty and the Prince attended Divine Service in Whippingham Church. The Queen Dowager left Marlborough House on Friday for Witley Court, travelling from town by a special train of the London and Birmingham and the Birmingham and Bristol lines. The Duchess of Kent will return to Frogmore House from the Continent this afternoon.

BIRTH OF A PRINCE OF HANOVER.—On the 21st inst., Her Royal Highness the Crown Princess of Hanover gave birth to a Prince. From the peculiar circumstances attending the succession to the throne, this event has been hailed in Hanover with the liveliest joy. The citizens assembled before the palace of the King, and sang the hymn, "Nun danket alle Gott;" after which the most enthusiastic cheers resounded for the welfare of the Royal House. The city of Hanover was splendidly illuminated during the evening. Both the Crown Princess and her infant are doing quite well. Intelligence of the auspicious event has been communicated by the King of Hanover to her Majesty the Queen, the Queen Dowager, and the members of the Royal Family in England.

Parliamentary Movements.—A vacancy has occurred in the borough of Wigan by the sudden death of Mr. Greenall, the Conservative member, who died at his residence in St. Helen's on Thursday week. Two candidates are in the field, the Conservatives having brought forward the Hon. Captain Lindsay, third son of the Earl of Balcarres; and the Whigs, Mr. R. A. Thicknesse, the eldest son of Mr. Thicknesse, who represented the borough from 1832 to 1835.

Official Appointments.—The Queen has been pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to appoint John Richard Corballis, Esq., LL D., to be one of the Commissioners of Charitable Donations and Bequests for Ireland, in the room of the Right Hon. A. R. Blake, resigned. The Queen has also been pleased to appoint William Cayley, Esq., to be Inspector-General of Public Accounts for the province of Canada; E. P. Gribbon, Esq., to be Colonial Surveyor and Engineer for the Colony of Sierra Leone; the Rev. J. L. Moody to be Colonial Chaplain in the Falkland Islands; the Rev. E. T. Scott to be Chaplain at George, Cape of Good Hope; and Adolphus E. Shelley, Esq., to be Auditor-General of Accounts for the island of Hong-Kong.

The Militia.—Official notice has been given to the Lords Lieutenants of the different counties, that Her Majesty has been pleased to command an immediate inspection of the Militia Staff throughout Great Britain and Ireland, and that an officer of Her Majesty's regular forces, aided by a regimental or staff surgeon, will forthwith visit the head-quarters of each regiment of Militia for that purpose. It is expected that these orders are preliminary to the Militia force being embodied and trained in the ensuing spring; but it is not known at present whether the necessary complements of men will be raised by ballot or by beat of drum.

Death of the Bishop of Bath and Wells.—This venerable bishop died on Monday at Weston-super-Mare, Somersetshire, at the advanced age of 85. His episcopal duties, on account of his infirmities, have for some time past been performed by the Bishop of Salisbury. His lordship was a doctor of divinity, a visitor of Wadham College, Oxford, &c., and uncle to the Earl of Ellenborough and the Recorder of London. Dr. Law was consecrated Bishop of Chester in 1812, and translated to Bath and Wells in 1824. He had consequently been 33 years a bishop of the National Church.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Journal des Debats and the Presse contain long articles on the negotiations now going on between the French and Belgian Governments respecting the renewal of the treaty of commerce concluded by those countries in 1842, and which expires in July, 1846. The Debats says that the Council General of the Department of the North have agreed to a petition to the Government, in which, after stating that the Belgians, taking advantage of the exclusion of English thread from the French markets, and of the advantages allowed to thread manufactured in Belgium, had contrived by great industry to quadruple the quantity of their thread introduced into France. The Council, therefore, claims protection for the French manufacturer, and prays the Government not to renew the treaty, or at all events to place Belgian thread on the same footing with that of other countries. The Debats is greatly dissatisfied with this petition, and says that the treaty of 1842, though not altogether perfect, is, on the whole, of great value. It denies the truth of the allegation of the petitioners as to the great increase of the importation of Belgian thread, and says that it has reason to know that the Belgian Government is disposed to make some concessions to France in return for the advantages accorded to Belgium, especially in respect to woollens and printed cottons. The Debats concludes by warning the manufacturers against excluding Belgian produce altogether, the effect of which would be to drive that country into further connection with the German Customs Union. The Presse says that M. Guizot, in his speech in the Chamber of Deputies of the 25th of March last, admitted that the treaty of 1842 gave greater advantages to Belgium than to France, and, while it admits the difficulty of the subject, it declares that the Government will be greatly to blame if it should renew the treaty without some important concessions on the part of Belgium.—The Duke and Duchess de Nemours arrived at the Tuileries on Sunday from Bordeaux, and left on the following morning for the Chateau d'Eu. During the visit of the Duke to Bordeaux the congress of the wine-growers of the department, which was holding its annual sittings in that city, presented through its president an address to his Royal Highness, which gives a distressing account of the state of the wine-growing interests in that quarter. The petitioners state that they have made reiterated but inefficacious representations to the Government of the disastrous state to which they are reduced. They say that the Department of the Gironde, though one of the richest in France, is burthened with 310 millions of francs of mortgage debts, while the average amount of mortgage debts in other departments does not exceed 126 millions, and that this debt is annually increasing, while the exports of their wines is diminishing. They then give the following account to show the gradual decline of their exportations to foreign countries:—

"The exportation of wines from the Gironde to Russia, which was 30,000 hectolitres in 1821, 29,000 hectolitres in 1827, and 28,000 hectolitres in 1832, was only 18,000 hectolitres in 1842, and 16,000 in 1844. The exports to Sweden and Norway, which in 1840, 1841, and 1842, varied between 6000 and 7000 hectolitres, fell in 1844 to 3760 hectolitres. The exports to the Hans towns amounted in 1825 to 167,000; 1832, 165,000; 1833, 238,000; 1840, 125,000; 1841, 117,000; 1842, 80,000; 1843, 77,000; 1844, 73,000 hectolitres. The exports of brandy to Norway, in 1842, was 704,008 litres, and in 1844 they fell to 85,000 litres. To England the exports, in 1842, were 585,000 litres; in 1844, 219,000 litres. Almost everywhere else, as to the United States, the Brazils, Mexico, and the Spanish American colonies, the result is similar both in respect to wine and brandy. At home, too, the returns show that the wine interests form a melancholy contrast to the general prosperity. While foreign countries thus repel our productions, because they are driven away from our own frontiers by protecting tariffs which are out of all bounds, the interior legislation of our country commits the double injustice of exacting enormous imposts from us, and of restricting the consumption of our productions, which alone furnish us the means of paying them. After having paid for our lands, bearing vines, a higher impost than is exacted from other lands, our produce is condemned to support exclusively, from their origin till the period of their being consumed, 15 different indirect imposts, which yield a profit of 1006 millions to the state, and 25 millions to the towns. The imports on our productions vary, according to circumstances, from 120 to 136 per cent. on the value."

In answer to this address, so different from the others presented to his Royal Highness during his progress in the south, the Duke of Nemours merely answered that he would make their complaints known to the Ministry, but that they could expect redress only from the Legislature.—The election for Lyons, to replace M. Fulchiron, who has been promoted to the dignity of a peer of France, has terminated in favour of the Ministerial candidate. M. Desprez, the Conservative candidate, had 142 votes, while M Etienne Blanc and M. Bertholon, the Opposition candidates, were only able to muster 35 votes between them. The other elections which took place on the 20th to fill the seats in the Chamber of Deputies, left vacant by the late promotion to the peerage, were keenly contested. The ministerial papers predicted that the Conservative candidates would gain the victory, but they are very indignant at the Constitutionnel and the other organs of the Opposition which supported the legitimist candidates in preference to the ministerialists. At Blois, Rochefort, Vendôme, Issoire, and Coutances, the ministerial candidates have been returned by large majorities. — The Minister of Public Instruction has recently published an order, by which he interdicts the keepers of ladies' boarding schools from taking in grown-up parlour boarders. The reason given for this order, which has been issued very unexpectedly, is that the presence of such persons may have an injurious effect on the education of the younger ladies. The Constitutionnel complains loudly of this order, which it says has been issued without previous notice, and without any alleged reason. No inquiry had been previously instituted; no circumstance had drawn public attention to the subject, and no warning had been given to the parties interested; but, says the Constitutionnel, "the Minister of Public Instruction likes coups de theatre—he likes a little trait of despotism; he has published his ukase, and he is satisfied." The same paper adds that this inconsiderate order will have the effect of ruining many respectable boarding-schools; and it calls upon the Ministry, as an act of justice, to apply the same rule to convents, in which grown-up boarders are received, who are perhaps more objectionable than those received at boarding-schools.—Prince Louis Napoleon, the state of whose health has given uneasiness to his friends for some time past, is rather better.—The Debats announces the arrival at Bordeaux of Mr. Washington Irving, the celebrated American writer. He is said to be charged with a diplomatic mission to France by the Government of the United States.—The Constitutionnel mentions that Ibrahim Pacha, accompanied by Soliman Pacha (Colonel Selves), would shortly come to France and take up his residence at Lyons.—The royal ordinance, authorising the Northern Railroad Company, was published in the official Moniteur of Sunday. Two additional companies, intending to bid for the concession of the Paris and Strasburg line, had formed themselves under the patronage of the Duke de Doudeauville and M. Juchereau de St. Denis. Another was in progress of organization, so that the entire number is now seven or eight The company established by Mr. Mackenzie to propose for the Tours and Nantes line has positively refused to join the other companies formed for the same purpose. The Paris and Lyons railroad companies hitherto announced, are not less than twelve in number.—The Moniteur publishes a notice of the Post-office, informing the public, that after the 1st November next the service of the steam-packets in the Mediterranean would be divided into five lines, namely, 1st, from Marseilles to Malta, calling at Leghorn, Civita Vecchia, and Naples; 2nd, from Malta to Constantinople, touching at the Piræus, Smyrna, and the Dardanelles; 3rd, from Marseilles to Beyrout (Syria), calling in at Malta and Alexandria; 4th, from Marseilles to Ajaccio; and 5th, from Marseilles to Bastia. The station of Syra and the direct line between Athens and Alexandria are to be suppressed. The departures from Marseilles for Malta are to take place on the 1st, 11th, and 21st, at 5 o'clock p.m.; from Malta for Constantinople on the 7th, 17th, and 27th, at 6 o'clock p.m.; from Marseilles for Beyrout and Alexandria on the 4th, 14th, and 24th, at 6 o'clock a.m.; and for Ajaccio on Fridays; and for Bastia on Tuesdays, at 9 o'clock a.m. The departures from Malta for Marseilles are to take place on the 6th, 16th, and 26th, at 7 o'clock a.m; from Constantinople for Malta on the 7th, 17th, and 27th, at 5 o'clock p.m.; from Beyrout for Marseilles viâ Alexandria and Malta, the 6th, 16th, and 26th, at 6 o'clock p.m.; and from Alexandria for Marseilles on the 10th, 20th, and 30th, at 6 o'clock a.m.

SPAIN.—The Madrid papers of the 16th state that the capital has resumed its ordinary state of tranquillity, and that there is no longer any apprehension of an outbreak. On the evening of the 13th inst., at 8 P.M., the Queen of Spain re-entered Madrid, with her mother and sister. They were accompanied by General Narvaez, President of the Council, and M. Martinez de la Rosa, Minister of Foreign Affairs. The other Ministers had assembled at an early hour, and continued long in council, but the subject of their deliberations had not transpired. It was rumoured, however, that the ministry have decided on not assembling the Cortes on the 10th October, as was intended, but to wait for some weeks to give time to form a judgment of the working of the new taxes. Rumours were afloat of a change of Ministry, and several lists were handed about of persons likely to be appointed to the several offices. In all these lists Gen. Narvaez continues as the head of the Cabinet, and the changes are merely among the subordinates. A conspiracy contemporaneous with the Madrid one has been discovered at Alicante. Several persons have been arrested in consequence. Don Domingo Ripoll, a retired Lieutenant-Colonel, and Zurbano's brother-in-law, was to have headed the intended insurrection. It is currently reported in Madrid that the brother of the Duchess de Nemours (a Coburg) will be the consort selected for the Queen, and that the marriage of the Infanta with the Duke de Montpensier is also decided. The Duke de Nemours, it is said, was the bearer of a message from his father to the young Queen of Spain at Pampeluna, the purport of which was, that he would be made supremely happy by seeing the reigning dynasties of Spain and France still more closely united by an alliance between the Infanta and his only unmarried son. This proposal, it is added, was received with undisguised satisfaction by Queen Christina, and by her advice Queen Isabella returned a most gracious answer. This marriage is, therefore, regarded as a settled thing, the more so as it is rumoured that the Queen of Great Britain was induced by the King of the French, during her last visit to the Chateau d'Eu, to give her consent to both alliances. — Messrs. Volney and Co., of London, have obtained the concession of the railway from Madrid to Valencia under certain conditions; the principal one being that they are to deposit 3,000,000 of reals, or about 30,000*l.* in the Bank of England, which sum will be forfeited to the Spanish Government and applied to the improvement of the public roads, if the enterprise is abandoned. Immense damage has been caused by storms in several districts of Tarragona, Catalonia, Valencia, Logrono, and Arragon. Numbers of poor peasants are preparing to emigrate from the province of Alicant to Algiers. A Barcelona letter of the 13th inst., states that tranquillity prevailed in that city and the rest of Catalonia. The authorities, however, continued watchful, and on that day the Captain-General had issued a bando, directing the inhabitants, in the event of any alarm, to retire to their respective homes, as otherwise they would be regarded as disturbers of the public peace and treated as such. The French fleet, consisting of seven ships of the line and a steamer, passed before Barcelona in the afternoon of the 11th, steering towards the Balearic Islands. The Spanish ship Soberano, coming from Toulon, and the brig of war Manzanares, commanded by Prince Henry, second son of the Infante Don Francisco de Paula, arrived at Barcelona on the 12th.

PORTUGAL.—We have accounts from Lisbon of the 9th inst. The King and Queen were at Thomar, on a visit to Signor Costa Cabral, the Prime Minister, and in their progress they had received addresses from the authorities of various towns. The preparations for their reception at the Castle of the Minister were on a scale of expensive magnificence, the cost being estimated at 9000*l.* sterling. Her Majesty was expected at Lisbon on the 15th, the day previous to that of the eighth anniversary of the Prince Don Pedro, heir to the throne. A grand levee was to be held on the occasion, and many new titles were talked of. Signor Costa Cabral was to have that of Count conferred on him, his brother that of Baron; and it was reported that the Duke of Terceira would assume the title of Highness, all of which, as may be supposed, had furnished fresh matter for the Opposition, and set them to work with renewed energy.

GERMANY.—The States of Saxony were opened at Dresden on the 14th inst., by the King in person. His Majesty's speech is chiefly remarkable for its allusion to the late disturbances at Leipsic. The following is the paragraph on this subject :—

"Although I can allude to the satisfactory state of the internal affairs of the kingdom, there are nevertheless some afflicting events which I have to remark. An event, much to be regretted, which wounds the dearest feelings of my heart, has recently taken place in one of the most important cities of the kingdom; and I have no doubt you will sympathise in my grief on the subject. The agitation which has manifested itself on several points connected with religious affairs, and which threatens to destroy all harmony, and get beyond the bounds of good order, merits the most serious attention. Without taking into account the creeds of the various recognised churches, I promised, on ascending the throne, to support above all those religious feelings which the people of Saxony have known how to maintain in such an honourable manner. I expressed the conviction that the States of Saxony will be guided by the same respect for what is the most sacred thing in the world. If my confidence in this respect be well founded, I hope and rely that you will grant me your support, in order that the principles of the Church may not be shaken, and that the fundamental pillars of the State, and the welfare of humanity, religion, and faith, may not be sapped at their foundation."

At the first sitting of the Upper Chamber on the 15th, a supreme decree was presented by the Government relative to the religious movements of the country; and, in the usual course of business, it was about to be referred to the first deputation, when the Minister, De Kœnneritz, arose and explained the motives which had necessitated the decree in question. He pointed out the origin of the "Friends of Light," their principal tendencies, and their proceedings with respect to the Evangelical Church; he explained the position of the Church with respect to the State, and justified the ministerial edict of July 17, against the numerous attacks directed against the latter. He declared the object of all the efforts of the Friends of Light to be "to substitute the variable sentiment of each period for the eternal word of God," and asserted that such doctrine led on the one hand to Atheism and Pantheism, and on the other to a greater constraint than had ever been known before in matters of faith. When this address was over, Burgomaster Wehner proposed that this decree, as well as another relating to the dissenters calling themselves German Catholics, should be referred to a special deputation, appointed for the purpose. This proposition was seconded by Prince John, and adopted unanimously. The first of these decrees was the same day presented in the Second Chamber, and referred to the examination of the first deputation of that body. The next day M. Todt, in the same Chamber, proposed that they should also reply to the speech from the throne, as well as the Upper Chamber. After some discussion, the motion was carried by 57 votes to 14.—The religious excitement in Germany continues at its height. The progress of M. Ronge, notwithstanding the attempts of the Government to put down all demonstrations of enthusiasm, is a species of triumph. On the 19th he left Stutgard for Ulm, and he was accompanied out of the city by a vast crowd of inhabitants. Some of the most enthusiastic of his admirers accompanied him all the way to Ulm. In the Saxon Chambers the opposition to the Government, on account of the recent events at Leipsic, are so strong that the Government cannot depend upon the support of above one-third of the members, and it was thought that the Cabinet would be obliged to dissolve the Chambers. Letters from Vienna state that the religious excitement has extended to that capital. A German Catholic congregation has been formed, and at its first meeting upwards of 3000 persons attended. The meeting having been called without the leave of the authorities, it was dispersed by a battalion of infantry.—Accounts from Munster of the 12th inform us that the Archbishop of Cologne was at that time so ill that his recovery had been declared impossible by the physicians. A letter of the 18th however states that there were at that time hopes of preserving the life of the Archbishop.—The Grand Duke and the hereditary Grand Duke of Oldenburg arrived at Vienna on the 12th, on their way to Trieste, to receive the Queen of Greece. Prince Ferdinand of Coburg and his son were expected at Vienna, from which place they would set out for London and Lisbon.

HOLLAND.—Some rioting took place at the Hague and at Haarlem on the 21st and 22d inst., the object of which was to compel the dealers to reduce the price of provisions. A band of men and boys paraded the streets and broke the windows of some mealmen. A detachment of troops immediately came to support the police, by whom the shops were protected, and further disorders prevented. A number of persons however collected again on the following evening before the house of a mealman who seemed to be especially obnoxious. The assemblage was summoned three times to disperse, and a strong detachment of grenadiers and cuirassiers immediately dispersed the crowd.

RUSSIA.—The Empress of Russia, the Grand Duchess Olga, and the Prince and Princess of the Netherlands, arrived at Konigsberg on the 9th inst., and at Potsdam on the 12th. The Emperor started off to the Caucasus immediately after taking leave of the Empress, being determined, it was said, to visit the scene of action himself. Another account, however, states that the Emperor's visit will merely be to the Black Sea, and that his object is not to visit the army in the Caucasus, but his fleet in the Black Sea, and that he intends afterwards to take a voyage in the Mediterranean, and join the Empress, should she prolong her stay in Sicily.

ITALY.—A letter from Naples, dated the 3d inst., expatiates on the benefits which this country has received from the recent alterations there. By the decree of July 30, the bounties granted to the national flag were abolished; on Aug. 5 the export duty was taken off sulphur; and on the 18th the port charges of Messina were revised—charges so exorbitant, that although Messina was universally a port for warehousing, it was scarcely at all resorted to. Lastly (Aug. 29) appeared the tariff, which is considered a great boon to our commerce. The articles of codfish and pilchards are very important to the Neapolitans on account of the fast-days; and it is hoped that this branch of our trade will be revived by the reduction of duty upon them. The United States had almost the monopoly in supplying colonial produce on account of the bounties given by the Government to their own flag on all importations from transatlantic ports, but these bounties being abolished, it is expected that the supply will come from our ports.—A letter from Venice, dated the 4th inst., informs us that a dreadful event had taken place on the preceding day, between Belluno and Feltre. Two hundred Italian soldiers were executing some manœuvres at that point under the command of an Austrian officer, who ordered them to cross a bridge, which threatened to fall with the slightest shock, and of which the local authorities had for some time forbidden the passage. It was in vain that several of these soldiers represented to their officer the danger there would be in marching over the bridge; the Austrian captain reiterated his orders, which the men obeyed. They marched on to the bridge, and the expected catastrophe immediately took place. The bridge tottered, cracked, and fell into the stream, and the whole of the two hundred soldiers perished in the deep and rapid river across which the bridge had been erected. The officer, who was marching at the head, had taken some steps in advance, and reached the opposite bank in safety.

SWITZERLAND.—The following is a brief summary of a letter from Berne of the 12th, published in the Paris Presse, and of a long article in the Courrier Suisse of the 16th inst. The latter print is published in the canton of Vaud, and its statements are inserted by the Debats of Saturday:—"Some arrests recently effected in a small town of the canton of Neufchatel, and the avowals obtained of the individuals thus captured, have led to the detection of a vast plot organised in Switzerland by the members of 'Young Germany' Association. The present centre of the Association is Lausanne, but Berne, Zurich, Basle, Geneva, and 24 other minor towns, have lodges of the same conspirators. It is also affirmed that there are German clubs connected with the society in several towns of France, including Strasburg and Marseilles. The object of the Association, as is clearly proved by the writings and correspondence of the leaders, and the disclosures just obtained, is to effect the subversion of the religious, political, and social organisation of Germany, and, successively, that of the other states of Europe, by the preaching of Atheism, the gradual demoralisation of the people, and, if need be, the assassination of public functionaries. The leaders are mostly political refugees from Germany. The authorities have been alarmed at the crafty perseverance with which these propagandists have enlisted under their banner a considerable number of the 20 to 25,000 German workmen established in the several cantons of Switzerland. Their publications had been circulated in Zurich, Berne, Geneva, Basle, and other towns. The leaders have personally figured in all the great disturbances with which Switzerland has been visited since the first organisation of the Helvetic section of 'Young Germany,' and its secret alliance with 'Young Switzerland.' Dr. Fein, a political refugee from Brunswick, who was captured, with other German adventurers, in the crusade that took place last spring against Lucerne, appears to have been connected with this sanguinary propaganda. The investigation now proceeding on the subject of the murder of Councillor Leu, will perhaps yield discoveries of the same description. Any thing may be believed of an Association which is told by a journalist, one of its organs, that 'revenge is an act of natural justice,' and that it is desirable 'that great vices and sanguinary crimes be exhibited to the world instead of that virtue which wearies, and those worn out ones, of which nations are tired.' As yet it has not been possible to discover whence the Association derive the considerable sums they dispose of. All that is known is that the bulk of its members have, in appearance, no other means of existence than their labour, which is perpetually interrupted by sittings of their clubs and orgies. The money they require to live thus, and defray the Association's expenses, must, therefore, come from other quarters."

GREECE.—Accounts from Athens of the 7th inst. state that the Duke de Montpensier was expected to arrive in that city on the 13th. Apartments were being prepared for him in the royal palace. General Calergi has thought it prudent to escape the dangers by which he was surrounded from the violent conduct of the Ministry, by constituting himself a voluntary exile. He embarked at Athens on board an English steamer, in which Sir E. Lyons gave him a passage to Zante, and from the latter place he will probably take a passage to Italy or England. The Greek Chambers had not met.

TURKEY.—Letters from Constantinople of the 3d state that the Duke de Montpensier left that place on the evening of the 31st ult. In the course of the same day he had partaken of a dinner given in his honour by the French residents of Constantinople. Eighty persons, among whom were the Archbishop of Petra and Prefet Apostolic of Constantinople, and other Catholic dignitaries, sat down to this entertainment; toasts and speeches of a national and religious tendency were delivered with much animation. A ball and dinner were also given to the Prince a few days before by the French Ambassador. The Prince proceeded from Constantinople to Broussa, whence he will go to Smyrna, not by land, as was at first talked of, but by sea, in the Gomer. These accounts state that the Grand Admiral, Halil Pasha, had been named Minister of Commerce; Mustapha Nouri Pasha, Governor of Broussa; and Said Pasha, who for some years past had retired into private life, had been appointed a member of the Supreme Council.—A German paper states that an attempt was made to assassinate Riza Pasha on the 26th ult., by means of poison inserted in his food; the quantity administered, however, proved insufficient to effect the object aimed at, and it was expected that he would be perfectly recovered in a few days. Later accounts from Constantinople, however, make no mention of this circumstance.

EGYPT.—Letters from Alexandria of the 9th state that, on the 29th ult., Mehemet Ali suddenly proceeded to sea in one of his line-of-battle ships. His Highness sailed in the direction of the Island of Rhodes, and returned to port on the 8th inst. without having landed at any place, his object having merely been to enjoy the benefits of a sea voyage. The son of the Imaum of Muscat, Prince Saied Ebn Hillal, who arrived here some time ago from Jedda, proceeds by the Oriental to England, to claim the intercession of the British Government with his father, who has threatened to disinherit him on account of some misunderstanding which exists between them. During his stay in Egypt he has been treated with great hospitality by Mehemet Ali.—Dr. Lepsius, who was sent to Egypt three years ago by the King of Prussia for the purpose of collecting information on the subject of the antiquities of Egypt, had returned to Alexandria, and intends to visit Syria on his way to his native country. This gentleman, not satisfied with investigating all the remains of the ancient grandeur of Egypt, extended his journey to the south of the province of Sennaar, and intends to publish an account of his travels on his return to Prussia.

INDIA AND CHINA.—The Overland Calcutta Mail arrived on Wednesday with accounts from Calcutta of August 7; Madras, Aug. 14; Bombay, Aug. 6; and China, June 12. There appears to be no news of any importance since the arrival of the last mail. The Punjaub remains in statu quo. Rajah Ghoolab Singh has survived a second attempt on his life; the young Maharajah has taken to himself a wife. Peshora Singh is still contumacious. Sir Henry Hardinge is positively to leave Calcutta en route to the north-west about the 25th September. The most prominent event of local occurrence has been a duel with fatal results, which had taken place at Fultah, between Lieutenant Tulloch, of the 22d Native Infantry, and Mr. Nilson, the officer of a ship, when the former was dangerously wounded, and afterwards died of his wounds. It is said that he had provoked the duel by addressing to Mr. Nilson a letter, published in one of the papers, containing the most opprobrious language. In accordance with royal letters patent, dated the 7th April, the Bishop of Madras had assumed the functions of Metropolitan.—The China papers are to the 12th June last. The news is of no great moment. An action against the editor of the Friend of China for a libel on Rear Admiral Sir T. Cochrane was tried on the 2nd in the Supreme Court, Victoria, before a special jury, and resulted in a verdict of Not Guilty. The offence of the editor consisted in having commented in strong terms on the conduct of the gallant admiral in settling a certain salvage case between the schooner Vixen and H.M.S. Wolf.

UNITED STATES.—By the packet-ship Sea, which arrived at Liverpool on Thursday, we have accounts from New York to the 3rd inst. The Caledonia had not arrived when the Sea set sail. The American steamer Marmora sailed on the 2nd, but she has not yet reached this country. The news brought by the Sea in reference to the war between Mexico and the United States still partakes of the doubt and uncertainty noticed on the arrivals of the Hibernia and Great Britain. The rumour of war is still kept up. The Baltimore Correspondent of the 1st inst. says—"There was an idle rumour here yesterday, which may have reached you, to the effect that General Taylor, the commander of the United States troops, had fought a battle with the Mexicans, and had been defeated, himself killed, and over 500 troops taken prisoners. It had no claim to truth, though in everybody's mouth." This paragraph was published on the 2d inst.; the day following another New York paper, under the head of the war, thus writes:—"We have no further accounts to-day from the seat of War in Mexico or Texas, nor from New Orleans. Everything still remains in doubt, and enshrouded in mystery. Rumours are thickening in every kind and variety, but nothing tangible appears on the face of them. Some of the late accounts state that the Mexicans have yet made no appearance on the Rio Grande; others fear General Taylor is in danger. It appears from the best information, derived from various sources, that the War Department at Washington has made some grave blunders in fitting out the expedition to Corpus Christi, where General Taylor has fixed his head quarters. It seems from the statement that the artillery companies have been sent there without proper cannon, and that to render these troops of any service in case of an attack from the Mexicans, this Government is compelled to forward cannon fit for service. If there be any truth in the accounts which we have received from Vera Cruz, the Mexicans must have reached the Rio Grande before this time; if they passed it we may soon expect to hear of some action of a very important nature between the two armies. We hear nothing further of privateers, but the anxiety of the republic is increasing every day, all being eager to learn what will be the result of all the declarations, threats, and protestations put forth by Mexico, as well as the preparations made by the United States Government to repel attack."

WEST INDIES.—By the mail-steamer Severn we have accounts from Jamaica, 23rd ult.; Havannah, 19th; Trinidad, 20th; Barbadoes, 24th; Grenada, 26th; St. Thomas, 30th; and Fayal, 12th inst. The weather does not appear to have been favourable in the two or three leading colonies, but as the August holidays were not over, and the labourers had not returned to work, agricultural pursuits were not in active operation. The accounts of the Coolies from Jamaica are favourable. On the Clarendon and Vere estates they were working well, while the negroes were spending their time in "luxurious indolence." A fire had occurred on the Limesburgh estate, by which the whole of the works were destroyed. Advices received from Hayti at Jamaica state that Pierrot had thrown aside all constitutional control, and assumed despotic power. He is alleged to have sacked the treasury, and repudiated the financial treaty with France, which is likely, it is said, to cause differences between that Government and the republic. The advices from Barbadoes, Trinidad, and Demerara, are not of much interest. Favourable rains had fallen in Barbadoes. At Trinidad the revenue is stated to be in a prosperous condition. The enlarged emigration operations of next year will, it is said, be conducted without subjecting the colony to any additional expense. The success which has attended the shipment to England of Bahama Pine-apples seems to have created a feeling of jealousy in Jamaica. The fruit reared in the Bahama Islands is pronounced to be of secondary quality, and it is considered that a shipment of "true Ripley pines" would prove a more profitable adventure. The subject has attracted the attention of Messrs. Keeling and Hunt of Monument-yard, who are, it appears, already in communication with certain Jamaica proprietors, with a view to the early introduction of some of the pines of that fertile colony. The result of the experiment will, it is believed, be found fully to answer the hopes of the parties interested.

SOUTH AMERICA.—The Brazils packet arrived at Falmouth, on Tuesday, with dates from Rio to the 30th July, and from Bahia to 13th Aug. Intelligence of the settlement of the differences between the Argentine and Monte Videan republics, through English and French intervention, was daily looked for at Rio when the Petrel sailed. The latest accounts from the River Plate represented that Rosas was in communication with the British Minister, Mr. Ouseley. The first overture from the former, which was unsatisfactory, had been answered, and 48 hours given for a categorical reply; in the interim, the English and French ships were kept ready for action, but it was anticipated that Rosas would be compelled to comply with the ultimatum of the British representative, who was reported to be most firm in his demands; the nature of which were kept a profound secret even from his own staff. A vessel of 300 tons had been chartered at Rio, before the packet sailed, to convey provisions to the British fleet at Buenos Ayres. There was nothing new in the Brazils except that great distress prevailed in the northern provinces and in the interior, owing to the long drought. The exchange at Bahia and Pernambuco had risen, owing to the discovery of a diamond mine in the vicinity of Bahia.

VAN DIEMAN'S LAND AND NEW ZEALAND.—Hobart Town Papers to the 8th May have arrived. Locally they afford no information of interest. An increase of crime is alluded to in the journals, but business appears to be rather better. The settlers seem very well satisfied with the progress of their wool production, which has risen considerably within the last few years. Williams the chartist, who is the superintendent of a madhouse in Van Dieman's Land, is reported to have conducted himself very courageously in an outbreak among the inmates, and restored tranquillity, when the probabilities were that life would have been sacrificed.—Accounts in the Hobart Town papers from New Zealand, speak of the excited state of the settlers in the Bay of Islands. When these accounts left, no fresh battle with the aboriginal tribes had taken place, but several murders of the white people had been perpetrated. John Heki was said to be in full march for Auckland, but some native chief, who claims Auckland as his private property, had announced his intention of taking up arms in defence of his dominions, and checking the progress of Heki. Most of the settlers had left the Bay of Islands for Auckland, with their families and property. The missionaries are stated to have remained true to their posts, and have never left the spot.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Christ's Hospital.—On Monday, according to annual custom, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and governors of this great establishment, after attending divine service at Christ's Church, Newgate-street, where a sermon was preached by the Rev. W. H. Guillemard, proceeded to the great hall of the hospital to hear the orations delivered by the senior scholars of the foundation. The hall was crowded with visitors. The speeches "On the Benefits of the Royal Hospitals" were delivered in Latin by E. T. Scargill, second Grecian, who is proceeding to Pembroke College, Cambridge; in English by G. E. Evans, first Grecian and mathematical medallist, 1844, who is proceeding to Lincoln College, Oxford, as Rowed scholar; in Greek, by W. F. Greenfield, fourth Grecian and mathematical medallist, 1843, who is proceeding to Pembroke College, Cambridge; and in French by George Voigt, third Grecian and classical medallist, 1845, who is proceeding to Clare Hall, Cambridge. These compositions were characterised by purity and elegance of diction, and were delivered with a self-possession, and appropriate emphasis, creditable alike to master and scholar. The exhibition also comprised—"Latin Alcaics, on the Norman Conquest," recited by T. J. Potter, seventh Grecian, and mathematical medallist, 1845. "Greek Iambics, translation of part of Belial's speech in 'Paradise Lost,'" by Malcolm Laing, fifth Grecian. "An English Ode in China," by T. S. Polehampton, sixth Grecian. "Latin Hexameters, translation from Pope's 'Windsor Forest,'" by E. Hayman, tenth Grecian. "Greek Iambics, the Address of Regulus to the Senate," by E. A. Newton, eighth Grecian. "Latin Elegiacs, on the Murder of the two Princes in the Tower," by C. E. Searle, eleventh Grecian. "Greek Sapphics, on Her Majesty's Visit to Christ's Hospital," by J. D. Williams, ninth Grecian; and an "English Poem, on the fall of Babylon," by W. A. Russell, twelfth Grecian. The proceedings of the day, which were extremely interesting, were terminated by the boys singing the National Anthem.

Statue of the Duke of Sussex.—Some fears have existed that the statue of His Royal Highness, by Baily, was too large to be conveyed into Freemasons' Hall without breaking away the back wall of the building. It appears, however, that it can now be taken in by way of the grand staircase and vestibule, which has latterly been widened by the proprietor of the tavern. In order to receive the statue, a massive pier of brick and concrete has been carried up at the expense of the Grand Lodge, from the foundation of the building to the dais, where it is covered with a stone slab to receive the pedestal.

The Approaching Election for Lord Mayor.—Workmen have been busily employed this week in fitting up Guildhall for the nomination and election of Lord Mayor for the year ensuing, on Monday next. This year it is understood there will be no opposition to Alderman T. Wood's election, and in order to make that secure, several meetings of that gentleman's friends have been held, and resolutions adopted pledging those assembled to use their utmost endeavours to obtain the show of hands at the Common Hall to return Alderman Wood and Alderman J. Johnson to the Court of Aldermen. It is, however, rumoured in the City that Sir Claudius Hunter, Alderman for Bridge Without, and the oldest alderman of the City, will be put in the nomination in opposition to Alderman Wood. If this should be the case, the friends of Alderman Wood are determined on this occasion to appeal to the Livery by demanding a poll. The 28th of the month, the day appointed for the swearing in the new Sheriffs, falling this year on Sunday, that ceremony will take place this morning.

The Westminster Improvements.—These long-talked of improvements will be commenced next week, the house opposite the hospital having been taken as the office. It is expected that all the notices will be served in the course of the week, as Monday is Michaelmas-day. Hitherto great uncertainty has been felt by persons who have property or are tenants in the course of the improvements, as to which lines would be actually taken, and consequently they were in difficulty how to proceed. The line will commence in Flood-street, pass through the Almonry, Orchard-street, and Duck-lane, by the chapel in the Broadway, pass Wood's Brewery, Palmer's Village, to Shaftesbury-terrace, Pimlico. It is believed the works will commence at the Pimlico end first, but nothing positive is known.

Artesian Wells in Trafalgar-square.—On Monday workmen commenced laying down a main from the reservoirs in Orange-street, to supply the adjacent St. George's barracks, from whence another main will be carried across St. James's Park to Buckingham Palace. This will complete the intended supply of buildings and offices connected with Government, by which a very considerable saving will be effected. The supply of water continues undiminished, 500 gallons being raised per minute, which, by a few additional strokes of the engine, is raised to 800 gallons. While this large supply is obtained, none of the wells or springs of the neighbourhood have become exhausted or dry, as was anticipated.

Balloon Ascents.—Mr. Green made another ascent in the Nassau balloon from Vauxhall Gardens on Monday. Among the leading personages present were Prince George of Cambridge, the Marquis of Worcester, the Earl of Pembroke, the Earl of Munster, &c. Large numbers were attracted to the gardens by the announcement that several persons on horseback would ride a steeple-chase in whatever direction the balloon might proceed. Fearing that the public safety might be endangered by such a course, the magistrates of the district remonstrated against it, and the proprietors of the gardens abandoned the project. Two or three men undertook to run after the balloon, with the understanding that he who arrived first at the spot where the aeronauts descended should receive 5*l.* Mr. Green effected a safe descent soon after 6 o'clock, at Plumstead-marsh. One of the pedestrians who started from the gardens as the balloon ascended, arrived at the spot at which it descended in about half an hour after the party had landed, and then, after receiving a certificate to that effect, started for Vauxhall, where he arrived at least 20 minutes in advance of the aeronauts. One of the other pedestrians was within 5 yards of the balloon, when his companion was proclaimed winner of the first prize.—On Tuesday evening, Mr. Henry Green, in company with a gentleman named Williams, made a night ascent from Cremorne Gardens, which was stated to be the last of the season. Unfortunately, this ascent was attended with nearly serious consequences, from the improper construction of the firework machinery attached to the car of the balloon. It appears that before the balloon was clear of the ground the fireworks were ignited, and discharged volleys of fire among the spectators. The utmost consternation prevailed, and the crowds ran away in all directions. The balloon narrowly escaped ignition, and went off in a westerly direction, descending at Long Ditton.

The late Explosion at Woolwich.—The coroner's inquest on the seven persons who were killed by this explosion, after two adjournments, concluded on Friday. The witnesses examined were Colonel Cockburn, Director of the laboratory department, Lieut. Oldfield, R.A., Col. Dansey, Firemaster, Mr. Caffin, Deputy-storekeeper of the laboratory, and three men employed in the department. The following summary contains the leading facts of their evidence. The deceased men were employed in breaking up fuses in the shed in which the explosion occurred, which was not a building specially adapted for this purpose. The part of the floor where the men stood was, however, covered with hides, and the whole floor was saturated with water. The mode of breaking up these fuses, the tools for accomplishing which were shown to the jury, was as follows:—The tube, which is about 10 or 12 inches long, is first emptied of the meal powder, which is done by boys. The fuse is then taken to a copper pan, and placed on a steel chisel, when it is struck with a copper knife by means of a wooden mallet; the fuse is thus cleft open, and the composition falls into a pan prepared for that purpose. The question before the jury was, at which end the fuse had been struck, because if it was placed in an inverted position, a portion of the meal powder would come in contact with the steel chisel, in which case there was great danger of an explosion. This was not the course generally pursued; but Lieut. Oldfield, who was accidentally in the shed a few minutes before the explosion, swore distinctly that he observed the men break the fuses in both positions. The men, it appeared, also worked in nailed boots. Two men, who had just quitted the shed, experienced a very narrow escape—one man being blown off a cart that was loading outside, the other being almost stunned by the explosion. The jury, after deliberating nearly an hour, delivered the following verdict: "That deceased were killed by the explosion of combustible materials, but from what cause the explosion took place there is no evidence to show." They also accompanied it with the following note, which the coroner read to Colonel Cockburn, the head of the department: "That the jury, in returning this verdict, beg to state that, without imputing any want of caution to the authorities, in directing the mode of carrying out the work which deceased were engaged in, they at the same time submit for consideration the propriety of discontinuing the use of the steel chisel, and adopting, as formerly, the copper knife; and also that the men ought not to be allowed to work at such employment in nailed shoes or boots." Colonel Cockburn said he intended in future to extract all the saltpetre by means of water, so as to avoid all chance of danger.

The late Bank Robbery.—A paragraph has been going the round of the papers, referring to the extensive robbery of Messrs. Rogers, at the close of last year. The paragraph referred to stated, that it had been discovered that certain parties were circulating fictitious lists of the notes stolen, with the view of misleading the public, and counteracting the exertions of Mr. Hobler, who has caused lists of the notes to be distributed throughout the country, and in all the chief cities in Europe. It was also stated that one of the stolen notes had made its appearance in Naples, and had been changed there; notice of the robbery having been served upon the hotel-keeper by whom the note was cashed only a few days after he had taken it. The Times of Wednesday says, "We are informed that both the above reports are entirely destitute of foundation, and we notice the fact in order that the public may not be misled on the subject."

East India House.—On Wednesday a Quarterly Court of Proprietors was held at the India House, and was very scantily attended. Mr. Peter Gordon, who had made himself prominent on a former occasion, took possession of the chair, and was formally ejected by the Company's officers, with the entire sanction of all but one or two of the proprietors present. Mr. Serjeant Gazelee brought forward a motion respecting the admission of the public to their debates, but after a long discussion it was withdrawn. Mr. Geo. Thompson then brought forward a motion for a committee of inquiry into the conduct of Colonel Ovans towards the ex-Rajah of Sattarah, which, after a short discussion, was negatived by a considerable majority, only three hands being held up in favour of it. Mr. Geo. Thompson then gave notice of several motions for the next court day, directed against Colonel Ovans.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Sept. 20:—West Districts, 99; Northern, 138; Central, 165; Eastern, 194; Southern, 178; Total, 774; males, 370; females, 404. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1090; males, 540; females, 550.

Provincial.

Andover.—We stated in our last report that Mr. Parker, the Assistant Commissioner, on the application of Mr. M'Dougal, the master, had on Thursday the 18th adjourned the inquiry to the following Tuesday. It appears that on Mr. Parker's arrival in town on the Thursday, the Poor-law Commissioners thought that there was no ground for a further adjournment of the inquiry to enable the master to get up his defence. They therefore sent down the Assistant Commissioner on the same day, directing him to rescind his adjournment, and to proceed with the inquiry. On re-assembling however on Friday morning, the inquiry was postponed to Saturday, to allow Mr. M'Dougal to assemble his witnesses. On that day the inquiry was resumed in the presence of Mr. Etwall, member for the borough, a considerable number of gentlemen forming the Board of Guardians, and a large body of ratepayers. The counsel on both sides appeared, and the reporter for the Government was at his post. Mr. Missing, the Master's counsel, asked Mr. Parker if he had received any account from Mr. Mitchener (the accountant of London), as to the state of the accounts entered into the union books? Mr. Parker replied, he had received a letter from that gentleman who had informed him that he had been through them, and that the search had been made in the most careful manner. Mr. Prendergast, counsel for the prosecution, said the books had been proved to be false, and he was sure the production of them would not serve the interests of the master's case. It would be discovered in proof by reference to the books that the entries were far from being correct, whether the items charged were to the credit of the master or to the account of the union. Witnesses were then called on behalf of the master. The Rev. C. Dobson, chairman of the Board of Guardians, Rev. C. H. Redding, vicar of Andover, Mr. Hammond, Surgeon of the Union, Rev. G. W. Smyth, curate of Fyfield, Mr. Munday, Lieut. Poore, Mr. Barnes, and other guardians gave him a good character for honesty and sobriety. At this stage of the proceedings, Mr. Missing said that this was all the evidence he had to produce as to character, because, from the unexpected resumption of the inquiry, he was not prepared to do more. Mr. M'Dougal then left the room with his counsel, who announced the intention of his client to resign. Three publicans were then summoned by Mr. Parker, and deposed to the fact that M'Dougal had been frequently intoxicated in their houses. On leaving the Court, Mr. M'Dougal proceeded to the Board of Guardians and tendered his resignation. This step, it is said, seemed to take the generality of them by surprise, more especially those who had that very morning given him so good a character upon their oaths. It appeared, however, that they felt themselves bound to accept his resignation. Mr. Parker said, that as the master had acted contrary to the regulations of the Poor-law Commissioners, they did not think him a fit person to remain any longer in the workhouse. He should, therefore, be instantly removed, and a person well accustomed to the details of the management of a workhouse under the old law, was at hand, who would be able to attend to do the duty until a new master should be appointed. It was then proposed that an election of a new master should take place that day fortnight; but as Weyhill fair would take place in about three weeks, Weyhill being close to Andover, and many of the guardians interested in it, it was ultimately settled that it should be postponed for a month. While this subject was under discussion Mr. Parker had left the room for a short time; and during his absence M'Dougal was sent for by the chairman and asked if he would stay a month to take care of the house? He said, he was so thankful to the board for all their kindness, that he would stay 12 months, or as long as he lived, if they wished it. When Mr. Parker returned, and found that the board had decided on retaining M'Dougal to do the duties of master for another month, he expressed his strong disapprobation of the course the guardians had taken. A very stormy discussion ensued, during which Mr. Dodson and Mr. Smythe, the two clergymen, said they sincerely regretted that the master had resigned, for they had as much confidence in him as ever. Mr. Dodson (the Chairman) ended the altercation by saying, that "though he did not wish to fly in the face of the Poor Law Commissioners, if he was to be drilled in every way they thought proper, he should make his bow to them;" and so saying he took up his hat, and walked away. Mr. Barnes, the vice-chairman, did the same. Mr. Lywood followed their example, remarking that the Commissioners might get somebody else; he was not going to be humbugged by such people as them. The following guardians also tendered their resignations:—Mr. T. B. Northcast, of North Tidworth; Mr. F. R. Loscombe, Lower Blatford; and Mr. Isaac Pothecary, Goodworth, Clatford. On Tuesday morning increased excitement was caused by the receipt of a letter from the Commissioners, addressed to Mr. M'Dougal, the master of the workhouse, and Mr. Lamb, the clerk to the board of guardians, to the effect that the purport of the inquiry into the master's conduct was as to his fitness or unfitness for the office he held as master of the union workhouse, and also as to the official character of the matron. Sufficient evidence having been brought forward to warrant their dismissal, they were required to quit with the least possible delay. The Commissioners further disapproved of the fact, that the guardians had taken upon themselves the power of continuing the master in his office for one month from the date of Saturday last, when his resignation was accepted. The letters further stated that Mr. Parker had laid before them the whole of the evidence connected with the case, which would be immediately investigated and reported upon, as to whether further steps would be taken for the object of going into the further charges; and that the master must therefore instantly comply with these instructions, or coercive measures will be used to compel compliance with them. On Wednesday Mr. Westlake received a letter from the Commissioners, of which the following is a copy:—"I am directed by the Poor-law Commissioners to inform you that they yesterday received a report from their Assistant-Commissioner, Mr. Parker, accompanied by the evidence taken in the recent inquiry, by which the Commissioners have been made aware that on the 20th inst. Mr. M'Dougal placed his resignation of the office of Master of the Andover Union Workhouse in the hands of the Board of Guardians, and that his resignation was then received by the guardians. This was a step entirely within the discretion of the guardians to take; and as they have accepted Mr. M'Dougal's resignation, the inquiry by Mr. Parker, the object of which was to ascertain Mr. M'Dougal's fitness for the office which he no longer holds, is necessarily terminated. The Commissioners could not now issue an order dismissing Mr. and Mrs. M'Dougal, since such an order would be a nullity; inasmuch as there is no longer any master and mistress on whom such an order of dismissal could take effect. What further proceedings it may be incumbent upon the Commissioners to take in this matter, after a perusal of the evidence now for the first time before them in any official shape, they will proceed to consider." The master and matron still remain exercising their functions at the workhouse; and, notwithstanding the letters from the Commissioners repudiating them as servants of the union, no means have been resorted to for causing their removal, or for establishing any other persons in their stead pro tempore. The master expresses his willingness to go away as soon as his accounts are made up and his salary paid to him. It is said that he is about to take a public-house in Andover or Stockbridge.

Cambridge.—On Thursday of last week, about half-past 8 P.M., the Rev. R. R. Faulkner, incumbent of the Round Church, was stopped at the back of the colleges, opposite the New-road, by two men, one of whom placed his hand over his mouth to prevent his making a noise, while the other proceeded to rifle his pockets. They stole a watch, silver pencil-case, and some money. The ruffians almost strangled Mr. F., upon whose face and neck the marks of their brutality are abundantly visible; and, not satisfied with this, proceeded to further ill-treat him, and eventually dragged and threw him into the ditch. The police shortly afterwards visited the spot, and found a sovereign on the ground, which the thieves had dropped in the scuffle.

Hertford.—The annual exhibition and dinner of the Herts Agricultural Association took place in this town on Wednesday under very favourable auspices. The dinner was attended by nearly 400 persons. Sir Bulwer Lytton, the well-known author of "Pelham," "Rienzi," &c., was in the chair, and was supported by Mr. Abel Smith, M.P.; Hon. G. Ryder, M.P.; Mr. Wilshere, M.P.; Sir W. Farquhar, Sir A. Cooper, Mr. T. D'Eyncourt, M.P.; Mr. Surtees, Mr. Baker, &c. The speech of the meeting was that by Sir Bulwer Lytton in proposing success to the Society; and it was in many respects so remarkable, and came from so remarkable a man, that we make no apology for giving it with very slight abridgment:—

He had seen in print, (he said), doubts and sarcasms directed against such associations, and he only wished that those who drew but those doubts and indulged in those sarcasms were present at that meeting. They would then see that their doubts and sarcasms showed not only a want of knowledge of such associations, but also of the plainest political truths; for the most rational and the plainest of political truths was, that union was strength, and that a communication of opinions produced enlightenment. The principle upon which they acted was the encouragement of a generous emulation in the useful pursuit of agriculture, and he hoped that the day would come before long, though it might not have yet arrived, when the ploughman would be as proud of his prize as the soldier of his medal, or the peer of his diamond star. If agriculture were of use at all, what plan could be more useful than such associations for the encouragement of agriculture? Such associations had the strongest tendency to encourage the proper cultivation of the land, which enabled them to avail themselves of the experience of all, and to test theory by practice—associations which enabled the young farmer, who was perhaps too fond of theory, to take counsel of the old farmer, and which made the old farmer lay aside what might be called his prejudices, and profit by the energy and enterprise of the young. The agriculturists were a great and mighty class, in which was vested the solid property of the country, and no matter what the laws might be, on whom so many depended for employment. The nations of old well knew the effect of encouraging emulation, and giving prizes to those who contended at yearly games of chariot races and wrestling matches. Not that it signified a straw whether one man was stronger than another, or that one horse was swifter than another; but it was of the greatest importance that all who had a common object in view should be united in the pursuit of it, and encouraged in their exertions by the applause of a popular assembly. Was it not honourable to those whose skill and industry were so valuable to the country, to exhibit a manly desire to distinguish themselves amongst the competitors in such a useful pursuit? It did not signify in such competition that one man was richer than another, or that one man was more successful in farming, or that a man held a plough better than another, or that a labourer was more successful in keeping himself from receiving parish relief than another; but if England was to continue at the head of nations, it was necessary that there should be this union amongst those who occupied themselves with such employments, and that these examples should be shown to the labourer, who though contented as a poor man, yet disdained to be a pauper. To enrich the country, to improve the land, and to elevate the population was the object of this society. It was for that purpose that it was established, and it was for that purpose that it had been maintained. Amongst the prizes which were offered today, there was one upon which he looked with especial gratification,—it was the liberal gift presented by the inhabitants of Hertford, for nothing could afford him more pleasure than to see trade and agriculture go hand in hand; to see a union of the farmer and the tradesman—for they had a common interest; and they might rest assured that they could not injure the market of the farmer without doing injury to the tradesman, nor could the tradesman suffer in his interests without a corresponding injury to the farmer. That was a truth which ought to be generally known. Until it was perfectly recognised, he could scarcely hope to see an end of those difficulties and agitations which, as they belonged to politics, he would not further allude to on such an occasion as that. He could say, for his part, that he never felt that jealousy of trade which had been imputed—he hoped erroneously—to the country gentlemen: and he always took pleasure and pride in seeing those who were engaged in trade rising to high station, and carrying with them to that sphere all the energy and enterprise which characterised them, to improve those with whom they resided and associated; and he sincerely wished that every inhabitant of Hertford, who had so liberally encouraged agriculture by that prize, would soon be in the possession of crops of his own, and in a position to enter the lists of their association as a competitor. He trusted that the liberal and excellent example which had been set by the inhabitants of Hertford would not be lost upon him and the other landlords of the country, as it was a prize which, with most correct judgment, had been offered for the general good cultivation of the land. It was true that there had not been as much competition as might have been expected; but everything had a beginning, and he had no doubt that the competition would continue to increase—an object which would be greatly furthered by the contribution of a sum by the landlords and others belonging to the association, for the purpose of granting a prize in future to tenant-farmers for the best cultivated farm. He thought the amount of subscription ought to be limited to 1*l.* yearly, and he named that sum on the old principle of political economy, that the smaller the tax on each, the greater would be the aggregate amount of the revenue. It was not by the liberal donations of a few, but by the donations of the many that the largest amount of subscription could be obtained. By these means we should hope that they might be enabled to have two prizes: one to be appropriated to the purpose of a reward for the best cultivated large farm, in which a considerable amount of capital was invested; the other to be adapted to reward the cultivation of smaller farms, and the skill and industry which were employed in them. Whilst speaking of small farms well cultivated, he could not refrain from quoting a proverb which he heard a few days ago from a friend, who was, he was happy to say, present on that occasion, namely, that it was better to cultivate 10 acres well than 100 acres badly. He was so convinced of the truth of that remark, that he would at once subscribe to a fund for the purpose of encouraging the good cultivation of farms, and he would commence by paying up the arrears which he ought morally to owe to the society, and he would give a subscription of 20*l.* to be applied to that purpose at their annual meeting next year. This association began where everything, in order to be successful, ought to begin—it began with the middle classes, for it was the tenant farmers who originated it. They had an excellent committee, and the uses of the society were already apparent, not only in the improved description of stock, but in the ploughing and all the machinery by which cultivation was effected, as well as the general desire evinced by all classes for agricultural improvement. The association was as yet only in its infancy, and they had still more to expect from its majority; for that connection of science with all the relations of life which modern times exhibited, would be more and more felt by agriculture every day. Already in the north of England they had schools for the sons of farmers, where young men intended for agricultural pursuits would be instructed not only in all the practical part of farming, but in all the scientific branches of knowledge in connection with agriculture which could be of use to them in their business. They would be instructed in the nature of chemical compounds, in the different characters of different soils, and enabled to obtain that which seldom failed of success in any occupation, namely, a complete mastery of the business for which they were intended. The education of men did not end with their youth; for all their lives long they were educating themselves in that best school, the world. With respect to those portions of farming occupation which did not require much education to effect, although they were most important when effected, he was glad to perceive that a great deal had been done in Hertfordshire. In the eradication of weeds, for instance, there had been great improvement, as well as in the deep ploughing, and in carrying into effect a more economical description of sowing; and he hoped that they would also witness a great improvement in Hertfordshire upon the old bad system of cropping. All classes of agriculturists ought to feel that they were in the same boat, and that it was only by pulling at the same oars that they could hope to obtain success. A few years ago the old system began to be changed, and the farmers began to feel the good of looking to permanent advantage, rather than to temporary gain, in the cultivation of the land; and at present agriculturists were aware that the farmer who whipped his land by doing so only knotted a scourge for his own back. He hoped that, in addition to these improvements, there would be a desire exhibited on the part of the landlords to remove every just cause of complaint, and he was glad to see the intention announced, on the part of some large proprietors, to reduce the amount of game on their estates, and especially to keep down their stock of hares and rabbits. He would be the last to wish to interfere with the fair and manly enjoyments of the field, and he was of opinion that the farmer was so manly and fair a fellow as to like his landlord rather the better for being a bit of a sportsman—that he took a pride in his landlord's pheasants; but he was sure that every landlord would feel how intimately his station depended on the good-will and the good-feeling of his tenantry, and there might be a still more agreeable excitement than that arising from the pursuit of game to be found in improved farms with large crops, and the tenant's looking at his covers without apprehension, whilst enough of game was preserved for the rational amusement of the landlord, but not for the mere ostentatious display of a holiday battue. He was sure that the generous desire was increasing amongst landlords of doing all in their power to elevate the condition of the tenantry on their property, and a consciousness that property was not an irresponsible possession, but a trust held from God for the benefit of our fellow men. He feared that he had detained them too long, but there was one word more which he wished to address to them before he sat down. Classes had ancestry as well as individuals; and if he reminded that meeting of the service which their forefathers had rendered to the country, it was not from a desire to flatter their vanity, but to rouse their emulation, and to furnish an answer to unthinking men of every party who implied in their observations that the landlords of England were grasping and tyrannical, and who intimated that there was not sufficient love of freedom on the part of the farmers. Now, he would say that all the great struggles which our history records showed the strength and love of liberty of our agricultural population. More than three centuries ago, when the Spanish armada, the greatest fleet that ever set out on such an expedition, was off the coast, and when Elizabeth in person, not far from that town, reviewed her army, which was collected for the defence of the Protestant religion,—it was an army composed of country squires, and farmers, and farm labourers brought from the plough. Her Majesty had at that time but 28 ships, and the landed gentry of England manned and equipped a fleet of double that amount to aid in the defence of the country; and who led the fleet of England against the ships of Spain and the thunders of the Pope? The Seymours and the Howards, and the aristocracy of England were proud to serve under Drake, who was the son of an agricultural labourer. When, at a subsequent period of our history, Charles I. attempted that course which, if unchecked, might have ended in worse than eastern despotism, the Eliots, the Pyms, and the Hampdens, the plain country gentlemen of England resisted him. When the civil wars broke out, who were the men who, not seeking to raise themselves by a revolution, made every exertion to save the country from the horrors of that civil war? The country gentlemen of England. It was the country gentleman of England who resisted Cromwell when he usurped the government; and Cromwell knew the character of the agricultural population; for when he was beaten at first, he said, "We deserve to be beaten, for we raised our army from the scum of the land, and we must therefore go down to our estates and recruit our army from our yeomen." He did go down to his estate, and raised that invincible troop called "Ironsides," before whom the foreign troops went down as grass. It was with such men that he calculated upon making the name of Englishmen as celebrated as that of Roman. Burleigh, Walpole, Pitt, Fox, and Wyndham were sprung from the landed gentry; and Latimer, the greatest reformer and martyr, was the son of a small country yeoman. Harvey, who discovered the circulation of the blood, and revolutionized medical science, was the son of a small farmer; and Cook, the immortal navigator, another son of a farmer, little raised above a peasant: Sir W. Jones, one of our greatest scholars, was the son of a small farmer: but if he were to recapitulate half the names which then occurred to him of eminent men who sprang from the land to defend or adorn the country, he could detain them not for an hour but for a month. When England wanted soldiers where did she look for them? Amongst the agricultural class. It was from amongst the agricultural labourers that the thews and sinews which carried victory with them at Cressy and Agincourt and Poictiers were taken. It was from English yeomen that the soldiers were raised who fought at Blenheim, and at Waterloo beat down the conqueror of the world; and although in these happy times of peace, the success of their arms in battle might be forgotten, their services were undiminished, for they had other duties to perform, and were now employed in the improvement of our mother country—in the increase of our national wealth—in exertions which went to the protection of the poor, and in a perfect union of all classes, and of every party for these objects. That union of all classes of agriculturists was most desirable, and they would make more permanent a link in that chain which bound them together when they joined him in drinking "Prosperity to the Herts Agricultural Society." The toast was received by the meeting with the greatest possible enthusiasm, and many other toasts were drunk in the course of the evening.

Liverpool.—We regret to say that there is now little doubt that the packet-ship England, which has been so long missing, has gone down, and it is feared that all hands have perished. The following document was posted in the Underwriters'-rooms on Saturday last:—"Douglas, Isle of Man, Sept. 18, 1845. Sir,—A bottle was picked up on Tuesday evening last, about four miles south-east of Douglas-head, by the fishing-lugger Kite, Morrison master, containing a piece of paper, on which was the following, in pencil:—'Packet-ship England, from Liverpool, December 11th, 1844. Long. 98 7. Lat. 45 10.' On the reverse was the following:—'Lost quarter-boats. 10 feet water in the hold. No vessel in sight..'"—On Wednesday the 3 men, Lynch-Nowlan, and Tallent, and the informer Burns, who had been, as before detailed, taken into custody at the instigation of the latter, on suspicion of the murder of Mr. Peacop, were brought up for further examination. The prisoners had been removed from Birkenhead last week, as an attempt at rescue was feared from the previous violence of the mob, and sent under a military guard to Chester Castle, where they have since been confined. The Court was crammed to excess, and a crowd surrounded the Castle from a very early hour until the close of the case. Upwards of a dozen witnesses were examined, but not a single particle of evidence was elicited which could in any way prove the story of Burns. Several witnesses were likewise called for the defence, to prove an alibi in the case of Lynch, and that the two weapons found in his possession were such as are used in the situation he held as watchman at the Birkenhead Gas and Water-works. At 5 o'clock the magistrates intimated to the prisoners that they considered it necessary to make inquiries into the evidence called in their behalf, and that this might effectually be done, they adjourned the case until Saturday.

Maidenhead.—Considerable excitement has existed, for some weeks past, in this neighbourhood, in consequence of a game-keeper, named Topp, in the service of Prince Albert, having set a ferocious dog (stated to be a bloodhound) at a poor woman in an advanced state of pregnancy, named Wells, the wife of a labouring man, residing in the parish of Bray, for having gathered wood in that part of Windsor Forest in which are the preserves of His Royal Highness. The defendant was summoned to appear before the magistrates to answer the charge on the 9th inst.; but the hearing of the case was then postponed till Tuesday last, in consequence of the woman, from the injuries she had received, being unable to attend. Several witnesses were examined on both sides, and the magistrates (C. Sawyer and J. Hercy, Esqs.,) decided that an assault had most undoubtedly been committed. That Topp was there, and had set the dog on the woman, was very clear. It was the duty of a servant to protect the property of his master in a legitimate manner; but Topp had not so protected his master's property, but in a most illegal manner, not to be justified. If the woman were in the family way she was liable to serious injury. Mr. Sawyer, in giving judgment, observed, that he should view the offence of which defendant was guilty in the same light in which, he trusted, it would be viewed by Prince Albert. He should therefore adjudge that defendant be fined 2*l.*, and that he pay the costs. The fine and costs, amounting together to 2*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*, were paid by the father of defendant. The proceedings, which occupied a considerable time, created great interest to a crowded auditory.

Norwich.—It appears, from a statement in the Norwich Mercury of Saturday, that the attendance at the whole performances of the recent festival has considerably exceeded that of the preceding festival in 1842, the numbers in that year having been 7319, and those of the present year being 7737. Altogether it was a most successful meeting

Oxford.—The Rev. W. F. Wingfield, said to be a relative of Mr. Ward, has announced his withdrawal from the ministry of the Church of England. The Rev. Charles Bridges, late of Oriel College, has been received into the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Roscombe Pole, churchwarden of Bridgewater, with his wife, three sisters, and the members of his establishment, have also seceded from the Established Church and entered the Roman communion. One of the sisters is Mrs. Anstice, widow of the late Professor Anstice, of King's-college, London.

Portsmouth.—The fortification of our great sea-ports is rapidly advancing. The following are the works described by the Hampshire Telegraph as about to be erected in this port. They will be constructed on the west side of Broad-street, Point, from the old Sallyport, and will further extend from the Semaphore to the Round Tower, embracing the Sallyport Gate and bridge, and 22 houses, commencing with the Sun Tavern, and extending to Tower-court, with the same number of tenements in the rear thereof, facing the harbour; a length of upwards of 600 feet next the water, where a double-banked battery will be erected in lieu of the one at present standing from the Sallyport to the Round Tower. The Board of Ordnance have caused notices to be served upon the owners of the property above-mentioned that such would be required for the defence of the port, and requesting that they would send in estimates of the value of their properties on or before the 15th inst. At the rear of this new work, barracks will be erected for one or two companies of artillery; accommodation for a similar force is now in course of erection at Blockhouse, where the single row of guns will be changed for a double row of 68 and 32-pounders, with a round tower in the rear of three tier of guns; the whole of the defences will be further secured with a deep fosse in the rear.

Plymouth.—The Experimental Squadron arrived here before daylight on Saturday morning, the St. Vincent leading, attended by the Rattler and Stromboli steamers. The St. Vincent saluted the flag of Admiral Sir John West, Commander-in-Chief; and the Urania (Neapolitan frigate) saluted the flag of Rear-Admiral Parker. The Commander-in-Chief, Sir John West, struck his flag on board the Sylph tender in the course of the morning, and hoisted it on board the Queen, 110—his intended flag ship. Admiral Parker struck his flag, as Commander-in-Chief of the Experimental Squadron, at sunset on Saturday evening; and Rear-Admiral Sir Samuel Pym took the command, hoisting his flag (red at the mizen) on board the St. Vincent. The squadron will remain here a few days to make good defects, and will then sail for a more extended cruise.—Great excitement has been caused in this town by a monition from the Bishop of Exeter to the churchwardens, forbidding the future collection of pew-rents. It appears that last month Chancellor Martin, and Mr. Barnes, the bishop's secretary, had an interview with the vicar and churchwardens of the parish of St. Andrew, for the purpose of entering, on behalf of the bishop, upon a full investigation of the financial affairs of the parish church, more especially as respects a "pew-rental" and the non-existence of a "church-rate." A local paper, in an account of this interview, inserted with the knowledge of the churchwardens a statement to the effect that the bishop was satisfied with the report made to him by the Chancellor and his Secretary, and had, on their recommendation, sanctioned the continuance of the pew rents. This paragraph caused a long correspondence, in which mutual denials and recriminations were exchanged, and at length the bishop announced that, under the circumstances in which the subject had come before him, it was impossible to avoid expressing his opinion judicially; and he therefore directed the churchwardens to call a vestry, who assembled, in consequeuce, on Tuesday, the 16th inst. A great number of the most influential parishioners were present, and the vicar, the Rev. J. Hatchard, took the chair. The churchwarden, Mr. A. Hingston, read the correspondence, which ended with a long letter from the bishop, condemning the practice of letting pews for money as an illegal abuse, and concluding by saying, "I do, therefore, hereby absolutely forbid the churchwardens of St. Andrew's to continue the practice of affixing rents to the seats in their parish church. And I hereby require them to order the seats according to law, in such manner as they shall, on just consideration, deem most suitable and convenient to all the parishioners." Mr. N. Lockyer, upon this moved, and Mr. E. Nettleton seconded, a resolution: "That, inasmuch as an uninterrupted usage of letting part of the pews has existed for 200 years and upwards, has been from time to time sanctioned by high civil and ecclesiastical authority, and acquiesced in by the long succession of diocesan bishops throughout that period, without any known exception; as gratuitous accommodation for the poor is provided within the church to an extent greater than the demand for it; as the abolition of pew rents will occasion an immediate call for a church-rate; as that impost has been very rarely resorted to in this parish for two centuries, and never but on specific grounds, and to meet extraordinary occasions; as an attempt to enforce it will introduce strife and contention, where harmony now prevails, and particularly as the usage of letting part of the pews was formally and officially brought to the notice of the present bishop in the year 1835, without rebuke or observation,—this meeting has heard with pain and surprise the communication now received from his Lordship forbidding the continuance of this ancient practice, and most strongly, but respectfully, deprecate the adoption of the course which he commands, as uncalled for by any necessity and fraught with obvious and extensive mischief."—The Rev. N. A. Howard proposed an amendment, binding the vestry to submit to the authority of the bishop. This was seconded by the Rev. P. Holmes, but as only 8 to 12 hands were held up, the original resolution was declared carried. Resolutions were then passed upholding the churchwardens in their contest with the bishop, and thanking them for their attention to their duties, &c. In the course of the discussion it transpired that from the year 1636 to 1817 sittings in the pews of the church had been sold for lives. In 1817 a faculty was procured from Dr. Pelham, the then Bishop of Exeter, and from that date to this time yearly rents have been paid. The only record of a church rate in the last two centuries occurs in 1703 (when a storm injured the roof of the church) in 1816 and 1824. 11*l.* 7*s.* was collected in 1703, and the like amount in the following year. In 1816 a small rate was levied. In 1824 the interior of the church was in a most dilapidated condition, and church rates were again raised and continued till 1834, from which period to the present the edifice has been entirely maintained by pew rents, which have been expended in new stained glass windows and altar piece, costing 600*l.*, new tenor bell 120*l.*, new roof, &c., and the current expenses, sacramental wine, gas lighting, &c. The churchwardens have lately put in a third new window, at a cost of 350*l.*, but how that amount will be paid, with the bishop's monition hanging over them, it is impossible to say. The avowed object of the bishop is to increase the accommodations of the poor by the abolition of pew-rents. To this Mr. Hatchard answers, that when he became incumbent there were only 200 free seats, whereas now there are 2672 ready, or in the course of erection. The population of the parish is 24,000.

Ripon.—The local papers give ample details of the Will of the late Mrs. Lawrence, of Studley Park, from which we select a few of the more interesting particulars. It appears that the funded property and personal estate, of which this wealthy lady has died possessed within the province of Canterbury alone, amounts to nearly 300,000*l.*, which is exclusive of the valuable freeholds she held in various parts of the country, and of her personalty in Yorkshire. Mrs. Lawrence was the daughter of Mr. William Lawrence, of Kirkby Fleetham, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, and granddaughter of the late Mr. William Aislabie, of Studley Royal, to whose estates she succeeded in 1808, on the death of her aunt, Mrs. Allanson, widow of Mr. Charles Allanson, of Bramham Biggin. Mrs. Lawrence was born at Kensington on the 18th February, 1761, and died at Studley Park on the 30th July last; living to the advanced age of 85, and never having been married, she had but few near relations to share at her decease her princely fortune. To Earl de Grey and the Earl of Ripon she devised the greater part of her landed estates. To Earl de Grey she has left her estates at Studley, Fountain's, Ripon, Lindrick, Littlethorpe-with-Whitcliffe, Aldfield, and places south of the river Ure, except Kirkby Malzeard, the moors of Fountain's Earth, and Hackfall, which are given to the Earl of Ripon. To the latter nobleman she gives also her estates in the neighbourhood of Ripon north of the Ure, including Hutton Conyers, Sharrow, Copt Hewick, &c. To each of these noblemen the property is limited for life, and then to go to Lord Goderich, son of the Earl of Ripon, and in default of issue here, to the family of the Wallers. Her estates in Leicestershire she gives to Sir Cornwallis Ricketts; her estates at Kirkby Fleetham and Clint to Mr. Waller. Probate of the will and codicil of this lady was granted by the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, on the 18th inst., to Sir Lancelot Shadwell, Vice-Chancellor of England, one of the executors. No executors are named in the will, but in the codicil, Earl De Grey, the Vice-Chancellor, and the Rev. T. Bowdler are appointed. The will and codicil contain bequests of legacies and annuities to nearly 80 persons. Among the principal legatees are—the Rev. T. Bowdler, 20,000*l.*; the Rev. James Charnock, 15,000*l.*; the Vice-Chancellor, 15,000*l.*, and a life interest in 10,000*l.*; St. Vincent Ricketts, 20,000*l.*; Stephen Waller, 10,000*l.*; Robt. Waller, 7,000*l.*; children of Sir W. Young, 10,000*l.*; Miss R. Charnock, 7,000*l.*; Miss Charnock, 2,000*l.*; Rev. J. Charnock, 6,000*l.*; to the family of the Robsons of Holtby, 9,000*l.*; to her steward, Mr. Morton, 1,000*l.*; to her physician, Dr. Timm, 1,000*l.*; the Ripon Diocesan Church Building Society, 5,000*l.*; the Rev. Robert Poole, 1,000*l.*; Miss Booth, 1,000*l.*; Miss Kelly, 1,000*l.*; the Rev. J. Clarke, in trust for his family, 2,000*l.* The following charities are also benefited to the amount of 1,000*l.* each:—York Lunatic Asylum, Middlesex Hospital, Clergy Orphan Society, Leeds Hospital, Ripon Dispensary, Harrogate Bath Hospital, Ripon Church Building Society; 30*l.* is bequeathed to the poor of Kirkby, and 19 guineas to the poor of Studley. Earl de Grey is named residuary legatee. All the pecuniary legacies are charged upon her funded property. She also gives annuities to her domestic servants, according to their length of service, varying from 10*l.* to 70*l.* a year.

Windsor.—Considerable fears are entertained by the inhabitants of Windsor, that it is in contemplation to close the state apartments at the Castle, at no very distant period, in consequence of that magnificent suite of rooms being required for the occupation of Her Majesty and the infant royal family. These fears have been occasioned chiefly by the announcement that the office of state housekeeper is to be abolished, that Lady Mary Fox is to have compensation granted to her for the loss of "housekeeper's fees," and that these apartments for the future are to be placed under the custody of the Lord Chamberlain. Only five of the state apartments, out of the thirteen, have been shown to visitors for several months. Six have been entirely closed for upwards of a year, while the throne and ball rooms have been merely shown by the visitors proceeding through a portion of them between a roped passage. It is stated, however, that when the new arrangements come into effect, the public will still be enabled to view these apartments upon obtaining a ticket from the Lord Chamberlain. —At a vestry meeting of the parishioners of Windsor, last week, which was very numerously attended, the subject of the rates claimed from Prince Albert for the farm called Flemish Farm, in his occupation, was brought before the vestry. It appeared that the estimated rental of the property was 450*l.*, and that the last rate, at 8*d.* in the pound, amounting to 15*l.* had not been paid. The average number of rates made every year amounted to 45*l.* for the 300 acres of land, with a house at Flemish Farm. It was stated that the Prince had refused to pay the rates on two grounds—first, that he had no "beneficial occupation," and secondly, that the "property belonged to the Queen." Mr. Judge said it appeared to him that the Prince certainly had a beneficial occupation in the farm, for the two prize oxen sold by him last year at 70*l.* and 80*l.* were fatted on this farm, to say nothing of the crops and agricultural produce from which his Royal Highness derived great profits. He thought there could be no reason why Prince Albert should be let off from paying the rates, when the small farmers were obliged to contribute to them. A motion was then made, that the collector should be directed to make application to his Royal Highness for the arrears of rates due to the parish, amounting to upwards of 200*l.*

The meetings of the week on railway matters have been of little interest. The Glasgow, Paisley, and Greenock Company pay a dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum on the preference shares, and of 2 per cent. on the other shares. The receipts show a steady increase on the previous half year. An arrangement has been entered into for working the Barrhead line, and several schemes are in progress for uniting Greenock with various parts of the country.—The Edinburgh and Northern Company have authorised the directors to make the necessary arrangements for forming a branch from the main line at Markinch near the river Leven, to proceed westward by Leslie, and also a branch to proceed eastward to the town of Leven, and thence to Anstruther. It is also proposed to make arrangements for forming a line from Lochgelly coal-fields to the harbour of Kirkcaldy. The capital for these purposes is 390,000*l.* in 26,000 shares of 15*l.* each, to be appropriated rateably among the shareholders in the company. —The Exeter and Crediton Company have held a meeting, but it was merely one of formal character. The expenses incurred for the act of Parliament amounted to 2528*l.* A special meeting is about to be held for confirming the lease of the line to the Bristol and Exeter.—Arrangements, which are said to be of an advantageous nature, have been entered into by the Manchester, Liverpool, and Great North of England Union, with the Newcastle, Durham, and Lancashire Company, by which the two companies have been amalgamated under the name of "The Northumberland and Lancashire Junction." This has been done with a view to obtain the best practicable line for connecting Newcastle-upon-Tyne and the Durham coal-fields with Liverpool, Manchester, and the manufacturing districts of Lancashire.—The Manchester, Sheffield, and Midland, and the North Derbyshire Union, have also amalgamated.—The London and Birmingham have declined any connection with the proposed "London and Birmingham Extension," and intimate that they have instructed Mr. Stephenson to survey a line from Northampton to Weedon, to connect their Peterborough branch with the proposed London, Warwick, Leamington, and Kidderminster line, to which they accord co-operation.—The Brighton Company propose to extend the Brighton and Hastings line, now in course of construction, and which will be worked by them, under a lease agreement, from Lewes to the port of Newhaven, in continuation of the line at Keymer.—The directors of the York and North Midland will not permit special trains on Sundays, and limit as much as possible the ordinary trains; and on the newly-opened line from York to Scarborough they carry passengers down on the Saturday, and back again on Monday, to induce parties to abstain from Sunday travelling.—The directors of the Eastern Counties announce that they have decided on suspending the system of season tickets, until the remunerative character of their lines will justify the great reduction of fares which the system of season tickets involves. —The reduction of fares on the Manchester and Leeds has increased the number of travellers 26 per cent. during the last half year. The charge for a late excursion from Nottingham, through Liverpool, to the Menai-straits, upwards of 500 miles, was only 14*s*. Passengers are now carried on the Liverpool and Manchester, between the latter place and Patricroft, the first class at 1*d*. and the second class at ¾*d*. per mile.—A meeting of the proprietors of the Ellesmere and Chester Canal, who have formed a confederacy with the Birmingham and Liverpool, the Shrewsbury and Montgomeryshire, and other canal interests in the north, for the conversion of their canal possessions into railways, in conjunction with the projectors of the Worcester, Shrewsbury, and Crewe, and Shrewsbury and Trent Valley union lines, so as to furnish a complete system of railways to the districts west of the Grand Junction, between Chester on the north and Worcester on the south, was held at Chester on Thursday week, when the proprietors confirmed the arrangements made by the committee for carrying out the proposed conversions of the several waterways into railways, by means of a company to be called the Shropshire Union and Canal. The Earl of Powis heads the movement, and surveys have already been made by the company's engineers, Mr. Cubitt and Mr. Robert Stephenson, for five lines, namely :—1. From the proposed Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Stour Valley, at Wolverhampton, by Autherly, Brewood, Gnosall, Norbury, Market Drayton, Audlem, and Nantwich, to the Chester and Holyhead and Chester and Birkenhead lines at Chester. 2. From the Manchester and Birmingham at Crewe, by Nantwich, Wrenbury, Whitchurch, Ellesmere, Oswestry, and Welchpool, to Newtown. 3. From the Trent Valley at Stafford, by Gnosall, Newport, and Wellington, to Shrewsbury. 4. From the main line near Wem to Shrewsbury. 5. From the Birmingham and Gloucester, in the valley of the Avon, passing the Severn at Worcester, and proceeding throughout Bewdley and Bridgenorth over the Severn, below Coalport to Wellington. A general conversion into railways of the entire canal interest of the kingdom appears to be inevitable. Those that remain unmetamorphosed must speedily become bankrupt, so that a canal, in time, will be as great a curiosity as the almost obsolete stage coach.—The usual notice required by Act of Parliament to be given to the holders of land on new lines having expired, with reference to the Richmond and West-end, and there being but slight objection to the works being proceeded with, 1,000 labourers have been hired to commence operations. The directors have announced that the lines will be completed from Wandsworth to Richmond by Christmas next. In order to do this, both ends will be commenced at the same time, half of the men are to be employed between Richmond and Putney, and the remainder between the latter place and Wandsworth, where the line will join the South Western. The most difficult portion of the work is near Wandsworth, where it will have to cross an immense river bed, full of deep ditches, and very swampy, and where it is said the workmen will have to dig a depth of upwards of 20 feet before they obtain a suitable foundation, and in some places a great quantity of bricks will have to be sunk, in order to make the foundation level.—The committee appointed for carrying out the proposed testimonial to Mr. Hudson, announce that, in pursuance of resolutions passed at meetings recently held of the Midland, York and North Midland, Newcastle and Darlington, and Great Newcastle and Berwick Companies, that they have determined that the best mode of offering a suitable testimonial to Mr. Hudson in acknowledgment of his services to the public and the railway world, is to raise a fund by individual subscription rather than by grants of money from the public stock of the companies. Nearly 5,000*l*. has already been subscribed, forty shareholders subscribing 100*l*. each, and three of them 200*l*. —The South-eastern Company's branch line from Tunbridge to Tunbridge Wells was opened last week with the usual ceremonies. Its completion places the metropolis in possession of a direct and delightful summer rendezvous. The line is five miles long, and intersects the headings of the ancient iron-works of Kent. At present it is only open to the temporary station at Jackwood's spring, about a quarter of a mile from Tunbridge Wells. The permanent station will be in the centre of the town, and be approached by a tunnel 800 yards long, under a portion of it.—A collision took place on Wednesday week at the Oakenshaw station on the Midland Railway, but fortunately no serious injury to the passengers was sustained. The train from Leeds to Derby, which was due at half-past 10 A.M., did not arrive until 20 minutes after its time, and there being a great number of passengers going from Oakenshaw to Swinton (Doncaster) station, on account of the races, at least 20 minutes more elapsed without any immediate appearance of moving on. At this moment the train from Hull came up, on the same line of rails, and dashed into the carriages of the Derby train. Fortunately several carriages of the Derby train had been drawn back from the main body to admit of others being placed intermediate. These carriages received the blow ; but having some space to be driven forward before they struck the other portion of the train, the severity of the collision was materially checked. However the shock was severely felt. The Hull train, moreover, was slackening its speed to stop at the station. Had it been the express instead of the Hull train, which was to follow shortly afterwards, and which does not stop at Oakenshaw, every soul must have perished. As it was, several persons sustained severe cuts and bruises, and the greatest alarm was occasioned to all. Prince George of Cambridge was in his own carriage, open, on a truck, at the extreme end of the Hull train, so that he would certainly have suffered severely, if he had not been killed, had the concussion been more violent. His royal highness, fortunately, did not sustain any particular inconvenience.

The New Lines.—Constructive operations, says the Morning Chronicle of Wednesday, on nearly all the new lines granted last session have commenced, and will be in full operation before the close of the year, affording to the working population of the kingdom permanent supplies of winter work. The East Lancashire, comprehending an important group of lines in the north, is about to commence its works, extending from Colne to a junction with the Leeds and Bradford.—The works in connection with the South-Eastern line at Canterbury, Ramsgate and Margate, and those on the line from Brighton to Lewes and Hastings, are in active progress.—The South Devon works are drawing to a close ; and during the last fortnight the masonry composing the sea-wall has had to undergo the severe test of a tremendous storm from the south-west.—The extension lines in connection with the Midlands are proceeding, and the branches in connection with the Birmingham are being laid out.—The whistle of the locomotive will soon be heard echoing over the lakes, whose population are now employed on the Kendal and Windermere and Lancaster and Carlisle.—The Richmond branch of the Great North of England will be commenced at the close of the month.—The construction of 8 miles of the Edinburgh and Northern is to be in the hands of the contractors by October.—Five miles of the permanent way and works of the Exeter and Crediton will be in hand probably before the termination of October, together with 1000 tons instalment of the necessary iron rails.—Engineers and navigators have made their appearance in seven or eight miles of the Manchester South Junction and Altrincham, on which there is to be a viaduct of 1000 yards. —The Leeds. Dewsbury, and Manchester commence operations with a continuous contract of 22 miles, embracing a viaduct over Churwell Valley ; and the Newcastle and Berwick, one of Mr. Hudson's lines, proposing to complete the international chain of railways between England and Scotland, in conjunction with the North British, takes a stupendous first step in its construction of 53 miles from Etherton to Tweedmouth, retaining for the purpose whole legions of labourers.—The Manchester and Birmingham begin their tributary branches of four or five miles to Ashton and Macclesfield, including en route a tunnel of 330 yards.—The Belfast and Ballymena, Cork and Bandon, Dundalk and Enniskillen, have also commenced operations, and will open up employment for a large section of the Irish population.—A large portion of the hired labour of Wales will be called into requisition by the South Wales line from the Great Western to Fishguard and Pembroke, 182 miles ; by the North Wales, from Porthdynnllaen to Bangor, 28 miles ; by the Aberdare line, near the Taff Vale, 8 miles ; by the North Wales Mineral, 12 miles ; and by the Monmouth and Hereford, 36 miles ; by which collectively between three and four million sterling will be expended in the district.—The Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, one of the great arteries for travel through the West of England, 129 miles in length, branching off from the Great Western, with its termini at Salisbury and Weymouth, will place upwards of one million and a half at the disposal of the labour market of that district, to which the Berks and Hants. also a Great Western offshoot of 40 miles, will add 400,000*l*. more. The East Anglian lines, including the Eastern Counties extensions to Cambridge, Huntingdon, and Ely, 40 miles ; the Eastern Union and Bury, 26 ; the Ely and Huntingdon, 22 ; the Lowestoft, 11½ ; Lynn and Dereham, 26 ; Lynn and Ely, 37 : will contribute their quota to the total outlay of upwards of 2,000,000*l*., and 162 miles of new locomotion for those districts.—The Great Grimsby and Sheffield have commenced expending, between Gainsborough and Great Grimsby, 59 miles, 600,000*l*. ; and the Huddersfield and Manchester, 22 miles, and Huddersfield and Sheffield, 15, between their termini, 1,162,000*l*., the outlay of the former being 620,000*l*., and of the latter 532,000*l*.—Leeds is to have laid out on it and the districts adjacent between 2,000,000*l*. and 3,000,000*l*., by the construction of the Leeds, Dewsbury, and Manchester, 20 miles ; Leeds and Bradford, 31 ; Leeds and Thirsk lines, 44—giving a total new route by railway to that district of nearly 100 miles.—Liverpool is to be overlaid with a complete lattice work of new lines, preparations for which have been commenced on the Liverpool and Bury, with extensions to Bolton, Wigan, and elsewhere, a length of 40 miles, at an outlay of nearly 2,000,000*l*.—Upwards of 80 new miles of line radiating from Manchester to the manufacturing districts of Bury, Rossendale, Heywood, and Oldham, are to be commenced, at a disbursement of 1,000,000*l*.—The Nottingham and Lincoln, 33 miles, and Syston and Peterborough, 47, are to be begun in the Midland districts, at a cost of 1,500,000*l*.—Upwards of 150 miles of line by the Oxford and Rugby, and Oxford and Worcester and Wolverhampton lines, are to be executed by the Great Western, who have already commenced the future highway to the districts of iron and hardware, and to a uniting point with the Grand Junction at Wolverhampton, the total cost being calculated at 2,000,000*l*. —The Great Western have been more successful than any other company in their Parliamentary diplomacy last session. They obtained no fewer than eight lines, the construction of which will soon be commenced ; namely, the Bristol and Exeter branches, 29 miles, capital 500,000*l*. ; the Monmouth and Hereford, 36 miles, capital 550,000*l*. ; the Newport and Pontypool, 13 miles, capital 110,000*l*. ; the Oxford and Rugby, 50 miles, capital 600,000*l*. ; the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 103 miles, capital 1,500,000*l*. ; the South Wales, 182 miles, capital 2,800,000*l*. ; the Berks and Hants, 30 miles, capital 400,000*l*. ; and the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth line, 129 miles, capital 1,500,000*l*. This gives a total length of new lines to the Great Western to construct, of nearly 500 miles, and a total capital of between 7,000,000*l*. and 8,000,000*l*. If to this be added the present length the Great Western has in actual working, namely 220 miles, including Bristol and Exeter, and Cheltenham and Oxford branches, which with the main line have cost 7,717,043*l*., it appears that, with the amount of capital to be raised for the construction of the schemes sanctioned last session, the Great Western will have more than doubled both its capital and length, the former, which before the close of last session was 7,717,043*l*., being increased to nearly 16,000,000*l*., and the latter, which was 220 miles, being increased to 720, thus placing the company in possession of a prospective dominion, exceeding by upwards of 100 miles Mr. Hudson's amplitude of territory.—The Shrewsbury, Oswestry, and Chester, also commence their 23 miles into the mining districts, at a contemplated outlay of 410,000*l*. ; and the South-Western, their Southampton and Dorchester, 62 miles, at a cost of 500,000*l*.—The Trent Valley line works, 49 miles, will commence at the Birmingham line at Rugby, and run into the Grand Junction at Stafford, at a cost of 1,250,000*l*.—The Wakefield, Pontefract, and Goole, will expend half a million over 27 miles between its termini ; and the extension lines round York of about 50 miles, will be the means of circulating amongst its labouring classes at least half a million.—In Scotland the Caledonian, Aberdeen, Scottish Central, Clydesdale Junction, and other great routes, are already throwing labour into the hands of the Scottish population, the works on each of them having been vigorously commenced.—The millions of British capital thus being expended are only the seeds of a great monetary harvest, that must yield millions more. The total amount of money that will be set in circulation and expended on the construction of these projects is 20,000,000*l*. sterling. The total length of new railways to be constructed is 1745 miles, which added to the 1800 miles at present in operation, shows that while the new lines of last session have just equalled the old ones in length, they have about half equalled them in capital—the cost of constructing the lines at present in existence having amounted to 70,000,000*l*. There is every probability that the lines of the ensuing session will multiply the capital of those of the preceding one twice over, and it would almost weary arithmetic to calculate on the multitude of men to be employed in their formation.

Ireland.

Dublin.—The following declaration, signed by 18 of the Roman Catholic prelates, two archbishops, and 16 bishops, has been published this week, reiterating the opinions embodied in the resolutions adopted at the meeting of the prelates in May last, that the Legislative measure of Academical Education for Ireland is "dangerous to faith and morals :"—"Lest our faithful flocks should be apprehensive of any change being wrought in our minds relative to the recent legislative measure of academic education, we the undersigned archbishops and bishops, feel it a duty we owe to them and ourselves, to reiterate our solemn conviction of its being dangerous to faith and morals, as declared in the resolutions unanimously adopted in May last by the assembled bishops of Ireland :—M. Slattery, Archbishop of Cashel ; John, Archbishop of Tuam ; Thomas Coen, Bishop of Clonfert ; Patrick M'Nicholas, Bishop of Achonry ; James Keating, Bishop of Ferns ; Patrick M'Gettigan, Bishop of Raphoe ; Cornelius Egan, Bishop of Ardfert and Aghadoe ; Edmond Ffrench, Bishop of Kilmacdaugh and Kilfenora ; William Higgins, Bishop of Ardagh ; John Cantwell, Bishop of Meath ; Michael Blake, Bishop of Dromore ; William Kinsella, Bishop of Ossory ; George J. P. Browne, Bishop of Elphin ; Bartholomew Crotty, Bishop of Cloyne and Ross ; Nicholas Foran, Bishop of Waterford and Lismore ; Thomas Feeny, Bishop of Killala ; Charles M'Nally, Bishop of Clogher ; Laurence O'Donnell, Bishop of Galway." It will be observed that this list does not include the names of Dr. Murray, Archbishop of Dublin ; Dr. Crolly, Archbishop of Armagh ; or of Bishops Ryan, Murphy, Kennedy, Healy, and Brown (of Kilmore), all of whom are said to be favourable to the Ministerial scheme of education, or at least disposed to give it a fair trial.—By direction of the Lord Chancellor, a supersedeas has been forwarded to Robert Caldwell, Esq., who has been removed from the commission of the peace for the county of Fermanagh, at his own request. No movement has yet been made by Government in regard to Lord Downshire and the other Orange magistrates who attended the Lisburn demonstration ; and the reported intention of the Government to supersede them has had no effect in checking their proceedings, for several of the leading Lords and Commoners connected with the late Protestant movement in Ulster had a conference in Belfast on Friday. Lords Downshire and Enniskillen, Col. Verner, and Mr. Watson, were among the number. The meeting was strictly private, and no authentic account of the discussions has been suffered to transpire. The proposed dinner to Mr. Archdall, whose dismissal from the magistracy has created so much angry feeling, is expected to come off at Enniskillen about the 12th of next month. The list of names is filling up rapidly, and the only difficulty, says a local paper, at present is, to obtain a place sufficiently large to accommodate the numbers likely to attend. Meanwhile the Repeal papers declare that Mr. Steele has discovered a Ribbon Lodge in full operation in Belfast, and is in possession of the names of its leading members.—While these political manifestations are going on in the north of Ireland, a demonstration of another character is mentioned by the local papers, which state that great preparations are making at Lisburn for the reception of the Marquis of Hertford, who is daily expected there to pay his first visit to his vast estates in the county of Antrim.—The funeral of the late Mr. Davis, editor of the Nation Repeal newspaper, took place on the 18th. His remains were followed to the cemetery of Mount Jerome, by a procession consisting of nearly 80 carriages ; amongst others were conspicuous those of Lord Cloncurry, the Lord Mayor, and Mr. O'Connell, besides a great number of private equipages. The members of the '82 Club attended in full force, their gay uniforms affording a sad contrast to the mournful spectacle of which they formed a part. Mr. Davis was one of the original projectors of this club, the nucleus having been formed during the imprisonment of the Repeal traversers in the summer of 1844. He was also the acknowledged leader of the "Young Ireland" section of the Repealers ; and "while," says the Times, "the journal under his control was, by a new and peculiar style of writing, exercising an influence perfectly marvellous upon the minds of a population apparently half ripe for any adventure, however desperate, it was his good fortune, by a happy art, never to give currency to one expression calculated to wound the feelings or hurt the self-esteem of a political opponent."

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday, when Conciliation Hall presented an appearance which has been for a long time strange to the usual meetings of the Association. From the floor to the gallery an attentive and sympathising auditory were assembled to exhibit their regret at the loss of the late Mr. Davis. The platform benches were crowded with members of "the '82 club," in their uniforms of green and gold, and the ladies' gallery showed an unusually numerous attendance. Mr. O'HEA was voted to the chair, and entered at once upon an eloquent address upon the death of Mr. Davis. They had experienced, he said, a great bereavement. A great light had been extinguished—one of Ireland's best and truest sons. They would probably raise a monument to his memory—but he had engraved a tablet already upon their hearts which could only be effaced with life itself. Mr. J. O'CONNELL then read a letter from his father, and another also from Mr. S. O'Brien—both exclusively on the same theme. Mr. J. O'CONNELL, in the course of his address on the subject observed, that if any difference existed between the deceased and his brethren in the cause of Ireland, it was the result of that sincere and honest conviction, which had a beneficial effect in every popular assembly. If anything could bring comfort to the hearth of his afflicted family, it must be the tribute to departed worth which his countrymen had paid to him. Last May he had renewed the pledge to his country to labour in her cause till death. He had redeemed that pledge. He had died for Ireland, and he (Mr. J. O'Connell) standing by his remains, had renewed it also.—Mr. BRODERICK denounced the Riband Society, which he thought himself justified in saying had not been so actively pursued by Government as it ought to have been. He stated that Government had been furnished with information as to the existence of the society by Mr. M. O'Connell, which had never been acted upon, and that so remiss were they, that he almost thought the society was under the influence of Sir James Graham; for a man who would break a letter would do anything.—Mr. J. O'Connell, Mr. Gray, Mr. Cangley, and others, indulged in various eulogiums on their departed friend, which were listened to with considerable emotion and much applauded. The suggestion that a suitable monument should be raised to his memory by men of all parties was warmly approved of.—Mr. J. O'CONNELL renewed his strictures on the Times "Commissioner" positively for the last time. He denounced him for his advocacy of the landlord against the tenant, and accused him of conspiring with the former to deprive the latter of his legitimate interest in the land—the tenant right. Coupled with much invective and denunciation with respect to this subject was much ridicule and raillery of the Commissioner for his remarks on the physical strength of Celtic and Saxon population of Ireland. With regard to the remarks of Professor Kane, in his work on the resources of Ireland, of which this writer had sought to avail himself, he (Mr. O'Connell) alleged that they had been misconceived, for he knew of his own knowledge that the learned Professor was a genuine Repealer. Mr. O'Connell afterwards read the declaration of certain Roman Catholic Bishops, and said he hoped that document would put an end to all silly quibbling about the sentiments of their Church with regard to the new infidel colleges—institutions which the Catholic people of Ireland contemplated with no other feelings but those of abhorrence and disgust. The rent was declared to be 204*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*

Armagh.—The Government Commissioners are carrying on their inquiries at Armagh and Belfast as to the comparative eligibility of these two towns for the new northern college, and all the information and evidence on which their report is to be founded, is taken down as they proceed by a short-hand writer.

Cavan.—On Saturday, the 13th inst., a number of Protestants of the Manor, county Cavan, to the amount of 200, assembled on the lands of the late Mr. Bell Booth, and reaped and stacked several acres of corn, as a testimony of affection for the deceased, and a mark of sympathy for his family.

Cork.—The Cork papers give an interesting account of the ceremony of "removing the first sod" on the Cork and Bandon Railway, which was performed last week on the hill of Kilpatrick, near Downdaniel Castle, Innoshannon, by the Earl of Bandon, in the presence of a numerous company and a large concourse of the peasantry.—The experimental squadron left Cove harbour on Thursday week. The order for sailing was given so suddenly that several officers were left behind. A ball and supper was given on board by the officers of Her Majesty's ship Queen, 110 guns, on the Tuesday evening preceding their departure.

Limerick.—Captain Washington, R.N., one of the Tidal Harbour Commissioners, held last week an official inquiry into the past and present state of the port of Limerick. The Commissioner declared that there was not in the Queen's dominions so fine a river as the Shannon, and he could not account for the neglect of the navigation, and the imperfect quay and dock accommodation at Limerick. Captain Washington has since opened his commission at Galway.—The Earl of Limerick was most warmly received last week by his tenantry at Bruff, of whom he entertained above 400 at dinner. On this occasion he announced his intention of becoming a resident landlord. Mr. Brocket also stated that he knew several landlords connected with Ireland and resident in England, to be determined to follow the example of the Earl of Limerick, and that half a million of money would be shortly brought over by them for the improvement of Ireland.

Tipperary.—The Nenagh Guardian contains the following paragraph, headed "Tipperary Mode of Paying Rent." In our publication of Saturday last an advertisement appeared for the sale of the produce of five fields of wheat, two fields of oats, and some hay, distrained by the receiver under the Court of Chancery for rent due on the part of the Derry Castle estates, amounting to upwards of 200*l.*, and which was to be sold by auction on Friday. Bailiffs to the number of seven were placed over the property, who visited it every day to see that all was right. On Friday morning, however, upon going to the lands, there was not a vestige of the produce to be seen—not a single straw was left behind, the lads having made clean work of it during the night, to the great disappointment of the receiver, the auctioneer, and the bailiffs.

N., aged 29—15th inst., at the Castle, Parsonstown, Ireland, the infant daughter of the Countess of ROSSE, aged 4 days—16th inst., at Dorking, Mrs. HANNAH MESSER, of Upper-Clapton—17th inst., at his residence, 8, Carlton-villas, Maida-vale, Mr. BALL, in his 67th year, formerly of New Bond-street—17th inst., in Nelson-square, in the 70th year of his age, WILLIAM PENN, Esq., great grandson of the celebrated William Penn, founder of the Province of Pennsylvania—Lately, JOHN HOUSTON, Esq., M.D., M.R.I.A., member of the council of the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, surgeon to the City of Dublin Hospital, lecturer at the School of Medicine, Park-street, and member of the Society of Naturalists and Physicians at Huldelberg, &c.—11th inst., at Naples, suddenly, of apoplexy, the Countess of COVENTRY—12th inst., at Wiesbaden, the Right Hon. the Countess CADOGAN—23d inst., at Edinburgh, JAMES MACDONALD, Esq., Sheriff Depute of Edinburgh—23d inst., at his residence at Islington, Mr. WILLIAM UPCOTT, for many years Librarian to the London Institution.

ABERNETHY'S PILL for the NERVES and MUSCLES.—The proprietor of these pills is a medical man. The brother of a patient of his applied to Mr. Abernethy for advice; he gave him a prescription, and those pills are prepared accurately from that prescription. The patient's complaint was a nervous one, and it was utterly impossible for any one to be in a worse condition than he was. Muscular power was also lost in some parts, and his legs fairly tottered under him. He had a box of the pills prepared, and the effects were all but miraculous, for not only did nervousness leave him, but muscular power returned to all parts deficient of it. The proprietor has since tried them on hundreds of his patients, and he can conscientiously state that their effects in restoring nervous energy and muscular power have quite astonished him. The nervous invalid should lose no time in resorting to this truly wonderful medicine. They are so harmless that they may be administered with perfect safety to the most delicate constitutions, as they do not contain a particle of mercury, or any other poisonous ingredient. As before stated, their effects are all but miraculous—one box will prove the truth of this assertion. As regimen and diet are of the utmost consequence in all nervous disorders, the particulars as recommended by the late Mr. Abernethy in such complaints will be enclosed round each box, price 4s. 6d.—Appointed agents for London: C. King, Napier-street, Hoxton New Town; Barclay, Farringdon-street; Edwards, St. Pauls; Sutton, Bow Church-yard; Johnston, 68, Cornhill; Prout, 229, Strand: Hannay, 63, and Sanger, 150, Oxford-street. By sending 58 stamps to Mr. King (as above) a box may be had post free.

PATENT PORTABLE SUSPENSION STOVES, of which more than Four Thousand were sold last winter, are admirably adapted for Greenhouses and Conservatories, their principle of Ventilation effectually carrying off all those gases which are injurious to plants. Prospectuses may be obtained, and the Stoves seen in operation, at GEORGE & JOHN DEANE'S, opening to the Monument, 46, King William-street, London-bridge.

AN EXTRAORDINARY RETURN OF HEALTH IN A FEW DAYS BY THE USE OF HOLLOWAY'S PILLS, the patient having previously been in an ill state for six years. Mr. Benjamin Hawking, employed in the Ironworks, and well known at the Crown and Cushion, High Bullen, Wednesbury, Staffordshire, had, to use his own phrase, "been a sad afflicted creature, and that no one but God and himself knew what he suffered from aches and pains in all his joints, and shins, likewise from a disordered liver and stomach, with scarcely strength sufficient to keep about." Here, again, have HOLLOWAY'S PILLS restored to health an individual labouring under the most complicated diseases. Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment, 244, Strand.

WANTED, as LANDSCAPE GARDENER and GARDEN ARCHITECT, a clever, experienced person, who has a thorough knowledge of Gardening in all its branches. His business will be the laying out of Public and Private Parks, Plantations, Pleasure Grounds, Villa Grounds, and Gardens, and the erection of Horticultural buildings of every description. To a well qualified person of good character, a liberal salary will be given.—Apply by letter to W. SKIRVING, Walton Nursery, Liverpool.

WANTED, by a respectable young Man, a Situation as MANAGER, or to assist in the management of a Farm. He has been for several years engaged in farming operations, and during the last two years has been with an extensive Agriculturist in Scotland, where he had opportunities of practising the most approved systems of farming. Salary is not so much an object with the Advertiser as useful employment.—Direct A. B., at Mr. J. Helleur's, Southampton.

WANT PLACES.—All Letters to be post-paid.

AS HEAD-GARDENER.—A highly respectable married Man without incumbrance, who has a general knowledge of his business in all its branches, and is capable of taking charge of a small farm; and his wife can look after the Dairy and Poultry, if required.—Direct to W. H., Mr. Charlwood's, Seedsman, Covent Garden, London.

AS HEAD-GARDENER.—A married Man, aged 46, with a family; he has had extensive experience in the Forcing, Fruit, and Culinary departments. Greenhouse and Conservatory, Flower Garden and Pleasure Grounds, and is competent to manage Woods and Plantations. He will be free from his present engagement by the 15th of November next, where he has lived five years, and leaves on account of fresh arrangements caused by the death of the proprietor. Respectable references will be given by several ladies and gentlemen, as well as by eminent practical men, of disposition, moral integrity, and professional ability.—Direct to F. A., care of Mudie & Sons, 15, Coventry-street.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 36, a native of Scotland, who has had a thorough practical knowledge of Gardening in all its branches, particularly in the management of Pines, Vines, Peaches, and Forcing in general; Greenhouse Plants, Kitchen and Flower Garden. Can have a good character.—Direct to M. R., at Mr. Laing's, Nurseryman, Twickenham, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER.—D. FERGUSON, Nurseryman, Aylesbury, Bucks, with confidence recommends to any nobleman or gentleman in want of a GARDENER, where a married man is kept, a young man who was employed under him in a Nobleman's Place, as one of the Foremen, for some years, during which time his conduct was very satisfactory.

AS GARDENER.—A middled-aged single Man is desirous of obtaining a situation in the above capacity: he has had very extensive experience in the cultivation of Pines, Vines, and Peaches, together with every kind of early Forcing; also the propagation and cultivation of Stove, Greenhouse, and Orchidaceous plants. Can have the highest testimonials from his late, as well as from his present, employer.—Direct to P. G., Post-office, Richmond, Surrey.

AS GARDENER.—A respectable young married Man, without incumbrance, who would have no objection to undertake the management of two or three cows; he also understands the management of Land. His wife would have no objection to take charge of the dairy and poultry, having fulfilled that situation. They are leaving on account of the Gentlemen going abroad.—Direct to A. B., 22, Wood-street, Brighton.

AS GARDENER.—A married Man without incumbrance, aged 25, who perfectly understands his business, and has no objection to a single-handed place. Can have a good character from his last situation, where he lived two years and a half. His wife, aged 30, can act as Cook, or take charge of a house or dairy; she has lived in her last place nine years.—Direct to J. H., Post-office, Stanmore, Middlesex.

AS GARDENER.—A single Man, aged 35, who understands the management of Vines, Stove, and Greenhouse plants, and Kitchen and Flower Gardens. Would not object to take charge of a little Meadow Land. His character (from a gentleman whom he has served upwards of five years) will bear the strictest investigation as to sobriety and ability. To live out of the house preferred.—Direct to T. W., Post-office, Whitchurch, Hants.

AS GARDENER, OR GARDENER AND BAILIFF.—A respectable married Man, aged 35, who has had great experience in the Forcing and General Management of all kinds of Fruit, Vegetables, and Flowers, including Orchidaceæ, in several of the first establishments in England; can have three years' undeniable character from his last place.—Direct to A. B. C., Messrs. Rollisson's, Nurseryman, &c., Tooting, Surrey.

UN JARDINIER qui parle l'Allemand, le Français et l'Anglais, désire se placer dans une bonne famille, sachant à fond toutes les branches de la science Horticole, et ayant de bonnes lettres de recommendation des familles qu'il avait servi en Irelande et autres pays.—S'addresser à L. V., Messrs. Henderson, Nurseryman, Pine-apple-place, London.

AS UNDER GARDENER.—A respectable young Man, who has had considerable experience in Horticulture, and wishes to acquire a thorough knowledge of Forcing, and the management of Stove and Greenhouse Plants; would be glad to treat with any Head Gardener where a practical knowledge of the above may be obtained. A premium will be given. Can have an excellent character from his present employer, where he has been upwards of two years.—Direct G. L., Mr. Ogden, Nurseryman, Coventry.

AS GROUND FOREMAN, in an extensive Nursery.—A middle-aged married Man, who has had great experience in Budding, Grafting, Layering, and every operation connected with the hardy department.—Direct to A. B., Mr. Fairbairn's Nursery, Wandsworth-road.

A YOUNG Man, who has just left a situation in a SEED-SHOP, wishes to meet with another situation.—Direct to B. R., at the Office of this Paper.

W. UPRIGHT, late Gardener for 12 years to the late G. C. RIDGE, Esq., of Morden Park, Surrey, begs most respectfully to inform the Nobility and Gentry he is now in want of a situation as GARDENER, or GARDENER and BAILIFF. He is a married Man, aged 36 years, can be well recommended for ability in his profession, sobriety, diligence, &c. Letters addressed to him at Mr. C. Young's Nursery, Epsom, will have immediate attention.

PLANTING.—A steady, active Man, who is well acquainted with removing large Trees and Evergreens, forming Plantations, thinning and pruning neglected ones, laying out Flower-garden or Rockwork, and Alterations in general, wishes to engage himself for the ensuing Planting season: would suit any Gentleman who wished to make any Alterations with Economy. Terms moderate.—Direct to A. B., 11, Gloucester-street, Vauxhall.

LAND AGENCY.

MR. DONALDSON, Professor of Agriculture in the Agricultural College, Hoddesdon, Herts, and author of several Agricultural Works, wishes to be employed in the Management of Landed Property, occasional or permanent. Mr. DONALDSON was regularly bred to practical Agriculture, with the most eminent farmers and breeders in Britain, and has had a very varied and extensive practice of the art on the estates of Noblemen of the highest rank. Has been much employed in modern Draining and Planting, in the Erection and Repairs of Farm Buildings, in the Letting of Lands and Drawing of Rents, and in the general Management of Landed Property. Mr. DONALDSON may be consulted on Agricultural Subjects on easy terms, and permanent services obtained at moderate rate. High references for character and capability will be given if required.—Hoddesdon, Sept. 27.

SCOTTISH WIDOWS' FUND AND LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Constituted by Act of Parliament. Head Office, No. 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh. The Earl of Rosebery, K.T., President.

The Funds of the Society now accumulated and invested amount to One Million Five Hundred and Ninety Thousand Pounds Sterling. The Annual Revenue to upwards of Two Hundred and Thirty-three Thousand Pounds Sterling per annum.

The investigation into the affairs of the Society, as provided for by the Articles of Constitution, will take place on the 31st of December, 1845, and all who effect insurances on their lives before that day, which closes the current septennial period, will secure a certain greater benefit than will be obtained by those who delay doing so till the commencement of the following year.

The whole surplus profits belong to the assured, and may be applied either by being added to the sum assured, by reducing the future contributions during life, or by their value in money being given over to them at once.

Further information, with forms of proposal, may be obtained on application at the Head Office, or at any of the Society's agencies.

This Institution is designed to advance the Science of Chemistry, and to promote its application to Agriculture, the Arts, Medicine, Manufactures, Mining, &c.

The Practical School (in which the art of Analysis and all the methods of Chemical Research will be taught upon a plan recently perfected at Giessen), will be opened to Students in October, under the direction of

PROFESSOR A. W. HOFMAN, Ph.D.,
Late Assistant in the Giessen Laboratory.

The Fee, to Students working every day during the Session of five months, including the use of apparatus and materials, with some trifling exceptions, will be 12*l.* 10*s.*

Students who are unable to devote every day to the subject will be admitted and instructed in the same course of study on payment of smaller fees in proportion to the time they can work.

THE COLLEGE OF CHEMISTRY is supported by Donations and Subscriptions of Members. The payment of 1*l.* 1*s.* annually, or 10*l.* 10*s.* in one sum, constitutes a Member.

The Council contemplates the publication of Reports of the progress of Chemistry, and its application to Agriculture, the Arts, Mining, Manufactures, Practical Medicine, &c.

Full particulars may be obtained on application at the College, No. 16, Hanover-square, London.

By order of the Council, John Gardner, M.D., Secretary

FIRST Introduction to the Visitors of the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION of Dr. RYAN'S LECTURE, which illustrates MASTER'S PATENT PROCESS for making ARTIFICIAL ICE, Daily, at Half-past Three o'clock, and in the Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. Dr. Ryan will occasionally introduce Mons. BOUTIGNY'S experiment of making ICE in a RED-HOT CRUCIBLE. Professor Bachhoffner's varied Lectures, with beautiful experiments, in one of which he clearly explains the principle of the ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, a model of which is at work Daily. The NEW AMERICAN LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE, patented by Coleman, for ascending and descending Inclined Planes. SWIMMING and DIVING ILLUSTRATED by young Stevens. A magnificent and unique COLLECTION of TROPICAL FRUITS. A new and very beautiful series of DISSOLVING VIEWS, the new OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, &c. Experiments with the DIVER and DIVING BELL, &c. &c.—Admission, One Shilling. Schools, Half-price.

PATENT PORTABLE SUSPENSION STOVES, of which more than Four Thousand were sold last winter, are admirably adapted for Greenhouses and Conservatories, their principle of Ventilation effectually carrying off all those gases which are injurious to plants. HEAL AND SON'S LIST OF BEDDING containing a full description of Weights, Sizes, and Prices, by which purchasers are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding. Sent free by post, on application to their Establishment, the largest in London exclusively for the manufacture and sale of Bedding (no bedsteads or other furniture being kept).—Heal and Son, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham-court-road.

HORIZONTAL WATCHES, very Flat. — A. B. SAVORY & SONS, Watchmakers, 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank; price, in silver cases, three and a half guineas each; or in gold cases, six guineas each. These Watches are accurate and durable, the horizontal escapement being peculiarly suited to combine these important requisites. They are jewelled in four holes, and continue going whilst being wound. A twelvemonth's warranty given with each.

News of the Week.

The advices from New York by the Caledonia steamship bring the important intelligence that the negotiations of the British and French Ministers in the affairs of the River Plate, have entirely failed; and that hostilities have commenced by the seizure of the Buenos Ayrean blockading squadron by the British and French fleet before Monte Video. This news had reached the United States by a vessel which left Rio on the 8th Aug. The Ministers, as stated in the last advices, had sent their ultimatum to Gen. Rosas, requiring the withdrawal of his troops and fleet from before Monte Video. This demand was refused by Rosas, and the naval force of the Allied Powers immediately seized the Argentine squadron, and delivered a notice to Gen. Oribe, commanding the besieging army, to retire from the Banda Oriental. This account is confirmed by the information received by other vessels which have arrived at Hamburgh, and at some of our own ports. Great excitement had prevailed among the English residents for some days previous to the interruption of diplomatic relations, and preparations had been made by the squadron to embark all those who wished to retire from Buenos Ayres before the commencement of a further rupture. It appeared, however, to be generally felt that the allied squadron is too small to effect more than a mere blockade, and under these circumstances, much anxiety was felt lest General Rosas, whose character is sufficiently expressed by his title of the "South American Caligula," should oppose a passive resistance to the allies, trusting to the impossibility of reaching him by land, and visiting his vengeance on the persons and property of the British and French within his territory.—From the United States we learn that the accounts brought by the last packet respecting the warlike preparations of the Mexican Government were mere rumours of the day, and it is believed that the emptiness of the Mexican treasury, and the impossibility of getting a loan will effectually prevent hostilities. General Herrera had been elected President of Mexico, and a new Cabinet had been formed, which was said to contemplate an attack upon the United States, without the usual declaration of war; but this will, no doubt, prove one of the numerous surmises which are daily started by the papers, and after some further threatening, Mexico will probably submit to any proposal the United States may make in regard to boundaries.—From France we have no news of any political importance. A recent attack on Madagascar by a small force of English and French sailors, from the ships of war upon the station, who were repulsed with loss, supplies the leading topic of the journals, and it is not unlikely that a more powerful expedition against that island will shortly be sent out by the French Government.—In Spain, the marriage of Queen Isabella to a prince of the House of Coburg, and of her sister to a son of Louis-Philippe, are considered to be settled; and very little opposition to either alliance is expressed by the leading organs of public opinion in Madrid.—From the Levant we have the gratifying news that the Sultan has at length acceded to the request of our Ambassador, and has granted his firman for the construction of a Protestant church at Jerusalem.

At home, the most significant event of the day is Mr. O'Connell's revival of the monster Repeal meetings, simultaneously with the systematic reorganisation of the Orange confederacy in the north of Ireland. Mr. O'Connell's address to the vast crowds assembled at Thurles, from all parts of Tipperary, gave no indication that the Repeal question has undergone any change since the monster gatherings of 1843; while the few facts that have transpired respecting the secret deliberations of the Orange meetings, afford equally conclusive evidence that the Ministerial policy does not possess the confidence of the great bulk of the Irish Protestants.

Home News.

Court.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal family continue at Windsor Castle. We regret to state that Prince Albert has met with an accident which, although slight, is likely to confine him to his room for some days. On Saturday, previous to going to town, the Prince was coming fast down stairs, when his foot slipped, and he sprained his ankle. His Royal Highness, however, proceeded to town, and transacted business at the office of the Duchy of Cornwall. On his return to the Castle in the evening his Royal Highness was suffering considerable pain, the ankle being very much swollen and inflamed. Mr. Brown, surgeon to the household, who was immediately in attendance, prescribed the necessary remedies, and his Royal Highness is now nearly free from pain, although he is only able at present to take exercise in the garden chair. Colonel the Hon. Charles Grey has succeeded Colonel Arbuthnot as Equerry in Waiting to Her Majesty. The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Hon. W. F. Forbes to be Page of Honour to Her Majesty, vice Wilson. The Duchess of Kent arrived at Frogmore House on Friday from the Continent.

Death of Earl Spencer.—We regret exceedingly to announce the death of Lord Spencer, who expired, after a short illness, on Wednesday last, at his seat, Wiseton Hall, Nottinghamshire. The Noble Earl was taken ill about a fortnight since, and the symptoms which then manifested themselves were considered so serious that Mr. Keate, the eminent surgeon, was sent for from town to attend his Lordship. The unfavourable nature of the attack having subsided, the Noble Earl's friends entertained great hopes of his speedy recovery. A relapse, however, took place on Tuesday, and his Lordship died, as above stated, on the following day. The Noble Earl was born in 1782, and completed his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained the honorary degree of M.A. At the age of twenty-one he became member for Okehampton, and on the death of Mr. Pitt offered himself as a candidate for the representation of Cambridge, but lost the election by a very large majority. In the same year, 1806, after a very severe struggle, he obtained his return for Northamptonshire, and during the Fox and Grenville administration held office as a Lord of the Treasury. At the next general election he was again returned for the county of Northampton, which he represented in every succeeding Parliament up to the year 1834. His Lordship continued in opposition until the formation of the Whig Cabinet, when he accepted office under Earl Grey, and became Chancellor of the Exchequer, which position he held from Nov. 2, 1830, until Nov. 2, 1834, when he was called to the Upper House, on the decease of his father. The noble earl, as is well known, took great interest in agricultural pursuits, and up to a recent period held the office of President of the Royal Agricultural Society. His lordship was celebrated for the pure breeds of cattle he possessed, and was frequently a successful competitor at the exhibitions of the Smithfield Cattle Club, the presidency of which becomes vacant by his death. His lordship married in 1814, Esther, only child of Richard Acklom, Esq., of Wiseton Hall, Nottingham, by Elizabeth Bernard, sister of the first Earl of Bandon, but her ladyship died without issue in 1818. His lordship is succeeded by his brother, the Hon. Capt. Spencer, R.N., equerry to the Duchess of Kent, who was born in 1798, and married in 1830, the second daughter of the late W. S. Poyntz, Esq., of Cowdray House, Sussex, M P., by whom he has issue three children, Georgiana Frances, born 1832, John Poyntz (now Viscount Althorp), born 1835, and Sarah Isabella, born 1838.

Death of the Marquis of Ely.—Accounts reached town on Monday of the death of the Marquis of Ely, at Ely Lodge, county of Fermanagh, on Friday evening last, after a very short illness. The Dublin Evening Mail contains the following particulars:—"His Lordship had but lately returned to Ely Lodge, and appeared to be in the enjoyment of more than his usual health and spirits. On Thursday he experienced an attack of English cholera, and notwithstanding the prompt attendance of the most eminent medical men in the neighbourhood, expired, to the inexpressible grief of his family and friends, in the course of the following day. By the death of the Marquis of Ely, the Protestants of Ireland have lost one of their most distinguished and consistent members, the district in which he resided a kind and considerate landlord and country gentleman, and the country at large a magistrate upon whom dependence could be placed at the present eventful crisis. The deceased nobleman enjoyed the title of Marquis and Earl of Ely, Viscount and Baron Loftus of Loftus Hall, in the county of Wexford, in the peerage of Ireland, and Baron Loftus, of Long Loftus, in the county of York, in the peerage of the United Kingdom: he was also a baronet. He was born in 1770, and was consequently in his 76th year: married in 1810, to Anna Maria, eldest daughter of Sir Henry W. Dashwood, Bart. His lordship was a knight of St. Patrick, a privy councillor in Ireland, custos rotulorum of the county of Wexford, and colonel of the Wexford militia. His lordship is succeeded in his title and estates by his eldest son, Viscount Loftus, born in 1814.

Parliamentary Movements.—There is a vacancy in the representation of S. Warwickshire, in consequence of the melancholy death of Sir John Mordaunt. Four gentlemen have been named as probable candidates for the vacant seat; Lord Brooke (the son of the Earl of Warwick) and Mr. Barnard (a near relation of Lord Willoughby de Broke), in the Conservative interest, and Mr. Bolton King (formerly member for the borough of Warwick) and Sir Francis Shuckburgh, on the Liberal side.—The death of the Marquis of Ely, and the consequent accession of Lord Loftus to the peerage will cause a vacancy at Woodstock.

Foreign.

France.—The Paris journals of this week contain no news of the slightest political moment, and their articles do not present much that is worth extracting. The elections rendered necessary by the promotion of the late Deputies to the Peerage, have all terminated in favour of the Ministry, except at Douai, where the Opposition were successful. The infant Prince of Saxe

Coburg-Gotha was christened on Saturday at Eu, and the Prince and Princess of Salerno left on the same day, for Paris. One of the journals states that Louis-Philippe will leave for St. Cloud this week and review several regiments of the Paris garrison on the 6th October, in the Cour des Tuileries, and on the Carrousel.—A recent affair in the island of Madagascar, in which the joint English and French expedition was defeated, is the subject of comment in most of the papers. The Ministerial Debats says—

"The Government of Bourbon having been informed that by a decree, to be carried into immediate execution, all foreigners in Madagascar were bound to get themselves made naturalised subjects of the Hovas under pain of expulsion, the French corvettes Berceau, Captain Desfosses, and Zelée, Lieut. Fierreck, having on board detachments of marines for reinforcing the garrisons of St. Marie and Nossi Bé, sailed for Tamatave, where they were joined by the English sloop of war, Conway, to demand explanations, and, if necessary, to protest against the decree. The French and English commanders united in endeavouring to enter into communication with the Hova Government, and wrote to the Queen requesting a suspension of the measure. All was in vain. Their letters were not only unanswered, but were never forwarded to the Queen. The dwelling of a French merchant was plundered, and, in consequence, a landing was resolved upon. Unfortunately, no precise information as to the state of the fortifications and the real force of the Hovas could be obtained. About 300 men, French and English, were landed, under the command of Lieut. Fierreck. They advanced, and carried with the bayonet the first redoubt, although it was well defended. The same success attended an attack upon a second redoubt, which was much stronger. But, these gained, the assailants found themselves opposed by a wall, 20 feet high, well furnished with artillery, and girded by a deep ditch. The disappointment and vexation of the small but brave band, on finding before them an impregnable fortress, and the necessity for a retreat, may be easily conceived. But both French and English had sustained considerable losses. M. Bertho, enseigne de vaisseau and M. Ducimetiere, sub-lieutenant of infantry, were killed in the breach, and Lieut. Fierrick, an officer of the marines, and four cadets in that service, were more or less severely wounded. Among these last is distinguished M. de Grainville, cadet of the first class of the Berceau, who seized and retained a flag of the enemy, which both French and English rivalled each other in endeavouring to gain. The young de Grainville crowned his gallant conduct by dividing the flag, and giving one-half to the English! The losses of the English were in proportion to ours, and among them an officer, Lieut. Kennedy, was wounded."

The Moniteur publishes two very long reports, dated Bourbon, the 7th and 17th June, wherein Capt. Desfosses details the combined attack made by him with the Berceau and Zelée, and by Captain Kelly, with Her Majesty's ship Conway, on Tamatave. These prolix despatches add very little to the information given above. Capt Desfosses states that the arrangement for the attack had been combined with the captain of the Conway, who was in the same position as himself, there being the same number of British and French subjects exposed to the tyranny of the Queen of Madagascar. It appears, as already stated, that every effort was made to bring the Queen's agents to reason before the attack, but that all the representations of the English and French officers were treated with contempt and insolence. In concluding his second report, M. Desfosses says:—"I have just exchanged the salutes of adieu with the English frigate the Conway; at the moment of separation, as during the junction, the officers, sailors, and soldiers of the two nations, have not ceased to testify in the warmest manner the high esteem and cordial sympathy that they entertain for each other." This "cordial sympathy" the Paris Opposition prints are far from participating in. France, urges one of them, has an ancient right of sovereignty over Madagascar, and the captain of the Conway has acted as if such right existed not. Another print declares that if the French and English Governments have not planned the attack, it must have been concerted between the authorities of Bourbon and the Mauritius, and that the co-operation of the two navies in so petty an affair is quite a "monomania of the entente cordiale." A third paper is indignant at two French ships of war having been employed on the occasion, while only one English ship figured in the expedition, and at 238 Frenchmen having been landed, whilst only 80 Englishmen were exposed to the shots of the Hovas. In short, to please Le Commerce, the Conway ought to have been as much damaged as the Berceau and Zelée together, and her crew should, by rights, have contrived to sustain the same loss as the French, viz., 19 killed and 40 wounded. As this was not the case, the French, it contends, have once more been fighting at Madagascar for English interests, and it was far too generous in dividing with them the Queen's flag, which the young French officer had captured. The Constitutionnel, which also in the first instance expressed surprise and some indignation that the French should have lost so many more men than the English, is now forced to admit that the English sailors did their duty well. It thinks, however, that the intervention of Englishmen at all in the affair is to be deplored, as it may have an effect upon the conduct of the English government in respect to Madagascar—"over which France possesses incontestible rights." The Courrier does not appear to partake of the alarm of the Constitutionnel as to the probable result of another attack upon the Queen of Madagascar. Its only fear is that France should afford an opportunity to the English of avenging the outrage that she, as well as France, has experienced, either alone or in concert with the latter country. Much greater importance, however, is given to this question than it really merits.—M. Guizot is still at Beauséjour, where he was to remain till October 2, when he takes up his residence at Paris. Marshal Soult is expected to leave Soultberg on the 15th, and to arrive in Paris on the 21st. The Debats rather unexpectedly announces that Marshal Bugeaud will set out on his return to Algeria about the 15th of December.—Count de Rambuteau, the Prefect of the Seine, who had returned to Paris after a month's absence at his family seat of Rambuteau, has set out for London in order to visit the public markets of this city, and the principal towns of England, and be better able to decide on the question of the new markets which are about to be erected in Paris.—On Thursday week Louis-Philippe went on board the Caiman steamer, in the Treport roadstead, and conferred promotions in, or crosses of the Legion of Honour, on twelve officers or seamen of the ships-of-war assembled there during his stay at Eu.—No less than 35 companies have been formed to bid for the concession of the five new lines, namely:—eight for the Paris and Strasburg road; six for the Tours and Nantes; five for the Creil and St. Quentin; eleven for the Paris and Lyons; and six for the Lyons and Avignon. According to the railway journals, a fusion was likely to take place between the Northern Railway Company and that of Fampoux and Hazebrouck.—The Presse says that the French Government is about to send M. Magne, one of the members of the Chamber of Deputies, to Algiers, as a commissioner, to examine what steps have already been taken by Marshal Bugeaud towards the colonization of that country, and to inquire into the best mode to be pursued in future. The Presse considers the expedition of M. Magne a piece of expenditure which can lend to no useful result. "Within the last 3 years, it says, more than 250,000,000 of francs have been expended in Algiers under the administration of Marshal Bugeaud. A great deal of blood has been spilt, a great number of families have been placed in mourning for their sons who have died in the hospitals the victims of forced marches, fatigue, and cruel privations. And what progress have we made in colonising the country, and consolidating our hold of it? There is no reason to go to Algiers to see what must strike all eyes—on the one hand, the immensity of our sacrifices, on the other, the insignificance of the results."—The Debats bestows a leading article upon the pending quarrel between Mexico and the United States, relative to the annexation of Texas. After observing that the former country has a right to consider itself injured, but that it is utterly unable to contend with its encroaching neighbour, the French Ministerial print says:—

"The United States deserve applause for the prosperity they have gained and good wishes for its prolongation. They form a great nation, which cultivates most admirably the soil on which it is planted by Providence, and has opened vast fields to civilisation, but the domain allotted to them is quite sufficient to satisfy any ambitious and enterprising people. It is ten times the extent of our France, which nevertheless is a very fine empire. All the acquisitions required to consolidate them and make them masters of their own possessions, they have already won by force or negotiation. They have the Valley of the Mississippi, the Floridas, and all that originally belonged to the Indians. What more have they need of? Have not their twenty millions of people sufficient room in their vast territories? If the United States knew their own interest they would be contented with what they have. The civilised world cannot view with indifference their aggrandisement on the Mexican side, for every inch of ground they gain in that direction is so much given up to the infamous institution of slavery. For the political balance of the world the conquest of Mexico by the United States may create eventual dangers, which, though distant, it will not be superfluous to guard against. Europe, therefore, watches with care a great empire which occupies in the east and in the north an immense surface covered with a population of 62 millions—double that of France and that of Austria, and quadruple that of Prussia—and cannot help being filled with the contemplation of another colossus which may occupy the whole space of the isthmus of Panama, from the mouths of the St. Lawrence to the Columbia river in the Oregon, thus acquiring the disposal of the most productive cultivable lands and the richest mines of the earth, and extremely redoubtable at sea. Between the autocracy of Russia on the east, and the democracy of America thus aggrandised on the west, Europe may find herself more compressed than she may one day think consistent with her independence and dignity. It is not for the interest of Europe that the entirety of America should be in one hand, nor do we think America herself wishes it. Well, then, the conquest of Mexico would be a wide step towards the enslavement of the world by the United States, and a levy of bucklers by the Mexicans at this moment would lead the way to this subjection. There is, therefore, good reason why the public mind should be turned with attention towards what is now passing on the other side of the Atlantic."

The warlike preparations at the English dockyards and naval arsenals are not lost on the authorities on the other side of the channel. The Minister of the Marine arrived at Havre from Eu on Saturday morning. After passing two hours in the building yards of M. Normand, where he inspected the frame of the new royal iron steam yacht, Comte d'Eu, which is very far advanced, he went on board the government steamer, Penguin, moored in the King's dock. He afterwards inspected the floating dock, and the small steamer the Ariel, in which Messrs. Mazeline's experiments as to the best forms for the propelling screw are to be made. The Minister visited also the foundations of the new fortifications, and proposed to continue his tour along the coast. Engineers of the army, navy, and ponts et chaussées have, says the Constitutionnel, for some time been engaged in surveying the coast of France and preparing plans of forts and other fortifications for its complete defence from invasion. It is said the Minister of War will in the course of the next session present a Bill to the Chamber for the grant of a credit sufficient to carry these projects into execution.—Accounts have been received from Tahiti of the 4th of May, which gave a deplorable account of the state of that island. The following is an extract from a letter dated from Papeite, May 4:—"Queen Pomare is still in hostility with us. She remains at Raiatea with the malcontents of the Archipelago, and there, with the aid of some deserters from our crews, and even some captains of the English navy, has raised fortifications which will require some severe work with the bayonet to carry. In this defensive position the Queen is waiting for sufficient forces from England to enable her to resume the sovereignty which she has lost. We live here in a constant state of warfare, passing the day in scouring the country and clearing the valleys; gendarmes and soldiers spread right and left, seeking for our concealed enemies. The natives carry on a real Kabyle war against us; lying in invisible ambush, firing upon us as if we were wild beasts, and then disappearing with a rapidity which renders it impossible for us to overtake them. During the night the shore and town of Papeite are guarded by sentinels and patrols of gendarmes at every point and in all directions. Thus have we lived for many months, and if our government does not assume a more determined attitude, we really know not what end we may come to, for our soldiers and sailors are beginning to be worn out by a service so fatiguing and dangerous."—The Bishop of London held a confirmation at Avranches (Normandy) on the 21st ult., and on the following day started for Coutances, on his way to Havre.—The Debats announces that Mr. Locke had been appointed chief engineer of the branch railroads of Dieppe and Fecamp and that both would be terminated in the course of a year.

Spain.—The Madrid journals are mostly occupied with the question of the marriage of the Queen with the Prince Ferdinand of Saxe Coburg, and of the Infanta, her sister, with the Duke de Montpensier. The Heraldo still persists in advocating the claim of the son of Don Francisco de Paula. The Castellano considers the Prince of Saxe Coburg and Montpensier as most eligible candidates, and declares that it will only oppose the pretensions of the Count de Montemolin and Count Trapani. The marriage of the Infanta with the Duke of Montpensier is considered by all the journals as a settled affair, and none of them make any objection to it. We may here observe that, according to the Augsburg Gazette, the Cabinet of Vienna has given its adhesion to the marriage of Prince Ferdinand of Saxe Coburg with the Queen of Spain, and that the object of Queen Victoria's visit to Eu was to obtain the consent of King Louis-Philippe.—The Duke de Rianzares has returned to Madrid from Paris, where with M. Donozo Cortes he went to arrange the marriage question with Louis-Philippe in person. The Queen stood godmother for a daughter of Count Bresson, the French Ambassador, on the 21st. The Cabinet continued very united, and all reports of Ministerial changes had subsided. The new system of taxes experienced but little opposition in the Provinces. The capital had been divided into two municipal districts, for the purpose of taking a census; that of the north was found to contain 89,870 souls; that of the south, 98,357;—in all, 188,227 souls.

Germany.—We learn from Berlin that the Empress of Russia took her departure from that city on the 23d, by the Anhalt railroad. Early in the morning guards were stationed to prevent the court-yard of the station and the approaches from being encumbered by the crowd, and none but personages of high distinction were admitted. At 7, A.M., her Imperial Majesty arrived at the station, accompanied by the King of Prussia and the Princes, the Grand Duchess Dowager of Meeklenburg-Schwerin, Princess Frederick of the Netherlands, the Duchess of Dessau, with her children, and the Duke of Anhalt-Gothen. In a few minutes the train started with the Empress, accompanied by the King and Princes, who went with her as far as Cothen, and then returned to Berlin. It is said that the route of her Majesty has been so far changed that she will stop for two days in a chateau of Bavaria or the Tyrol.—The Duke of Cambridge and Prince Frederick of Hesse paid, on the 22d, a short visit to the Grand Duke of Hesse, and returned next day to Rumpenheim, where they had been previously residing.—The birth of an heir to the house of Hanover appears to have been received throughout that kingdom with great satisfaction. The King is by no means unpopular in his dominions. On the contrary, his energy is much applauded, and he has obtained the reputation of being very just, especially in cases in which the poor have been apparently oppressed by their superiors. Of the King's talents for governing no doubt is entertained in any quarter, and the Hanoverians are proud of their monarch, and regard him as one of the most talented Sovereigns of Europe. The birth of the King's grandson consolidates the dynasty, and removes a very awkward question which might have arisen on the death of the reigning Sovereign.—The weather in Northern Germany has been remarkably cold and disagreeable for some days past, and people begin already to prognosticate an early winter. The hotels at Hamburg are filled with travellers, on their way home from the sea-side or the numerous mineral baths, and in the course of a very days those resorts of fashion will be entirely deserted.—We learn from Posen that, on the 21st, the members of the New German Catholic Church in that city celebrated Divine worship publicly for the first time according to their tenets. A disturbance had been expected, but everything passed off quietly.—The Augsburgh Gazette states that the King of Prussia had commanded the houses of the two reformers, Luther and Melancthon, to be purchased by the state, and converted into schools. His Majesty had likewise ordered the doors of Luther's dwelling, which the French had in a great measure destroyed, to be restored. They will be formed of metal, richly embellished.—Letters from Trieste state that the Queen of Greece arrived in that town on the 18th September. The Grand Duke of Oldenburg, her father, had previously arrived there to receive Her Majesty.

Italy.—Advices from Leghorn of the 20th ult., mention that an attempt at revolt which was to have taken place in the Legations towards the middle of the month had completely miscarried. The patriots, it appears, had tampered with the troops of the garrison of Ancona, Senegaglia, and Rimini, on whose co-operation they relied, but shortly before the period fixed for the outbreak the Pontifical Government, to which the plot had been announced, changed all the garrisons, and thus defeated their plans. The principal chiefs had fled. Military commissions were immediately established in the different localities; the Pontifical volunteers were reorganised, and orders were forwarded from Rome to arm the inhabitants of the suburbs of Faenza, who are well affected to the Pope's Government. 15 persons had been arrested in this last town. The commission sitting at Ravenna had sentenced 50 or 60 individuals to the galleys.—A letter from Naples, of the 9th ult., states that the Palace of Butera, at Palermo, had been prepared for the reception of the Empress of Russia and her numerous suite, and that Her Imperial Majesty will be escorted from Genoa to Sicily by three or four frigates.—Accounts of the 15th ult. from Florence state that Ibraham Pasha, who is at the baths of San Gaetano, near Pisa, was in a suffering condition. It was thought that he would pass the winter at the baths, or at Pisa. The Grand Duke had placed his palace at his disposal.—A slight shock of an earthquake was felt at Florence, at 11 at night, on the 14th. A private letter from Florence states that M. Zampieri, the Grand Duke's librarian, had discovered amongst some old writings a manuscript, containing the greater part of an epic poem by Ariosto, entitled "Rinaldo l'Ardito." The poem is divided into 12 cantos, and contains 244 stanzas. The first canto, the beginning of the second, and the sixteenth are wanting. The Grand Duke has ordered the work to be printed at his expense, and copies of it to be sent to the principal libraries of Europe, in order that research may be made for the missing parts.

GREECE.—A letter from Athens of the 13th gives an account of the arrival of the Duke de Montpensier in that city on the preceding day. The Prince was received with the usual marks of distinction, and in the evening the King and Queen gave a grand banquet in honour of his visit. The Prince, however, made but a short stay in Athens. On the 14th, the day after his arrival, the Prince took an excursion with the King and Queen to Mount Pentelicus. His Royal Highness having placed his frigate at the disposal of the Queen, she took her departure on the 14th for Venice. Her Majesty was accompanied in the Gomer by the King and the Duke de Montpensier as far as Kamalaki, and found at Lutraki, on the other side of the Isthmus of Corinth, the French steam-ship Cuvier, in which her Majesty proceeded to Venice. King Otho returned to Athens in the evening, and the Duke de Montpensier continued his voyage.

TURKEY.—Accounts from Constantinople of the 10th ult. announce that after innumerable delays and difficulties, the Turkish Government is at length about to allow a Protestant church to be established at Jerusalem, and has granted the firman so long solicited by Sir S. Canning. All denominations of Christians, with the exception of the Protestants alone, have for a long time had a place of worship at Jerusalem, and this anomaly is attributed not so much to the opposition of the Porte itself, as to that of the Ambassadors of France and Russia, who, for political as much as for religious reasons, have thrown every obstacle in the way, and have hitherto rendered nugatory the demands of our ambassador.—There have been some new changes in the Turkish Cabinet. Halyn Pacha, who was Captain Pacha under the late ministry, has been nominated Minister of Commerce. Said Pacha has a seat in the Cabinet, and Moustapha Nouri Pacha has been appointed Pacha of Broussa. Some further changes are spoken of, which are of no great importance in themselves, except in so far as they show a want of steadiness and perseverance in the new ministry. The rumoured assassination of Riza Pacha turns out to be a fiction, as expected. Private letters give an account of a strange affair, in which the French Ambassador to the Porte is at present engaged. Some time since, during the unhappy war which was then raging between the Druses and the Maronites, a priest, under French protection, was killed during an attack made by the Druses on the village of Abeya. A Druse chief was accused of being the author of the priest's death, and the French Consul at Beyrout required of the Turkish authorities that the chief should be put to death without trial. Such a demand was at once refused; but the Turks offered to try the chief before the proper tribunals, and if he were then found guilty, to punish him according to the law. This reasonable offer was not considered satisfactory. The French Ambassador at Constantinople has followed up the demand made by the Consul, and not only insists that the man should be executed without trial, but threatens in case of refusal to enforce his demand. If anything could add to the wonder excited by such extraordinary conduct on the part of the representative of a civilised power, it is that the accused person is said to be perfectly innocent of the crime, and that the priest in question fell fairly in the field of battle.

INDIA AND CHINA.—The Indian mail has arrived this week, with dates from Bombay, August 27; Calcutta, August 16; Madras, August 20; and China, June 25. There is no longer any doubt as to the assembling of an army on the banks of the Sutledge, in order to enable the present Sikh government to curb its licentious soldiery. The Governor-General, the Commander-in-Chief, the Lieutenant-Governor of the north-west provinces, Mr. Thomason, and Mr. G. R. Clerk, who was said to be on his way from England, are to have a conference at Agra, after which the important movements will be commenced. The preparations were going on silently but surely, especially in the boats for bridges and the steamers, &c. It appeared to be expected that Sir Charles Napier would be called on to join the Governor-General, in case any hostile measures became imperative in the Punjaub. The fame of that General along the Indus, and throughout the north-west of India, is immense. Scinde was tranquil, and the British rule completely established by the gallant General. This fact was sufficiently a matter of annoyance to his enemies, who sought by every means to decry his acts.—Alterations were about to be made in the native regiments employed in Scinde, and the loud complaints lately uttered against its unhealthiness had, in a great measure, subsided. The cholera had disappeared at Sukkur and Hyderabad.—The intelligence from Cabul is of the usual description of plots and rebellions. There are some intrigues going on at Herat, between the Shah of Persia's agents and the notorious usurper Yar Mahomed, in which the former has represented Persia as being governed by Russian intrigues, that a peace for 30 years had been agreed to, and that in the meanwhile Russia was to assist the Persian Government to overcome all its enemies and opponents in Central Asia.—In the interior of India tranquillity prevails. Great plenty was expected in the north-west provinces, in consequence of the abundant fall of rain. The departure from Calcutta of the Governor-General for the north-western provinces was fixed for the end of September. The Southern Mahratta country was tranquil, although some disaffected chiefs refused to pay their tribute.—The news from China comes down to the 27th June. Mr. Davis, the Governor of Hong-Kong, had published a proclamation for the assessment of houses, lands, &c., which it was maintained was calculated to prove injurious to the colony, as tending to prevent parties from settling there. There is an interesting discussion going forward in India relative to the island of Chusan, which now, when the time for its restoration to the Chinese is approaching, becomes of more value than ever to the British. Great unwillingness is exhibited to restore it, on the ground that the whole of the provisions of the treaties with the Chinese had not been complied with. It was said that the French and Americans cast covetous eyes on this island, against which so many prejudices had existed, which were found by experience to be unfounded, and that having each made stipulations for an island, they expect to get Chusan. The island continues still in the hands of the British, and a very great wish is expressed to retain it. It is not improbable that some negotiations for the purpose will be commenced ere long. The trade with the Chinese was going forward favourably, and it is to be hoped that the negotiations for the final possession of Chusan will be attended with the best results. It appears that the best feelings prevail between the inhabitants of Chusan and the British troops stationed there. The health of the latter, since they had become acquainted with the country and the manner of living in it, had been excellent.

SOUTH AMERICA.—The advices by the Caledonia announce the seizure, by the British and French forces, of the Buenos Ayrean fleet before Monte Video. This news was brought by the United States' ship St. Louis, which had arrived in Hampton-roads on the 8th ult., with advices from Rio to the 8th Aug., and from Buenos Ayres to the 26th July. It is stated that the day before the departure of the St. Louis from Rio advices had reached that city of the entire failure of the attempted intervention on the part of England and France in the affairs of the River Plate, and the retirement of Mr. Ouseley and Baron Deffandis to Monte Video, Rosas having rejected the ultimatum sent in by the Ministers, requiring the withdrawal of the Buenos Ayrean troops and fleet from before Monte Video. The naval force of the allied Powers had, therefore, taken possession of the Buenos Ayrean blockading squadron, and delivered a notice to General Oribe, commanding the besieging army to retire from the Banda Oriental. Great excitement prevailed in Buenos Ayres, and it was supposed that England and France would be brought into open collision with the Argentine republic. During the negotiation at Buenos Ayres the American Chargé, Mr. Brent, had offered his mediation. The offer was accepted by General Rosas, but declined by the English and French Ministers, on the ground that the Chargé was not instructed or authorised by his Government. These accounts are confirmed by other vessels which have arrived at Falmouth and Hamburgh; but it is believed that the British and French force is too small to produce any permanent effect, and that a blockade is not sufficient to protect persons or property even in the city, much less in the open country at 100 or 200 miles from the coast, surrounded by natives, or to enable merchants to embark their goods or effects with an opposing force on shore.

UNITED STATES.—There have been several arrivals from America this week, and among them the Caledonia mail-steamer, with news from Boston to the 16th, and Halifax to the 18th ult. There is no account of any hostilities having taken place at "the seat of war," as Texas is termed in the United States papers; the rumours of large Mexican armies marching towards that country appear to be pure fictions, whilst the emptiness of the Mexican treasury, and the impossibility of getting a loan, are realities not to be overcome, where the feelings of the people are little in unison with the wishes of their rulers. From all accounts the sole preventive that exists against a war between the two countries is the want of money on the part of Mexico. In the meantime the country is in great disorder, and the province of Tobasco taking advantage of the opportunity, have revolted and declared their independence. The American forces in Texas have been suffered to concentrate and establish their position, undisturbed by any attack at Corpus Christi, described as one of the healthiest and most beautiful spots in the world. It was said that General Taylor will occupy this position for about two months, and in case the Mexicans in the meantime take no measures of decisive attack, that they will then move forward to the mouth and borders of the Rio Grande, and will establish that as the boundary line between the two countries. The Washington Union, however, says:—"Letters have been received from the capital of Mexico to the 30th July: they express great doubts whether Congress would pass the declaration of war, and whether they would not consider their previous avowals in relation to annexation as tantamount to a declaration, and whether they would not attempt to strike at us without a declaration. It is confidently said that they are sending all the troops they could despatch to the frontier with that view, General Felasola to be commander-in-chief." This, however, is probably merely one of the numerous surmises which have been started, though some weight has been attached to it on account of its appearing in the government organ. General Herrera has been elected President of Mexico, and a new cabinet formed. The loan of fifteen millions of dollars, which the Congress had voted, seemed not likely to be realised, so low was the rate of interest. The New Orleans Bee says, that according to the best authority it can obtain, the Mexican Congress had adjourned without a declaration of war; that no such declaration will be issued, but that she will do all she can to re-conquer Texas. The Mobile Register says, that the Fort St. Juan d'Ulloa is cleared of everything valuable, and ready for defence, and has about 140 guns of heavy calibre mounted. It says further, that the United States vessels in the Gulf are too light to do the slightest injury to such a fortress in its present state of repair, but it is said two sloops of war could easily blockade the port, and the consequence would be an insurrection of the anti-war party in Mexico. All these, however, are of course mere rumours, and the probability appeared to be that Mexico would do nothing and would quietly submit to any proposal the United States Government made in regard to boundaries. Such was the opinion among mercantile classes in New York, as the uneasy feeling existed in the markets concerning the "war question." The disturbances excited by the Anti-Renters in New York had considerably subsided, the state authorities had taken vigorous steps against the offenders, captured and lodged in prison about 150 of the most active, and against nearly all of whom true bills had been found. The court-house at Hudson, state of New York, where the trial of the Anti-Renters was proceeding, was the scene of an unseemly outrage between the Attorney-General of the state, J. Van Buren, Esq., son of the late president, and Mr. Jordan, defendant's counsel, who indulged in a pugilistic contest in open court, which was carried on with spirit amid great confusion, the judge calling loudly for order; after some time the sheriffs succeeded in separating the combatants, who were then placed at the bar (one of them being the Attorney-General of the state), and committed to prison for 24 hours for contempt of court.—Private letters state the curious fact that the emigrants from the more eastern states to the Oregon territory have organised themselves into a sort of separate Government, totally independent of Congress. The slip of land between the mountainous chain and the Pacific Ocean, is said to be sought with the greatest eagerness, persons constantly flocking thither by thousands. There is even a notion that independent Governments may arise in the west, powerful enough to prove formidable to the United States. Such a condition of things was predicted by President Jefferson, and more recently by Col. Benton.—Another arrival from New York is the long-expected American screw-steamer Marmora, which arrived in the Mersey on Friday, after a passage of 23½ days, and bringing some 40 or 50 passengers. The length of the voyage is stated to have arisen from her propeller, which is made of wrought copper, having been struck and damaged by a heavy sea shortly after leaving New York, so as to be rendered not only useless, but also a serious hindrance to her progress. It was bent out of its position, and had to be dragged after her throughout the greater part of the passage. Her appearance is that of a neat, light barque, with exceedingly lofty masts. Her propeller, which is on Ericson's principle, is worked by low-pressure engines of 48-horse power each, and it is calculated that 7 tons of coal will suffice for her consumption. The Marmora, previously to her departure from New York, had made one coasting voyage to New Orleans. She shortly sails from Liverpool for Constantinople, to be placed at the disposal of the Turkish Government.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Election of Lord Mayor.—On Monday a Common Hall was held for the purpose of electing a Lord Mayor for the ensuing year. A great deal of interest was excited, and the meeting was an exceedingly bustling one. The Common Serjeant, in the absence of the Recorder, called on the Livery to elect the chief magistrate for the ensuing year. Alderman Wood came forward, and was received with loud cheers and some groans. He said that he was in rotation, under circumstances different from any former year, and he came forward with great confidence on the present occasion. Alluding to the reports which had been circulated to his prejudice, he said he should not have addressed the Livery at all if it were not for a report which had been most industriously circulated that morning, to the effect that he was so clothed with writs that no responsibility could attach to him, and that he was therefore unfit to preside over this great City as chief magistrate. To that report he could only answer that a more gross falsehood never was uttered. It was the result of the vilest slander, as no such thing as a writ could be found in existence against him. If that or any other slander of any kind be uttered against him, he was ready to meet and prove it utterly false. The names of the different Aldermen who have not passed the chair were then proposed, after which the Common Serjeant announced that the choice had fallen on Aldermen T. Wood and J. Johnson. The Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs then retired to elect one of the gentlemen on whom the choice had fallen, and on their return, the Common Serjeant said that the choice of the Court of Aldermen had fallen on Alderman Johnson, and he had therefore to declare that gentleman Lord Mayor elect. This announcement was received with much uproar. Alderman Johnson then come to the front of the hustings, and was invested with the chain of office amidst great uproar. He thanked the livery for the manner in which they had been pleased to elect him to the high office, declared that he would perform all the duties of it most zealously and faithfully, and do all in his power to carry out the objects they had in view. Alderman Wood again presented himself, and was received with loud cheers. He adverted to the causes which he supposed had influenced the Court of Aldermen in rejecting him. One of these causes was his alleged poverty, and consequent inability to support the dignity of the office. Such an objection, if established, would, he maintained, strike at the root of the rights of the electors, and would prevent them from having the services of men of the greatest property and intellect. "Apart from these considerations (he continued) another and leading objection to me has been, that unfortunately some five or six years ago I had honestly embarked in a speculation which eventually turned out to be bad. Speculation seems now to be the order of the day. No man can take up the ordinary newspapers without seeing schemes and projects announced, in which the names of magistrates are put forth in support of them. If the failure of any of these projects were to operate as a disqualification to a magistrate filling the highest trust his fellow-citizens can repose in him, what is to be augured as to the fate of many magistrates whose names are every day to be seen in railroad speculations? If such a line of demarcation were to be drawn—if an unsuccessful issue to a speculation be a disgrace to me, what ought to be said of those magistrates who have taken up schemes, which, on the face of them, tell their own tales? Schemes taken up solely for the purpose of selling scrip, and for effecting which their names are used as decoys. If such be the rule by which a man is to be deprived of office, I am quite content with my share. I have received punishment, and I shall watch for the prospective difficulties of those who are to follow me. I have been assailed by reports disseminated by private coteries wholly destitute of truth, but I am determined to maintain the position I have taken, and fearlessly to discharge my duties, both public and private, so long as I shall have the support of the great majority of my fellow-citizens.—Deputy Allan proposed a vote of thanks to the late sheriffs (Aldermen Hunter and Sidney), for the splendour and hospitality with which they had maintained the dignity of their high office, and the punctuality and courtesy they had shown to their fellow-citizens. Mr. Obbard seconded the vote, which was agreed to amidst applause. Alderman Hunter expressed his acknowledgments for the honour done him. Alderman Sidney, in returning thanks, said that he and his colleague had done all in their power to mitigate the sufferings of the poor, and to dispense bounties to the unfortunate inmates of their prisons. The Hall was then dissolved.

The New Sheriffs.—The new Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, Mr. W. J. Chaplin and Mr. John Laurie, were sworn into office on Saturday at Guildhall. Mr. D. W. Wire is appointed Under-Sheriff to Mr. Laurie, and Mr. Burcham, of Red Lion-square, Under-Sheriff to Mr. Chaplin. The equipages of the new sheriffs attracted general attention, and were the universal theme of admiration. On Tuesday the Sheriffs were presented to the Cursitor Baron, in the Court of Exchequer, and received in the usual form Her Majesty's approbation of the choice the livery had made. The Common Sergeant, in the absence of the Recorder, introduced the new Sheriffs to the Cursitor Baron in a highly complimentary speech. The usual ceremony of counting horse-shoes and hob-nails, and cutting of sticks, was then performed by the senior alderman who has not passed the civic chair, and the members of the corporation returned to Guildhall. During the passage of the corporation barges from Blackfriars to Westminster, the Lord Mayor's barge came in violent collision with one of the piers of Westminster-bridge. The Lord Mayor and Aldermen were thrown from their seats by the violence of the collision, but the alarm subsided with the shock, and, with the exception of a few bruises, the members of the corporation escaped unhurt. In the evening the new Sheriffs gave their inauguration dinner at the London Tavern.

The New District Asylums.—On Saturday at the meeting of the Marylebone vestry, the answer of the Poor-law Commissioners to the deputation respecting the proposed asylums for the houseless poor was read. The substance of the reply was, that having considered the remonstrances of the deputation, the commissioners saw no reason why they should alter their determination. It was then resolved that all matters should be referred to the committee already appointed.—At a special meeting of the Brentford guardians, on Wednesday, Sept. 25, for the purpose of electing four managers for the new asylum of that district, it was unanimously agreed to memorialise the Poor-law Commissioners to rescind their order as far as this union is concerned, as the ratepayers have already been put to great expense in erecting the present house, which has ample accommodation for the purpose, and the guardians consider the present measure an encouragement to vagrancy.—At Deptford, on Friday, the vestry of St. Paul's adopted by a majority of 31 to 8 a resolution condemning the order of the Commissioners as regards the Greenwich union, and earnestly entreating the guardians, and the gentlemen who have been elected managers of the new asylum, to continue in their efforts to prevent the order taking effect so far as regards that union.—At St. Luke's, Chelsea, the Board of Guardians last week refused to proceed to the election, on the ground that the Commissioners had not sent an answer to the memorial of the Board, on the day which they had themselves appointed for the election.—In the Whitechapel district, the Stepney union have strongly protested against the measure, but the other parishes have conformed to the order of the Commissioners, and on Tuesday elected their chairman and vice-chairman, and fixed the day for their monthly meetings.

Chelsea Out-Pensioners.—The pensioners residing in the Woolwich division of the London district were measured on Friday last for their clothing, and shortly expect to be called out for exercise under the command of Captain Forbes, appointed to the staff of the Woolwich division; 138 new muskets with flint locks have been received from the Tower by the armourer of the Royal Artillery, to be numbered and set aside for use. These arms are a portion of those which will be issued to the privates, as the staff non-commissioned officers will be supplied with carbines. The dress of the pensioners is to consist of frock-coats made of a dark-coloured cloth, with scarlet necks and cuffs, and trousers of Oxford mixture with red stripes over the outside seams. The number of efficient out-pensioners in the Woolwich division is upwards of 350 men, thoroughly acquainted with the duties of the services in which they had spent the early part of their lives and still able to serve.

Metropolitan Improvements.—On Friday notices, signed by two commissioners of the Westminster improvements, were served on those persons who have any interest in the line of the new street, which is to be called Buckingham-road, to the effect that the commissioners are ready to treat for the purchase of their property; but if they do not send in a claim to their office within 21 days from the 23d September, the commissioners will proceed to a valuation of it, according to the terms of their act of Parliament. It is said that Mr. Elliott, the brewer, has received 22,000*l.* for the meadow in front of his brewery, or at the rate of about 4000*l.* an acre, and that he had himself laid it out for building, but the road passing through it, he was obliged to sell it to the commissioners.—On Tuesday the Commissioners of Woods and Forests issued notices for the erection of the houses in the new line of street leading from the London Docks to Spitalfields Church, the entire length consisting of about 3000 feet, divided into 32 lots. The width of the new street will be about 54 feet. The lots are to be let on lease for a term of 80 years. The new street, north of High-street, Whitechapel, will be called Commercial-street; that leading out of East Smithfield will be called Dock-street, and East Smithfield will be named St. George-street. In Commercial-street a new church is in course of erection, and in Dock-street a church will be built for the Sailor's Home. A new street is also proposed as a continuation of the Commercial-road, to High-street, Whitechapel.

Railway Club.—A meeting of gentlemen connected with railways was held at the London Tavern on Wednesday, at which Sir G. W. Prescott, Bart, presided. The chairman explained that the object of the meeting was to adopt measures for the formation of a club, to be composed of railway directors and parties interested in railways, for the interchange and record of information connected with them. The proposition had already the approbation by letter of upwards of 150 noblemen and gentlemen, directors of railways. Several gentlemen addressed the meeting, and urged that the proposed plan would have the effect of diffusing railway intelligence generally, particularly as respects the geological state of the country, and the improvements of locomotive engines, &c., and a resolution in conformity with the objects of the meeting was adopted. It was suggested to the committee which was appointed, that professors of geology, &c., be appointed to give occasional lectures, and that a new Exchange might probably be established, to be devoted exclusively to railways.

The Medical Schools.—Wednesday being the 1st of October, the Winter Session in the various medical schools attached to the public hospitals in the Metropolis was commenced. The number of hospitals, exclusive of those devoted to particular kinds of disease, is 11, and the number of public medical schools, 15.

Combat of Balloons at Vauxhall Gardens.—On Wednesday evening, a pyrotechnic and aerial display, in the shape of an ascent of a number of monstre fire and gas balloons, took place at Vauxhall, which was crowded with visitors of every grade. The Waterloo ground was the scene of action, where the aerial army were ranged, rank and file. One of the balloons was a perfect representation of that popular character, Mrs. Caudle, and her appearance was the signal for a general shout. Then came Punch, who was equally well received. In order to render these miniature aerial machines and the grotesque figures more distinctly visible, the ground was lighted up by a variety of coloured fires, which materially added to the general display. The balloons ascended simultaneously, and at an altitude of several hundred feet exploded, discharging fireworks of every description, and ending in a general conflagration, amidst the applause of the spectators.

Provincial.

Cambridge.—A large quantity of valuable plate was missing on Tuesday morning in the plate-room of St. Peter's College. The butler locked the door shortly before midnight, and saw that all was safe in the butteries, and the robbery must have taken place after that hour. The articles stolen consist of large tankards, pint-stoops, goblets, dishes, covers, waiters, bread-basket—all silver, with the names of the donors on them, besides several dozen silver forks and spoons of all sizes, soup-ladles, fish-knives, &c. &c. All had the cross keys and the arms of the college on them. It is suspected that the robbery has been committed by a gang of London thieves and some notoriously bad characters in the neighbourhood of Barnwell; but no clue has yet been obtained by the police. About two years ago a robbery was committed in the butteries of Jesus College of plate to the amount of about 700*l.* The value of the plate stolen on Monday night from St. Peter's is upwards of 1,000*l.* It is a singular fact with regard to both these robberies, that the thieves did not take anything like the whole of the plate on either occasion; in the robbery in Jesus College, especially, they left by far the most valuable portion behind. In neither case were any locks or bars broken.

Gravesend.—It will be recollected that the mail bags were stolen from the Post-office at Gravesend, on the night of the 27th June. Up to Saturday last no trace of the missing bags, or any portion of their contents, could be obtained; when on that day, they were discovered within 100 yards of the spot from whence they had been stolen. An uninhabited house in Edwin-street, being about to be occupied, sweeps were employed to cleanse the chimneys, and from one of them the bags and rifled letters were brought to light. It is said that some of the notes obtained by this robbery have been negotiated in France.

Hampton.—On Tuesday, at a petty sessions of the justices of the Staines division of Middlesex, the proceedings in the long-pending dispute between the Crown and the parish of Hampton, as to the liability of the residents in Hampton Court Palace to be assessed to the poor-rates, was further gone into. After hearing proof of the service of the summonses upon the different parties, the name of each person summoned was then thrice called aloud outside the door, but no answer was returned. The parish solicitor said he had therefore now only to ask the bench to issue distress warrants against all the parties summoned. The bench then ordered the distress warrants on the rate of May, 1839, to issue against all the parties.

Hounslow.—A serious occurrence took place at Hounslow barracks on Sunday evening. Lieut.-Col. Masters, of the 4th Light Dragoons, gave an entertainment to his brother officers in celebration of his recent promotion. During the entertainment some words arose between Lieut. Kerwan and another officer, when Lieut. Kerwan left the room in a great passion, declaring that he would cross swords with the officer who had offended him. Quartermaster Tarleton followed him to his room, and endeavoured to prevent him leaving his apartment with a drawn sword in his hand, when by some means he was stabbed by Lieut. Kerwan in the stomach. Lieut. Kerwan was much intoxicated at the time, and had during some wrestling which took place after dinner been thrown twice with great violence on his head. On Monday evening Lieut. Kerwan was placed under arrest, by order from the Horse Guards, and next morning was brought before the local magistrates, who committed him to Tothill-fields prison, until the fate of Mr. Tarleton, who was severely wounded, can be ascertained.

Liverpool.—The steam-ship Great Britain has again set out on her second voyage across the Atlantic. She sailed from this port for New York on Saturday afternoon, when many persons assembled along the pier-heads and on the opposite side of the river, to have a view of her as she passed along. She had about 120 passengers, a heavy mail, and a large cargo of goods. As she dropped down the Mersey, in that easy and majestic style for which she is so remarkable, she was saluted on all sides by cannon, which she more than once acknowledged.—The prisoners charged with the murder of Mr. Peacop were again brought up on Saturday, when the magistrates decided on committing them to take their trial at the next assizes.

Manchester.—The League have determined on holding a supplementary bazaar in Manchester, on the 15th Oct., ample materials having been left for a nucleus from the bazaar in London. At Preston there are now upwards of 30 clerks employed at the League-rooms, working almost night and day, chiefly on the registry.

Plymouth.—The experimental squadron left this port on Sunday morning, and proceeded to sea on their second trial cruise, under the command of Rear-Admiral Sir Samuel Pym. The Superb did not go out with the other ships, but has proceeded to Portsmouth, where she is to be docked and coppered, after which she will join the squadron. Before the sailing of the fleet, a court-martial, which was postponed while the experimental squadron was at Cork, took place on board the Caledonia, on Lieut. Leigh, of the Stromboli, a nephew of Lord Byron. It arose out of an altercation which had taken place between Lieut. Leigh and a stoker of the Stromboli. The court found the charges proven, and Lieut. Leigh was sentenced to be severely reprimanded, to be dismissed the Stromboli, and to be placed at the bottom of the list of Lieutenants for two years. The late accounts from Malta brought the particulars of a court-martial held on George White, a seaman of the Amazon, for using mutinous language to two of his officers. After examining the witnesses, and hearing the defence, the finding of the Court was, that the prisoner was acquitted of having used mutinous language to Lieut. Downes when ordered punishment, and of having weakened the service, but that he had used mutinous words to the Hon. Mr. Deane, a midshipman, whom he had disobeyed and dispossessed of his command, and compelled to land from the boat; and that he had deserted and enticed the others to desert, in breach of the articles of war. The sentence was, that George White should suffer death by being hanged by the neck on board of such vessel as the commander-in-chief might direct; but from the circumstances of the case, the court strongly recommended the prisoner to the merciful consideration of the Admiralty.—The saw-mills of Messrs. Foster and Beal, at Coxside, Plymouth, were destroyed by fire on Friday night. The premises in which the fire broke out consisted of a range of 130 feet in length, in which were the saw machinery and workshops of the establishment, and to this building it was confined. This range and its contents, including expensive machinery, tools, and goods in process of manufacture, and a quantity of timber, was entirely destroyed. Mr. Beal had not left the premises more than an hour before the alarm of fire was given. The building and stock were insured in the West of England and County Offices for about 2000*l.*; the proprietors' loss is said to exceed double that sum. The premises were destroyed by fire last November, when property to the amount of 3000*l.* was lost, and the cause of that calamity remained unknown.

Portsmouth.—The Eclair steam-sloop, Commander W. G. B. Estcourt, came up to the Motherbank on Monday morning, with the yellow flag with a black ball in its centre flying from her mainmast head, emblematic of death on board. She has been so awfully visited with sickness since she has been on the coast of Africa, that she has been sent home. Sixty-two died before she arrived, and others are dying hourly. We regret to state that Commander Estcourt is among the number dead, and that the malady, whatever it is, still rages on board; three more deaths have been announced since the vessel anchored, 23 were then ill, and two fresh cases have since manifested themselves on board. On the quarantine officers going alongside an officer answered their inquiries, and said the mortality was from a fever something between the yellow and the black. The Admiralty despatches were landed, but nothing else. A boat was immediately sent, to row guard round the vessel to prevent communication and consequent contagion, as well as to prevent any one escaping from the vessel. The Eclair was only commissioned last August 12 months, and is a new vessel of 350 horse power. She was sent off the African station by Commander Buckle, of the Growler steam-sloop; prior to which, on the disease manifesting itself in the deadly form it assumed, a commission of three surgeons sat to decide what was best to be done under the alarming circumstances, when they came to the unanimous resolution of sending the Eclair off the station and home. The names of the officers dead, are Commander W. G. B. Estcourt; Surgeon, Mr. John Maconchy; Paymaster and Purser, Mr. T. R. Hallett; Assistant-Surgeon, Mr. Charles Hartman; Clerk, Mr. Cleland Mill; Naval Cadet, Mr. Symons; Master's Assistant, Mr. Goman. Dr. M'Clure, who volunteered to attend the sick, when the surgeon died, also fell a victim in five days. Fresh provisions have been sent on board, but no person whatever has been allowed to go on board or leave the vessel. The last accounts state that she left the Motherbank on Wednesday night for the Quarantine station at Standgate-creek. At the last report from her only 18 white men were well on board; 23 were lying sick of the deadly malady. The admiralty is loudly censured for not having adopted prompt measures to check the disease prevailing on board after they were made cognizant of the melancholy circumstances, instead of allowing the vessel to remain helpless at the Motherbank for nearly three days after she made her appearance and signalled her awful condition.—The Formidable, 84, Captain Rich, with the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir Edward Owen, arrived at Spithead, on Monday, from the Mediterranean. It is expected that after the gallant Admiral has hauled down his flag, the Formidable will join the experimental squadron and form one of the competing vessels. She is a new ship, and has only been in commission about three years, during which time she has been in the Mediterranean, chiefly as the flag to the Commander-in-Chief. On approaching the anchorage the Victory saluted Admiral Owen with 13 guns, when the Formidable returned 11 (Rear-Admiral Parker's complement). The Admiral came from Spithead in the Portsmouth yacht, and when nearly abreast of the Platform Battery, a salute of 13 guns welcomed him home, a compliment not paid here to a naval officer since the war.

Sheerness.—The fortifications of this garrison are to be considerably strengthened, and 70 guns are to be immediately placed on the old batteries. A detachment of the Royal Sappers and Miners has commenced work on the south side, near the drawbridge, by throwing out the mud and clay from the adjoining moat, and a large number of masons has also been set to work to complete the job. The greatest activity prevails throughout the whole of the official departments. The necessity of some such changes may be judged of by the fact that two French war steamers arrived off Sheerness last week and saluted the admiral. But in the absence of his flag-ship with the experimental squadron, he had only a single gun at his command, and was consequently unable to return the salute! The French steamers sailed without communicating with the arsenal.

Warwick.—After a painful illness of about three weeks Sir John Mordaunt, one of the members for the southern division of this county, died at his seat, Walton-hall, on Saturday morning. His melancholy decease, in the prime of life, has created general gloom throughout the entire neighbourhood. It will be recollected that between three and four weeks ago, Sir John, when out shooting with his friend Mr. Mills, received the contents of his companion's gun in the calves of his legs. Not the slightest blame appears to have been imputable to Mr. Mills, the unfortunate event being purely accidental. At first painful apprehensions were entertained of the hon. Baronet's recovery, but subsequently the appearance of favourable symptoms led his family to indulge in sanguine hopes that his life would still be spared to them. These hopes unhappily proved without foundation. At the close of last week Sir John became much worse, and it is said erysipelas set in, followed by the most alarming symptoms. On Wednesday night his father-in-law, the Bishop of Rochester, arrived at Walton-hall, and on Saturday the hon. Baronet ceased to exist. Sir John was in his 37th year, and was highly respected by the entire constituency of the county.

Windsor.—It will be recollected that in May last a poor man named James Dean, who had been entrapped into the sale of some live pheasants and pheasants' eggs by one of Prince Albert's gamekeepers, was convicted of the offence before Mr. P. H. Crutchley and Captain Bulkeley, two of the magistrates of the county of Bucks, at the office of Mr. Secker, town-clerk of Windsor, and sentenced in default of paying the fine and costs, amounting to 10*l.* 11*s.*, to four months' imprisonment with hard labour in Reading Gaol. The man was subsequently liberated, by the fine and costs being paid by Mr. Collett, the member for Athlone, after a month's incarceration. Notice of an action having been commenced by Dean against Mr. Crutchley and Captain Bulkeley, to recover damages for false imprisonment, was served upon those gentlemen on Saturday last.—In reference to the late case of assault, noticed in our paper last week, it is announced that the man, Thomas Topp, was immediately dismissed from the service of Prince Albert, and every possible reparation has been made to the poor woman. It is right to mention that the dog employed by Topp was not a bloodhound, but a young, and not at all ferocious puppy, of three months old. The poor woman, Maria Wells, was called upon at her cottage, near Maidenhead, a few days since, by two gentlemen, who said they had been requested to make inquiries into her condition by Mr. Collett, the member for Athlone. The result of those inquiries being satisfactory, a note for 5*l.* was given to her, to obtain the necessary comforts during her confinement, which is expected to take place next month. The amount of the surgeon's bill for medical attendance during the woman's illness, occasioned by the dog being set upon her, has been defrayed by the Rev. Mr. Levett, the vicar of Bray, in which parish she resides.

Winchester.—The daily papers state that at least one result of the late meeting of the Archæological Institute at Winchester will be a benefit to the public. The Dean has ordered that in future the cathedral shall be open to the public from 9 till 11 in the morning, and 2 till 4 in the afternoon, being one hour previous to each of the daily services.

York.—It is said that Mr. George Hudson, M.P., has completed the purchase of another large estate in this county from the Duke of Devonshire, at a price little short of half a million of money. It may be presumed that Londesborough, one of the richest and noblest estates in the East Riding, is the property alluded to.

Railways.

The results of several railway meetings lately held may be added to the summary published in our last. The provisional directors of the Welch Midland project had a meeting with the inhabitants of Worcester on Saturday, and explained their purpose, but the inhabitants decline to pledge themselves to that or any other scheme for the present.—At the meeting of the Ulster Company the net profits for the half-year were stated at 10,118*l.*, out of which sum a dividend of 18*s.* was declared, leaving 773*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.* to be carried to the reserved fund. The passenger traffic had increased, and a reduction had been made in the rates of the goods department. A resolution was passed to borrow 50,000*l.* on bond or mortgage for the purpose of working out the extension to Armagh.—The Trent Valley proprietors were informed at a special meeting that the contracting engineers had undertaken to complete the entire railway by 1847, at the cost of 12,000*l.* per mile, exclusive only of rails, chairs, and stations.—The proprietors of the Great Southern and Western of Ireland have consented to the investment of 100,000*l.* in the Galway, 100,000*l.* in the Killarney Junction, and 20,000*l.* in the Wexford and Carlow.—Resolutions have been carried in favour of the South Staffordshire Junction, and also of the London, Hounslow, and Western.—The report of the directors of the Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings Line, recommending a sale to the London and Brighton, was approved. The Brighton and Chichester shareholders passed a resolution to raise a capital of 320,000*l.* in shares of 50*l.*—The report of the Wakefield, Pontefract, and Goole Company stated, that the shares for the Methley Extension would be 25*l.* each, in the proportion of one for every original 50*l.* share. The new stock for the Great Grimsby and Sheffield, and Wakefield, Pontefract, and Goole Junction, is to be raised in the proportion of two-thirds by the Grimsby, and one-third by the Wakefield and Goole Company, the latter in shares of 20*l.* each in the proportion of one for every original share. The contracts for works have been made within the Parliamentary estimates, and their progress is said to be of the most satisfactory description.—The directors of the Newcastle, Durham, and Lancashire Junction have decided on forming a united company with the Manchester, Liverpool, and Great North of England Union Railway, under the name of the Northumberland and Lancashire Junction Railway. The shareholders will be entitled to two shares of 20*l.* in the new company, in exchange for each share in the present company.—The terms between the London and Birmingham, and Manchester and Birmingham companies were settled last week. The terms are an amalgamation of the latter with the former in perpetuity, at eight per cent. for the first year, nine for the second, and a dividend corresponding with that of the other company, for the time to come after. Of the new stock to be created one-third is to be given to the Manchester and Birmingham proprietors alone. A new line from Macclesfield to Lichfield is to be made by the two companies jointly, and when completed the Manchester and Birmingham proprietors to come in ratably for that and all new stock afterwards to be created by the Tring Railway. Since then it has transpired that it is a simple amalgamation at eight for the first year, nine for the second, and London and Birmingham dividend afterwards. The Manchester and Birmingham debentures are to be funded and reckoned as capital stock as they fall due. The next Manchester and Birmingham dividend rests on its own basis. The amalgamation comes into operation when ratified by Parliament.—The directors of the Whitstable and Furness Railway, since the passing of the act, have decided upon adopting the necessary measures for extending their project to Ulverstone, which, according to the estimate of Mr. Stephenson, will require a further capital of 750,000*l.* The contracts for the works are in course of conclusion, and a call of 3*l.* payable this month is to be made.—The North British Company lease the Edinburgh and Peebles Line, at a guaranteed interest of 4 per cent. per annum, with one-half surplus profit, after the deduction of working expenses.—The Bristol and Gloucester have declared a dividend, at the rate of 16*s.* 11½*d.* on every share on which the sum of 50*l.* has been paid up, and 10*s.* 2*d.* on every share on which the sum of 30*l.* has been paid up, besides interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum on the new stock from the period of its payment to the 30th of June last. The agreement made on the 8th of February last between the Birmingham and Gloucester, the Bristol and Gloucester, and the Midland, has been ratified by the proprietors of the three companies. The terms have been in the meanwhile in course of operation, and the shareholders of these two companies will receive from the Midland 6 per cent. per annum on their capital from the 1st July last.—The Waveney Valley Railway is supported by the inhabitants of Great Yarmouth, who have passed resolutions in its favour, and promise the scheme most cordial support.—Meetings have been held in the country in favour of the Manchester and Southampton, the Southampton, Manchester, and Oxford, the Shrewsbury, Wolverhampton and South Staffordshire Junction, the North and South Junction, the Bridport and Exeter and South Coast Junction, the London, Hounslow, and Western, the London and Exeter direct, the Irish Great Western, the Welch Midland, the Grand Union, at all of which resolutions were passed in support of the several schemes. At several of these assemblies the advocates of rival projects appeared, but although they raised discussion, such was the preponderance of partizanship that the schemes of the promoters, who called the meetings, were in all cases carried by a large majority. This system of planting new railway companies in the provinces is becoming very common, and it seems to be one of the plans adopted by parties interested in the success of new projects to get up deputations for the purpose of visiting the towns through which the railways propose to pass, in order to extract from the inhabitants votes of support, so that they may be brought prominently before the public. It is curious also to notice at the present time the rage existing for direct lines of railway; and no sooner does one appear than several others start, promising increased facilities and shorter routes for precisely the same district. The advertising columns of the daily papers are every day exhibiting fresh proofs of the extension of the mania. There are now three or four schemes for direct Manchester Railways, two or three for Oxford and Worcester, the same number for London and Holyhead, the same for Exeter and Falmouth, one or two for Norwich, two or three for the Isle of Man, and others in the same proportion. A Cornwall Central has again appeared, and in conjunction with the North Devon, promises direct communication from the North of England by way of Bristol, from the East by way of Exeter and Okehampton, and from the south by way of Plymouth to Falmouth and Penzance. The Cambrian and Grand Junction, connecting South Wales with Liverpool, Manchester, and the north, has for its object direct communication between these localities, as well as uniting the iron districts of North Wales with those of Staffordshire and Shropshire. New lines are also projected to connect London with Windsor, Gravesend, Barnet, and other places which formerly flourished on the coach traffic.—The Regent's Canal Company have agreed to sell their canal to a new company called the London Junction, on very advantageous terms. The projectors of the London Junction are at once to pay down to the Canal Company the sum of 5000*l.*, which is to be forfeited if the share list does not fill up by the end of this year. Supposing the company to be formed, and the Bill to be passed, the projectors bind themselves to pay the Canal Company for the canal the sum of 1,000,000*l.* sterling, half of that sum being paid within a month of the passing of the Bill, when possession is to be given them, and the other 500,000*l.* to be paid in three annual instalments afterwards, each bearing four per cent. interest. It was further provided, that if the Act be passed, the sum of 5000*l.* first paid down shall be taken as part payment of the first 500,000*l.* In case the Bill fails on the standing orders in the first session of Parliament, the projectors are to forfeit 5000*l.* If otherwise than on the standing orders, they are to forfeit 10,000*l.*; if the Bill is lost in the course of the second session, the railway company is then to forfeit 100,000*l.* The result will be advantageous to the present shareholders in the canal, for they will receive 46*l.* for each share, although a short time since the shares could have been procured as low as 13*l.* The Regent's Canal begins at Paddington and terminates at Blackwall, and we shall consequently have a railway running through the heart of London, and connecting the Great Western, the London and Birmingham, and the Eastern Counties.—The Coventry Canal is to be converted into a railway to run from the Rugby and Oxford line to Coventry and Burton-on-Trent, and most of the Canal proprietors have consented to act on the provisional committee of the new company. —The Manchester and Birmingham have reduced their first and second class fares, the latter from 5*s.* 6*d.* to 4*s.* 4*d.*, and former from 7*s.* 6*d.* to 5*s.* 6*d.*—On nearly all the southern and on some other railways a practice now prevails of issuing day tickets, by which individuals can proceed from one town to another and return on the same day at one-third less than the usual charge; they can also leave home on Saturday and return on the following Monday, at the same reduced rate.—The directors of the Midland have sent 1000*l.* to the Earl of Harborough, as compensation for the expense, trouble, and inconvenience they occasioned his lordship on the late survey, &c., for the new line from Syston to Peterborough.—It is said that the Liverpool and Bury will be amalgamated with the Liverpool and Leeds.—A first-class passenger now travels between Birmingham and Liverpool for 17*s.*—The capital required for the projected lines advertised during the past week, exclusive of colonial and continental schemes, and for British lines alone, amounts to the enormous sum of 59,000,000*l.* sterling.—The subscriptions for the testimonial to Mr. Hudson, M.P., amount to upwards of 10,000*l.*—At the Grand Junction Works, at Crewe, there are 500 men employed, 400 of whom, almost to a man, smoke tobacco. It is said that the moderate smokers use only two ounces the week, which costs sixpence, consequently 10*l.* is spent in smoke every week. —"As the end of the year" says the Times, "is now approaching, numberless conjectures are afloat as to the time and manner in which the large deposits accruing upon railway projects must be placed in the hands of the Accountant-General. At a moderate estimate the sums which will thus have to be provided amount to no less than 30,000,000*l.* sterling, more than the whole circulation of the Bank of England, and, perhaps, three times as much as could be withdrawn at any one time without seriously embarrassing the whole currency of the country. From the result of the most careful inquiries on this subject, we can state that there is not an individual in the City, however experienced in monetary affairs, who is able, satisfactorily to his own mind, to explain how this money is to be provided, especially if a large proportion is called for at the same time, which is likely to be the case. The question, therefore, universally asked, and which would probably puzzle the Accountant-General himself to answer, is, how much would be wanted at once, and what would be done with it when in his possession! At present the money arising from railway deposits, instead of making any scarcity, rather increases the previous abundance, because it passes into the hands of the various bankers to the railway companies, who, of course, employ it again to the extent to which they consider they may safely and prudently do so. According to general conjecture, the month of February being that in which Parliament opens, will be the time on which a large portion of the money will, in due course, be required; but the subject will demand the most vigilant attention on the part of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in regulating its progress, and it is thought by many that it may prove an over-match for the utmost caution which the Treasury can exercise."

PRICES AND TRAFFIC, by permission, from the List of Messrs. HILL, FAWCETT, & HILL, in the Railway Chronicle of this day.

Ireland.

Dublin.—The Freeman's Journal states that it has been "authorised to add the name of the Right Rev. Dr. Healy, Bishop of Kildare, to the declaration against the Ministerial education scheme, to which 18 of the bishops had already attached their signatures. To this important document the names of 19 of the Irish hierarchy are now affixed." This is considered a considerable triumph to Archbishop M'Hale's party. Bishop Healy has always kept aloof from political agitation, and was believed to be generally friendly to the policy of Sir R. Peel. His dissent from the Ministerial project must therefore, without attributing other than sincere motives to his brother dissentients, be founded on strongly conscientious grounds. It is a curious fact that all the suffragan bishops in the archdiocese of Dublin have "pronounced" against the measure.—The Repeal cause has obtained an influential and most respectable adherent in the person of Mr. Thomas Lloyd, of Beechmount, a magistrate and Deputy-lieutenant of the county of Limerick, and hitherto a professor of high Conservative principles. Mr. Lloyd's father sat for many years in the Imperial Parliament as representative for his native county. In politics he was a moderate Tory, and a supporter of Catholic emancipation. On his death his son (the new convert), declined standing for the representation, as he did not concur in the more popular views of his relative; and therefore he has since been but little known as a public man. His accession to Conciliation-hall has, of course, created a good deal of surprise, especially in his own locality, where he seems to have been regarded as a Tory of the old school. The town of Rathkeale was illuminated last week on the announcement that Mr. Lloyd had joined the repeal movement.—The Fermanagh Reporter has the following announcement respecting the progress of the Orange organization:—"Mr. W. A. Dane, grand secretary, left Enniskillen on Tuesday for Rosstrevor, with the new rules and regulations of the Orange Society, to take the opinion of Mr Napier, the eminent counsel, upon the legal construction of those rules and regulations. The Orange system is extending like wildfire throughout the kingdom, and will soon be little short of an enrolment en masse of every loyal Irishman—we mean loyalty to the principles of the Protestant constitution, and to nothing and nobody else beside—it being now generally believed that those principles will soon again have to be contended for in England as well as in Ireland. The Marquis of Downshire, the Earls of Roden, Enniskillen, &c., are at the head of the Irish movement, and are sustained by a powerful party in England, who watch with vigilance the pro-Popish and Protestant destructive leanings of persons and parties who now believe themselves secure in doing and contemplating acts that, in the good old times of the Protestant revolution, would be considered treason against the state."—Another meeting has been held at Armagh, but as its proceedings were private; all that is yet known of the nature of the business transacted, will be found in the subjoined notice, taken from a local journal:—"On Tuesday last, pursuant to notice, a large and influential meeting of the district masters and masters of lodges, and several of the distinguished leaders of the Orange Institution of this county, was held in the public rooms, Armagh, for the purpose of organising this county, and appointing grand officers. The business was strictly private; but we understand that the utmost unanimity prevailed on a variety of matters which were brought under discussion. A further meeting was resolved to be held at Tanderagee early in November next. We are not in a position to say more at present; but we can assure our friends that proper arrangements have been made to fix the society upon such a footing as will defy its enemies. The following are the names of the officers:—Colonel Verner, grand master; Colonel Blacker, deputy-grand master; M. W. Knox, Esq., grand treasurer; Rev. D. Babington, grand chaplain; Rev. H. Burdett, deputy-grand chaplain; Alex. Paton, Esq., M.D., grand secretary, and Mr. James Hamilton, deputy-grand secretary."

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday. At an early hour Conciliation Hall was besieged by applicants for admission, and at the hour appointed for the dispatch of business, not a space remained unoccupied. The galleries appropriated for the accommodation of ladies, as is generally the case when Mr. O'Connell is present, were crowded to excess. At one o'clock the hon. gentleman entered the hall, and was received with the loudest applause. Major Lidwell took the chair. Mr. O'CONNELL rose and said he considered it right at once to move that the signature of the Right Rev. Dr. Healy, bishop of Kildare, be inserted on the minutes, with the names of the other 18 prelates who had declared their decided opposition to the Colleges Bill. It was a compliment they owed to that respected and highly venerated prelate. He trusted that whatever differences of opinion might have hitherto subsisted, that after that declaration of 19 prelates—uncontradicted officially by any one of them—that the Bill was dangerous to faith and morals—there would be no further difference of opinion with respect to that Bill amongst the public. He trusted, too, that they would reject the Bill with scorn and contempt. The learned gentleman then said he had a communication to make from that most estimable and patriotic gentleman, Mr. Smith O'Brien, M.P., which was greatly enhanced by the contents of that letter. It contained the subscription of a gentleman of rank and fortune, requesting to be enrolled a member of the Association. The letter announced the adhesion of Mr. Lloyd to the Repeal Association, who stated that he joined the movement because he now sees "that there is no hope for Ireland except in Repeal." Since the adhesion of Mr Smith O'Brien himself he never had more glorious intelligence to communicate than the accession of Mr. Lloyd. Here they had a gentleman of rank and fortune, a Protestant, and strongly attached to his religious principles, coming forward and declaring his conviction that there was no hope, no salvation for Ireland, save in the restoration of their native legislature. In conclusion, he moved that the secretary be directed to write to Mr. Lloyd, giving him every assurance that, in looking for a repeal of the Legislative Union, the Irish people aimed at no ascendancy whatever; that they desired no sectarian or political advantage over any class of their fellow-countrymen, their sole object being the regeneration of their common country.—Mr. J. O'CONNELL, M.P., read a letter from Mr. Smith O'Brien, in reference to the Davis Testimonial.—Mr. O'CONNELL would take that opportunity of expressing his hearty approbation of having a testimonial erected to the memory of that man, to whom Ireland had such just reason to be proud, and to whom she was so deeply indebted. As persons of every religious denomination and class in politics were anxious to participate in commemorating their distinguished countryman, it would be right to afford them that opportunity, and thereby deprive the matter of a party or sectarian character.—Mr. J. O'CONNELL read the following letter which he stated that he had received from Mr. Foster the Times "Commissioner," in reply to the strictures which he had made on the conduct of that individual:—"Halesworth, Sept. 25, 1845. Sir,—I have this moment read in the Times of yesterday your dirty and unmanly remarks concerning the Times commissioner; and I do not lose one moment to tell you that you are a liar and a blackguard. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, John Foster. John O'Connell, Esq., M.P."—Mr. O'CONNELL claimed the privilege of moving the insertion of that specimen of English politeness on the books of the association. He saw, however some ladies in the gallery who seemed disposed to quarrel with him for condemning all for the transgression of an individual; he would, therefore, merely say that the act was peculiar to the "commissioner." It would be well to give this person an appropriate name. They were aware that there were various classes of agents employed during elections, and the lowest grade of them was called "gutter agents." He would suggest, then, that this "commissioner" should in future be called the "gutter agent of the Times;" and he considered that he possessed sufficient interest with the press to have this sobriquet circulated. That person had said that the Irish women were ugly. He wished he were here—no, he did not wish it: he did not wish he should ever have the happiness of seeing such a sight as their ladies' gallery. Mr. O'Connell handed in several large sums of money, and then announced that next Monday he would hold a demonstration in Kerry, and on the succeeding day there would be a grand stag-hunt at Killarney in honour of Repeal. On the following Sunday he was to attend a monster meeting in Castlebar, and he had a communication from Sligo relative to having a demonstration there under consideration.—A large number of remittances having been handed in, Mr. O'CONNELL began his regular speech for the day. The Tipperary demonstration, he said, was the "paragon" of Repeal monster meetings. Tara alone had surpassed it. The most perfect order had prevailed. Not a drop of whisky was drank. Thus the meeting was everything they could desire. Oh! Repeal was now certain. The Irish people had proved that they were fit to govern themselves. It would not be safe in any other part of the world to bring 500,000 people together. The Irish people had proved that they were fit for self-government, and self-government they should have. There were persons who said that Repeal was impracticable; his answer was, that with 14,000 they carried Emancipation, and why not, with upwards of 1,000,000, carry Repeal? No man who understood Irish affairs should confine his view to Ireland alone—he should look to other nations, ay, even to America: Europe was full of menacing circumstances; France and England were rivalling each other in examining the coasts; French engineers were investigating the assailable points of England, and fortifying all those on which France was assailable: England was also fortifying her coasts, but let the British Minister give Ireland to the Irish, and England would require no fortifications; she should have not a rampart of stone, but men. At present there was no immediate cause of quarrel between France and England; but why were the two countries fortifying the coasts? Did it not bespeak a foregone conclusion? The seeds of strife were upon the wild winds of heaven, and it was impossible that many years could elapse without a contest between the two nations. Passing from France to Spain and Portugal, they would perceive that the elements of discord were aroused—revolution followed revolution, and violent change followed change. Germany was also in a state of religious disorganization, and the foul spirit of Jacobinism was threatening states, powers, and principalities. Then there was the monster of Russia—the most beastly tyrant that ever existed—a Diocletian in religion, a Nero in civil government—a more fanatical and bigoted tyrant never disgraced human nature. He had read with delight that the mountaineers of the Caucasian region had given Russia a proof of their valour. Behold America. England should submit to abandon the Oregon territory, or America would be eternally disgraced for her absurd vapouring in declaring that she should have Oregon. England had declared that America should not have Oregon, and they would soon see whether the quarrel of words was likely to end in blows. While America encouraged negro slavery, she would have a plague-spot within her. But no matter, an American war with England would increase England's difficulties, and England's difficulties were Ireland's opportunity. England just now was in a prosperous state. We have had a succession of good harvests; but such prosperity cannot last for ever. Meanwhile the Repeal cause had been gaining strength. In 1841, Sir J. Graham had declared that conciliation had reached its limits, but in 1845 he only wanted to know what more he could give to conciliate Ireland. And what was the cause of this change? Oh, it was Conciliation Hall. The Prime Minister was playing a double game; at one time scheming with the Repealers, and again with the Orangemen. He was now trying to create dissension among the Orangemen. As to the Orangemen, the Repealers offered them the right hand of fellowship, and there was a heart in it. Their leaders had deserted the Orangemen. (Mr. O'Connell here went over the steps taken by Government to put down the repeal agitation, and finally thanked God that he had spent one hundred days in gaol for old Ireland.) After this, Sir R. Peel declared that the Repeal agitation could not be put down by force, and woe to him if they attempted such a course. The meeting at Tipperary on Thursday was a security to them that they would not meddle with forcible means to put them down. Force being abandoned, they next tried corruption—the grant to Maynooth, and the grant for the new colleges. They lately attempted to bribe the Orangemen; the last snug place was given to Orangeism; the next would be on the popular side. This he predicted, unless indeed his prediction should make Peel alter his mind. They talked of calling out the Irish militia; but he would not advise them to do so, unless they were really determined to do justice to Ireland. The hon. gentleman then detailed his plan of future operations, which consisted in the appointment of Repeal wardens in every parish in Ireland, the registration of every Repealer, and the election of 70 Repeal members of Parliament. Care should be taken to procure tranquillity, Ribandism should be put down, and every parish in Ireland should petition for Repeal. He should have 3,000,000 signatures in favour of the measure, which would speak in a voice of thunder not to be misunderstood or suppressed. He had a draught of a Bill for a Repeal of the Union almost prepared, which was entitled "An Act the better to enable Her Majesty to summon her Parliament of Ireland." This Bill left the Royal prerogative untouched, the privileges and powers of the House of Lords were continued in their integrity, the people of Ireland were given the selection of 300 members, &c. The rent for the week was 600*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*

In reference to Mr. O'Connell's attack on the Times Commissioner, as the alleged author of the scurrilous letter quoted above, a very general impression prevailed at the time that it was a forgery, however much it might serve the purpose for the moment. It now turns out that the Times Commissioner, instead of being at Halesworth, in Suffolk, on the day when the letter was dated from that place, was in Ballina, collecting materials for another of his communications on the state of Ireland. The Freeman of Tuesday makes an apology to the Commissioner for having assisted in imputing to him the authorship of the note. It says, "The Times Commissioner is generally known to be a Mr. Foster. When we ourselves saw the letter, and read its contents, we found it difficult to believe that Mr. Foster could so far forget himself as to indite such a production. We rejoice, however, to be able to state that this gross production did not emanate from the Times Commissioner. The name of the Times Commissioner is Thomas Campbell Foster, not John Foster, and we feel persuaded that Mr. Thomas Campbell Foster will feel as much indignation at the impertinent introduction of his name in such a letter as Mr. John O'Connell does indifference for the vulgar abuse of Mr. John Foster."

Tipperary.—The great Repeal demonstration of Tipperary, for which extraordinary preparations have for some time been making, took place on Friday last at Thurles. Mr. O'Connell arrived in that city on the previous evening from Limerick and Cashel. In both these cities, and along his entire route, his reception had been a continued triumph, and wherever he stopped he was welcomed by the most unbounded marks of popular affection. Deputations of the principal inhabitants went out to meet him on entering the principal towns, and addresses were presented by the different public bodies. The meeting at Thurles was a counterpart of the monster gatherings of 1843. The procession to the place of meeting near Thurles, we are assured by the Repeal papers, extended at least five miles, and "the meeting, with the exception of Tara, was certainly the most magnificent and gigantic of the monster gatherings. There could not have been less than between four and five hundred thousand human beings taking part in the business: the number of equestrians amounted, we have no doubt, to fifteen thousand." The correspondent of an anti-Repeal journal says—"The meeting was exceedingly numerous, equalling the most celebrated of the monster meetings of 1843. It was held at a place called Knockroe, about two miles from Thurles. The numbers might have been from ninety to one hundred thousand. Fully ten or twelve thousand farmers, well clad and appointed, rode in cavalry fashion four abreast; and not only with them, but among their pedestrian companions, was the greatest order and decorum observed." The reporter of the Times observes, that "Any person who was present at the larger 'monster meetings' of 1843 would have seen no feature in the demonstration to distinguish it from the former, save its great order, respectability, and even its magnitude; for, with the exception of Tara, it perhaps exceeded every one of its predecessors in that respect. It was only another limb of the Briareus of agitation, which state trials and Attorney-Generals have failed to crush or even to trammel. After the exhibition of yesterday one might well ask, Cui bono the state prosecutions? Mullaghmast, Clifden, Lismore, and Loughrea, were not so formidable as Thurles, either in the numbers assembled, or the character and class of those attending them. Had a stranger been travelling through the fertile and very beautiful country traversed by the coach-road to Thurles yesterday, he might have imagined, if ignorant of the real cause, that the silence and death of animated life in the fields was the result of some fearful plague. For miles along the road not a human creature was visible; the whole county seemed one great cultivated desert." Shortly after 4 o'clock Mr. O'Connell mounted the platform. At this time the whole of the hill was covered with people. Taking into account the numbers still upon the road, which remained thronged for upwards of a mile, as the people could not debouche fast enough, the great multitude who remained in the town, despairing of access to the field, and the space of ground so densely occupied about the platform, there could not have been less, says the Times, than 90,000 or 100,000 human beings assembled. Mr. O'Connell's estimate of 700,000 would infer that three-fourths of the whole population of the county of Tipperary were collected together. Assuming the hon. members statement to be correct, and setting down the aggregate value of each individual's labour at 1*s.* per day (which at this period of the year it certainly is), it would appear that the day's meeting cost the county of Tipperary no less a sum than 15,000*l.*, from the mere loss of labour alone. Mr. Maher, M.P., took the chair, and a series of resolutions, with a petition to Parliament in favour of Repeal, were unanimously adopted.

Mr. O'Connell, who looked remarkably well, then came forward. When the cheering subsided, he said I am here to ask whether you know your catechism? (Cries of "We do.") Well, then, if you do, I will ask you one question—are you not for Repeal? (Cheers, and cries of "We are.") Are you not more determined than ever to work for the Repeal? (Cheers.) Well, I see you know your catechism very well. I have ready pupils in you. Will you look for it according to my advice? (Cries of "Yes.") Peaceably, legally, constitutionally—without violence, without force, without intimidation? Will you join with me in that plan, and no other? (Cries of "We will.") Well, then, I will obtain it with your aid. (Cheers.) An old fellow never had a better back than I have. (Laughter.) I have hundreds and thousands of the brave and gallant people of Tipperary to aid me. (Loud and continued cheers.) The Union was carried by the most fraudulent and foul means—by the most atrocious tyranny that was ever exercised on a people—by torture and by flogging—by the jail and by the scaffold. Your villages were ringing with the lashes on the backs of the people. Many of you are old enough to remember Judkin Fitzgerald and his torturers. Did not your town re-echo with the shrieks of agonised men, tortured on the pretence of being suspected of being suspicious? Were not the streets of Clonmel red with human blood? Was not martial law proclaimed, and the law of the land abrogated, and there was no protection for person or property? They chose the time when we stood, and were ridden down—when the yeoman in two boots, with an iron sword by his side, galloped over the people—when torture, and cruelty, and oppression prevailed—they took that opportunity to carry the Union, and we will look for a peaceable opportunity to repeal it. England will want us—the time is not remote when she will want us, and then she shall have us: I will sell you to her.—A Voice—We won't go to her.—Mr. O'Connell—Yes, you will, and I will prove it to you. I will prove that you will. Could you not wait to hear the price? Never think of refusing to sell until you hear the price. (Laughter.) I will tell you the price—the price is liberty. Let England give me liberty, and I will stand to the death by her; but I shall take care to get the liberty first, and I will not take her word of honour for it. I have never led my countrymen astray, but I shall lead you to the temple of the constitution, and to the enjoyment of the green land in which you were bred. I shall obtain for you a share of the profits of agriculture, and a prosperity that is incalculable in its extent for the noble people of this beautiful country. To obtain "Ireland for the Irish" is my motto. Yes, and you have a right to believe me, when I tell you that you will succeed. I'll tell you why you should believe me—A Voice.—We do believe you.—Mr. O'Connell.—I am sure you kindly do, and Heaven knows my heart is grateful for your affection. I see it, and read it in the eyes of my countrymen. How many gallant hearts and stout hands were lifted and throbbed at beholding me to-day! How many aged women offered up their aspirations to Heaven, praying for my long life, and power, and strength! How many beauteous younger eyes beamed upon me, and I read in their countenances, that no bachelor would have any business in speaking to them except he was a Repealer. What beauteous countenances they were! Yes, you may believe in me—I put down Protestant ascendancy for you already. Why, four years ago they used to laugh at me when I spoke of Repeal. I recollect that Mr. Litton, who was made a Master in Chancery by the Government, laughed at me in the House of Commons, and said to me, "You will never get 500 people to join with you for Repeal in Ireland;" but I may now, when speaking merely of the people that joined with me for Repeal to-day, put three noughts to that number. The Government conspired against me. They accused me of conspiracy, and by a most iniquitous sentence sent me to gaol. Thank Heaven, men of Tipperary, that I was in gaol for you. I am ready to go there again—ay, or even to the scaffold, if I can purchase your liberty and prosperity by the price of my blood. They tried coercion—they tried law; but finding—for they admit it—that they could not put us down by force, they are now trying bribery and corruption. They want to know what they can do for the people of Ireland! I told them to give us Repeal, and to secure to the tenant a full compensation for the labour and capital expended; they did not do one nor the other. They are now endeavouring to coax us—they gave a large sum to Maynooth, and they would fain make the people of Ireland believe that this was to them a great boon! Thank you for nothing said the gallipot. One word before I send you home. There is another plan on foot, and the county of Tipperary ought to know of it: they are sending out amongst the people Paddy M'Kews, spies, and informers. Did you ever hear of Shinrone and Barnane! Did you hear of how the two women contradicted each other! And do you know the objects for which spies and informers are sent amongst you? Let me implore of you to guard against them, my dear friends. (Cries of "We will.") In the north they are swearing in Ribandmen. I hate Ribandism: and if there is anything I hate more, it is the folly of people joining such infamous societies. You will separate peaceably and quietly—you will go home with a gentleness that becomes good and brave men, go to your habitations, tell your friends and neighbours that I promise you liberty and Repeal if you only take my advice. I, to be sure, have passed many a year—I am 70 years of age. My frame feels the effects, but my heart is as light and as young as ever, and my arm is strong enough yet to ward off any blow that may be aimed at Ireland. I have one word more to say. I must succeed with Tipperary at my back. I have been handed over 500*l.* Repeal rent from Tipperary. Oh! men of Tipperary we will win the day. (Continued cheering.)

The dinner took place in a large pavilion prepared for the purpose. Plates were laid for 800. At the end was a raised platform for the ladies, which was densely crowded long before the hour for dinner. Mr. Nicholas Maher, M.P., presided. On his right sat the "Liberator," Mr. Edward Smithwick, ex-Mayor of Kilkenny, the Mayors of Waterford, Kilkenny, and Clonmel, with some aldermen and town councillors of Limerick. On the left of the chair sat Mr. Caleb Powell M.P., Mr. James Kelly, M.P., the Mayor of Limerick, Dr. Gray, Mr. M. J. O'Connell, M.P., Dean Burke of Clonmel, Mr. Meagher, Waterford, and Alderman Hackett, Clonmel. The proceedings were much confused, for many were hungry and could not get seats, and those who were satisfied felt indignant at the interruptions, so throughout the night there were constant cries of "Sit down," &c. After the usual loyal toasts had been given, and considerable sums of money handed in,

The Chairman rose and said—I am about to give you now the toast of the night. Gentlemen, there is no form of expression in the English language—there is no idea that the human mind could conceive, that is not already exhausted in the praise of the great and extraordinary man whose health I am about to propose. Coupled with his name is the cause on which the hearts of Irishmen are fixed who are determined to Repeal the Union. We had to-day at least half a million. (A Voice.—One million, Sir—one million!) Chairman.—Perhaps I am under the mark; but, however, half a million is not bad. We had half a million of men to-day at least, who declared themselves determined to struggle for the Repeal of the Union—who declared that nothing else would satisfy them—and I think you were right, for nothing will ever do any good for Ireland but the Repeal of the Union. I will now give you "The Health of O'Connell and the Repeal of the Union."—Mr. O'Connell rose to return thanks, and was received with enthusiastic applause. When the cheering had subsided, he said—I had at least 300,000 or 400,000 persons to-day, declaring solemnly to labour and agree with me in repealing that Union. Yes, four years ago it was a subject of ridicule and laughter, but they don't laugh at us now, at all events. Ridicule is at an end, and calumny has been substituted for it; but, in spite of ridicule and calumny, we are prosperous. They say that the fox prospers from being cursed. Without the cunning of that animal we have his perseverance. I am glad we are calumniated, for it is a sign that they think we are likely to succeed. The Prime Minister himself in Parliament distinctly admitted that we were not to be put down by force. It is not that he thought we could resist the force of the nation, but he saw that we were too prudent, too wise I will call it, to put ourselves in the power of a military force, that our object was to adopt more sensible means, knowing that the bayonet is good for nothing in point of argument, and that common sense and the combination of public opinion are more powerful than any armed force whatever. They failed in point of force, and then they tried the law. They exhausted, therefore, the law and coercion. What methods are they next to resort to? Bribery and corruption. They cannot intimidate—they cannot crush—they would therefore corrupt and buy; but where are the slaves that would sell themselves to any Government, to the prejudice of their country? They shall find none such in Ireland. Their plan now is to purchase. They thought it was a bribe they were giving to the Catholic clergy when they increased the grant to Maynooth. Heaven help them! Have they got a single vote or a voice by reason of the Maynooth grant—have they purchased a single clergyman—have they got a single parish priest—has a single curate deserted the colours of his country? No; if they gave the wealth of Trinity College to Maynooth, they would not be a whit nearer suppressing the cry for Repeal. I don't mean to canvass the Bequests Act; I am satisfied with the canvassing of it you have heard already. I need not canvass the education plan. 18 of the bishops have condemned that plan, and I am unreasonable enough to submit to that condemnation. I allude to these things to shew you what the several tactics are that the Government have adopted to prevent you from looking for the Repeal of the Union. The Minister is now ready to do almost anything for us. Where is the opposition to our getting the rest! Why did they give us so much? What has made the difference between '41, when the Minister declared that concession to Ireland had gone to its utmost limits, and '45, when he is ready to do everything that, as he says, the Irish people can reasonably desire! It is a secret. I will tell it to you—a little bird told it to me, but don't convey it to anybody—Conciliation-hall—the agitation for the Repeal. They have still one triumph in reserve. The "Quarterly Review," the organ of the Tory party in England has announced it; it is the last and desperate remedy they have—they are to pension the Catholic clergy of Ireland. It is announced, I may say officially, to be their last resort. In the first place, I ask you where they would get money to pension them? It would cost 1,000,000*l.* per annum to give them a decent subsistence. But the Catholic clergy know that nothing ever so disconnected the Presbyterians from their clergy as the Regium Donum, and they are too wise—oh, I scorn the word "wise"—they are too honest and too conscientious, to sell that people that never deserted them. Is there any one amongst them that would give up the unbought respect of the people by which he is cheered in his course—the undisguised reverence that is paid him? Would any of them give for all the money in the Treasury the dutiful affection of his poor people? Those who have no other trust but in their priests will always have their priests their friends. I say that the Treasury may open wide its portals—here are the unpurchasable priesthood of Ireland. (Cheers.) We have achieved this much in time of peace, when England was secure—when she had no foreign enemies to occupy her attention—when her foolish Chartists had wisely resolved to give up Chartism and attend to their looms, and received good wages as a security for their quiet. We have performed these things at the time when the Government was not harassed from without—when the manufacturing industry of England was tranquil, because it was well employed. I prophesy that we will succeed—I prophesy from experience, which is the only safe source of human prediction—yes, I venture to prophesy that by proceeding as we have proceeded, and acting as we have acted, we must be successful, and what we have achieved in part achieve in its entirety. But, my friends, there are other considerations to inspire hope for Ireland. Has England a lease of her present prosperity? If she have it is from week to week—from day to day—from hour to hour. Has England a lease of security from the continental states? Has England security from America. The Queen of England and the King of the French may kiss hands in a bathing-box, for aught I care, but this will not satisfy the people of France, and England is not the more certain of her tranquillity on that account. Europe has, to be sure, enjoyed 30 years of peace, but the longer it lasts the less likely it is to be of longer continuance—its period of existence is fast wearing out, and as far as it is permitted to us to read human events from the experience of the past, we can predict that England will not long continue in prosperity—not long continue in peace with the maritime states of Europe, especially with France, and certainly not with America. Let but one untoward event occur—one ripple appear on the wave of her prosperity—one year of manufacturing distress—one season of agricultural failure, as the present harvest threatened to be, and England is in trouble again. "Man's infirmity is God's opportunity"—even so—England's infirmity is Ireland's opportunity. Think of it when you go home—any one of the ten thousand events that may bring England into jeopardy is fraught with hope for Ireland. It has been said by Sir R. Peel that in the cycle of seasons four or five years of prosperity are followed by one of adversity. Let the cycle but come round for England (and it is coming fast), Ireland will have her own again, and England will be obliged to ask for that alliance which we are now ready to make—an alliance of separate states under the one monarch, with our own Parliament to protect us, as the sole source of legislation for the country. Even in little things one perceives the deeper interest that the people of England and the English press take in Ireland. I remember when the Times newspaper had no better words for our venerated clergy than "surpliced ruffians," and "bigoted tyrants;" and for the people, "a filthy and ferocious rabble." They use better language now—they even send over a commissioner, in the hope that that commissioner would be able to report some advance in prosperity. Why, how could they expect this? Has not Lord Devon's report proved the reverse—has it not distinctly stated to the Parliament and people of England that nearly one-half the population of Ireland are in the greatest distress—that they are badly housed, badly clothed, badly fed—that their houses are pervious to rain, and unsheltered against the winter blasts—that a bed or a blanket is a luxury scarcely ever experienced, and that the peasant holds no possession but his dung-heap and his misery? Mr. O'Connell then alluded to the reports of the Times commissioner, ridiculing some of his statements as to the comparative strength of the Irish and Saxons, &c., and contending that such things were symptomatic of the anxiety of English public writers, and English statesmen, to find some excuse for checking the onward progress of the cause; but the progress of Repeal cannot be checked by the folly of one set of individuals or by the crimes of another. Every opposition must shrink before the might and majesty of Ireland. Repeal will give to Ireland the waters of life pure and unalloyed, and unmixed with mephitic vapours. They shall be administered by a resident Parliament acting for the people—protecting and encouraging the industry of the land, and giving peace, liberty, and prosperity to old Ireland.

Mr. O'Connell sat down amidst vehement and protracted cheering. After several other toasts had been given the meeting broke up in the most orderly manner, and at midnight the vast crowds which had collected during the day at Thurles had quietly dispersed.

Edinburgh.—The hundredth anniversary of the battle of Gladsmuir, or Prestonpans, which was fought on the 21st September, 1745, was celebrated on the 22d ult., by a pilgrimage to the scene of the battle, by the Mechanics' Friendly Society of Edinburgh, and the Prestonpans Benefit Society, amounting in all to upwards of 120 members. The procession took place at Musselberg, with bands of music and flags, and proceeded along to Prestonpans, and all the interesting points of the battle-ground were gone over, including the house of Colonel Gardiner, which was liberally shown to the societies on the occasion. In the evening the parties returned highly pleased with their day's excursion. In connexion with the above, a gentleman in Leith has a copy of the Caledonian Mercury, dated 23d September, 1745, which contains a full account of the battle of Prestonpans, with the retreat of Cope, and a list of the killed and wounded, concluding with a manifes o of the Prince, dated at Holyrood Palace, calling upon all his loving subjects to lay down their arms of rebellion against him, as the result of the battle had fixed his destiny!

Comrie.—On Monday the 22d ult., three earthquakes occurred in this town; first, about one P.M., next about 20 minutes afterwards, and the third about 20 minutes to four o'clock P.M., but as they were comparatively slight they did not give much alarm.

VENTILATION.—"A most ingenious, simple, and effective plan." Mr. Reid's Lecture on Ventilation, delivered June 7, 1845, before the Mechanics' Institute, Liverpool.—BAILLIE'S PATENT TRANSPARENT VENTILATOR ventilates rooms or public buildings without causing unpleasant draughts of air—may be fixed as easily as a pane of glass, whose place it supplies—does not derange blinds, shutters, or other fixtures belonging to windows—most useful to public places of every description, especially smoking and coffee-rooms, and, moreover, a simple remedy for smoky chimneys. This article may be obtained from all respectable glass dealers in London; Messrs. Stock and Sharp, and Mr. Samuel Beals, Birmingham; Messrs. John Hall and Sons, and Messrs. Dixie and Williams, Bristol; Messrs. Thos. and Will. Stock, Liverpool; Messrs. Davidson and Armstrong, Manchester; Mr. James Bell, Glasgow, &c.; who have models to explain its action, and will be glad to give any further information; also to be seen in use at Mr. Fred. Smith's, the Albion, 259, Blackfriars-road; Mr. Edward Baillie's, 12B, Cumberland-market, Regent's-park; Mr. Seaton's, Dublin Castle, Park-street, Camden Town; 2, Coleman-street-buildings, Moorgate-street, and at the Office of this Paper.

ABERNETHY'S PILL for the NERVES and MUSCLES.—The proprietor of these pills is a medical man. The brother of a patient of his applied to Mr. Abernethy for advice; he gave him a prescription, and those pills are prepared accurately from that prescription. The patient's complaint was a nervous one, and it was utterly impossible for any one to be in a worse condition than he was. Muscular power was also lost in some parts, and his legs fairly tottered under him. He had a box of the pills prepared, and the effects were all but miraculous, for not only did nervousness leave him, but muscular power returned to all parts deficient of it. The proprietor has since tried them on hundreds of his patients, and he can conscientiously state that their effects in restoring nervous energy and muscular power have quite astonished him. The nervous invalid should lose no time in resorting to this truly wonderful medicine. They are so harmless that they may be administered with perfect safety to the most delicate constitutions, as they do not contain a particle of mercury, or any other poisonous ingredient. As before stated, their effects are all but miraculous—one box will prove the truth of this assertion. As regimen and diet are of the utmost consequence in all nervous disorders, the particulars as recommended by the late Mr. Abernethy in such complaints will be enclosed round each box, price 4s. 6d.—Appointed agents for London: C. King, Napier-street, Hoxton New Town; Barclay, Farringdon-street; Edwards, St. Pauls; Sutton, Bow Church-yard; Johnston, 68, Cornhill; Prout, 229, Strand; Hannay, 63, and Sanger, 150, Oxford-street. By sending 58 stamps to Mr. King (as above) a box may be had post free.

THE POPULAR MEDICINE.—Read the following account from Mr. HOLLIER, Bookseller, Dudley:—

Tipton, Staffordshire.

I, Joshua Ball, hereby testify that I had been dreadfully afflicted with Rheumatic Gout for 17 years, so that I have at times kept my bed for months together, and could not get anything to do me good, till I took PARR'S LIFE PILLS, which I am very happy to state have restored me to perfect health.

JOSHUA BALL.

TO THE PUBLIC.—This famous remedy has been established by undoubted proofs of its efficacy, and by a mass of Evidence and Testimonials which no other medicine ever yet called forth. These facts have had the effect of producing a very large sale—more than 15,000 boxes per week. When this large sale came to the knowledge of some unprincipled persons, who for the sake of gain to themselves, and reckless of the injury it may do to others, are attempting to foist on the incautious various imitations, and in order that purchasers may be able to detect these frauds, care must be taken to look at the Government Stamp pasted round each box, and be sure it has the words "PARR'S LIFE PILLS" in White Letters on a Red Ground engraved therein, and forms part of the Stamp; also that the signature of T. ROBERTS & Co., Crane-court, is printed with the directions wrapped round each box.

N.B. Ask for PARR'S LIFE PILLS, and inquire for the little book, containing the Life of Old Parr, 32 pages, with engravings, also the numerous testimonials, which may be had, gratis, on application, of all agents and respectable vendors throughout the United Kingdom.

Sold in boxes at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 11s., by every respectable medicine vendor.

A WONDERFUL PRESERVATION OF LIFE BY HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Hugh M'Donald, Lot 55, in King's County, Prince Edward Island, made a public declaration before Joseph Coffin, Esq., Justice of the Peace at Bay Fortune, September 3, 1845, to the effect that the greater part of his nose, and roof of his mouth, were eaten away, besides ulcerous sores in the face and legs, which, from their nature, must shortly have deprived him of life, and that he has been restored from the pitiable and miserable state he was in, by the use of Holloway's Pills and Ointment, and this after all other medical treatment had failed. Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment, 244, Strand, London.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, OR PEARL DENTRIFICE, patronised by Her MAJESTY, H.R.H. Prince ALBERT, the Royal Family, and the several Courts of Europe. A FRAGRANT WHITE POWDER, prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue, for strengthening, preserving, and cleansing the teeth. It eradicates the factitious formation of tartar, and, by the removal of that extraneous substance, lends a salutary growth and freshness to the gums. It removes from the surface of the teeth the spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, substituting for discolour and the aspect of impurity, the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; while, from its salubrious and disinfecting qualities, it gives a sweetness and perfume to the breath, bestowing at once cleanliness, and the appearance and reality of health. Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

CAUTION.—To protect the public from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of Her Majesty's Stamps have authorised the Proprietors' Signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus,—A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton Garden, which is affixed to each BOX. Ask for ROWLAND'S ODONTO. Sold by them, and by Perfumers and Chemists.

 All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS.

News of the Week.

The Paris papers are filled with details of a general insurrection of the native tribes collected on the frontiers of Algeria, and of the disastrous fate of two bodies of French troops which have fallen into their power. It appears that on the 16th ult., a column of French troops, amounting to about 2000 men, left Mostaganem for the purpose of "chastising" a refractory tribe. A desperate conflict ensued, during which Colonel Berthier was killed at the head of his squadron of cavalry, and it required another charge to recover possession of his corpse. The French were ultimately compelled to retreat, with a loss of 23 killed, and 75 wounded. The result soon spread along the whole frontier of Morocco. A general insurrection of the native tribes took place. Abd-el-Kader placed himself at their head, and opened the campaign by cutting to pieces a body of 450 men in the neighbourhood of Tlemcen. The manner in which this was effected shows, in a striking manner, how little security the French can even now repose in the fidelity of the Arabs. A chief of the neighbourhood of the French post of Djemmaa Ghazaouet went to Col. Montagnac, the commander of the post, and informed him that Abd-el-Kader was then in the adjacent mountains with few followers, and that it would be easy to surprise him. The conduct of this chief, who had made his submission to France, had hitherto been such that no suspicion was excited, and Col. Montagnac therefore immediately set out at the head of a column of 450 men. Abd-el-Kader, with a force far superior, was placed in ambush on the road, and the French column suddenly found themselves the victims of an act of treason, and completely surrounded at a point where they little expected to meet an enemy. The conflict was terrific. Col. Montagnac, who is described as an excellent and gallant officer, was killed at the commencement of the action, and so complete was the destruction of the French, that only 14 out of 450 escaped. This melancholy news has, of course, created an intense sensation throughout France. A Council of Ministers, over which the King presided, met at St. Cloud on Tuesday, and resolved to send six regiments of infantry and two of cavalry to Algeria forthwith, and directed Marshal Bugeaud to return immediately to his command. This reinforcement of upwards of 12,000 men to an army already composed of 100,000 disciplined troops is considered by most of the Paris Journals as an enormous sacrifice. They advert also, with even greater interest, to the important announcement of the Ministerial journals, that the Government have determined to pursue Abd-el-Kader wherever he may be found, and, in case of necessity, not to respect the Morocco territory, since it is evident that the Emperor has not the means of executing his recent treaty. On the other hand, it is stated by the Algiers papers that Abd-el-Kader has been joined by a large number of tribes who had submitted to the French, and that he is again at the head of a formidable force.—From Italy we have also the details of an insurrection, which broke out on the night of the 23d ult, at Rimini, in the Papal States. The attempt was made by a party of Italian refugees, who had been joined by some Spanish refugees residing in different towns of Italy. The insurgents had organised a vast plot, the object of which was to effect a rising throughout the country. They succeeded in retaining possession of Rimini for two or three days, and the movement was soon followed by Ravenna and other places in the neighbourhood, but without that co-operation among themselves which alone could ensure even a temporary success. The troops were speedily on the march, and on their approach the insurgents took to flight, and sought shelter in the mountains, where many have since been made prisoners. The last accounts state that order was re-established, but the governments of the various Italian States were greatly alarmed by the outbreak, and are taking every precaution to prevent a recurrence of the movement.—From the United States we learn that the President of Mexico has appointed his new Cabinet, the members of which are opposed to any warlike demonstrations against the United States. The papers add, that a more effectual obstacle to the threatened declaration of war, is the acknowledged poverty of the Mexican Treasury, and the impossibility of effecting a loan in any quarter.

Home News.

Court.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the infant royal family continue at Windsor Castle. Prince Albert is gradually recovering from his recent accident, although still somewhat lame. His Royal Highness, however, has been well enough to drive Her Majesty in a pony phaeton two or three times during the week, and on Wednesday went out shooting in the preserves of the Castle. Their Imperial Highnesses Prince and Princess Peter of Oldenburgh, Baron Brunnow, the Russian Ambassador, the Earl of Aberdeen, and the Earl of Liverpool, have been at the Castle this week on a visit to Her Majesty. Letters from Lisbon state that it is generally reported in that capital that Her Majesty will pay a visit to the Queen of Portugal in spring next. The Countess of Mount-Edgcumbe has succeeded the Countess of Gainsborough as the Lady in Waiting, the Earl of Morton has succeeded the Marquis of Ormonde as the Lord in Waiting, and Admiral Sir Robert Otway has succeeded Colonel Berkeley Drummond as the Groom in Waiting to Her Majesty. Prince George of Cambridge arrived at his residence in St. James's Palace on Saturday evening, from a visit to Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, at Witley Court, Worcestershire.

Parliamentary Movements.—Lord Brooke has announced himself a candidate for South Warwickshire, on the Conservative and Agricultural interests, and Mr. Bolton King, who had previously come forward, has withdrawn, being unwilling to oppose the election of Lord Brooke, whose return is now considered certain.—Lord Allan Churchill, second son of the Duke of Marlborough, will, it is understood, be a candidate for the representation of Woodstock, and it is rumoured that Mr. Thornhill, of Woodleys, a Conservative, will oppose the Duke's interest in that borough at the forthcoming election.—The Cork papers mention a rumour prevailing in that city, that Mr. Lloyd, of Beechmount, the recent convert to repeal, is to be called upon to offer himself as the successor of Mr. Sergeant Murphy in the representation of Cork. On the other hand, it is rumoured that Mr. O'Connell and Mr. Smith O'Brien will start for the city of Dublin, and Mr. Lloyd succeed the latter as repeal representative for the county of Limerick.—The death of Mr. Ramsbottom which took place on Wednesday, has caused a vacancy at Windsor. Sir J. De Beauvoir, Col. Reid, Capt. Bulkeley, and Mr. Walter, are mentioned as candidates.

Leasehold and Freehold Property.—Last week an act of last session, entitled "An Act to facilitate the granting of certain leases," came into force. Leases for lands and tenements may now be made on a very small piece of parchment. The schedules of forms annexed to the act show the art of legal condensation. Payment for leases under the act is to be made in reference to the skill displayed, and not according to the extent of the instrument. By an act of last year a deed need not be "indented" at the top, and the usual expression of "This indenture" has been altered to "This deed."—Another act of last session, entitled "An Act to Facilitate the Conveyance of Real Property," also came into operation last week. This Act is very much like the above, with the exception that it proposes to facilitate the sale and conveyance of real property. The object of the act is to shorten conveyances, and forms are given in the schedules annexed for that purpose. The act does not extend to Scotland.

Foreign.

France.—Accounts have been received from Algiers containing very disastrous intelligence of the fresh reverses of the French troops. Abd-el-Kader has re-appeared, and the Arabs, almost simultaneously on two points, have attacked and overthrown the French with considerable slaughter. The first affair occurred on the 16th ult, when a column, commanded by General Bourjolly, marched from Mostaganem to chastise the Chourfas, a part of the Flitta tribe, which has not yet recognised the authority of France. A serious engagement took place between this column, about 1800 strong, and the Chourfas, a numerous and powerful tribe. A detachment of the French force being closely pressed by the enemy, General Bourjolly despatched two squadrons of the African Chasseurs, commanded by Lieut.-Colonel Berthier, to its support. Upon his arrival, that officer charged immediately in the centre of the Arabs, and threw them into disorder; but during the engagement the Colonel was shot through the heart. For an instant he remained in the power of the enemy, but the chasseurs, irritated at the death of their leader, made a fresh and desperate charge, and succeeded in rescuing his body. Colonel Clerc, who commanded the 9th battalion of the Chasseurs d'Orleans, received a ball in the knee, and it is thought that his leg will have to be amputated. The French loss amounted to 23 killed and 75 wounded. The second disaster occured on the 21st ult., and was in all respects more serious and alarming, being nothing less than the surprise of a column of French troops near Djemmaa Ghazaouet by Abd-el-Kader in person. It appears that on the 21st September, Lieut.-Colonel Montagnac, superior commander of the fort of Djemmaa Ghazaouet, acceding to the entreaties of the neighbouring tribes, who pretended to be menaced by parties of the cavalry of Abd-el-Kader, marched out at the head of 450 men of the Chasseurs of Orleans and of the 2d Hussars towards the Marabout of Sidi Brahira, situate three leagues from Djemmaa. He had scarcely reached the Marabout, when he was suddenly surrounded by a multitude of horsemen and Kabyles of the country, and of Morocco, whom he resolutely charged, with the intention of opening a passage through their ranks. The melée was dreadful, for all, both officers and men, were in an instant cut down, with the exception only of 80 Chasseurs of Orleans, commanded by Captain Goreaux, the only surviving officer. Notwithstanding the efforts of the enemy, those 80 men possessed themselves of the neighbouring Marabout, and shut themselves up in it. Abd-el-Kader vainly attempted to carry the building; fired upon through loop-holes which the besieged had made in the wall with their swords and bayonets, the Emir was compelled to raise a siege which had cost him many killed. "During two days," says one of the accounts, "our men remained in the Marabout, without being able to take any rest, and having neither provisions nor water. Abd-el-Kader summoned them on three different occasions to surrender, pledging himself that they should suffer no injury, 'for,' added he, 'you treat the Mussulman prisoners with humanity.' Although reduced to the last extremity, our 80 brave soldiers would not listen to any arrangement. Under these circumstances Abd-el-Kader thought proper to retire, leaving however a numerous body of horsemen to continue the blockade of the Marabout. Scarcely was the main force of the besiegers out of sight, than the besieged sallied out, and forcing their way through the blockading line at the point of the bayonet, they proceeded in the direction of Djemmaa Ghazaouet. They had reached within a league of the place, when they were again assailed by a multitude of Kabyles; the captain was among the first who fell, and his soldiers not wishing to abandon his body to the enemy, rallied round it, and fought until they were nearly all killed. In the meantime however the report of the fusillade was heard at Djemmaa Ghazaouet, where the alarm had been given by a hussar, the only one who had escaped the massacre of the two squadrons which accompanied Col. Montagnac. When the garrison of the post arrived on the spot 12 men only were alive, who were brought back to Djemmaa Ghazaouet; in all 14 survivors out of 450." Wishing to profit by his advantage, Abd-el-Kader immediately advanced upon the column of Gen. Cavaignac, who was manœuvring in the direction of Tlemcen, in the hope of surprising him likewise. But he was met by a force of 1300 men; and after an engagement, in which the commander of the Zouaves, M. Peyraguez, was killed, he retired.—On Tuesday a cabinet council was held in Paris in consequence of this serious news, and a telegraphic despatch was immediately afterwards sent, requiring Marshal Soult's return to Paris with the utmost expedition. Marshal Bugeaud, who was still at the baths in the Pyrenees, was also recalled. It has been determined that Marshal Bugeaud shall return to Algeria with the least possible delay, and that six regiments of infantry, and two of cavalry, shall be forthwith embarked for Oran.—The Presse and other journals state that the insult offered to the French flag by the Ovas at Madagascar is about to be severely chastised, and that the command of the naval force to be employed on the expedition is to be entrusted to the Prince de Joinville, who is to hoist his flag in the Suffren, the ship in which he bombarded Mogador and Tangiers, and this expedition is to be supported by an English force,

"all the rights of France to the final occupation of Madagascar, and all her rights of sovereignty being duly reserved."—In last session of the Chamber of Deputies an angry altercation took place between the Opposition and the Ministers as to the circumstance of the "Gallic cock" having been for some time past turned out of the ornaments of the French infantry shakos. The Republican print La Réforme now indignantly states that one regiment is beginning to wear the "royal crown" instead of the cock, and that the colours of another, which marched through Besançon a few days ago, had a number of fleur-de-lis on their "cravase." The Réforme says that it is the less astonished at this, as it knows that "the last time the Duchess de Nemours danced in London she had fleur-de-lis on her shoes."—Monday being the King's birthday, all the Ministers and high functionaries now in Paris went to St. Cloud to pay their respects to his Majesty. His Majesty has entered his 73d year. The King and the Queen of the Belgians and their children arrived at St. Cloud on Sunday. The Duc de Montpensier has arrived at St. Cloud from the East.—The Moniteur of Saturday publishes royal ordinances, dated the 23d ult., advancing several personages to the dignity of the peerage: Lieutenant-General Fabvier, who distinguished himself in fighting for the independence of Greece, is almost the only one whose name is known to English readers. "It appears," says the Memorial de Rouen, "that the works for extending to Eu the port of Tréport, which will assume the name of 'Philippe Port' are about to commence. It is also said that the railroad from Rouen to Dieppe will be immediately prolonged to the same royal residence." A Marseilles journal announces that Don Carlos and the Princess de Beira were to leave that city on the 2d for Nice. The Moniteur publishes a Royal ordinance, sanctioning the concession of the branch railroads of Dieppe and Fécamp to Messrs. Dalton, Shee, Blount, and Co. The Débats announces, under date Amiens, the 1st inst., that the celebrated institution possessed by the Jesuits at St. Acheul has ceased to exist. Forty of the fathers and novices abandoned the house at the close of September, many of whom expatriated themselves.

Spain.—The accounts from Madrid are of the 29th ult. The Gazette publishes a long decree relative to public instruction, which appears to have given great satisfaction. The Universities of Madrid, Barcelona, Granada, Oviedo, Salamanca, Santiago, Seville, Valencia, Valladolid, and Saragossa are to be maintained and those of the Canary Islands, Huesca, and Toledo to be converted into colleges of the second order. In future, the degree of Doctor can only be obtained in the University of Madrid. The rectors of the universities, and the directors of the faculty of medicine, are to give over immediately their respective establishments to the Political Chiefs of the provinces in which the universities are situated, and are to cease to exercise their functions. It was reported that Queen Isabella was to take her residence in Seville for the winter on account of her health; and another report states that the Queen is about to leave Madrid for some days to meet the Queen of Portugal in one of the towns on the frontier of Portugal. Both reports require confirmation, and it is not likely that the Queen will again leave Madrid.—At Saragossa, a house has been searched, and a large depôt of arms, powder, uniforms of the National Guard, &c., discovered, and it is hence inferred that another conspiracy has been organised in Arragon. Letters from Barcelona of the 27th ult. mention that 12 young men, who had fled from their homes to avoid the conscription, and were obliged from necessity to become robbers, were shot in the morning of that day, on the glacis of the citadel. They were only allowed 24 hours to prepare for eternity. The oldest was under 21 years of age. The Clamor Publico warns all Spain, in angry terms, that sundry Englishmen are striving to purchase four of the finest pictures of the Madrid Museum, including Murillo's celebrated "Pearl." This statement is positively denied by the Government papers. It was generally believed that the Cortes would not be assembled before the end of December. M. Thiers had arrived at Cadiz, where he was to embark for this country.

Germany.—The Manheim papers state that M. Ronge arrived at Heidelberg on the 26th ult., but was immediately informed that he must neither pray nor preach in public in that town. On the 29th he entered Manheim, and proceeded to the theatre with the intention of there haranguing the people, but the authorities refused to give him the key of the building. M. Bannerman, the deputy, then invited M. Ronge to go to the garden of his house. He did so, and was followed by an immense crowd, who filled the vacant space, and covered the trees and the walls. M. Ronge addressed them, explaining the origin and character of the New Catholic Church. He was listened to with great interest, and frequently cheered. A grand dinner was given to M. Ronge in the evening at one of the hotels. —A Berlin letter of the 25th ult., in the Manheim Gazette, states that when the King of Prussia was present at Munich at the baptism of the Prince Royal of Bavaria, the officiating bishop having invited the distinguished persons near the child to lay their hands upon it, the King of Prussia stretched forth his hand, but it was set aside by the bishop. The King then, says the letter, turned his back upon the company, and immediately left Munich in anger. The bishop's behaviour is said to have been intended as a rebuke upon the King of Prussia for his not having acted with sufficient severity against the new German Catholic Church.—A letter from Osnaburgh of the 28th ult. says, "A fact, which is the general subject of conversation in the city and country, may lead to a German Catholic movement in these parts. A young and accomplished Roman Catholic lady in Osnaburgh was asked by the father confessor whether she believed the infallibility of the Pope, and in transubstantiation. The lady answering both questions in the negative, was told by the confessor that she could not have the benediction of the Church; on which, without receiving absolution, she left the church."—The opening of the Austrian Northern Railway, which took place on the 20th ult., is, says the Augsburg Gazette, "an important event in many respects. This line of railroad is the first step of the Austrian government for the establishing a railroad communication with the north of Germany, and the last for connecting Vienna with one of the most important provinces of the monarchy. It opens between the Danube and the Elbe a means of rapid and cheap transport, and abridges the distance between Vienna and Prague so as to bring them within 15 hours' journey, and the distance between Vienna and Berlin so as to enable the traveller to go from one city to the other in three days. It presents the means of travelling by steam from the mountains of Styria to the mouth of the Danube, and opens a communication between Trieste and Hamburg, so that the distance may be performed in 106 hours." We have just received, says the Augsburg Gazette, the important information that the King of Prussia has conceded the line of railway from Aix-la Chapelle to Herzogenrath, Gladbach, and Dusseldorf. The King has also approved of the companies for constructing the Crefeld and Ruhrort, and the Maestrecht and Aix-la-Chapelle lines. The results of those lines so long wanted must be very beneficial to the trade and commerce of the districts through which they pass, and give employment to a great number of workmen now in the deepest distress. This decision of the King has been received with the greatest joy.

Switzerland.—The committee appointed by the Swiss government for directing the lines in that country, has decided upon the execution of the following lines, viz., Basle to Olten, Olten to Zurich, Olten to Lake de Biel, and Olten to Lucerne, being in all 44 Swiss leagues, and requiring an expenditure of 30,000,000f. It has been all but determined that the canton of Tessino shall have a railway. Four engineers of the canton and of the neighbouring community of Brenno have already traced out a line. It results from their labours and observations that the course the most favourable for the passage of the Alps lies between Santa Maria and Lake Maggiore. The Sardinian government has pronounced itself in favour of the short line from Turin and Genoa to Lake Constance, traversing the Grisons.

Italy.—The projected insurrection in the Papal States, which was said last week to have miscarried, appears to have been merely waiting a convenient opportunity for the outbreak. This occurred on the 24th ult., but like all the Italian insurrections it has failed to hold its ground before the military power brought against it. The outbreak took place at Rimini, but it was by no means confined to that city. The insurgents entered Rimini from the republic of San Marino and from Tuscany. It was directed by a Piedmontese refugee of the name of Rebotti, who was at one time a Colonel in the Spanish service, and who has lived for a considerable time in concealment at Rimini. In conjunction with Count Pasi he organised the plot among the inhabitants of the place and the officers and soldiers of the garrison. On the night of the 23d and 24th they rose in arms, and took possession of the town, of which they immediately closed the gates. They declared that their object was a reform of the Government, and their cry "Viva la Constituzione." The troops, who were to the number of 500, continued to wear the pontifical cockade, for the insurgents declared that they would remain faithful to the government of the Pope, on condition that he would give them a constitution. On the approach of the troops sent by the Cardinal-legate of Forli, the insurgents took to flight, and the inhabitants of the town sent a deputation to the cardinal, declaring that they had taken no part in the insurrection. The fort of San Leo, with a garrison of 500 men, took no part in the affair. The insurgents before leaving the town took possession of the savings bank and the government offices, but they did not find any money. They disarmed the custom-house officers and carried away their arms, but they did not touch private property. The town of Ravenna followed the example of Rimini, but the pontifical authorities having some Swiss troops and artillery at their disposal, a good deal of fighting took place between the troops and the inhabitants of the place, in which several persons were killed on both sides. The soldiers fired grape among the people, and great numbers were killed. On the side of the government an officer and several soldiers were killed. The Tuscan government immediately marched a body of troops to the frontiers, and at Venice the government also made preparations. Gun-boats were prepared for action, and kept in the open sea, ready for whatever point they may be required. The last letters from Bologna do not speak of any other movement having taken place. At the first report of this attempt, Marshal Radetzki, who commands the Austrian troops, reinforced the garrison of Ferrara. It was rumoured at Milan that at Benevento some musket shots had been fired at the Cardinal Legate and his secretary, and that the latter had been killed. This rumour requires confirmation, the more so as Benevento is not the residence of a Cardinal Legate.—A private letter from Faenza, of the 24th ult., corroborates part of the above statement, and adds that the town of Pesaro had followed the example of Rimini, and that Sinigaglia and Ancona were prepared to join in the movement. "Last night," says the writer, "a band marched upon Castel Bolognese, a small town of the legation of Ravenna, to form a junction this evening with a body of about 100 guerillas, mostly belonging to Faenza, who have taken up their station on the frontiers of Tuscany. The plan of the insurgents is to advance upon Rome." Another letter from Tuscany of the 26th ult. mentions that a report that the military commission sitting at Ravenna would go the rounds of Romagna provoked the insurrection. The most absurd reports have been propagated throughout Italy. Accounts from Venice state that a rumour was circulated in that city that French steamers had effected a disembarcation at Civita Vecchia, and that this was the reason why the authorities of Venice had armed a number of cutters ready to sail at a moment's notice. Notwithstanding that the insurrection has completely miscarried, the public mind still continues very much agitated. It is feared that the insurgents will form themselves into guerilla bands in the mountains. The Government of Tuscany has adopted measures to watch the frontiers. The Governments of the other states have likewise adopted precautionary measures.—The Gazette of Bologna, of the 29th ult., announces that the Pontifical troops re entered Rimini in the morning of the 27th ult., the insurgents having either embarked or fled into the mountains on their approach. "The accounts received this morning at Bologna," adds the Gazette, "state that the rebels dispersed in the mountains had been overtaken by the Swiss troops, the carabineers, and the Custom-house officers on the side of Balze, in the legation of Ravenna, where they were routed with the loss of some killed and wounded. In the mean time another band was met by the carabineers and Pontifical volunteers, and the Custom-house officers at Badi, in the legation of Bologna, and 14 revolters were disarmed and made prisoners by the loyal troops."

Russia.—A letter from Constantinople of the 17th September gives an account of a second battle fought between the Russians and Circassians, in which the former sustained a still more disastrous defeat than they did in the retreat from Dargo. It appears that the Russian army, in its retreat from Daghestan, was severely harassed by Schamil's troops, which followed close upon its heels. On reaching Jani-Ouchy, in Georgia, which is tributary to Russia, Count Woronzoff, thinking that he had got rid of his pursuers, halted his exhausted troops, in order to give them a few hours' rest. He was, however, mistaken. Schamil, the gallant and active leader of the Circassians, allowed him no time. He unexpectedly attacked the Russians in their camp, and after a short but very bloody struggle, Count Woronzoff was forced again to retreat, in order to reach a more favourable position. This he appears to have effected, but in the retreat he lost an immense number of men. The number of men killed is not exactly known, but it may be judged from the fact that 180 officers have perished, among whom were one general officer, two of Count Woronzoff's aides-de-camp, and an aide-de-camp of General Gluck. The Circassians also got possession of four pieces of artillery, and the greater portion of the Russian stores and ammunition. The Circassians, after this victory, committed great excesses. They ravaged the country, destroyed the villages, and carried off a great number of the inhabitants to the mountains as prisoners. Count Woronzoff reached Tiflis on the 3d September, with the shattered remains of his army. The force under Count Woronzoff, at the commencement of the campaign, amounted to 50,000 men. Of that number from 12,000 to 15,000 are said to have fallen on the field of battle, besides the vast numbers who perished from cold, fatigue, and privations. The sources from which the account of this disastrous battle has been obtained appear to be deserving of every credit. The effect of the defeat will be to put an end to the campaign, and Russia has certainly no reason to congratulate herself on the result. She has lost a large portion of the finest army she ever sent into Circassia; the debris of this army is disorganised and discontented; the people of the country are loud in their complaints at the losses to which they are annually subjected by this continued state of warfare, and the Circassians, so far from being subdued, are at the present moment not only as strong actually as they were at the commencement of the campaign, but have gained moral strength from the consciousness of success." Accounts from St. Petersburg confirm the fact of this second engagement, but claim the victory for the Russians, admitting, however, that the Circassians retired, as at Dargo, in good order, leaving only about 100 dead behind them. It is supposed, however, that the accounts received by way of Constantinople are more to be depended on, as the Russian Government has been doing all in its power to prevent the full extent of their disasters from being known at St. Petersburg.—According to information derived from a print published near the frontier of Poland, a large number of Polish refugees, from France, Belgium, and England, have passed through Leghorn, landed at Smyrna, and thence proceeded to the Caucasus, in order to join the ranks of the mountaineers.—Count Cancrine, lately Russian Minister of Finance, died near St. Petersburgh, in his 72d year, on the 21st ult.

United States and Mexico.—By the Great Western steam-ship, we have news from New York to the 16th ult. It is now almost certain that the intention of making war upon the United States has been abandoned by Mexico. On the 15th August, General Herrera was elected President by a great majority of all the departments. On the following day the whole cabinet resigned, according to the agreement made on the revolution of the 7th December taking place, and after a week's interval a new Ministry was appointed. No declaration of war has taken place, and the new cabinet, from want of money or from prudential motives, has remained perfectly passive, while the public display the greatest apathy in political affairs. The state of credit of the Treasury is at the lowest ebb, and there is no prospect of a loan being made. The army of the north is in a state of absolute destitution. General Paredes if not in open revolt is acting independently of the Central Government, and Gen. Filisola has arrived in Mexico from Potosi to explain the cruel position of the troops. Upper California also has petitioned Congress in favour of federation. The French Minister not having received satisfaction for the insult offered him at the end of May, has broken off all communication with the Mexican Government, demanded passports, and placed the French residents under the care of the Minister of Spain, as Ministre de Famille. The tariff is in a fair way of arrangement, the differences between the two Chambers having been settled, and the decree authorising a new tariff published. In regard to the United States and the question of war, the Washington Union, the official paper, says :—"Just as we are going to press, we learn that Government has received some interesting information from the capital of Mexico, to the 23d August, and Vera Cruz to the 30th, inclusive. It is said from the capital, that the new Cabinet is opposed to the war; and even if it were otherwise disposed, it has not the means of carrying on a war: that it is with the greatest difficulty it can raise the means to defray its necessary daily expenses; and that the war excitement is going down daily among all parties. The accounts from Vera Cruz of the 29th state that there has been a strong movement in regard to the invasion of Texas—Gen. Paredes absolutely refusing to march his forces (7000 troops) towards Texas, and that he has himself repaired to Mexico, and others have followed his example. The opinion was pretty well established at Vera Cruz that the Mexicans will never attempt to cross the Rio Bravo; that they have made all the bluster they can; that they are without money and without credit, and consequently powerless; and that they are, moreover, on the eve of a revolution which will overturn the present Government."—A letter from Oregon says that there are three candidates for Governor—Messrs. G. Abernethy, D. Russell, and Dr. Bailey—that difficulties between the Americans and British have been engendered, and that the governmental power of the Hudson Bay Company is set at nought. The New York Herald states, on the alleged authority of private letters, that the American settlers on the Oregon were about to send a delegate to the United States Congress at Washington, and adds—"Furthermore, we have it, from an undoubted source, that that delegate will be received and recognised as a member of the house."—The screw-auxiliary steam-vessel, Massachusetts, also arrived in the Mersey last week. She left New York on the 15th ult., and made her passage in 17 days and 11 hours. She is described as the most extraordinary vessel, as a specimen of consummate engineering skill, that ever crossed the Atlantic. She is the first of a screw-auxiliary line to sail between Liverpool and New York; built at Boston. She is 800 tons burden, has engines of 280 horse-power, and is ship-rigged, with masts unusually tall, and the funnel of unusual lowness even in screw-steamers. Her cabins are capacious, and ventilated in a new and ingenious manner. Her screw is of a novel construction; it can be drawn completely out of the water at pleasure, by a most simple process, and placed in a perpendicular position against the stern; and in such circumstances the Massachusetts is, to all intents and purposes, a sailing vessel. The screw works most powerfully, and ensures a speed, with sail, of twelve knots an hour. The sails and rigging abound in the most curious contrivances to ease the labour of reefing, shortening sail, &c., perhaps the first instance in which modern machinery has been carried aloft. All sail has been repeatedly set in twenty-five minutes. She has four life-boats; and what will be found the most extraordinary proof of American ingenuity yet known in ships, every bench, every seat, stool, &c., is a life-boat, made of iron, with air-tight compartments, and adapted to swim, even with the weight of a man.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

The District Asylums.—The metropolitan and suburban parishes are still in a ferment at the recent order of the Poor-law Commissioners, and some of the most powerful are determined not to yield. Last week a numerous meeting of the rate-payers of the extensive parish of St. Luke, Chelsea, pursuant to a requisition of the churchwardens, signed by upwards of 150 influential ratepayers, was held, to take into consideration the order of the Commissioners, directing the union of this parish with "the North-western Metropolitan Asylum District." Mr. Churchwarden Jeffries briefly explained the circumstances under which the meeting had been called, and after considerable discussion several resolutions hostile to the intended scheme of the commissioners were unanimously carried, and the rate-payers resolved to memorialise Sir J. Graham. A deputation from the board of guardians of this parish also waited on the Board of Marylebone last week, and came to an unanimous resolution to unite with Marylebone in offering every resistance to the order of the Commissioners, and to refuse to elect members of the proposed board of management. On Saturday at the meeting of the Marylebone vestry, a communication from the directors and guardians of the poor was read, containing their reply to the letter of the Commissioners, expressing a determination to unite Marylebone with other parishes in the erection of district asylums. The directors and guardians stated that the extent of the parish and its population of 140,000 entitled it to an exemption from the proposed union, and that the Commissioners had a discretionary power to exclude it, and that even the Act of Parliament implied that Marylebone, and all other parishes possessing means to provide for the destitute and houseless, should be excluded from a union with other parishes. They then denounced district asylums as so many inducements for bad characters and lazy vagabonds to migrate from agricultural districts to cities and towns; and in conclusion, stated that the oath which they had taken as directors and guardians of the poor to maintain the local government of the parish, prevented them submitting to the proposed union; but that if the Poor Law Commissioners insisted upon asylums for the destitute being erected, independent of the workhouse, that they would build one in their own parish. Several members of the vestry spoke in the highest terms of this "able and unanswerable document," and also in the most unqualified manner condemned the proposed plan of district asylums. The answer of the directors and guardians of the poor was received and adopted, and entered upon the minutes of the vestry. Great indignation was also expressed that the board of the parish of St. Pancras, who had so long acted with Marylebone, had recklessly thrown themselves into the arms of the Commissioners. On Friday a numerous meeting of the inhabitants of Greenwich took place, to take into consideration the order issued by the Commissioners relative to the formation of the South-eastern Metropolitan Asylum. After some discussion, the following resolution was carried by a large majority, after an amendment expressing approval of the District Asylum had been negatived :—"That the proposed plan for an asylum or asylums for the houseless poor will be attended with a heavy expense, without, in the opinion of the vestry, giving an adequate benefit; that if only one asylum is erected in the district, extending over a space of upwards of 10 miles, it will be useless to the greater proportion of the parishes joined in the union; and if more than one is erected, then the establishment expenses alone will be vexatiously burthensome; and that this vestry having understood that the guardians elected as managers of the said intended asylum are endeavouring to induce the Poor Law Commissioners to abandon the projected plan, this vestry highly approves of the conduct of the guardians in so doing." The vestry of St. James's, Clerkenwell, last week also adopted resolutions approving of the conduct of the board of guardians in resisting the order of the Commissioners, and pledged themselves to co-operate with Marylebone, St. Luke's, and other parishes in resisting the order. In the course of the discussion it transpired that a portion of the board, at a meeting, had elected two gentlemen as members of the new asylum board, but that election having to be confirmed, the majority of the board of guardians attended, and nullified the election by non-confirming the minutes.

The Corporation and Christ's Hospital.—The dispute between the Lord Mayor and the Hospital authorities on the question of jurisdiction, is not yet settled. At the Court of Aldermen last week, the Lord Mayor made a statement similar to that which he had previously made to the Court of Common Council, relative to the conduct of the Governors of Christ's Hospital, in denying upon St. Matthew's-day, as well as upon former occasions, that the Lord Mayor was head of that institution. The statement, which very firmly asserted the rights of the citizens of London, and repudiated the assumed authority of those who would not recognise these rights, gave great satisfaction to the Court. Sir P. Laurie, in moving that the paper drawn up by the Lord Mayor, should be referred to a committee of the whole Court, said the Court was much indebted to the Lord Mayor for the spirited and able course he had pursued in asserting the right of the chief magistrate to be at the head of all the Royal Hospitals.—Alderman Wood supported the motion, and said that the Lord Mayor had acted upon the occasion with great judgment. He alluded to the conduct of Sir J. Shaw, when Lord Mayor, in taking precedence of the Prince of Wales in the city of London, a course in which it was admitted by the first legal authorities that excellent magistrate was justified, and he argued that upon all occasions especial care should be taken to secure the institutions of the city from violation.—Alderman Hughes hoped the subject would be investigated, and believed that the result would be satisfactory. He thought that, if a clear statement of the circumstances were made to the governors of the royal hospitals, they would at once admit the existence of the authority.—Alderman Sidney entertained a different opinion as far as regarded Christ's Hospital at any rate, for the governors of that institution had manifested the strongest disposition to show a total disregard for the authority of the Lord Mayor.—Alderman Wilson could not be silent when he saw so plainly attempts made to take away the privileges of the corporation. It was his firm opinion that the only place in which the question could be settled was a court of law, and he trusted that an appeal would be made as soon as possible to that authority. The motion was then agreed to, and on Tuesday the Report of the committee was brought up. It stated that the lists sent to the Lord Mayor were incorrect, and recommended that they should be returned to the presidents of the several hospitals to be corrected, and that the Lord Mayor be requested to hold a general court for all the hospitals, at Christ's Hospital, for the purpose of receiving and confirming the corrected lists. After some discussion the Report was adopted.

The Eclair Steam Sloop.—Mr. Greville, the Clerk of the Privy Council, has addressed a letter to the Times, enclosing the report made to the Lords of the Privy Council on Friday by Sir William Pym, Superintendent-General of Quarantine, and Mr. Arnott, of the Middlesex Hospital, respecting the case of this unfortunate vessel. Mr. Greville, in his letter, says, "The quarantine papers reached this office on the afternoon of Monday, the 29th ult., when the Superintendent-General of Quarantine was immediately sent for. He happened to be out of town at the moment, but early the following morning (Tuesday, the 30th), he proceeded, together with Mr. Arnott, to the Motherbank; and enclosed is their report upon the whole case, by which it will be seen that no time was lost in affording every possible relief to both the sick and the healthy, and that the vessel was all along provided with ample medical assistance, two surgeons being on board." The following is the report, dated October 3 :—"Sir,—Agreeably to instructions from the Lords of Her Majesty's Council, we proceeded to the quarantine station at the Motherbank early on the morning of the 30th, to inquire into the particulars connected with the mortality and the prevalence of a malignant fever on board Her Majesty's steamer Eclair, which arrived on the evening of the 28th ult. from the coast of Africa. Having gone alongside and interrogated the Commander Harston and Surgeon Bernard, the following is the result of our inquiries. L'Eclair sailed from Devonport in November last, having a crew of 146 officers and men, for the coast of Africa, on which station she remained until the 23d of July last, up to which period she had lost nine men from the common coast fever. Four days after sailing from Sierra Leone, one man died with fever and black vomit, the first case of the kind which had taken place; this man had been brought on board on the morning of the 23d, having been the three previous days on shore. During her voyage to Gambia, Goree, and Buena Vista, where she arrived on the 21st of August, 18 were attacked with the same fever, with black vomit, of which number 13 died. At Buena Vista the disease continued to spread rapidly amongst the crew, when permission having been obtained from the Portuguese Governor, it was determined to land the crew, sick and well, and purify the vessel. A fort was appropriated for the accommodation of the seamen and sick, and the officers obtained lodgings in the town. Every measure was taken to purify the ship by washing and whitewashing, fumigation, &c., all the Kroomen remaining on board, with the exception of six employed in attendance upon the sick. The disease, however, continued to prevail amongst the officers and men on shore, 31 men having died between the 21st August and the 13th September. Under these circumstances a consultation was held by three naval surgeons, and upon their report and recommendation it was determined that the steamer and crew should proceed to England. The ship's company were in consequence re-embarked, and sailed on the 13th Sept. Capt. Estcourt, having been taken ill the day before leaving Buena Vista, died on the 16th. At Buena Vista, the assistant-surgeon Hart, of the Eclair, died, when Mr. Maclure, a naval surgeon, passenger in the Growler, and Mr. Coffy, assistant-surgeon of the Growler, volunteered their services on board; here also seven seamen volunteered from the Growler. Dr. Maclure died on the voyage to Madeira, and one of the volunteer seamen was taken ill of the fever and recovered. Upon the arrival of the steamer at Madeira, the authorities refused permission to communicate with the shore, as had been previously done by the French at Goree; but at this island Mr. Bernard, a naval surgeon, volunteered his services, and was received on board, with two seamen. From the day of her sailing from Madeira, the 21st of September, up to this date, the 30th, seven deaths have taken place from the fever, and eight new cases have occurred, viz.:—Deaths.—2 on the 21st September; 1 on the 25th; 1 on the 26th; 1 on the 28th; 1 on the 29th; 1 on the 30th. Fresh cases.—1 on the 22d September; 1 on the 23d; 2 on the 25th; 3 on the 26th; 1 on the 29th. The fever still prevailing on board, the first measure deemed necessary was that the ship should be kept in strict quarantine. 2.—That the healthy should be separated from the sick. The steamer was therefore ordered to the foul Bill Quarantine Station at Standgate-creek; and an arrangement having been made with the Lords of the Admiralty, by which two ships in ordinary, with a proper supply of bedding, &c., was ordered to be placed at the disposal of the Superintendent of Quarantine at Standgate. With the view of personally superintending the arrangements, we proceeded to Standgate-creek, and having ascertained the number of officers and men who had hitherto escaped an attack of the fever—viz. 41, they were directed to be immediately transferred to the Revenge, having first undergone the operation of ablution, and afterwards supplied with clean clothing and bedding. All those who had recovered from the fever, together with such number of convalescents as were in a state to be moved, were directed to be transferred to the Benbow, leaving only on board the steamer the sick, and such number of officers and men as the commander might think necessary; the Kroomen also to remain on board (not one of whom had been attacked with fever), excepting such number as might be thought necessary to assist on board the Revenge or Benbow. Since the 30th ult. three seamen have died, but we are happy to state that no fresh case of fever has occurred since the 29th ult., and that at present there are only two men confined to bed with the fever, and 11 convalescents, under the care of the two medical officers, a surgeon and assistant-surgeon, who have been on board ever since the Eclair sailed from Madeira; and we have a confident hope, from the present state of the crew and the measures adopted, that the progress of the disease is arrested. We have the honour to be, &c., W. Pym, Superintendent-General of Quarantine; James M. Arnott." Subsequent to this report three men have been taken ill, one of whom a marine artilleryman, died on Wednesday. Mr. Barnard, the assistant surgeon, has also been attacked, and is not expected to recover. During the week all the sick on board the Eclair have been transferred to the Worcester (frigate in ordinary), with the exception of Mr. Barnard, who is too ill to be removed. Lieut. Isaacson and the pilot, who were taken ill on board the Revenge, and are now on board the Worcester, are both, we learn, considered to be slight cases, and likely to do well. The rest are convalescent. No fresh cases on board the Revenge or Benbow have occurred. "The Eclair," says the Times, "was built at Woolwich, and christened the Infernal, but had her name changed to the Eclair on being appointed to be one of the royal squadron which accompanied Her Majesty to Scotland. Several persons had a horror of the name Infernal, and prognosticated no good to the vessel, and their superstitious fears have been awfully borne out to the subsequent fate of the greater portion of her officers and men. A letter was received on Tuesday at Woolwich from a young lad of the name of Campbell, who went out in her as assistant-clerk at the age of 17, and he now performs the duty of purser. The letter was nearly black, owing to the measures adopted with it to prevent infection." We have received, says the same paper, most disastrous accounts from the Coast of Africa relative to the prevalence of fever at certain parts of that station, and on board numerous vessels, by which vast numbers of their crews have been swept off. In one case 70 are reported to have fallen victims on board one vessel, out of a complement of 130. We decline, from prudential motives, giving the names of the vessels attacked, as the details would only serve to alarm the feelings of those who may have friends or relatives on that station. We much fear we shall in a few days have to report cases even more painful than that of the unfortunate Eclair." A few of the particulars have however transpired. The deaths of Lieut. Mottley, of the Wasp, and Mr. Fielon, purser of the Flying Fish, have been confirmed. The sickness in the Actæon and Ringdove is doubtful, but in the Prometheus steamer, Commander Hay, they are all well, as a letter from one of the lieutenants, dated from Ascension, August 16, states that the whole on board are quite healthy. The Growler has arrived at Woolwich all well, and was paid off on Wednesday.

Clerical Speculators in Railways.—The following letter has been sent by the Bishop of Exeter to those clergymen with cure of souls whose names appear in the lists of provisional committees of railroad companies:—"Bishopstowe, Oct. 2, 1845. Dear Sir,—Without the slightest intention of ascribing any improper purpose to you, I scruple not to call your attention to 1st and 2d Vic., c. 105, ss. 29, 30. I think that the words 'dealing for gain or profit,' in the 29th sec., taken in conjunction with the exemption in favour of benefit society, and fire or life assurance company, in the 30th sec., may be held to bring railroad companies within the provision of the statute, and therefore that the being members of provisional committees might possibly expose clergymen to the penalty of the statute.—I am, dear Sir, yours sincerely, H. Exeter."

Railway Stations in the City.—Mr. Lambert Jones on Thursday brought forward a petition in the Common Council, for conveying the northern part of Farringdon-street, and the site of the Fleet Prison, to the London and Birmingham Railway, for the erection of a grand central station; and the Lord Mayor Elect brought forward another for the conveyance of Farringdon-market to the Direct London and Manchester. Both petitions were referred to the improvement committee.

Great Seizure of Contraband Goods.—A very large seizure has been made by the Custom House officers within the last few days. In consequence of information that a vast number of Roman cameos for brooches, and a large quantity of French mosaic work, had been passed without payment of duty, the officers proceeded to the house of a person who called himself Beauvet David, in the City-road, a stone-merchant, and after a slight search found on the premises 1610 cameos, of the value of nearly 1400*l.*, and several enamelled portraits, mosaic buckles, &c., to the amount in value of 290*l.* They seized the goods for non-payment of duty, amounting to 323*l.* 10*s.* 1*d.* They afterwards proceeded to the house of a person named Marvi, whom they knew to be a constant passenger in steamers between Boulogne and London, who resides near Golden-square, where they made a seizure of 73 cameos, of the value, duty included, of 200*l.* 18*s.* Upon more particular search they also found in the possession of Marvi certain documents, the examination of which induced them to visit the house of a person named Creutzer, in Myddleton-street, Clerkenwell. They had not gone far in their search in this place before they found cameos which were considered, including duty, to be worth 1,864*l.* Upon the premises of David they found the boxes in which these articles had been smuggled over. The three parties stated that the goods had been delivered to them by an unknown agent. One of the officers, in rummaging Mr. Creutzer's private papers, pulled out a day-book, which had been kept only since February last, and in the middle of the book were entries of goods which Creutzer had received, to the amount of 214,000 francs, which had been brought into his custody without payment of duty, as was palpable from the fact that he could only produce bills and receipts for the payment of duty on goods to the value of 10*l.* After the officers had examined the books of Mr. Creutzer a little while, they perceived an entry which led them to the house of a very well known and dashing jewellery concern in Cornhill, where they laid their hands upon seventy-three cameos set in gold, of the value of about 200*l.* The officers are proceeding in other quarters, and their success will, it is believed, be enormous.

Arrival of an Arabian Prince.—Saêid Hilall Ben Saêid, the eldest son of the Imaum of Muscat, and heir apparent to the throne of that principality, has arrived in town from Arabia. On his Highness's reaching Southampton, Capt. Cogan, of the Indian Navy, was appointed to receive and conduct the Prince to London, where accommodation had been prepared for him, at 40, Brook-street. The Prince visits England for the purpose of getting information regarding our Government and institutions, and personally inspecting our works of arts and science, with the view to their gradual introduction amongst his subjects in Arabia and East Africa. While passing through Egypt, the Prince was splendidly entertained by the Pacha.

Portrait of Sir Thomas Gresham.—An interesting bequest has been recently made to the City Lecture-hall, all that now remains to us of the college founded by Sir Thomas Gresham. It is a full-length portrait, life-size, of the great English merchant, executed by a contemporary hand, and a fine specimen of the arts at that period. It represents Sir Thomas at the age of 26, and is therefore the most juvenile portrait of him we possess. He is attired in a plain black doublet, hose, and gown, with a flat cap upon his head, and a small lace collar, all indicative of the unpretending British trader. In one corner of the picture are the letters "A.G.," tied together by a knot, beneath which are the words "Love, serve, and obei," and under that, "T. G.," also tied by a knot; and upon the frame, which is of black wood, and of the same age as the picture, is the motto, "Dominus Mihi Adjutor, T. G." repeated on each side. The picture is painted on panel, and is appropriately placed in the institution which Sir T. Gresham founded.

Explosion of a Firework Manufactory.—On Thursday night, shortly before eight o'clock, a fire broke out at a firework manufactory, in Asylum-road, Westminster-road, by which the lives of several persons were endangered, and Madame Hengler, the proprietor, lost her life. It appears that the first explosion took place in Madame Hengler's room, and the rapidity of the flames cut off all escape by the stairs. Madame Hengler was very corpulent, and upwards of 80 years of age, and notwithstanding every effort made by the firemen, her great size rendered it impossible to extricate her by the window. The men who were attempting to save her by the ladder were forced to make good their retreat as the fireworks in the show-window underneath them were becoming ignited, and thus the poor creature perished. About five years since a lamentable loss of life occurred on the same premises from a firework explosion.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Oct 4:—West Districts, 126; Northern, 142; Central, 157; Eastern, 209; Southern, 222; Total, 856; males, 448; females, 408. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1244; males, 628; females, 616.

Provincial.

Abingdon.—This is the season of agricultural meetings, and the papers are full of reports of them from different parts of the country. The annual meeting of the Abingdon Association took place last week. At the close of the exhibition, the members dined together, the Earl of Abingdon, Lord Lieutenant of the county, in the chair, supported by a great many of the leading gentry and agriculturists of Berks. In returning thanks for the "Members for the County,"

Mr. Pusey, M.P., said, "That was a farmers' meeting, and he felt but one alloy respecting it—that the gentlemen present were practical farmers, and he was but an experimental one. One thing, however, he had improved in, which was rising in the morning. He did not pretend to grow corn, although it was true he knew something about roots. It was of no use boring them about artificial manures, sulphuric acid, and other substances; nor was it of any avail to endeavour to learn farming by books. They might as well try to learn navigation or to dance the polka by books. The only way was by practice and a mutual interchange of opinion. Farmers should visit each other, and point out each other's faults, and endeavour to find the right way to amend them. He was now trying a few experiments in chemical manures, and should be delighted to see any of the agriculturists present at Pusey to inspect his system.—Mr. Duffield proposed the health of their Chairman as the President of the Association: and whilst congratulating him on his return to health, thanked his Lordship most sincerely for using the first moments it afforded him to preside on that day.—The Noble Earl acknowledged the toast, and said that he felt happy to accede to the request that he should preside. He had very much enjoyed the day, and had much satisfaction in having taken luncheon in the same house with a tenant whose family had occupied the same farm for two hundred years. His Lordship said that at all times he should be ready to lend his assistance for the support of agriculture.

Arundel.—The annual exhibition of sheep and ploughing-match of the Arundel and Bramber Association was held on Thursday week, on Arundel-park Farm, and afterwards the members of the association dined together in this town. The Duke of Norfolk presided, and in acknowledging the toast of his health, said:

"He trusted that his conduct towards his tenantry would always be such as to deserve their applause and approbation. He was aware, and he thought it proper to state it, and he stated it fearlessly, that since he had come into possession of this property, he brought forward rules, and desired his tenantry to improve their farms in certain ways. Now, that was not owing to them, but to the negligence of those who had had the superintendence of this property. He asked of no one more than was asked of the tenants of other great estates, and he should require it of them. He prided himself on those farms where there was a neat hedgerow. If they went into Norfolk and Suffolk they saw every farm had neat hedgerows, but that was completely neglected in this part of the country. He was sure that every tenant of his, or of any other person, if they had been recommended to keep up their fences, would have done it, but now he was under the disagreeable necessity of begging them to do it. Indeed, it was a disgrace to them all, to them and to him, and those who looked after them, that the fences were not in a very good condition. Of those who came into this county, who did not say what a dreadful state their fences were in? He thought it necessary to state that. He had been something of a farmer all his life, and he was vain enough to suppose that he knew a little about farming, and it gave him the greatest pleasure when he rode over a man's farm and saw that he really cultivated it as he ought to do, and kept his fences neat. He was aware that times had not been so good for farmers for the last two or three years, but they were now looking up. They would remember that this time last year he proposed a premium of 5*l.* to the farmer who employed the greatest number of labourers. That he did that they might have a greater number of labourers employed, and then he proposed another for the best cultivated farm, and several of his friends were kind enough to make up the sum of 50*l.* for that also. (His grace then read the award which adjudged the prize for the best cultivated farm to Mr. Drewitt, of Peppering, and the judges recommended that the prize for employing the greatest number of farm labourers should be divided between Mr. Drewitt, and Mr. Bushby. For the first-mentioned premium there were only two candidates, and for the latter three or four.) He did not very often see Mr. Drewitt's farm, and he was not capable of saying how his men drilled, but he was capable of saying how the men drilled generally in this county. Instead of its being what it was in Cambridgeshire and Lincolnshire, where the great farms were, and where the corn, when it came up, looked as if it were ruled, here it was in festoons. He proposed to give two prizes to the best drillers, and he thought they should be put with the ploughmen. Their first prize for the ploughmen was 2*l.* 10*s.*, and for the second 2*l.*, and he proposed that for drilling it should be the same. He suggested that the judges should view the crops in April, when the barley was up and the corn not too high, as he thought it fair that they should take the autumn and spring sowing into consideration. The other premiums that he proposed to give were for thatching and rick-making. He did not know how their rick-making was done, but his was shockingly ill. This was done in the Rape of Bramber ever since the association was established, and there the rick-making and thatching was done much better. He did not wish to offend anybody, but in this part of the country the ricks were ill built and ill thatched. And as this rick prize in Bramber had done so much good, he trusted that their men were equally well inclined, and that they would have as good rick-making and thatching here as there. Within the last few weeks, while the ricks had been making, the farmers had been put to great inconvenience by men who could thatch giving themselves great airs, and asking for more money or going to others. Now that would cease as soon as they got more thatchers; therefore he proposed to give four premiums, two for thatching and two for rick-making, the same as in the Rape of Bramber. There would be 2*l.* for the best wheat-rick, and for the second, 1*l.*; and, also, for the best thatcher, 2*l.*, and the second premium, 1*l.* That they could settle in committee.—Sir H. D. Goring suggested that the premiums should be confined to the labourers on the farms.—The Duke of Norfolk. Yes; he thought that was quite right, and he thought it right, also, that premiums should not be given to men who went about with drills, but that farmers who had drills should employ their own men to do it. Every master who wished that his men should become scientific in their vocations should have a drill of his own, and let his men drill, and perhaps that would be the means of bringing the drill system more into fashion than what it already was. [Twenty or thirty labourers, to whom prizes had been awarded, were here introduced into the room, and stood in line along the room.] The Duke of Norfolk then addressed the labourers on the subject of the disease in Potatoes, recommending them to pick out the bad ones and salt the remainder, and put them away till after Christmas, looking at them every fortnight to pick out the bad ones. To enable them to keep the Potatoes, he proposed to sell them Turnips, and he recommended his tenants to do the same. An acre of Turnips, yielding 320 bushels at 4*d.* per bushel would be 5*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, and an acre of Swedes, also yielding 320 bushels at 6*d.*, would be 8*l.*, so that the farmers could sell at that price without loss. It had been stated that these bad Potatoes poisoned the pigs. Now, he wanted to try that, and he put up two pigs. One he fed upon as bad Potatoes as he could find, raw, and the other upon as bad, but they were cooked. They had this food ten days. The one that had the Potatoes raw was affected in his bowels, but he got over it, and then he thought piggy should have some better food, and he gave him some Barley-meal. The other that had his Potatoes steamed ated nothing.—Lord Edward Howard proposed "The health of Sir H. Dent Goring."—Sir H. D. Goring acknowledged the compliment, and said he was sorry to find that the premium of 5*l.*, to which he contributed, for the best cultivated farm, had not more competitors. He hoped, and he thought that better times for the farmers were coming, especially with regard to the sheep farmers—the southdown farmers. He thought that both for their wool and their sheep higher prices would be obtained; and he was of this opinion from seeing what was going on in the country, from the vast sums of money which were being spent on railroads, from the increased demand which there must be for meat, and from the flourishing state of the manufacturers. If they looked to the papers they would see that it seemed to go on week after week in the same flourishing state. On the 13th August, at Hull, the blue flag was hoisted, to signify that the ports were full, and no more vessels could enter. The wharfs, the warehouses, and quays were the scene of the greatest activity and bustle, and, in fact, all hands were employed to the utmost extent that they could be. It would be in the recollection of some of the farmers present, that he told them they were entitled this year to an advance of 3*d.* in the pound on their wool. He still adhered to that, and he was convinced that but for a combination among the English wool buyers they would have obtained it. He heard, on good authority, that in the north of Germany, instead of being exporters of wool, they were likely in the course of a year or two to become importers of Australian wool. Therefore everything must go to benefit the flock farmer and the grower of wool. Several other toasts were drunk in the course of the evening.

Andover.—This town is again in a commotion, in consequence of the discovery that Mr. Price, the new master, placed in the workhouse by the Poor-law Commissioners, is the same person who was dismissed a few years since from the workhouse at Oxford, on charges somewhat similar to those lately brought against Mr. M'Dougal. When this fact was first made known to the inhabitants by the Times newspaper, which investigated the circumstances, they were incredulous of its truth; but subsequent confirmatory statements, and the admission of the fact by Mr. Price himself before the board, on Saturday last, has put it beyond doubt, and the town is in a perfect ferment at the conduct of the Poor-law Commissioners, and if they persist in enforcing Price upon the ratepayers, it is impossible to foretell what the consequences may be. Mr. M'Dougal, although no longer officially connected with the establishment, is daily at the workhouse.

Appleby.—The floods which prevailed generally in the north of England at the close of last week, were felt severely in Cumberland and Westmoreland. On Thursday evening tremendous rain began to fall, and from midnight it poured down in perfect torrents, and continued all that night, all day on Friday, and the greater part of Saturday. The consequence was, that all the rivers and streams were swollen and overflowed. More terrific floods have not been known in these counties for many years, and never at this period of the season. The rivers Eden, Lowther, Eamont, Lune, and Petteril, overflowed their banks, causing great devastation, and an immense loss of property. At Templesowerby, Westmoreland, on the estate of R. Tinkler, Esq., of Eden Grove, upwards of 280 stooks of corn were swept down the stream with the greatest impetuosity, all attempts to save any part of it being of no avail. At Appleby, the huge centres and scaffold, erected for the purpose of repairing the large bridge which spans the Eden, were swept down the stream on Friday morning; and although numbers of workmen were soon at the river's side, endeavouring to land the large logs of timber, yet by far the greater portion were taken down by the flood, and have not been heard of since. This accident will retard the workings going on at this bridge, for a considerable time. On the Lune, near Borrow Bridge, ten massive centres, on which were erected a stage, for the purpose of building a bridge on the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway, were entirely swept away, causing great loss to the sub-contractors of the works at that bridge. Messrs. Bird and Ralph had about 100 stooks of corn washed away by the overflowing of the Petteril, in the vicinity of Penrith, the greater part of which they succeeded in recovering far down the stream in a sad condition. Large quantities of scaffolding and other materials were swept away, on the rivers Eamont and Lowther, from the working of the monster bridges at Yew's Cragg and Yanwath Hall, on the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway. Numerous other accidents and loss of property, in various other districts of Cumberland and Westmoreland, have taken place. The corn crops, a great portion of which in many districts of these counties still remain uncut, are at present in a most deplorable condition, being all laid flat on the ground. The stooks in the fields are soaked through, and great numbers of them lying scattered on the ground, and amongst the water. On Friday and Saturday last the workings on the Lancaster and Carlisle railway were put a stop to, the workmen not being able to stand out, so heavy and continued were the torrents of rain. Nearly all the corn-mills on the rivers were stopped by the flood. The rain did not cease till Saturday night, but on Sunday the weather was fine, but the flood had not materially abated.

Hounslow.—On Saturday the magistrates at Hounslow, after hearing evidence on both sides, and being satisfied that Quartermaster Tarleton is out of danger, admitted Lieut. Kerwan to bail, himself in 500*l.*, and two sureties in 250*l.* each, for his appearance at that court on that day fortnight further to answer the charge. Lieut.-Colonel Daly, the commanding officer of the regiment, and Capt. Gordon Cumming, of the same regiment, were his sureties.

Hungerford.—Contemporaneously almost with the inquiry at Andover into the conduct of the master of the workhouse there, Mr. Parker was engaged in prosecuting charges against the master of the Hungerford Union. But the two cases appear to differ exceedingly, the one being accused of starving and ill-treating the paupers, and the other of over feeding them and treating them with too much kindness. The charges made against Mr. Ayres, of Hungerford, were:—1. As to the consumption of food by the paupers. 2. The manner in which the books have been kept. 3. Who attends at the hours of meals; and whether or not are the paupers' clothes restored to them upon leaving the house.—The guardians, to the number of 21, have fully examined the case, 14 of them reported their satisfaction at the master's conduct; but the Commissioners decided that he should be discharged upon the first charge—of giving the poor more than their daily allowance, and of thus giving away to the paupers the property of the union, which did not belong to him. Mr. Parker, in announcing this decision, stated that no charge of dishonesty was proved against the master, and that his dismissal was in consequence of his not conforming to the dietary regulations.

Liverpool.—The 15th annual meeting of the Liverpool Agricultural Society took place last week, but owing to the unfavourable state of the weather, the attendance was not so numerous as on former occasions. The bad state of the ground, which in many places was a complete puddle, prevented any minute examination. The dinner, too, in consequence of the very unfavourable state of the weather, was by no means so well attended as on former occasions, the number being under 200. The chair was occupied by Lord Stanley, and at the principal table were Lord Lilford, Mr. Blackburne, M.P., Mr. Taylor, Mr. Foster, and other gentlemen connected with the district. After the usual loyal toasts, Lord Stanley proposed "Prosperity to the Liverpool Agricultural Society." He believed it would not be deemed inconsistent with a very sincere desire to promote the welfare of that society, and the important objects for which its maintenance was most to be desired, if he should say that he trusted this would be the last occasion on which he should have the opportunity of addressing the members of the Liverpool Agricultural Society as a separate body. He had hoped that time, he still hoped that before that time next year, an union might be effected between this and the Manchester Society, which occupied the south-eastern part of this county, and a great portion of the northern part of the adjoining county of Chester. He had hoped that that union would have already taken place, and he still trusted that it would take place within a short period, because he was satisfied that such an union would be for the mutual benefit of both societies, and tend to extend more widely the benefits derived from such societies, for the extension of the sphere of influence of these societies materially tended to promote the merit of the competition raised within them. He did not by this at all mean to deprecate the establishment of small local societies, confined within a very limited sphere; on the contrary, he thought they were calculated to do infinite good. He rejoiced to see them springing up in every direction, in every part of the country. After speaking of the affairs of the society, the noble lord went on. He believed he might also congratulate them—though he must confess he was one of the defaulters, and not in the show-yard, and therefore could not speak of the show from his own individual knowledge—yet he believed he might safely congratulate them on the exhibition that day. He believed that among the cattle some very superior animals were exhibited, very far superior to most of those exhibited in former years; that the pigs of the show yard continued to be marked by the same degree of excellence, and that there were exhibited some valuable implements of husbandry, a department to which he was particularly desirous to see the attention of the farmers of this country directed. But it was not on the thriving position of the society—it was not only the show brought together that day, that they were about to look at as resulting from the labours of this society, it was in the general marked gratifying improvement which had taken place in agriculture within the memory of almost all he saw around him. He was quite certain that within the time to which he could himself look back, and since the commencement of that society, there had been an improvement in the stock, in the farms, and in every description of agriculture in that neighbourhood, which gave the greatest satisfaction for the past, and which gave the greatest hope and confidence for the future. He would not say that there existed that prejudice against the use of implements which he had heard related by a gentleman from the midland counties, who presented one of his farmers with a couple of iron ploughs, and having left the country for two years, returned and was surprised to find not only that the number of iron ploughs was not increased, but that no use was made of those he had given to the tenant. The answer he received on inquiring the cause of this was, "Why you see we have a notion in this country that iron ploughs breeds weeds." (Great laughter.) He would not say anything so absurd as this existed in this county, but he should like to see a considerable increase of iron ploughs. He should like to see them superseding the lumbering wood ploughs still too prevalent. He should like to see two horses abreast doing the work of three or four in a straight line. He could only put down as one of these prejudices the notion that one horse working in a furrow, must necessarily poach the land. He apprehended the natural remedy would be to drain the land; that would be found a more advantageous remedy than making four or five horses do the work of three. This was one of the prejudices of this country. He recollected another. He was certain he was speaking within compass when he said that within 15 years any one here would have been told that the land in this neighbourhood would not grow Turnips. That was superseded by the test of experience. Mr. Skirving had done something to undeceive them on that point, and the practical experience of every farmer would prove, that not only could they grow Turnips, but that there were few countries in the world that could grow better; and very many farmers, he thought, would find that they had not made a bad exchange by sowing their land with Turnips instead of Potatoes. Again, referring to the improved state of agriculture, he said he saw draining going on in every direction on the best and most scientific principles. He saw, with satisfaction, landlord and tenant co-operating together to improve the agriculture of this country; and unless the landlords did so co-operate and combine, he was satisfied it was not reasonable to expect improvement from the farming and agricultural population of the country. When landlords did come forward and lend their assistance, they had a right to expect that the tenants should go hand in hand with them. They had a right to expect that assistance given by the landlord was not an excuse for slovenly conduct to the farmers. He had seen, and did see every day, great and manifold improvements, but that was not a ground for relaxing their exertions. Their motto should be, "To think nothing done while aught remains to do." And very few farmers in that or any other country could say honestly and conscientiously that nothing remained to do in the way of labour on their farms. He did think they had a right to expect that they should not see—much as a sportsman he should like to see them—those high stalked stubbles, offering an excellent cover for game, but suggesting to the agriculturist a very lamentable condition of farming, and suggesting, if he might be allowed to say to the landlord, a very natural conclusion that the farmer must be very low rented indeed who could afford to grow so large a crop of weeds. He trusted, as they had begun, so they would go on hand in hand. That they should promote agriculture, and endeavour by all their power—by all the applications of science, in which he did not expect the farmers to take the lead, but he did expect the farmers would not shut their eyes when the advantages were demonstrated to them. The country had a right to expect it from them, and they must remember that as year after year passed by, they had an increase of 300,000 mouths to feed beyond the population of the preceding year, and that on their exertions the supply for these 300,000 mouths mainly depended. He believed himself, not that the capacities of the soil were infinite, but that the productive capacities of the soil were infinitely larger than most people imagined: and he believed it was not only capable of providing for the existing population; but with the application of science, of providing for a much larger and increasing population. It was their duty and their advantage to find the means of providing for that population, and in the hope that that and other similar societies would be the means of exciting the landlord and tenant to fresh exertions and renewed applications of capital, science, and skill. It was with such anticipations, such hopes, that he proposed to them—whether maintaining its present position or united with another body, and thereby extending its advantages—"Prosperity to the Liverpool Agricultural Society," which was drunk with much enthusiasm.

Newcastle.—The local papers are filled with details of the serious disasters caused by floods last week in the vale of the Tyne. The wheat-sheaves of 50 acres of land belonging to Mr. Hall, farmer, of Newburn, were carried away by the current, and on Friday evening the river in many places was completely covered with agricultural produce and floating timber. The people along the banks of the Tyne have got out an immense quantity of grain, which, of course, is entirely spoiled. The loss and damage to shipping in the harbour has been very considerable. Several ships were driven from their moorings, and scarcely a vessel in the harbour escaped without damage. At one time the Tyne bridge was in great peril. On Monday the floods had abated, but there was still a great quantity of fresh water coming down from the hills and high lands in the west.

Oxford.—Mr. J. D. Dalgairns, M.A., of Exeter College, who has been some time resident with Mr. Newman, at Littlemore, has made his formal submission to the Roman Catholic Church. On the other hand it is fully expected that several of the late converts will seek a return to the Church of England. The Morning Post states that the Rev. Charles Seager deplores his secession, and yearns for participation in ministerial duties, from which, as a married man, he is debarred in the Church of Rome. Mr. Capes, also, went over too suddenly, and will return like Mr. Sibthorp, who is now resident near Winchester, anxious to resume active ministerial functions.—A convocation was holden on Wednesday for the purpose of electing a vice-chancellor for the ensuing year. After the usual letter from the chancellor, re-nominating the warden of Wadham College, had been read, the Rev. C. P. Eden, M.A., fellow of Oriel, immediately called out "non placet," but the vice-chancellor would not consent to a scrutiny, and the business of convocation was proceeded with. After the usual formalities had been gone through, Dr. Symons was, for the second time, duly installed in the office of vice-chancellor. At the same time the following pro-vice-chancellors were appointed, viz., the Rev. Dr. Hawkins, provost of Oriel College; the Rev. Dr. Wynter, president of St. John's; the Rev. Dr. Radford, rector of Lincoln; the Rev. Dr. Plumptre, master of University—when the vice chancellor dissolved the convocation. It is rumoured that the non placet party intend entering a protest against the whole of the proceedings. The convocation, owing to the colleges not having yet met, was a thin one, very few more than 30 members being present.

Poole.—Sir John Guest, Bart., has lately purchased the splendid mansion and extensive estate of Canford, in Dorsetshire, from Lord de Mauley (son of the Earl of Besborough), for 300,000*l.* This property is between Wimborne and Poole, and embraces some of the outskirts of the latter town. Canford was inhabited for one year by the Queen Dowager.

Portsmouth.—Admiral Sir Charles Ogle, Bart., appointed to the command in chief at this port, vice Sir Charles Rowley, who has resigned from ill health, hoisted his flag (blue at the main), last week on board the Excellent gunnery-ship (no other vessel being available), when it was saluted with 17 guns from the Formidable and Victory.—The Superb, 80, Capt. Corry, one of the Experimental Squadron, was docked last week, all her copper entirely stripped off, and her bottom partially recaulked, not for any leakage, or for any ostensible cause, as her bottom was very sound and clean, as was her copper. She has been entirely new-coppered at an expense of upwards of 1000*l.*, and has sailed to rejoin the squadron. One circumstance, however, connected with this ship, reflects the highest credit upon the artizans employed upon her; the entire process of stripping the copper off the bottom, recaulking, and re-coppering the vessel with new metal, only occupied 18 hours.—Her Majesty has been pleased to extend her royal mercy towards the seaman, named George White, of the Amazon, sentenced to death by court-martial at Malta, for mutinous words to the Hon. Mr. Dean, and also for enticing other seamen to desert. Her Majesty, on account of the strong recommendation of the court, has commuted the sentence to transportation for life.

Slough.—Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, honoured the establishment of Mr. Brown, Nurseryman, with a visit on Tuesday, to inspect a scarce collection of pines; from amongst them her Majesty and the Prince selected several of the rarer kinds, intending, we believe, to plant them in the grounds of Osborne-house. Planting trees of this genus has become a fashionable and patriotic amusement; many of them grow in their native forest to an extraordinary height; some of Pinus Lambertiana are met with on the coast of America 200 ft., and a specimen of Abies Douglasii, at Dropmore, the seat of Lady Grenville, has reached 30 ft. in 17 years.—Morning Chronicle.

Sunderland.—The fourth annual meeting of the Durham Agricultural Association took place in this town on the 26th ult. The show took place in the park attached to the rectory, Bishopwearmouth, which was granted for the occasion by the Hon. and Rev. Dr. Wellesley; the entries were not so numerous as at the preceding exhibitions at Durham, Darlington, or Stockton, but some of the animals shown were extremely fine in quality. At the close of the show the members dined together in the Hall of the Athenæum. Upwards of 170 sat down to dinner. In the absence of Mr. Bowes, M.P., the President of the Society, the chair was taken by J. Fawcett, Esq., of Durham. On the toast of the Army and Navy,

The Earl of Hardwicke addressed the meeting at some length. After referring to the good done by such societies, and the proof they afforded of the union of the people to attain a common good, the noble Earl adverted to the general subject of agriculture. He differed, he said, from those who would rapidly urge forward the introduction of philosophical experiments and chemical science; if they looked through the county of Durham they would find that as yet the simple duties of an agriculturist were unfulfilled. They had not yet raised the quantity of food which they could raise by the use of the dung-cart and the plough; and therefore before they talked about chemical applications it would be better if they thoroughly cleaned, drained, and manured their land. It was utterly impossible that the land could be improved whilst water was allowed to remain upon it; drainage by wood, stones, or tiles, was of the first importance, and second to that was the application of the plough in a proper manner. There was hardly one field in ten ploughed as it should be; and he saw straw thrown down in many farmyards, but there was not a sufficient quantity of stock to convert the straw into good manure. He advised no farmer who had not carried through the first rudiments of agriculture to think of experimentalising in chemical science. To such men, money and time would be thus thrown away. He entreated them to remember that in 40 years the population of the country would be doubled, and it behoved the farmers of Durham to consider whether they could then feed the county, and the farmers of England to consider whether they could feed the country. If they could do so, well and good, but it is a subject of grave consideration, and deserved their most serious attention. He had no doubt that if they could raise sufficient capital to cultivate the land in a proper manner, double the produce could be raised, and that under sufficiently protective laws they would have the means of meeting the rapid increase of population of which he had spoken. —The Hon. H. T. Liddell proposed "Success to the Durham Agricultural Society." After a few remarks on the Society, he said he could not sit down without making a few observations on a subject in which he had been in some degree forestalled by his noble relative (the Earl of Hardwicke), who had spoken so much to their satisfaction, and who was himself a practical agriculturist, and a distinguished member of the Royal Agricultural Society. His noble friend had, with great truth and judgment, shown that it was in vain to look for benefit to be derived from modern improvement and the discoveries of science unless, in the first place, they applied themselves to what might be termed the rudimental points of agriculture. The land must be laid dry before they attempted to apply to it the aids of manure. Much remained to be done in many portions of this county. No one could take the short journey from Sunderland to Gateshead without seeing on both sides of the railway fields flooded with water which ought to be carried off by drains; and if ever there was one year which more than another showed the advantages of draining to the most unobservant eye, and in which the spirit and enterprise of the farmer who has bestowed his capital judiciously on his land will be recompensed, this is the year. We have had in the northern counties a cold and backward summer; yet in the north of Northumberland, and particularly in these luxuriant districts on the other side of the Tweed, blessed by a fertile soil, but still more by an industrious and wealthy tenantry, and landlords who have devoted their attention to the improvement of their land, he had never seen such magnificent crops, and which, by the blessing of God, were now almost entirely housed in the garners of the growers. Why, 30 years ago, before these cold and wet lands were properly drained, cultivated, and manured, the crops would have been drowned in the soil. It became the duty of all who are interested in the land, but particularly the landowners, to give their attention to these points, and to promote by every possible means agricultural improvements, that production may keep pace with that rapid increase of population of which his noble relative had spoken. He had brought before their notice the magnificent crops to be seen in situations where the land had been properly drained and cultivated; he held up the growers of these crops as examples for the farmers of Durham to follow; he was sure they had the inclination—he doubted not that they had the skill and industry—he hoped they had the means to benefit by it; so that by those exertions not only themselves, but the whole population of this mighty country might be benefited, and so that they might more and more keep pace with the exigencies of a greatly increasing population.—Mr. Spearman, in reply to his health, said he was not sorry to have the opportunity of saying a word or two on a subject which had been alluded to by the noble lord and the hon. member for North Durham, viz., the application of capital to farming and draining. This was a subject which could not be too frequently or fully discussed. He was not going to detain them by enlarging on the advantages of draining—on this they were all agreed; nor on the mode in which this should be done, the direction of the drains, their distance apart, and the manner in which they should be laid; but there yet remained a most important question as regarded draining, and that is, by whom shall the draining be done? This was a question of pith and moment; but they had not yet come to just and precise notions as to the party by whom the draining should be done. Many persons were disposed to say that if the farmer had security of his holding he was the proper party by whom the draining should be done—that it is the business of the farmer, and not the landowner—and that if the farmer had not capital himself he would know where to get it, and would apply it more judiciously and more to the advantage of himself, and therefore to the community, than his landlord. Give the farmer leases, said these individuals, and so said he. He was a supporter of long leases, but he was also a firm, a sincere farmer's friend, and, therefore, under present circumstances—in the present agricultural relation of the country—he did not and would not advise any farmer to take a long lease on a fixed money rent. It had been properly said that the question of the Corn-laws was one which they could not there discuss, but it was a question which they could not blink—it exists as a great fact, and so long as uncertainty remains, he could not recommend the farmer to take a lease on a fixed money rental.—After some complimentary toasts the meeting broke up.

Waltham.—On Friday week a grand dinner took place at Waltham, on occasion of the annual exhibition of stock and implements of the Waltham Agricultural Association. The show of stock and implements was very good; but for so large an agricultural district, was not equal to the expectation of many of the visitors. The dinner was presided over by the Duke of Rutland, who was supported by Lord Alford, M.P., the Hon. H. W. Wilson, Mr. Smith, of Deanston, Rev. G. E. Gillett, W. A. Pochin, Esq., Lord Charles Manners, M.P., Colonel Wyndham, W. F. N. Norton, Esq., George Norman, Esq., &c. The Duke of Rutland in proposing the toast of the day, "Prosperity to the Association," said—

"It had always adhered to the rules on which it was founded, and, having kept itself to the object it seeks to accomplish, has conferred upon the country at large the greatest possible benefits. These objects are to increase the sustenance of the population, and to promote the interests and welfare of those engaged in the cultivation of the soil. To accomplish this, it brings together in harmonious concert, on occasions like the present, the landlords and occupiers of land, and though "last, not least" in importance, the labourer. Thus we prove that though their interests may be respective they are not separate, but one. In this county we are not likely to decry manufacturers, for there is in it a large and important body of men who have shown themselves loyal and good subjects while suffering great privations. I mean the frame-work-knitters. We, then, are not likely to seek to depreciate manufacturers, but there are those who would divide them into two separate interests. To me it appears more correct that they should be bosom friends. I have sometimes thought that agriculturists and manufacturers should be to each other as the right and left arm are to the human body. Now, some persons may think it would be better to part with the left than the right arm; but I can assure you, I can conceive no greater calamity than to lose either. They may be considered, too, as bearing the same respect to each other as the necessaries to the luxuries of life, or its superfluities. The most important subject, however, for our consideration at the present time, is the harvest of the kingdom. Last year at this time, I had the pleasure of congratulating you all upon the state of the harvest; but it is not in my power to do as much now, at least to the same extent. There are some circumstances which I have to state which are very satisfactory and consolatory. You must all remember that the harvest of last year was one of the most productive we were ever blessed with; and you will perceive as the new corn this year did not come into the market until several weeks later than usual, the harvest of 1844 must have supplied the country for at least 13 months. Last Monday the remains of that crop were 1,200,000 quarters, to which must be added between 600,000 and 700,000 quarters of bonded corn. It will also be seen that the harvest of 1845, supposing the harvest of 1846 to take place about the usual time, will only have to supply the population for 11 months. Last year there was almost enough corn produced to supply the wants of the country without any aid from abroad, or at least very trifling help, as compared with former years. I have here a return of the imports from the 5th January to the 5th August, 1845; and a similar return for the same period of last year:—Quarters of wheat imported from Canada in 1844, 88,832; from other places, 847,324; total, 936,156. From Canada in 1845, 56,583; other places, 198,974; total, 255,557. Another return up to the 5th September, or for eight months, made the amount of foreign corn imported 229,450; colonial about 60,000. The average prices this year have been from 45s. to 48s., but last year they averaged 53s. 3d.; so that from calculation on his own farm, he found that he was more in pocket from low prices than high. The low price of corn, he was glad to say, arose from the abundance of the crop; he should, therefore, never quarrel with low prices when they arose from abundance of corn of home growth. Protection societies have been formed (of which he felt an honour to be a member) for the purpose of upholding protection to not less than the present amount. To the principle he was devotedly attached, and he should earnestly endeavour to support it. His Grace said, that although the number of cattle imported had greatly increased, the number last year did not much exceed an average week's consumption at Smithfield, and having made some calculations respecting the prices of meat, taken from the returns of the Grantham union, he had come to the conclusion, that the importation of foreign cattle had been productive of benefit; seeing that meat might otherwise have been beyond the reach of the poor man. He was sorry to have detained the meeting so long, but before he concluded, he begged to inquire whether any of them had seen anything of the "golden pleasure," or the "golden delight?" The meeting having answered in the negative, his Grace said it is a new introduction, and will obviate the necessity for going abroad for oil-cake. I have a letter from an excellent farmer (Lord Howe), who gives me the best accounts of it. The land must be well ploughed and harrowed, so as to get the soil very fine, as if for flax or barley. It is then to be drilled at the rate of 10 lbs. per acre, and the plant having been cut when it assumed a rich golden colour. It succeeds on any, but especially on light land. I have obtained some seed and intend to try it; in fact, I look upon my farm as a sort of experimental one. If I succeed, then the benefit of my experience is at the service of my neighbours, and if I fail I wish alone to be at the expense. His Grace then gave "Prosperity to the Waltham Agricultural Association." The next toast which the Duke proposed was "The Health of Mr. Smith, of Deanston," who, he considered, was one of the greatest benefactors to agriculturists living. Paradoxical as it seemed, though Mr. Smith was one of the best friends the farmer possessed, he was practically aiding the designs of the Anti-Corn-law League. If the improvements he suggested were carried out the corn-law would die a natural death. When the land produced as much corn as was required for the home consumption, he (the Duke) would give up the corn-laws. With respect to draining, they might send to London for bone-dust—to Holland for rape; they might load their land with farmyard manure, which, by the by, he thought was the best of all manures; but it would be of no avail till the land was quite dry. Mr. Smith's health was drunk with hearty cheers. —Mr. Smith, in returning thanks, said he felt proud in having received an invitation to be a guest at Belvoir Castle, and nothing had given him greater pleasure in his life than to hear the sentiments which had fallen from the lips of his Grace (the Duke of Rutland). He quite coincided with the remark upon the corn-laws, being confident if the land be properly drained and cultivated, England need not fear competition with any part of the world.

Windsor.—A vacancy has occurred among the naval Knights of Windsor by the death of Lieut. Charles Carter, the Governor, who died at Travers College last week, in his 66th year. Lieut. Carter was elected to the foundation in 1824, and succeeded to the Governorship as senior officer of the foundation on the death of Lieut. Jones in 1841. Lieut. Carter was interred in the new cemetery of St. George's Chapel on Monday. The patronage is in the gift of her Majesty, and according to the statute, when a vacancy occurs, the Commissioners of the Navy choose three Lieutenants from the list of candidates, out of which the Admiralty selects two, and her Majesty nominates one of them. The number of candidates for the vacant appointment exceeds 100.

Worcester.—So great is the scarcity of agricultural labourers in the Worcester district, that on Saturday last the city crier was engaged in perambulating the streets, alleys, and courts of this city, announcing where employment might be had for hop-pickers, &c. With the drain upon the labour market consequent upon the railways about to be laid down in the country next year, says a local paper, labour will be exceedingly valuable, if it be not scarce enough to retard or prevent the gathering of the fruits of the earth.

Railways.

The results of a few more meetings remain to be added to those we have noticed in our recent impressions. The Durham and Sunderland Company have declared a dividend at the rate of 10s. per share, amounting to 2400*l.* The clear profits of working were only 777*l.*, but with funds in hand, and the prospect of a speedy improvement in the traffic of the line, the shareholders assented to this payment.—At the Glasgow, Barrhead, and Neilston meeting the progress of the line was spoken of in terms of much encouragement. The directors have entered into three very favourable agreements—one with Messrs. Brassey, Mackenzie, and Stephenson, for the execution of the whole of their works within 18 months after obtaining possession of the land, and at a price considerably within the estimate; one with the Glasgow and Greenock, whereby that company are to supply carriages and engines and to work their line; and one with the Glasgow, Kilmarnock, and Ardrossan, entitling the latter to the use of the Barrhead line on payment of toll.—The inhabitants of Lynn adopted by a majority of five a resolution in favour of the South Coast Junction, non-inhabitants not being allowed to vote. The meeting was a stormy affair, and occupied several hours.—A meeting in favour of the Lynn, Wisbeach, and Peterborough has also been held at Lynn. It was stated that the object of the company was to form a communication between the ports of Lynn and Wisbeach and the manufacturing and midland counties, by means of a direct line from Lynn, through Wisbeach, to Peterborough, thereby completing the line from the eastern coast of England to Northampton and to Lincoln, Birmingham, Manchester, and Liverpool. By the line, Lynn and Wisbeach would become to Birmingham and the midland counties what Liverpool is to Manchester, Lancashire, and the counties in the north. It would accommodate more than a million residents in Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, and Northamptonshire. No resolutions were, however, passed, as the meeting desired to hear a further description of merits before they gave their support.—At the Cork, Bandon, and Kinsale meeting it was stated that the surveys from Kinsale to the junction with the Cork and Bandon have been completed. The length of the junction line little exceeds 9 miles, making the distance between Kinsale and Cork about 21 miles, and from Kinsale to Bandon 17. The necessary excavations and embankments are so moderate, that the cost of construction will be under 7000*l.* per mile, and the opening of the line for public use may be expected in a very few months after the Cork and Bandon Railway, which is expected to be finished early next summer.—Amalgamation between the Liverpool and Bury, and Liverpool and Leeds is spoken of in the railway papers. —The Ayrshire, Barrhead, and Kilmarnock has agreed to join the Ardrossan lines.—It is stated that the East and West Yorkshire Junction have secured satisfactory terms of co-operation from the Great North of England and North Midland Companies in favour of this line.—The Leeds and Thirsk have also agreed to co-operate, and the two lines are to run into each other and have a joint station at Knaresborough. By these arrangements it is said the company will be placed on the direct lines to Whitby, Scarborough, and Hull.—Arrangements have been entered into by the Manchester, Liverpool, and Great North of England Union with the Newcastle, Durham, and Lancashire Company, by which the two have been amalgamated under the name of the Northumberland and Lancashire Junction. This amalgamation, it is said, has been effected with the view of obtaining the best practicable line for connecting Newcastle-upon-Tyne and the Durham coal-fields with Liverpool, Manchester, and the manufacturing districts of Lancashire.—A very important meeting of the corporation and inhabitants of Devizes took place on Tuesday, convened by the mayor (pursuant to a numerously signed requisition) for the purpose of giving consideration to the subject of railway communication. The Mayor of Devizes took the chair, and the hall was densely crowded by the most respectable inhabitants. Admiral Dundas first addressed the meeting on behalf of the London, Newbury, and Bath; Mr. C. Bernard on behalf of the London, Devizes, and Bridgwater; Mr. Moreton on behalf of the Bath and Wells; Rev. E. Williams on behalf of the London, Bristol, and South Wales; Mr. Edwin James for the South and Midlands; and others on behalf of the Southern Counties Union, Bristol, Bath, and Dover; Direct Western; Dover and Bristol; and Rugby, Swindon, and Weymouth. Several gentlemen proposed resolutions, and ultimately the meeting decided in favour of the three following lines:—London, Newbury, and Bath Direct; London, Devizes, and Bridgwater; and South and Midlands Junction.—Proceedings have been adopted within the last few days by the shareholders in the Eastern Counties Railway (representing 50,000 shares), calling upon Mr. Hudson to assume the management of their line. In consequence of this the directors have issued a circular to the proprietary stating that several members of the present Board are about to resign. They set forth that one has actually retired, and that Mr. Fisher, the banker, of Cambridge, has taken his seat at the Board. The directors likewise announce that they have opened a negotiation with Mr. Hudson and Mr. Waddington, with the hope of inducing those gentlemen to enter the direction, and that other changes are in contemplation.—It has been suggested that the amount of subscriptions for the Hudson Testimonial should be invested in founding almshouses, to be called "The Hudson Almshouses" for the widows and children of those who may lose their lives in the service of railways, or by accident upon them.—A meeting of the directors of the Manchester and Southampton Company, and a committee of the shareholders of the Andover Canal, took place last week, when the company agreed to purchase the canal from Redbridge to Andover at the sum of 30,000*l.*, of which 10,000*l.* part thereof, is to be paid as a deposit to the canal company in January next. This arrangement, if carried into effect, will be of advantage to the shareholders in the canal, as hitherto the original shares have been considered of little value, but for which they will then realise nearly 40*l.* It will also increase the value of the railway shares.—On Saturday last an accident of a very serious kind took place on the Great North of England Railway, about 4 miles on the York side of Darlington, owing to the breaking of the wheel of a truck which was attached midway amongst the passenger carriages of the mail train. On the breakage of this wheel the truck was thrown off the line during the time that the engine was proceeding at its usual rapid speed. This caused a concussion of the passenger carriages, three of which were dashed together, the centre one being literally lifted on its end, bearing upright against another, the rest of the carriages being much shattered. So sudden was the shock that scarcely a scream was heard, although the carriages were filled with passengers, many of whom were ladies and children. No lives were lost, but several ladies and gentlemen were severely cut and bruised, and one young married lady, Mrs. Whitehead, of Manchester, received a compound fracture of one of her thighs, the other leg being also broken. The unfortunate lady, whose husband was with her in the train, was with difficulty removed from the shattered carriage and borne on one of its doors to a neighbouring farmhouse, where surgical assistance was promptly procured. She now lies there in a dangerous state. In the shock one of the carriages was thrown across the rails, and had not the express train from York to the north been rather late, as it fortunately happened, another accident might have ensued, the night being dark and rainy; there would not have been time to remove it, and the spot where the accident happened is that where the trains pass each other on the line.—The Eastern Counties Company have set an example which it is hoped that all other companies will follow. Two persons in their employment having, by their joint negligence, occasioned a collision on their line, which might have led to most serious consequences, were not only promptly punished by dismissal, but, in addition, the directors laid an information against them under the provision of the act 5 and 6 Vic., c. 55, and the magistrates sentenced them to the payment of 40*s.* each.

Ireland.

Dublin.—The Ribbon of the Order of St. Patrick, vacant by the recent death of the Marquis of Ely, has been conferred upon Lord Farnham. Letters patent have passed the Great Seal appointing the Rev. Brabazon W. Disney, late archdeacon of Raphoe, to the deanery of Emly. The Hon. and Rev. Lord Mountmorres has been appointed to the deanery of Clovne, vacant by the demise of Dean Burgh. Mr. John Pennefather, second son of the Baron, and brother of the Under Secretary, has been appointed one of the counsel in Crown prosecutions, in the room of Mr. J. O'Dwyer, the new Taxing Master in Chancery. There is a rumour in Dublin that the quit and Crown rents of Ireland, valued at about 30,000*l.* per annum, are to be given to the Roman Catholics of Ireland for the building and repair of their churches.—A new company, comprising many of the wealthiest citizens, and several of the principal merchants of Dublin, has been established, under the designation of the "National Glass Company of Ireland," with a capital of 150,000*l.* The directors have completed a contract for the purchase of extensive concerns at Ringsend, near this city, formerly occupied with the manufacture of glass. A new and wholesome spirit of enterprise has arisen in this country, and in this case it is applied to the manufacture of an article for which Ireland possesses every facility. The abolition of the Excise duty has removed the only obstacle to the successful working of this manufacture in this part of the empire.—The Repeal papers, indignant that Archbishop Crolly, the Roman Catholic Primate, should continue resolved to give a fair trial to the new colleges, have latterly insinuated that he is insane! The respectable papers of all parties concur in condemning this attack as not only unjustifiable but false, the Archbishop being in perfect health and in the full enjoyment of his faculties. The Dublin papers also contain the following declaration, on the part of a large body of the Catholic clergy of the archdiocese of Armagh, in reference to this subject. "We, the undersigned Catholic clergy of the Dunleer district of the archdiocese of Armagh, in conference assembled, having read in the Pilot of the 29th ult., an article affecting the character of our beloved and venerated Primate, by representing him as unable to attend the late concursus at Maynooth, in consequence of the unsound state of his mind, and obliged from the same cause to live in retirement, deem it our duty to declare publicly that the article in question is an atrocious, malignant, and sacrilegious calumny—knowing as we do that the most Rev. Dr. Crolly attended at Maynooth from the commencement to the conclusion of the concursus; that he has from that time been publicly engaged in the discharge of his various, solemn, and important duties; and that at no period of his useful and edifying ministry was his Grace in the enjoyment of better health of mind and body."

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday in Conciliation Hall. The proceeding of most importance was the reading, by Mr. John O'Connell, of a letter from Mr. T. C. Foster (the Times commissioner), denying the authorship, and totally disclaiming all knowledge of, and all connection with, the letter previously read in Conciliation Hall and attributed to him; and the retraction on the part of Mr. J. O'Connell of all the observations he had made respecting Mr. Foster in connection with that letter, and tendering him an ample apology. The rent for the week was 232*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.*

Armagh.—The Primate, Lord John George Beresford, delivered a very long, and for the most part, a political charge, at the visitation of the diocese of Armagh, on Thursday week. This charge has excited considerable attention on both sides of the channel, and is not unlikely to lead to controversy on some points. The following is a summary of the most material passages:—

Lord John Beresford begins by noticing the perils to which, he thinks, the Established Church is now exposed, from "the combined attack of opponents, who, however they may differ from each other in religion, and in the ulterior objects which they have in view, are agreed together in exerting the utmost efforts to accomplish its overthrow. On the part of its friends, therefore, there is need of the greatest energy and unanimity in its defence." He then proceeds to argue that the Act of Union, reluctantly consented to by Ireland, was offered as a guarantee for the stability of the Established Church, which had been thus induced "to surrender its independence, and to place the guardianship of its interests in the hands of a legislature, to be chiefly composed of Englishmen." "The contract then entered into was intended inter alia to guarantee the stability of the Irish Church. When those who are so loud and urgent in their opposition to the Church were first admitted to the privileges they now enjoy, they disclaimed any intention to disturb the Church, but have since been unceasing in their efforts to subvert her. For the accomplishment of this object, gross misrepresentations respecting the amount of her revenues have been employed, and the English people, from hearing the constant repetition of these exaggerated statements, and not taking the trouble of inquiring into the subject, have been led to believe them true. In the assault which has been made upon the Irish branch of the Church, the Roman Catholics are now aided by the Dissenters of England, who employ denunciations as vehement, with regard to our establishment, as ever proceeded from the lips of the political agitators of this country. A formal announcement, indeed, has been made by them that they are 'ready to contend by the side' of the Roman Catholics in the war against the Church in Ireland; and they have 'pledged themselves never to remit their efforts' to overturn it. The ultimate object of the Dissenters, which they have set before themselves as worthy of every exertion in their power, is to put an end to the connection of Church and State in Great Britain, and to substitute the voluntary system in place of the national endowment of religion. On the attempt to achieve this object, they seemed determined to concentrate all their strength. And in comparison with it their former controversies respecting episcopacy, and our liturgy, and doctrines, and discipline, are regarded as minor points. It is because they think a way will thus be open to them for making a more successful attack on the Established Church in England, that they now lend their aid in the movement against the weaker branch of that Church in this country." Next, the Primate turns to the revenues of the establishment, with the view of showing that all the statements about its wealth are mere creations of the imagination. "And first (he says), I would refer to the revenues of the church, which are spoken of as being 'enormous.' The 'immense riches,' 'the lavished endowment,' of the Irish Church, occupy a prominent place in every speech and pamphlet on this subject. Even in the last of these publications that I have seen, the attempt is made to lead the British public to believe that tithe—meaning thereby, as it is specifically asserted, a tenth part of the produce of the land—is still paid to the clergy by the cultivators of the soil, although even when what was called tithe was formerly paid, it was not a thirtieth part that was received by them. And since that which was denominated tithe has been commuted into a rent charge, paid by the landlord, it has been diminished by one-fourth; and it is in reality but a fortieth that is paid to the clergy of the Established Church: in other words, they receive a fourth part of the tithe." His Grace then entered into some details of calculation to show the grossness of those misrepresentations. It is stated that the number of clergy is disproportioned to the number of members of the Church, which he disproved by calculations. He touched also on the subject of non-residence and sinecures, to the mis-statements respecting both which points he replied as in the previous cases. He alluded to the improvement which had confessedly taken place in the professional information of the clergy of the present day, which he ascribed to the improved system of training in the University, and especially to the care taken in their instruction by the present regius professor of divinity—impressing on the clergy, that personal character after all, is the great matter in the ministry. The success vouchsafed by God to the instrumentality of the clergy was a proof that God had not forsaken the Church. In the diocese of Armagh there are 12,000 children receiving scriptural instruction in Sunday schools, by means of 940 teachers, 270 schools established in parishes, containing 22,000 scholars, of whom 15,000 children belong to the Church of England, 5,000 to the Church of Scotland, and 7,000 to the Church of Rome. The charge contained an expression of regret that Sir Robert Peel had refused any grant to the Church Education Society, and earnestly entreated the clergy to sustain and encourage the schools in connection with that society. His Grace concluded by invoking the divine blessing on the bishops and clergy of both branches of the Church planted in these kingdoms, and exhorted to brotherly love; adding that although at his advanced period of life he might not see the prosperity of the Church, to which he doubted not it was destined, yet he rejoiced that before his eyes were closed in death, he was permitted to witness, notwithstanding the clouds which lowered over her, her advancing prosperity in spiritual blessings, which it is not in the power of states to give or take away.

Ballinasloe.—The great National Cattle Show, which has recently taken place in this town, has occupied the Irish papers for some days, and their columns are filled with details of the exhibition and speeches. The number of visitors on the first day may be estimated by the fact that 380*l.* was taken at the doors, the rate of admission being only 2*s.* 6*d.* The Show, deficient in some respects, was, however, superior as a general agricultural exhibition to any which has previously been seen in Ireland. The dinners were most numerously attended. At the Council Dinner, Lord Clancarty presided, and the principal speakers were the Marquis of Downshire, the Duke of Leinster, the Earl of Devon, Lord Cloubrock, Mr. Sharman Crawford, Lord Crofton, Professor Kane, Lord Clements; Mr. M. Bellew, and the Times Commissioner, who was called upon amidst great cheering to answer for the Press. It was a complete fusion of parties, all animated by the unanimous desire to call forth the agricultural resources of Ireland. At the general dinner on the 2d inst., the Duke of Leinster presided, and was supported by no less than 460 noblemen and gentlemen of all parties. In the evening of the same day, a grand ball and supper closed the proceedings of the meeting.—We regret to say, however, that the neighbourhood of Ballinasloe, while the head quarters of agricultural festivities, was the scene of a murder of the most atrocious character, perpetrated within nine miles of the town on the night of Tuesday week. A respectable farmer, Mr. Linney, who attended the show on Tuesday, and was steward to the Rev Henry Butson (son of Archdeacon Butson), of Banagher, was shot on that night on his way home. He was found dead on the road by the police, and was conveyed to the barrack to abide the inquest. The deceased, it appeared, had made himself obnoxious about some land, and received a cautionary notice a fortnight back to prepare his coffin. A man named Coates, Mr. Butson's coachman, who is the son of the former steward, was immediately apprehended on suspicion, and has been committed for trial on the charge of wilful murder.

Cavan.—With respect to the recent murder of Mr. Bell Booth, a letter from Cavan states that his unhappy widow has paid a visit to the jail for the purpose of identifying the person who is in custody on suspicion of being the murderer. It appears the prisoners (including Patrick Heany, who was charged with being the actual assassin of Mr. Booth), having been all ranged in order in one of the yards, Mrs. Booth walked up and down the ranks, and after examining Heany most particularly, she declared that the man who fired the shot was not among them. Heany, consequently, will be liberated on bail.

Cork.—It is stated that a company, whose capital will be 300,000*l.*, has been formed to build an efficient class of steam ships to ply regularly between Bantry, Halifax, and New York, as a first step towards making Bantry a packet station and naval depôt. In aid of the project the lord of the soil has granted to the company a site for wharfs, quays, stores, offices, &c., at a nominal rent. It is proposed to perform the voyage from Bantry to Halifax in seven days.

Scotland.

The Orkneys.—The local papers give detailed accounts of the large shoals of whales on the northern coasts. A few weeks since 150 bottle-noses were caught at Sandwick; and at the same time at West Voe off Sandburgh, 100 were captured. The weather was fine, and the scene at both places was of the most animating description. The blubber was next day sold at 10*l.* per ton.—On Saturday fortnight Stromness presented a lively and exciting scene, a shoal of small whales having entered the harbour, and gambolled about for a considerable time, keenly pursued by a number of boats. There were crowds of spectators on the quays, almost all the houses in the town being emptied of their inhabitants witnessing the chase. Night, however, came on so speedily that only one small fish, about 7 ft. long, was taken.—We learn also from John O'Groats Journal that during the last six weeks the inhabitants of the Faroe Islands have captured no fewer than 2,800 whales. A whole cargo of whalebone has been despatched from the islands to England for manure. The same paper states that on Thursday week an immense body of whales visited Quendall Bay, Shetland, and after a combat of two hours, the islanders were rewarded by the huge carcases of 1,540 whales. The history of whale-catching in Shetland does not afford an instance of such an extensive capture in such a short period of time.

Theatres.

Drury-Lane.—This theatre opened for the season on Saturday week. The greatest of the English theatres has become, to all intents and purposes, a regular Opera-house; tragedy and comedy are excluded, and the place they once held is wholly occupied by music and dancing. The company engaged by Mr. Bunn includes, for sopranos, Miss Romer, Miss Rainforth, and Miss Poole; for tenors, Messrs. Harrison, Allen, and Barker; for basses, Messrs. Henry Phillips, Borrani, Burdini, and Weiss. We are, moreover, promised the far-famed Jenny Lind, and Anna Thillon. The instrumental orchestra is numerous, and the chorus is said to be "augmented to an unprecedented extent, and arranged with great care." Important novelties are announced:—A new opera by Mr. Wallace, said to be on the subject of "Don Cæsar de Bazan;" a grand opera by Benedict; another by Donizetti, the libretto by Scribe; and an English version of Meyerbeer's last opera, "The Camp of Silesia." In the ballet department the company is strong; and in this department, too, various novelties are promised, both in the way of pieces and performers. The opera of Saturday evening, "The Enchantress," is too well known to require any remark. It was on the whole well performed and well received. Miss Romer, in particular, who appeared for the first time in the character of Stella, was in excellent voice and much applauded. The novelty of the evening was the ballet called "The Marble Maiden," written and arranged expressly for this theatre by Messrs. St. George and Albert; the music composed for the occasion by M. Adam. This ballet is founded on the well-known story of "Pygmalion." Massachio, a Florentine sculptor, has made a statue of Hebe, so exquisitely beautiful, that he falls madly in love with it. His prayer for its animation is partly granted, the statue being animated by day, but relapsing into marble by night. Prince Cosmo de Medicis, who has desired to purchase it from the sculptor, on his refusal, finds means to carry it off, and a series of adventures ensue, the "Marble Maiden" being alternately alive and dead. Feeling and intelligence are gradually awakened in her mind; she is loved with equal violence by both her admirers, but bestows her love on the youthful prince instead of the author of her being, who, in a moment of jealous fury, when she is in her marble state, destroys the work of his hands, and the existence of the being he loves, by a blow of his mallet. This is a good subject, for nothing can be too wild or fantastic for a ballet. It affords full scope for the talents of Mademoiselle Dumilatre, whose representation of the animated statue was received with continued applause.

Miscellaneous.

Island of St. Helena.—It is a singular fact that mackerel are to be found on none of the tropical coasts but one, and that is the soundings abutting on the island of St. Helena, where they are captured all the year round. Indeed, this island may be considered remarkable for three distinct productions, viz., rabbits, rats, and mackerel. The former are distributed all over the rocks, whilst the second class of animals overspread the island, and operate as a destroying plague, and the mackerel is the only fish that stands by the island throughout the year.

Shower of Snails.—During the storm which passed over this neighbourhood on Sunday week, a large quantity of snails fell on the grounds of Captain St. Clair, at Staverton. The gallant captain has kindly furnished us with a number of the insects, which may be seen at our office. He states that some of his grounds were literally covered with these curious visitors from the upper regions.—Cheltenham Examiner.

A Twopenny Bank-note.—The editor of the Tyne Mercury acknowledges the receipt from a correspondent of "a curious specimen of our early currency, namely, a very handsomely-engraved note of the Woodmancote Bank, Gloucestershire, dated about half a century ago, and bearing the extraordinary value of 2*d*."

Curious Discovery of an Ancient Bible.—A copy of the first complete edition of the English Bible, printed by Myles Coverdale, bearing the date 1535, was accidentally discovered a few days since in the false bottom of an old oak-chest, at Holkham Hall, Norfolk, the seat of the Earl of Leicester. There are numerous imperfect copies of this edition of the Holy Scriptures in existence, two being deposited in the library of the British Museum, one in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, and one in the Cambridge University library; in fact most of our great libraries and public institutions, as well as many private individuals, possess the volume. The above book is the most valuable specimen of Myles Coverdale's labours hitherto brought to light, being in every respect perfect, whereas all the other volumes enumerated are deficient of many leaves, both at the beginning and the end. During the religious persecutions in the reign of Queen Mary, the proof of the possession of the Bible subjecting the parties to the consequences of an accusation of heresy, most of the copies of the impression were buried, which accounts for this discrepancy, the humidity of the soil having destroyed a considerable portion of the leaves. The noble proprietor of Holkham has had the book appropriately bound and inclosed in an oaken box, and it now graces the shelves of his magnificent library. Some idea may be formed of the estimation in which this treasure is held, from the circumstance of a London bookseller having offered to purchase it for the sum of 500*l*.

New Locomotive Agency.—A letter from Philadelphia in the Memorial de Rouen has the following:—"William Evans has resolved a problem which must overturn our present system of railway and steam-boat propulsion. By means of enormous compression, he has succeeded in liquifying atmospheric air, and then a few drops only of some chemical composition, poured into it, suffice to make it resume its original volume with an elastic force quite prodigious. An experiment on a large scale has just been made. A train of 20 loaded waggons was transmitted a distance of 60 miles in less than an hour and a quarter—the whole motive power being the liquid air enclosed in a vessel of two gallons and a half measure; into which fell, drop by drop, and from minute to minute, the chemical composition in question. Already subscriptions are abundant, and a society is in course of formation. The inventor declares that an ordinary packet-boat may make the passage from Philadelphia to Havre in eight days, carrying a ton of his liquid air. A steam-engine, of six-horse-power, will produce that quantity in eight hours."

THE FAME OF HOLLOWAY'S PILLS in the cure of Head-ache, dimness of Sight, deranged Stomachs, and disordered Livers; as likewise in restoring Strength and Vigour in cases of debilitated Constitutions, is so great, that, even in the East Indies, the different castes of Natives are taking but little other medicine than these famous PILLS. One Native Agent, in the Presidency of Bombay, sold lately by retail Fifty-three dozen Boxes in Fifteen days. The extraordinary Cures performed by these PILLS, when all other means fail, is truly wonderful. Females will find this a most admirable Medicine. Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand.

News of the Week.

The Revenue accounts for the quarter that terminated on the 10th instant have somewhat disappointed the public expectation, although there is no reason for apprehending that the deficiency which they exhibit will be permanent. The decrease on the year does not much exceed a quarter of a million; and considering the recent financial experiments of the Government, it has rather created surprise that the revenue exhibits such elasticity under the changes it has undergone than excited doubts of the ultimate success of the Ministerial policy. The deficiency in the Customs proves beyond doubt that the alterations in the tariff have led to this reduction, since nearly the entire amount of the decrease which has taken place in that branch during the twelvemonths, has fallen on the quarter just ended. In the Excise there is an increase on the year, but a small decrease on the quarter—an improvement that was certainly not looked for; the reduction of the duties on glass and other excisable articles having led to the opposite conclusion. The Stamps have increased both on the year and quarter, and so likewise has the Post-office, which continues to show the same steady and gratifying progress, the increase on the year being 16,000*l.*, and on the quarter no less than 9000*l.* The Property Tax has decreased, but evidently not from any lack of general prosperity; for the imports have prodigiously increased during the past year, and the Stamps and Post-office are both excellent indications of the commercial activity which is now manifesting itself in so many forms, and diffusing the means of consumption among the great bulk of the working classes.

The position of France in Algeria is the great topic of European interest. The Paris papers are occupied with discussions on the preparations now making to avenge the late disasters of the French troops; and it is rumoured that the Prince de Joinville is to have a command in the approaching campaign, in order to cruise off Tangiers and Mogador, while Marshal Bugeaud pursues Abd-el-Kader within the territory of Morocco. Marshal Bugeaud, however, appears desirous of showing himself independent of the Ministry to which he is constitutionally responsible. He has not merely disregarded a telegraphic summons to repair to Paris, and embarked for Algiers without authority, but has addressed a letter to the Prefect of the Dordonne, in which he censures the policy of the Government in terms which are at least unusual in one holding office under the ministry which he attacks. It is rumoured in Paris that the Cabinet have despatched a courier to Marseilles with a positive order to the Marshal to repair to Paris; but on the other hand it is stated, with more confidence, that there is no other person in France to whom the Government can intrust the command in Algiers, and that consequently they will be reluctantly compelled to submit to his proceedings.—From the United States we learn that the war panic has subsided, and that a portion of the United States troops, sent to the Texan frontier to guard their newly-acquired territory from the threatened invasion, have already been withdrawn. It is stated that President Polk is about to send a special Minister to Mexico on a pacific mission, and it is believed in New York that the Mexican Government, in their inability to offer any hostile resistance, will eagerly avail themselves of this mode of arranging the existing differences.—From Buenos Ayres we have a confirmation of the important news that General Rosas has rejected the ultimatum of the Allied Powers, and that the Argentine fleet under the command of Admiral Brown has been seized by the French and English squadron. The Ministers have established a strict blockade of the principal ports in the Montevidean territory, and have landed 1500 British and French marines to deprive Gen. Oribe of all chance of taking Montevideo. At the date, however, of the last accounts, Oribe continued to defy the allied forces, but the failure of his supplies will probably prevent his remaining much longer in the Montevidean territory.

Home News.

Court.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the infant royal family, continue at Windsor Castle, and are in good health. The Prince has entirely recovered from his recent accident. During the week His Royal Highness has driven Her Majesty in the pony carriage, and has shot two or three times in the preserves of the Castle. Her Majesty and the royal children have taken their usual daily exercise. Prince George of Cambridge, Chevalier Bunsen, the Princess Czernechiff and her daughter, Sir R. Peel, the Earl of Liverpool, and Sir H. Wheatley, have been at the Castle this week on a visit to the Queen. It is understood that Her Majesty will pay her long expected visit to the Marquis of Salisbury, at Hatfield House, about the 11th of the ensuing month.

Visit of M. Thiers.—This distinguished statesman and author, and late Prime Minister of France, arrived at Mivart's hotel last week. His reception has been of the most cordial character. On Monday he visited Woolwich dockyard and arsenal, and on Tuesday left London for Bowood, the seat of the Marquis of Lansdowne. He was to remain there on Thursday, return to London on Friday, and on the same day leave town for the Grange, the seat of Lord Ashburton, and return to London on Monday or Tuesday next week.

The Revenue.—The Revenue returns for the year and quarter ended on the 10th inst., were published on Saturday. The total income of the year was 50,506,883*l.*, which, being compared with the income of the year ended Oct. 10, 1844 (50,741,622*l.*), shows a decrease of 234,739. The total income of the Quarter was 13,811,380*l.*, which, being compared with the income of the corresponding period of last year (14,372,353*l.*), shows a decrease of 560,973*l.* The following are the details of the accounts:—The returns for the Year show an increase in the Excise of 109,273*l.*; Stamps, 427,985; Taxes, 23,426*l.*; Post-office, 16,000*l.*; Crown Lands, 10,000*l.*; Miscellaneous, 206,603*l.*; to which must be added Imprest and other Moneys, 225,104*l.*; Repayments of Advances, 369,167*l.*; making a total of 1,387,558. On the other hand they show a decrease in the Customs of 1,590,953*l.*; Property Tax, 31,344*l.*; making together 1,622,297*l.*, from which, deducting the increase of 1,387,558, we have, as stated above, a decrease on the year of 234,739*l.* The returns for the Quarter show an increase in the Stamps of 114,487*l.*; Post-office, 9000*l.*; Crown Lands 20,000*l.*; Miscellaneous, 244,141*l.*; to which must be added Repayments of Advances, 350,189*l.*; making a total of 737,817*l.* There is a decrease in the Customs of 1,154,492*l.*; Excise, 5784*l.*; Taxes, 160*l.*; Property Tax, 134,828*l.*; Imprest and other Moneys, 3526*l.*; making together, 1,298,790*l.*, from which, deducting the increase of 737,817*l.*, we have, as stated above, a decrease on the quarter of 560,973*l.* It should be mentioned that the item "Miscellaneous," this quarter, includes a sum of 450,000*l.* received as the produce of silver remitted from China.

The Church.—The Bishop of Oxford will be translated to the vacant See of Bath and Wells. The names of the following gentlemen have been mentioned as likely to succeed to the see of Oxford, viz.:—Dr. Hawkins, provost of Oriel College; Dr. Bull, canon of Christ Church; Dr. Cardwell, principal of St. Alban Hall; and Dr. Jelf, canon of Christ Church.—The Rev. J. G. Ward, Rector of St. James's, Westminster, has been appointed Dean of Lincoln, in the room of the late Dr. Gordon.

Foreign.

France.—The French Government has received accounts of further disasters in Algeria. By Le Cerbere steamer, which arrived at Toulon on the 9th, despatches were received from General Lamoriciere, which announce that on the day after the destruction of Colonel Montagnac and the 450 soldiers under his command, Abd-el-Kader suddenly attacked a body of French troops, in the neighbourhood of Tlemcen, with such overwhelming force that 200 French troops and 60 Zouaves with 5 officers laid down their arms, and were carried off as prisoners. This annoying event happened at the same period with the still greater disaster at Djemma Ghazaouat. The Paris papers speak of little except the late events in Algeria, and of the proceedings to which they may give rise. The details which hourly arrive of the disasters of the French army show with how much desperation and effect the Kabyles attacked the troops, who had been, as La Presse observes, for a twelvemonth inflicting upon them, in the shape of "razzias," all the horrors of a war uncontrolled by the conventional checks imposed upon warfare when carried on between European nations. Those details show further that the loss of the French was unhappily greater than was at first admitted—unhappily for the conquerors as the conquered, for the advantage gained by the Kabyles will hardly change the fate of their country, while it will bring upon them the fury of the French soldiery exasperated by their late reverses. The papers also discuss, with great warmth, a letter addressed by Marshal Bugeaud to the Prefect of the Dordogne, which has created no small sensation both in political and moneyed circles in Paris. A fall in the funds which took place on the Bourse on Friday was, for want of better reason, mainly attributed to that cause; and Ministers, it is said, are greatly embarrassed by the wayward and extraordinary proceedings of the Marshal, who seems desirous of asserting his entire independence of the Government. The following is the letter, dated Excideuil, the 6th inst.:—

"My dear Prefect,—Chef d'Escadron Rivet has brought most disastrous news from Algiers. The army and the people are loudly crying out for my return. I have too much right to complain of having been abandoned by the Government to my enemies in the press and elsewhere, not to have been completely determined not to return to Algiers without the commission I have demanded, and assurances that some of my fundamental ideas should be complied with; but late events are too grave for me to make any terms for my return to the field of danger. I have, therefore, decided upon taking my departure the day after to-morrow. I will devote to you half an hour to give you the bulk of the news. One word, however, in the mean time. Abd-el-Kader has entered the west of the province of Oran. The garrison of Djemma has been almost totally destroyed. We have lost there a lieutenant-colonel, a chef d'escadron, a chef de bataillon, all the officers of the column, and about 400 soldiers. General Cavaignac, informed of the approach of Abd-el-Kader, and the revolt of the tribes on the left bank of the Tafna, went out and fought two great battles, of the results of which we are ignorant. All we know for certain is, that he has returned to Tlemcen. This great success of Abd-el-Kader must have set the whole of the province into a ferment. On our side great faults have been committed; symptoms of revolt have been shown at other points; and General Bourjolly was little in condition to reduce the insurrection on the Mina. It must have gained some ground, and there is much to fear that a great war is about to be recommenced. Alas! events but too well justify the opposition I have made to the unnecessary extension of the civil administration, and the reduction of the army, in order to cover the expenses of this extension. My heart is torn with grief at such misfortunes, and so much blindness in the governors, and in the press, which rules us much more than we are willing to confess."

Not content with publishing this letter, Marshal Bugeaud, who was summoned to Paris by telegraphic dispatch on the arrival of the news from Algiers, disregarded the summons, started at once for Marseilles, unadvised, without orders, and utterly uninstructed, to resume, "upon public grounds, and to save the colony," a Government that it was not certain would ever again be committed to him. The effect of this extraordinary conduct upon Ministers was that which might have been supposed. They were rendered furious, and none of them more so than M. Guizot. It is said that the telegraph was instantly set to work to communicate with the Marshal at Marseilles ere he could embark; but his contempt of a previous telegraphic summons to Paris rendered a more formal and official course imperative. "It is not by coming to Paris," said he, in reply to that summons, "that I can conquer Abd-el-Kader; I can, and will, only do it in Algeria." "This experience of the Marshal's contumely," says the Times, "showed Ministers the inutility of an informal order or command. M. Guizot has therefore despatched a courier to Marseilles to order Marshal Bugeaud not to embark for Algeria without recalling or recanting the whole of the letter in question. If he receive this order ere he embark, he will hardly proceed to Algiers, for recantation from a man of his temperament is not to be looked for. If he shall have left ere the courier reach Marseilles, he will it is supposed, be recalled. There has been more commotion in the Palace," continues the correspondent of the Times, "caused by the disaster in Algeria than such an event ought to produce. That the King was deeply affected by it I have already informed you. Upon those martial youths the Princes, the effect was that of fire communicated to gunpowder. The three at present there (the Prince de Joinville and the Dukes d'Aumale and Montpensier), set about preparing for instant departure to coerce Morocco, and seize upon or destroy Abd-el-Kader and his adherent Arabs and Kabyles, and probably to exterminate the race of each. The Duke de Montpensier was perhaps the most impatient and ardent of the three, but the King interfered and positively forbade their departure. It is not intended that the French troops enter Morocco, for the present at least. A sufficiently imposing force will be assembled on the frontier in support of the representations and demands of France, and which it is expected will insure either the expulsion or seizure of Abd-el-Kader, or the creation of a case for invasion, the justice of which no foreign power could question. It is fortunate for ministers that Marshal Bugeaud is not popular, otherwise his letter would damage them materially. Still the effect of the late events in Algeria causes very great alarm to their friends." The Debats and the Epoque, the two journals through whose columns the intentions of the Ministry are allowed to ooze out, publish some comments on Marshal Bugeaud's letter, which clearly show that the Government has resolved to let the matter pass. The Epoque admits that the letter is in itself "unusual and to be regretted," and that its publication proceeds from "an inexcusable want of consideration," but it thinks that Marshal Bugeaud only "gave expression, to a friend, to thoughts which were entirely legitimate, and in every respect in conformity with his rights, his duties, and his character." The Debats is equally lenient. It speaks of the letter as one of those freaks to which Marshal Bugeaud has accustomed everybody. The Government journal proceeds in this strain of ridicule for some time, and then condescends to be serious in the following terms:—"Evidently Marshal Bugeaud does not recollect in what period and what country we exist. One would be inclined to say that the long sejourn which he has made out of France had made him forget the customs of his country. We will say with sincerity that we regret to see a man like him so apparently disrespectful of the institutions of his time. We regret to see joined to such great qualities such weakness of character." "Marshal Bugeaud," says the Morning Chronicle, "has certainly been let off easily on this occasion. Nothing can exceed the insolence of the tone assumed by the Marshal in respect to the Government, excepting the meanness with which he has insinuated the incapacity of his brother officers in Algiers, and the self-sufficiency with which he assumes that he alone can get the colony out of its present difficulty. He has even exaggerated the extent of the disaster at Djemma Ghazaouat, in order to make his own merit in quieting the colony appear the greater, for he assumes that Abd-el-Kader has or is about to attack Algeria on all sides, while in point of fact, he only succeeded in surprising an isolated party. There are not two opinions as to the impropriety of the letter, and indeed it is admitted to its full extent by the journals of all shades of opinion in Paris. The opinions as to the leniency of the Government may, perhaps, be more diversified. Marshal Bugeaud is an ambitious man, who thinks himself, and wishes others to think him, a Napoleon. He is placed in a remote colony, at the head of an immense army, and, as he has shown, with almost unlimited power. His escapades, in the course of his government, have been innumerable, and continually keep the home Government in a state of ferment. Marshal Soult has declared that Marshal Bugeaud gave him more trouble than the whole of the rest of the army put together, and that without any other business he would have enough to do to watch the progress of his administration. Whether it is exactly prudent in the Ministry to continue to entrust so important a command to a man who, notwithstanding his acknowledged merit as a mere soldier, appears so unfit for the administration of the civil government of a colony, may be considered more than doubtful. It cannot, however, be denied that the forbearance shown by the French Government, in the face of such annoying and public provocation, is of itself praiseworthy, if, as is stated, they keep Marshal Bugeaud in his important post merely because they think him, notwithstanding his glaring faults, the fittest man to bring the colony out of its present difficulties."—Two Italians were arrested by the police on Friday week in Paris, and all their papers and private letters were seized and carried away. The Constitutionnel asserted that this act was in consequence of the recent insurrection at Rimini, but the Moniteur denies the fact, and says that the arrest had no reference to the affairs of Italy.—Two curious documents are published, for the first time, in the Ami de la Religion, a Paris periodical, which vouches for their authenticity, and affirms that the originals are deposited in the archives of the Archbishop of Paris. They consist of a solemn retraction of the late celebrated Prince de Talleyrand, who, as our readers are aware, was Bishop of Autun when the first French Revolution broke out, and of a letter addressed by him to Pope Gregory XVI., declaring that he died a true Catholic. The Ami de la Religion asserts that the documents were spontaneously drawn up by the Prince three months before his death, but that it was only a few hours before he expired that he consented to sign them. It was the moment he had determined upon, and no exhortations or entreaties could induce him to do it earlier.

United States and Mexico.—By the Britannia mail-steamer we have accounts from Boston to the 1st inst., and from New York to the 31st ult. There is no item of striking interest in the papers by this arrival, the journals being occupied in discussing matters of local interest only. Political and commercial matters remained the same as at last accounts. The war panic had subsided, and preparations were being made for withdrawing a portion, at least, of the troops sent to ward off the anticipated Mexican invasion. Despatches from General Taylor's encampment at Arkansas Bay, to the 14th Sept., had been received. Nothing important had transpired. Arista had been at Mier, but unaccompanied by a military force, nor was there any indication of the concentration of a Mexican force on the Rio Grande. With anarchy and confusion among her people, and an exhausted treasury, which, for want of credit, she is unable to replenish, Mexico must quietly submit to the proposals of the United States Government, and refrain from the adoption of offensive measures. The New York Evening Express says, "Rumour from Washington states, that a Minister will be appointed very soon, by President Polk, to be sent to Mexico. This looks pacific. We also hear from Washington that President Polk himself has written a letter to the President of Mexico, proposing terms of negotiation. This reaches us in a pretty straight way, but we cannot vouch for it." The New Orleans Picayune says: "The Texan papers have given to the public, for the first time, the secret treaty between Santa Anna and Texas, by which the former obtained his release when a prisoner. Originally the treaty was enclosed in a letter written by Santa Anna to General Jackson, then President of the United States, and the whole accompanied by another letter, written by General Austin, at Santa Anna's request, to the same distinguished man, soliciting his mediation and influence for the settlement of difficulties between Mexico and Texas. General Austin's letter explains fully the grounds upon which Santa Anna obtained his release—all of them having reference to the solemn pledges made by the latter to use all his exertions to obtain the acknowledgment of Texan independence to the Rio Grande. The Mexican Government never sanctioned this treaty, although they regained their army by it."—Another outbreak amongst the Mormonites had taken place. A letter in the St. Louis Republican from the editor of that paper, dated at Warsaw, September 17, represents the state of things among the Mormons, or rather among the bands of lawless men who had assumed the title of Anti-Mormons, as most deplorable. They were carrying fire and faggot into the Mormon settlements in all directions, and did not confine themselves to the Mormons only, but laid waste the dwellings of all those suspected of favouring those fanatics. Down to the night of Sunday the 14th, it is stated that 60 houses had been burnt down in Adams and Hancock counties. The Anti-Mormons had entered into an extended combination, and announced their determination not to stop short of the expulsion of every Mormon from Hancock county, in which is Nauvoo; and it was apprehended that a conflict would result between the two parties. The anti-rent disturbances are over; the law had taken hold of the offenders with a strong hand, and order was restored. The number of prisoners is from 350 to 400, and from 75 to 100 will be indicted for the murder of the sheriff. The rest are charged with disturbances only, and will be fined in various sums. After the trials are over, the rent system is to be re-organised, as the present system is allowed to be objectionable.—The Canadian accounts are unimportant. The arrival of M. Papineau at Boston had excited considerable speculation as to his future political course. It was thought he would support the present Administration. Lord Cathcart was busily employed in making a minute survey of Canada West, inspecting troops, condition of forts, &c. The projected railroad between Montreal and the Atlantic remained in statu quo. The people of Quebec were bestirring themselves to rebuild the burnt section. The weather throughout the province was cold and unpromising.

South America.—The brig Magnolia, which left Buenos Ayres on the 7th August, arrived at Plymouth on the 12th inst.—62 days' passage. At the time of her departure the greatest consternation prevailed, and a warlike collision was hourly expected. The crews of the Argentine squadron had been brought to Buenos Ayres by the English steamer Firebrand and the French steamer Fulton, and in the latter, on the morning of the 7th, Admiral Brown, the commander of the squadron, was a prisoner. The English flag had been hoisted on board one of the Argentine squadron. On the arrival of the Firebrand and Fulton the beach at Buenos Ayres was crowded with Englishmen and other foreigners, anxiously awaiting the news from Montevideo. The English resident landowners, with their labourers, had abandoned their estates, and the master of the Magnolia, with other masters of British vessels, had, about 10 days before leaving, received notice from Captain Hotham, of the war-steamer Gorgon, to be prepared, if required, to take British subjects on board. On the 7th August there were at Buenos Ayres the Gorgon and Firebrand steamers and the Dolphin schooner, with some other British vessels of war; but at Montevideo there was a far greater fleet, consisting of English, French, and Brazilians—the latter under the orders of the English commanding officer. The Buenos Ayreans had sunk vessels in the river to prevent the approach of the combined squadrons, and they had proclaimed a severe conscription. Every male born in the country, of sufficient age, was liable to serve, whether of native or foreign parentage. Everything was looking warlike, no native labourers could be obtained, and the streets were deserted. The exchange at Buenos Ayres had fallen to 3¼, and the master of this vessel was obliged to give 300 per cent. more for his provisions than he would have had to pay six days previously. There was rather less than the usual number of English merchant vessels at Buenos Ayres, but plenty of foreign ships, whose numbers were daily increasing. In addition to the above measures the British and French Ministers had established a strict blockade of the Bucio, of Colonia, and of other ports in the Montevidean territory through which General Oribe derives all his supplies, except those of beef, which he obtains by plundering the country. They had also landed from 1500 to 1600 French and English marines, a force quite sufficient to deprive Oribe of all chance either of taking the city of Monteridéo, or of remaining for any length of time in the Montevidean territory. Up to the latest accounts he continued to defy the orders of the English and French Governments, but his resistance must cease very shortly either from the defeat or mutiny of his army. Meanwhile, the grand object of preserving the independence of the east bank of the river Plate, and thus of rendering it impossible for the Buenos Ayrean Government to cut off the intercourse of European nations with the interior of South America has been completely effected. The New York papers state that at Buenos Ayres Mr. Brent, the United States Chargé d'Affaires, opposes the intervention of France and England to put an end to the war between Buenos Ayres and Monte Video, on the ground that it is exclusively an American question; and according to a correspondent of a Boston paper, Mr. Brent considers "that the people of Buenos Ayres have a right, as an independent republic, to manage their own affairs well or ill, as they please, without the intervention of Europe."

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

Railways in London.—We noticed briefly in our last the important motions made in the Common Council for bringing the railways into the City. We now give a summary of the discussion which then took place, as it is one of the most interesting questions discussed in "the City Parliament" for many years.

The Lord Mayor Elect opened the proceedings by bringing under the attention of the Court the petition of the directors of the Direct Manchester Company for leave to purchase the site of Farringdon-market for a great central terminus. He moved that the petition be read. The petition, which stated that the company was actually formed, the required amount of capital subscribed, and that the proposed terminus at Farringdon-market would occasion no inconvenience to the City; but would be a great improvement by lessening the dangerous and unsightly declivities of Holborn-hill and Skinner-street, and by altogether removing the present low neighbourhood of Field-lane, was read.—Mr. Lawrence moved that the petition be referred to the improvement committee.—Mr. Harrison wished to know whether any course had been actually laid down by which the proposed railway was to approach the City.—Mr. Dillon, who represented the company, said that the survey of that part of the line was not, he believed, yet completed, but the general view was, that from Battle-bridge the line would take as near as possible the corner of the House of Correction and come down Field-lane to Holborn-bridge, and then the ground would be raised to a certain height, say 12 or 14 feet; for it had been ascertained by actual survey on a former occasion, when it was proposed to gain a level between Skinner-street and Holborn-hill without a viaduct, that that height would give an easy and safe ascent to Holborn-bridge and Gray's-Inn-road, on the one side, and Skinner-street on the other. By the plan proposed, the railway would run under the covered way that would be formed by thus raising the ground, into Farringdon-street and Farringdon-market, where the station would be. And if the company obtained the grant of the site, they would be most happy to contribute, both by their exertions and their funds, to the improvement of Skinner-street and Field-lane.—The motion for referring the petition having been put, Mr. Lawrence said there was a time when the introduction of railways into the City was generally objected to. Experience had, however, taught them that if they did not permit railways to come into the city with their termini, the trade which they also would have would go elsewhere. He saw no reason why the termini of the great railways should not be in the metropolis, especially when the access was so convenient, as it would be in the present case, to every part of London. Farringdon-market had cost the City an enormous sum, somewhere about 150,000*l.*, but up to this time, leaving capital and interest out of the question, it had hardly paid its expenses. The Direct Manchester Company now came forward, and not only offered to take that market off their hands, paying them well for it, but agreed to lay out something like half a million of money besides in works and improvements, the effect of which would be to bring into trade and commerce a neighbourhood which at this moment was one of the worst sinks of iniquity in town. No course of approach could have been selected so advantageous as the valley of the Fleet; for while it brought the railway into the very heart of the City, without interfering with those streets in which the principal City traffic was carried, it would at the same time afford a most important improvement in the City itself. The late Fleet prison, too, would by this plan be devoted to purposes far more useful than those for which it had been formerly employed, while the expense of the improvements would be borne not by the corporation, but by those who would derive the benefit from them. In agreeing to this project for a City terminus, he was anxious that it should be carried out on the most liberal principle—that was that all railways should have a common interest and a right in it; but all could not join in commencing such a scheme of general benefit—somebody must begin, and he had no doubt, if the subject were referred as proposed, the committee would be enabled to devise means for carrying out such a plan for a general terminus for all railways coming to the metropolis, as would be most beneficial to the metropolis and the country at large.—Mr. HALL remarked that if the hon. member's views who last spoke were carried out, and all the railways were brought into the City, there would be no buildings left for banking houses, warehouses, and other commercial purposes. Even the Bank and the Royal Exchange would have to give place to some railway or other, and business would be put an end to. He hoped the corporation would consider well before they granted the prayer of this petition. Let them consider well what had been the effect of railways already in deteriorating the neighbourhoods with which they interfered. A railway terminus should not be in the midst of a crowded city, interfering with its trade, and stopping the legitimate traffic of the streets, but outside at a short and convenient distance. He was no enemy to railways: he contended he was proving himself friendly to them when he endeavoured to prevent an extravagant expenditure in purchasing house property for a terminus in the city, when they might obtain all that was required in the suburbs, where property was much less expensive.—Mr. R. TAYLOR did not consider the remarks of the last speaker altogether applicable to the present case. Instead of cutting up the city from one end to the other, intersecting all its best streets, and leaving no room for warehouses, banking houses, or even for the Bank of England and the Royal Exchange, it was only proposed, as he understood, to come some 20 or 30 yards into the city, and entering by a course most fortunately selected, as far as the city was concerned, inasmuch as it would remove Field-lane, and that part of a very low and unhealthy neighbourhood, which was not touched by the new street, and would thus complete the improvement which the corporation had begun. The great distance of the termini of the existing railways from the City was the subject of general complaint. For his part he would rather go the whole journey from Bath to Paddington than from Paddington to the City. The opinion of the public as to railways had altogether changed—those who formerly clamoured against them were now anxious to see them brought to their own doors: and it was of the greatest importance to those who had occasion to come to the metropolis, that they should be set down in the heart of the City at once. It was also of great importance to those who had to send goods by railway, that the terminus should be in the City, and not three or four miles away. The hotel keepers and shopkeepers of the ward of Farringdon would look upon the carrying out of the present proposal as a godsend. Their only regret was that it had not been done in the first instance.—Mr. Alderman SIDNEY said he should cordially support the motion, feeling assured that the success of the proposal would add new wings to the trade of the City, and increase the value of property. He believed that wherever there was a turnpike-road or a canal, there must ere long be a railway. In fact, railways were coexistent with the continued prosperity of the country.—Mr. GODSON said if the Court entertained the present proposal, and permitted the petition to go up to a committee, he thought they would inflict an injury on their fellow citizens, and that they would be abandoning those rights they were annually sworn to protect. There was no need of any committee to inquire, for there was nothing to inquire about beyond what they already knew. They were told this railway would only enter the City some 20 or 30 yards to Farringdon market, but there was another motion on the paper in reference to another proposal made by another railway, to take the site of Fleet prison on the other side of Farringdon-street for their terminus, and, for aught he knew, the next proposal would be to take Newgate for a terminus. He would not consent to the citizens of London being injured for the advantage of any railway company, and moved as an amendment that the petition do lie on the table.—Mr. HARRISON seconded the amendment.—Mr. ANDERTON hoped that ere long they would have a general City terminus for all the railways, and he should not care how near it was to the ward of Farringdon Without. His only objection to the petition was, that the site proposed was not sufficient to accommodate all the railways.—Mr. D. WIRE observed that the great distance of the several London termini had been generally complained of; the result was that goods were sent to distant parts, which would else have come here, and London was deprived of her trade. Never was anything more unfortunate than the opposition of that Court to the Blackwall Railway—they lost caste in the House of Commons by it—and after all the railway was carried in spite of them. And now when it was proposed to take a most convenient site for the City terminus for that which would be one of the principal lines in the kingdom, and one which would be alike convenient to the City, and those who have occasion to come to it, they were told that the adoption of the plan would be injurious to the trade of London.—Mr. ASHURST said, the question to be considered was whether London was to continue to be the metropolis of England in anything but in name, or whether it should be so in fact. They had now to decide whether they would at length inquire into that which they should be the first to consider, that which was revolutionising the commerce of the country, and changing the whole face of things, that was, so far as it affected themselves. It would be folly to wait until the Bills were obtained from Parliament; their time would then be gone by, and they would not be committed at all.—Mr. PRENDERGAST could not agree that the effect would injure the business of the City.—The amendment was then put, and four hands only being held up in support of it, it was declared to be lost. The original motion was afterwards put and carried.—Mr. R. L. JONES then moved that the petition of the London and Birmingham Railway Company be read. The petition was to the effect that the company intended in the ensuing session of Parliament to apply for power to extend their line of railway from Camden-town to Farringdon-street, with a terminus and depot to be made on a part of the site of Fleet prison and land adjoining. That the company are prepared to enter into immediate agreement for the purchase of the property from the corporation, and they prayed the sanction of the corporation to the project. Mr. R. L. JONES expressed his regret that the petitioners had not the opportunity of explaining themselves the merits of their plans, but he would move that the petition be referred to some committee, and should leave it in their hands, with full confidence that they would, on mature consideration, approve of the scheme.—Mr. GODSON inquired what was the course by which the line was to enter the City?—Mr. CREED, the secretary to the company, said it would proceed under Skinner-street from the terminus, and up to Islington by means of a tunnel. It would not disturb the streets in any way.—Mr. GODSON. Would it interfere with Smithfield-market?—Mr. CREED. No: it would not interfere with Smithfield, King-street, or Aldersgate-street, or with the surface at all. The motion was then put and agreed to.

The New Houses of Parliament.—A report of the Royal Commission of the Fine Arts to her Majesty, dated April 25, has been this week published. The report has reference to the erection of statues or monuments in the new Houses of Parliament to "men distinguished for eminent scientific and civil services." This report is accompanied by "a general list of distinguished persons of the United Kingdom, to whose memory statues might with propriety be erected, in or adjoining the new Houses of Parliament, such list being unrestricted as to the number of such distinguished persons, and as to the time in which they lived." As some controversy has recently taken place in the public papers respecting the propriety of giving Cromwell a place in this series of British worthies, the list drawn up by the committee, and signed by Lord Mahon, Mr. Macaulay, Sir R. H. Inglis, Mr. Hallam, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Wyse, and Mr. B. Hawes, jun., will be read with interest. The list is divided into two portions; the first (A), containing names to which they agreed unanimously; the second (B), containing names on which the committee were not unanimous but decided by greater or smaller majorities. The aggregate number of these two lists consists of 121 names, which, as the committee state, may probably afford scope, not for indiscriminate adoption, but rather for choice and selection on the part of the commission at large. At the same time the committee desire to express their unanimous opinion, that the attempt to execute any great number of these statues simultaneously would not be conducive to the interests of art. The following is the list:—(A.) Alfred, Elizabeth, Robert Bruce—Lord Burleigh, John Hampden, Earl of Clarendon, Lord Somers, Earl of Chatham, Edmund Burke, C. J. Fox, William Pitt—Sir Thomas More, Sir Edward Coke, John Selden, Sir Mathew Hale, Earl of Mansfield, Lord Erskine—Venerable Bede, Richard Hooker—Sir William Wallace, Sir Philip Sidney, Duke of Marlborough, Lord Clive, Lord Heathfield—Lord Howard, of Effingham, Sir Francis Drake, Admiral Blake, Lord Rodney, Lord Howe, Lord Duncan, Lord St. Vincent, Lord Nelson—Sir Walter Raleigh, Captain Cook—Sir Thos. Gresham—Chaucer, Spencer, Earl of Surrey, Shakspeare, Milton, Addison, Richardson, Dr. Johnson, Cowper, Sir Walter Scott—Bacon, Napier, Newton, Locke, Robert Boyle—Caxton, Watt, Herschel, Cavendish — Inigo Jones, Sir Christopher Wren, Hogarth, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Flaxman — John Howard, William Wilberforce—Harvey, Jenner—(B.) Richard I. Cœur de Lion, Edward I., Edward III., The Black Prince, Henry V., William III., George III. —Cardinal Langton, William of Wickham, Cardinal Wolsey, Earl of Strafford, Lord Falkland, Sir William Temple, Lord Russell, Sir Robert Walpole, Earl of Hardwicke, Earl Camden, Grattan, Warren Hastings—Speaker Onslow—John Wickliffe, John Knox, Cranmer, Archbishop Usher, Archbishop Leighton, Jeremy Taylor, Chillingworth, Barrow, Bishop Butler, John Wesley—Sir John Talbot, Sir John Chandos, Marquis of Montrose, Cromwell, Monk, General Wolfe, Sir Eyre Coote — Sir Ralph Abercromby, Sir John Moore—Hawke — Ben Jonson, John Bunyan, Dryden, Pope, Swift, Goldsmith, Burns, Sir Wm. Jones—Robertson, Hume—Fielding — Roger Bacon—Smeaton, Brindley, John Hunter, Adam Smith, Purcell—Garrick.—To the above report is appended another from the same committee respecting the selection of persons whose effigies might be placed in the 18 niches in the House of Lords. The following is an extract:—"On a careful consideration of the characters which might be chosen, subject to this condition, your committee have become convinced that no scheme is preferable to that which was first suggested to the commission by His Royal Highness Prince Albert, namely, to fill the niches with the effigies of the principal barons who signed Magna Charta. Your committee subjoin a list of the names which they would recommend for this purpose. They conceive that the difference of character, as laymen or as prelates, would afford a picturesque variety of attire, and that the historical analogy would be most suitably attained by placing side by side in the same House of the Legislature, in windows or in niches, the successive holders of sovereign power, and the first founders of constitutional freedom. Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury; William, Bishop of London; Almeric, Master of Knights Templars; William, Earl of Salisbury; William, Earl of Pembroke; Waryn, Earl of Warren; William, Earl of Arundel; Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent; Richard, Earl of Clare; William, Earl of Aumerle; Geoffrey, Earl of Gloucester; Saher, Earl of Winchester; Henry, Earl of Hereford; Roger, Earl of Norfolk; Robert, Earl of Oxford; Robert Fitzwalter, Eustace de Vesci, and William de Mowbray."—The Commissioners also state that, having at various times inspected the new Houses, to ascertain what situations would be adapted for the reception of insulated statues, and having examined the principal localities on the 25th of April last, for the same object, they were then of opinion—"That, as the entrance to the Houses of Parliament by St. Stephen's porch will contain statues of distinguished statesmen, warriors, and other eminent subjects, the entrance by the grand staircase, the landing-place, guard-room, Victoria gallery, and lobby to the House of Peers, should contain the statues of Sovereigns. The statues of Egbert, Edgar, Canute, and Edward the Confessor might be fitly placed on the first landing-place. That the principal landing-place should contain the statues of the Sovereigns from William the Conqueror to Edward IV. That the statues of Edward V. and Richard III. might be placed in the guard-room. That in the Victoria hall the series should be continued, beginning with Henry VII. and ending with Queen Anne. That the lobby to the House of Lords should contain the statues of the Sovereigns of the House of Brunswick, beginning with George I. and ending with Her Most Gracious Majesty. In this proposed arrangement it appeared that one pedestal in the lobby to the House of Lords would still remain unoccupied. A resolution was referred to (recorded in the minutes on the 21st April, 1843), to the effect that a statue of his Royal Highness Prince Albert would be appropriately placed in the Victoria gallery (of which the lobby in question originally formed a part). Thus the situations for statues in the state apartments, and the approaches to them, would, in the event of the above resolution being confirmed, be entirely occupied. According to the above proposed distribution, the number of statues on the landing-places and in the guard-room would be 22; in the Victoria gallery 12 (William III. and Mary being both represented): in the lobby, including the statue of her Majesty, seven.—It was considered that the statues in the robing-room might, according to a resolution proposed by Mr. Gally Knight, with reference to another locality, consist of allegorical figures. It was further proposed that the lower waiting-hall should contain eight statues of celebrated scientific men; that the upper corresponding-hall should contain eight statutes of celebrated poets, and that the panels in the latter should be adorned with paintings. The lower hall has no panels available for paintings. It was further remarked that if required, statues could be placed in the open air in many of the courts, and that some of the larger corridors or passages on the ground-floor would admit of such decorations. The consideration of the place for the statue of Alfred, and of the precise number and situations of other statues in the central hall, was postponed till that part of the building should be more advanced."—The Commissioners, in submitting these reports to her Majesty, state as follows:—"We are at once prepared to recommend that statues of Marlborough and Nelson be placed in St. Stephen's porch; and that statues of Selden, Hampden, Lord Falkland, Lord Clarendon, Lord Somers, Sir Robert Walpole, Lord Chatham, Lord Mansfield, Burke, Fox, Pitt, and Grattan, be placed in St. Stephen's Hall. We have further to propose that the following three artists, viz., William Calder Marshall, John Bell, and John Henry Foley, whose works in the last exhibition in Westminster Hall were considered by us to be entitled to especial commendation, be at once commissioned to prepare models for three of the aforesaid statues, viz., the statues of Hampden, Lord Falkland, and Lord Clarendon; and that the execution of such statues be allotted to the said artists respectively as we may hereafter decide. We have further to propose that 2000*l.* of public money be granted on account towards the payment of such works; and we humbly request the sanction of your Majesty to our present report." In reference to these recommendations, Sir J. Graham, as Home Secretary, addressed, on the 9th May, the following letter to Mr. Eastlake, the Secretary to the Commission. "Sir,—I have received her Majesty's commands to notify to you that her Majesty has been graciously pleased to approve the report of the Commissioners on the Fine Arts, dated the 25th April, 1845. And her Majesty has directed the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to submit to Parliament an estimate for the sum of two thousand pounds on account, towards the payment of the expense of statues of Hampden, Lord Falkland, and Lord Clarendon. I have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servant, J. R. G. GRAHAM."

The Eclair Steam Ship.—It is with great regret that we announce the death of Mr. Sidney Bernard, the assistant-surgeon who volunteered his services on board the Eclair at Madeira, and up to the 6th, with Mr. Coffey, the assistant-surgeon of the Growler, was in unceasing attendance on the sufferers of this ill-fated vessel. Mr. Bernard died on board the Eclair, at Standgate Creek, on Thursday, the 9th, after three days' illness. It would appear that both Mr. Bernard and Mr. Coffey kept up very well whilst the sick depended on them alone, and they had the excitement of responsibility, and it was only when other assistance was at hand that they yielded to that fate to which broken rest, assiduous watchings, and constant weariness had predisposed their frames. The body of Mr. Bernard was examined previously to interment, and presented the usual light yellow appearances which are remarkable in cases of death from the fever in the West Indies. Four medical officers have died on board the Eclair. Mr. Maconochy and Mr. Hartman, of the Eclair; Dr. M'Clure, of the Actæon; and Mr. Bernard. Mr. Saunders, the pilot who brought the Eclair round to Sheerness from Portsmouth, has also fallen a victim to the fever. He died on Friday night, and was buried in the quarantine-ground on Saturday morning. Dr. Rogers was attacked on Saturday afternoon, and was dangerously ill for some days, but is now better. Lieutenant Isaacson died on Sunday morning. One other fresh case has occurred in one of the men, but not of a very serious nature. Mr. Coffey and the other sufferers on board the Worcester are going on favourably. Dr. John Grant Stewart, on half-pay, having volunteered to attend the sick, was put on board that ship last week, and continues well. Dr. Heath, of the Dwarf, having also volunteered his services, has been put on board the Revenge to watch any symptoms of disease among the healthy part of the crew. To the honour of the medical officers of the Navy, upwards of 20 have volunteered their services on this melancholy occasion.—We learn with regret that the fever has now broken out on board the Growler since her arrival at Woolwich. Two of the crew have died, and five others have been sent to the hospital.

Death of Mrs. Fry.—We are sorry to learn that that excellent and philanthropic lady, Mrs. Fry, who for so many years devoted her time and her purse to ameliorate the miseries of the inmates of our various prisons, died on Tuesday last, after a protracted illness.

Mortality of the Metropolis.—The following is the number of deaths registered in the week ending Oct. 11:—West Districts, 117; Northern, 110; Central, 145; Eastern, 170; Southern, 244; Total, 786; males, 417; females, 369. Weekly average for the last five years, 963. Births in the week, 1082; males, 536; females, 546.

The Agricultural Meetings.—The local papers are still filled with reports of agricultural meetings by no means less important than those we have recorded in recent numbers. Our space will only allow us to notice a small portion of these meetings, but the following are condensed reports of some of the most interesting.

Ashton.—The annual meeting of the Ashton Society was held on Wednesday week. Pudsey Dawson, Esq., High Sheriff of Lancashire, presided at the dinner, and after the preliminary toasts, proposed the health of their county members. Mr. Wilson Patten, M.P., responding to the compliment, said he was in the habit of seeing much of the county, and he could say boldly, in the face of anybody, that improvements were going on faster in this part of it than in any other part of the kingdom. After some further observations, Mr. Patten concluded by congratulating the agriculturists on their improved prospects, and expressing his fervent wish that this amendment might continue.—Mr. Clifton, M.P., also spoke to the toast. It had given him great pleasure to attend on that occasion, because agricultural meetings were great signs of the times. They showed that the agriculturists were determined not to remain idle, while all was flourishing around them. It would be folly to say that this was the best cultivated part of the kingdom, but he believed they were going on improving as fast as they could, and doing all that could be reasonably expected both of landlords and tenants. Farmers, however, were not always willing to follow good advice, for he remembered a story of a gentleman who tried to induce his tenant to change his mode of cropping, and meeting with some opposition, asked him—supposing he stood in need of a guide, if he would prefer one that could see his way, or one that had a bandage over his eyes; and the tenant's reply was that he would rather have one with a bandage over his eyes, for then he would not lead him wrong. It would thus appear that some tenants thought that landlords were interested in giving them bad advice; but from what he had seen of the first-mentioned class, he was quite sure that it was as much for the interest of the landlord to be favourable to his tenant, as it was for the tenant to give him a good rent for his farm.—Mr. Earle, land-steward to the Earl of Derby, in proposing "The Royal Agricultural Society of England," made some very interesting statements connected with the draining on his lordship's extensive estates at Knowsley, from which it appeared that although the noble Earl had had a tile-yard built, under the superintendence of Mr. Boyle, of Ayr, to encourage draining among his tenants, for the first year or two few of them availed themselves of its advantages. Those, however, who did so, succeeded so well, that their example began to be rapidly followed, in consequence of which another tile-yard had to be built, and the tenants were now carting away tiles almost as fast as they could be made. His lordship's plan was to do all himself, and charge the tenant four per cent. on the outlay. The terms in many parts of England were, that the landlord should find the tiles, and the tenant put them down; but he (Mr. Earle) would have that altered, if possible. He would let the tenants buy the tiles, and the landlord put them in, because there were few tenants who would take the trouble to put them down as they ought to do. There were some exceptions, it was true, but they were few in this country; and, perhaps, all circumstances taken into consideration, it was the best plan, where capital could be found, for the landlord to do all, and charge a reasonable per-centage on his outlay.—Mr. Ffrance gave "the Inspectors of Farms;" and spoke at considerable length, and with his accustomed clearness and ability, on the advantages of draining and subsoiling. Gentlemen like Lord Derby could carry out these improvements, but gentlemen like himself (Mr. Ffrance) were only tenants for life, and it seemed hard that they could not charge the expense upon the entail.

Denbigh.—The annual meeting of the Denbighshire and Flintshire Society was held at Mold on Wednesday week, under the presidency of Philip Davies Cooke, Esq., of Gwansaneg Hall. At the dinner the Chairman was supported by Townsend Mainwaring, Esq., M.P., vice-chairman; Sir S. R. Glynne, M.P.; Sir R. Cunliffe, Bart.; Colonel Phillips; Rev. E. Thelwell; E. Pemberton, Esq.; T. Whitley, Esq.; Captain Jones, &c. After the usual loyal toasts, the Chairman proposed the health of a gentleman who had come among them for the first time since his appointment to a high official situation, and who was also their representative in Parliament, and Chairman of Quarter Sessions—Sir Stephen Glynne, Bart., Lord-lieutenant of the county.—Sir Stephen returned thanks for the kind manner in which the toast had been received, which he attributed rather to the office he filled than to any merit of his own. He also begged to thank them on behalf of the magistracy. He had much pleasure in assisting at such meetings as the present, where persons of different ranks in society, and of varied opinions, were brought together in kindly feeling, apart from the conflict of politics, to aid in promoting the prosperity of a great and important interest, and to derive mutual instruction from the interchange of opinions, and by the comparison of experience. He had always regretted that he was not practically conversant with agriculture—a pursuit which was the delight of so many excellent and talented persons, and to promote which the first men of the age were now devoting their intelligence and energies. All other interests, whatever might be said to the contrary, depended upon agriculture. He felt great interest in promoting it, not only as a landowner, but as a farmer, and he hoped all societies of the same tendency would have a good effect in promoting the general prosperity of the agricultural and all other classes. He was sorry to observe that it was the custom now to look with anxiety and despondency to the prospects of the agriculturists. There were, no doubt, many points to justify anxiety; but he for one did not entertain any gloomy or doubting views as to its future state. On the contrary, there was much to cheer. The subject had latterly excited the greatest attention; and persons of great intelligence had applied themselves to treat it scientifically, and with the view to draw out the full capabilities of the soil, and to obtain a large produce commensurate with the demands and wants of the population. There was scarcely any pursuit in which greater improvements had been made—none to which more industry had been applied. Every year raised the position of agriculture, and he thought that such results as had been brought under their notice that day gave them every reason to look forward with hope for the future. Amongst other aids which agriculture had lately received, he could not help adverting to the establishment of an agricultural college, in which young yeomen were to be scientifically trained to agriculture; and he anticipated from that institution the best results.

Harmondsworth.—The ninth annual meeting of the South-west Middlesex Agricultural Association, which has for its object the encouragement of good ploughing and other agricultural improvements, and for giving rewards to servants for good conduct and long service, was held a few days since at Harmondsworth, near the Drayton station of the Great Western railway. After the ploughing was over, the ploughmen, drivers, and keepers of the ground were plentifully regaled with beef and ale, and the members of the Society sat down to a public dinner, Mr. Newdigate, M.P., in the chair. After the usual loyal toasts, the Chairman, proposed "His Grace the Duke of Northumberland, the patron; and Success to the South-west Middlesex Agricultural Society." It might, perhaps, be so that from various causes, and particularly as containing the great metropolis of this country in its centre, agriculture was not the most important interest in the county, but still he deemed it a most important object that those who represented the agricultural interests should be able to prove to the community that it was not beyond their power to supply them with the necessaries of life. He knew that those around him were striving with this object, and if he wished anything more from them, it was only that they would extend the operations of their society northward, to that part of the country in which he himself resided, where they had superfluous water, a tenacious soil, and a tendency to weeds, such as the farmers of West Middlesex had, happily, little experience of. Although their numbers were comparatively small, they would remember that they formed part of a great body who were earnestly labouring in the same cause. The public journals informed them daily of great meetings held to deliberate how they might best develope the national resources by the improvement of agriculture. They saw that, a few days back, a minister of the Crown (Lord Stanley) took the chair at an agricultural meeting at Liverpool, himself being an efficient farmer, coming there too from another county, where agriculture was in arrear, and openly rejoicing that their backwardness was wearing off—that better means and appliances were fused; and that greater science, skill, and capital, were being employed in the cultivation of the soil. In Ireland the same great cause was progressing. They saw lands that but a little time ago were unreclaimed and waste, now cultivated, in spite of the obstacles of nature. The consequence was that the exports from Ireland were increased, and that many districts where poverty and destitution had prevailed were now drained and broken up, to enable them to supply sufficient food for their population. He believed that the people of England looked upon agriculture as the first source of the wealth and independence of their country. He believed they knew also that those who were bound to the soil were the real maintainers of their institutions, and that they look to them as their sole stay in that time of trouble which they anticipated from the wild speculations of other classes. It was on these grounds they took their stand, and while they should contribute all in their power to the advancement of all branches of commerce, manufactures, and science, he trusted that they would not forget that they could never neglect with safety the agriculture of the country. The toast having been drunk with loud cheers, the male and female servants in husbandry, to whom prizes had been awarded, were introduced to receive them. They were 90 in number, and the amount of money distributed amongst them was 193*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*—The Chairman, in returning thanks for his health, said he sincerely congratulated them on the prosperous state of the society, and particularly on the exhibition they had that day witnessed in the trial field. He wished they were equally skilful and successful in every other branch of agriculture. As he had said before, the great want of his part of the county was draining; and he hoped they would forgive him it he again urged upon them its great importance. He had himself endeavoured to do something to mitigate the evil by showing them how to make good draining tiles at a living profit. He was happy to be able to inform that he was now able to manufacture two of the smallest draining pipes and one of the tiles 5*s.* less than had asked hitherto. He candidly told them he made them a present of nothing but his experience, but he wished them thoroughly to understand that they could make draining tiles and pipes at a fair remunerative profit. If any one would go to his yard he would show him the process. In conclusion, he would only say that his name and family had been connected with the county for 800 years, and that he hoped he should never disgrace it.—Mr. C. Newman having returned thanks, said he was sorry to hear the union in the north of the county was full of paupers. He was sure that if they would but employ them in draining, they might avoid rates altogether, for they would readily earn their own living. Whatever was the quality of land, he ventured to say that draining would raise it one degree higher in quality. With respect to potatoes, he looked upon the failure of the crop as a national calamity. He hoped the gentlemen present would save as much seed as they possibly could. The greatest care was required for this purpose. The plan he should recommend was to keep the seed as thin and as dry as possible, and, if possible, to get it to turn green. By getting it to turn green the outside hardened, and the germinating quality was thus preserved in the tuber. In his opinion the greatest difficulty would be in laying up seed for the winter. He would recommend their being laid up in small piles with a sprinkling of straw to allow heat and ventilation, in addition to which he would lay down pipes or tiles to be main conductors. Mr. Newman concluded by proposing "The Plough and the Flail; may the landlord ever flourish and the tenant never fail."

Holywell.—The annual meeting of the Holywell Farming Society took place on the 3d inst. The Exhibition was not equal to former years, but the falling off in number was in a great measure attributed to the unfavourable state of the weather, and to the fact of the Liverpool Exhibition having taken place only the day previous. At the dinner, L. F. Lloyd, Esq., presided, and was supported by several of the principal landowners of Flintshire. After the usual toasts, the Chairman proposed the health of "The member for the borough, Sir Richard Bulkeley."—In returning thanks, Sir Richard observed, that, being zealously devoted to agricultural pursuits, their welfare was concurrent with his own, and the general prosperity of agriculture must be the first impulse in all their hearts. A legislative change was to be looked forward to. Of this there could be no doubt; and whatever opinions might prevail, that change could not be looked upon without anxiety. He felt that anxiety in common with others; yet that anxiety was rather akin to hope than to dismay. He, of course, alluded to a contemplated change in the Corn-laws. That change demanded, on their parts, increased energy in everything connected with the cultivation of the soil. Meetings like the present were important; they brought farmers and landlords together, and led to the comparison of opinions and practice; but still it seemed to him that the present society did not fulfil all its duties. Their list of prizes was defective. The breeding of horses, and local ploughing, were well rewarded; but there was no premium set apart for draining. As an agriculturist, he would frankly state that not all the railway speculations and interests of which his friend Mr. Eyton was the representative, could be equal in importance to the vast benefits that would accrue from systematic draining. It would soon repay cent. per cent. upon the outlay, and enhance the permanent value of the land. He was obliged to them for the honour they had conferred upon him, and before he sat down, he begged to propose "The Health of Lord Mostyn."—His Lordship, in returning thanks, said he had had some experience himself, and regarded example as better than precept. The value of draining depended upon the necessity for it. Observation and comparison would settle that question. He wished them to come and see his farm. It might, perhaps, suggest some improvements to them. At any rate he might benefit by their remarks, and should be very much pleased to see them.—The Chairman proposed the health of a good agriculturist, and a successful competitor, "Sir Pyers Mostyn."—Sir Pyers Mostyn, in returning thanks, expressed his regret that for two years he had been prevented from being present at their exhibition, but was glad to find the Society flourished as it did. Such institutions, in addition to the direct encouragement they gave to every department of agricultural improvement, had the further advantage of bringing about, and keeping up, a good understanding between landlord and tenant, and making their relative duties apparent each to the other.—Mr. Morgan proposed "The Health of Hon. Mr. Mostyn."—Mr. Mostyn observed, that he was an enthusiastic farmer, and greatly rejoiced on every occasion when he saw landlords and tenants meeting together—the former to point out and show the best and most judicious modes of effecting practical improvements, and the latter to follow a good example. He thought with Sir Richard Bulkeley, that in a meeting like the present all reference to political topics ought to be avoided. The Society's rule in this respect was a very good one, and would be adhered to; but the horizon of coming events did certainly indicate some symptoms of a change in the corn-laws. To that change he looked forward with some anxiety, but not with fear. It excited enterprize and energy; and would be beneficial to agriculture by making it develope its own resources, and rely upon them. This prospect of self-dependence ought not to induce dismay, but quite the contrary; for there was every reason to exert their full energy with a sure prospect of success. He regarded draining as the primary operation in all good farming. Manuring was a secondary thing, although equally essential to the improvement of the soil. He had drained on his own farm with great success, especially on the parts containing most wet land and turbaries. If a premium would encourage this it ought not to be withheld, for although their funds were limited they were yet rich enough to effect the object.—Lord Mostyn could not let slip the occasion of bearing testimony to the zeal with which Mr. Whitley, for many years, had endeavoured to promote the interests of agriculture.—The Chairman then presented a silver salver and several other articles of plate, of the value of about 60*l.* to Mr. Whitley.

Huntingdon.—The annual show and dinner of the Huntingdonshire Agricultural Society took place on Wednesday week. The Earl of Sandwich presided at the dinner. After the usual toasts, Lord Mandeville proposed the health of the Chairman.—Lord Sandwich returned thanks, and said that, as president of the Society, he should ever be happy to contribute to its well doing, for he considered it deserved the support alike of the landlord, the farmer, and the labourer. The noble lord commented upon the benefits arising from the free intercourse of those three classes, and upon the advantage in many points of view of giving full employment to the labouring population. The tenant, too, had his rights as well as his duties, and he and the landlord ought to go hand in hand in improving the land. A late member of the Society, Sir Richard Hussey, used to give the toast of "Generous Landlords and enterprising Tenants," in the principle of which he (the Chairman) cordially concurred, for without good feeling between them the land was sure to fail. He thought the tenant, on leaving his farm, was entitled to compensation for the capital laid out upon it. That principle was more particularly applicable to the sister country, where it would be productive of much benefit. It ought to become the law of the land; it might be difficult to determine what improvement was; but the general principle of compensation for permanent improvement ought to become the law of the land. His lordship then proceeded to observe that the number of members of the society had not increased as they should have done, and that its benefits were not intended so much for the large farmers as for the small farmers of 30 or 40 acres, who had but little facility to go about and see what improvements were going on at a distance from home. This was the class who ought to be encouraged to attend the meetings, and pick up information on all agricultural topics, which they could not help doing when they met other farmers from different parts of the country—how to improve stock, for instance, or to reduce the expenses in sowing wheat, or to improve by draining, or to improve liquid manure. On this last subject he spoke feelingly, for he remembered once riding after the hounds with his friend the late Lord Milton, when he found himself almost buried in a quagmire of liquid manure, from which he emerged a perfect black mass. Now, this was good agricultural stuff, and might have been profitably employed, instead of lying waste to entrap unwary hunters. He congratulated the company upon the general prosperity of the country. In Birmingham, he understood from a friend, workmen were never so much in request. If this were so, the farmers might rest assured there would be a large demand for their productions, whilst they in their turns would consume great quantities of the produce of the manufacturers. Long might agriculture and commerce thus be bound together in the bonds of a common interest, and long might this country remain the admiration of the surrounding nations.—Mr. Fellowes rose to propose the next toast, and said although the toast did not embrace persons of high rank, it did embrace those of equal consequence and importance, namely, the agricultural labourers. That toast had, at all their annual meetings, been responded to with the same good feeling as that now evinced, and therefore few words were necessary in introducing it. They had had before them that day several men who had lived 50 or 60 years in the employment of the same masters. Nothing could be more gratifying to those who wished well to the lower orders, than to see them conducting themselves so properly as to be retained for such a length of time in the same service. What more pleasing sight could there be than that of tenants occupying the farms on which they had been brought up—in which their fathers and grandfathers had lived before them—and the labourers in the same cottages, working for 50 or 60 years on the same farms, and bringing up their families without having need of parish relief? Considering the prosperous state of the country, and the spirited way in which the yeomanry of England were carrying out improvements, he anticipated a long continuance of the present comfortable condition of the agricultural labourer. Employment was the greatest charity that could be conferred upon him, whilst at the same time it conferred benefit upon the employer, who got labour for his money, whereas, if the labourer were unemployed, the farmer must pay for his maintenance in the union-house, and get nothing in return for it. But he need not dwell upon this point. In the improving prospects of the country there was a guarantee that for years to come there would be ample employment for the agricultural labourer, prosperity to whom he now begged to propose as a toast.—Lord St. John proposed "Success to the Association."—Mr. Lindsell proposed, "Lord St. John and the Vice Presidents." Although there was rather a short appearance on the ground, both of numbers and of stock, he congratulated the company upon the prosperity before them. He told them at the last annual dinner that they had a good crop of Wheat, and he trusted what he then stated was correct, for a finer crop was never produced. He thought the present prospects of the farmer were more promising than they had been for a long time; he never remembered when the price of every article was so remunerating as at this moment, whether he looked to corn, or mutton, or beef. They should endeavour to improve societies like that for the benefit of England generally. Keep out the foreigners by using their best exertions for the improvement of the soil. He was sure the country was not more than half in cultivation, and they might depend upon it the land would make a return for the capital laid out upon it. No man was in reality a greater speculator than the farmer: his capital was laid out for 12 months, and he got only one return in a year; if that return were unfortunate, where was he? He had nothing to turn back upon; and therefore every encouragement should be given him both by the landlord and the Government.

On the uplands there was as fine a crop of Wheat as ever was seen; the fens, unfortunately, were in a different position; they had their day last year. Manufactures were going on well—shipping was going on well; and altogether he thought things generally were never more flourishing; long might this continue. He begged to propose "Lord St. John and the Vice-Presidents."—Lord ST. JOHN acknowledged the compliment, and spoke of the satisfactory prospects of agriculture. He adverted to those "nice little premises called tile-yards" for which they were in some sort indebted to Mr. Beart; and commented upon the vast utility of draining.—Mr. FELLOWES, M.P., and Mr. THORNHILL, M.P., responded to the toast of the Members for the county and town. After other toasts, the toast of the "Judges of the Stock and Ploughing" was acknowledged by Mr. PAYNE. He said he had been chosen three times in the capacity of judge, and if there were complaints of any magnitude impugning his judgment, he of course would not have been called on again. Although there had not been an extensive show that day, it was one that would have done honour to any society in England. The heifers in particular deserved unqualified approbation, and would not have disgraced an exhibition of the Royal Agricultural Society. He had seen no fat oxen on the ground. He recollected last year being informed that a gentleman attributed the fatness of his oxen to the quantity of thistles they fed upon. Perhaps there were no thistles this year; if so, while he regretted the absence of fat stock from the show, he could congratulate Huntingdonshire on the removal of the quantity of thistles it used to abound in. (Laughter.) He congratulated the exhibitors upon the superior breed of the short-woolled sheep. It was excellent, and it would be satisfactory to know that all the premiums had been awarded unanimously.—Mr. TURNHILL (another of the judges) also returned thanks, and, in commenting upon the style of ploughing, pronounced it done upon a wrong principle. It was not so straight that day, he said, as it was two years ago. He also expressed his surprise at the smallness of the show of beasts, and the dearth of attendance both there and on the ploughing ground, which really seemed to excite little or no interest.—The CHAIRMAN said, as they had now come to the end of the toasts, he should take his leave of them, hoping that the society would now begin upon a better footing, and that there would be better success with the ploughing next year.

Kirkby Lonsdale.—The seventh annual exhibition of stock and dinner of the Lonsdale Society was held at Kirkby Lonsdale, on Tuesday week. W. Moore, Esq., of Grimeshill, presided at the dinner, and R. Remington, Esq., of Welling, officiated as Vice-chairman. After the preliminary toasts had been disposed of, Alderman THOMPSON responded to the toast of the Members for Westmorland. They knew that he was a warm friend to the agricultural interest, and that a more stanch defender of that interest was not to be found in the House of Commons. He observed at that meeting many individuals well known for their skill in practical agriculture, and he should be glad for one to hear the result of their experiments during the past year, because they ought at such meetings to devote their especial attention to all matters connected with the cultivation of the soil, which was the main consideration after all. They might depend upon it, that if they improved their land, the improvement of their stock was a necessary consequence. On reviewing the favourable change which had taken place in their prospects within the last two years, he thought that upon the whole the agriculturists of this country had nothing to be alarmed at. It was true that they had too much cause to say that those from whom better things might have been expected had not acted by the agricultural interest in the way that they ought to have done. But in his opinion both farmers and labourers ought rather to depend on their own energies, instead of relying on legislative protection. He wished it however to be understood that he was in favour of protection to agriculture, because he considered that common prudence and common humanity required it. Within the last three weeks they had heard a great deal of the failure in the potato crop, not only in England but on the Continent; and what had been the conduct of those countries on which they had been told they might depend at all times and in all seasons for a constant supply of food? Why, the Belgian Government had prohibited the exportation of potatoes, and its example had been followed by the Dutch, the Hanoverian, and other governments. Now, potatoes were not an absolute necessary of life, like bread, but they were next to it, and he would ask them if they did not think that the countries he had alluded to would adopt the same principle with regard to corn in case there was a failure of the harvest in this country? In consequence of so much wet weather, fears of a deficiency had been at first entertained, but thank God, though not plentiful, the harvest was likely to be an average one. But supposing the reverse to have been the case; supposing also, the Corn-laws to have been repealed, and a great part of the land of this country thereby thrown out of cultivation, and that continental governments had refused to allow the exportation of corn in the same manner as they had prohibited the exportation of potatoes, what would have become of the venerable institutions of our country? Why, in 1842, the Neapolitan government prevented the exportation of foreign corn, because they thought there would be a great import into this country. This showed the necessity of supplying ourselves with sufficient food, and the wisdom of depending for the greater part of that supply on the home grower. And this was the aim of such institutions as the one whose anniversary they were met to celebrate. They had assembled together to learn how far they could improve the land, so as to give that sufficiency of food. If science only had been applied to the improvement of agriculture as much as it had been to the improvement of manufactures, England would at this very time have been an exporting nation. Our population was yearly increasing at a formidable rate, and they ought to increase the supply of food in the same ratio; by these means they would keep their labourers at home, for which the sympathies of this meritorious body of men were as strong, and their attachment as ardent, as those of the affluent, and prevent them from being sent to the United States and elsewhere to pick up a living.—The Earl of BECTIVE, in a highly complimentary speech, then proposed "The health of Pudsey Dawson, Esq., of Hornby Castle, the high sheriff of Lancashire," who returned thanks.—The CHAIRMAN then proposed "The health of Mr. Greene, member for Lancaster."—Mr. GREENE said he could not but feel that simply as a member of Parliament he had no claim to the honour which they had conferred upon him, but he viewed it as paid to him in the right of a friend and a neighbour. He thought with Alderman Thompson, that they must depend on their own exertions if they were desirous of improving their position, that they must bring that science to their aid which had been applied to manufactures, if they wished to make agriculture flourish. And when he looked around on the improvements which had been made in that valley by their chairman, when he saw the neighbouring meetings of Burton and Milnthorpe, he felt that the farmers were no longer the individuals of whom it used to be said they stubbornly resisted all change. On the contrary, they said, "Let us come together, and let us strive to improve agriculture to the best of our power." Agriculture must thrive under such auspices as these. He quite agreed with Alderman Thompson that it would be productive of great benefit if some of the gentlemen present would give their system of fattening stock, of laying on manure, and of cropping. He saw a tenant of his own present who had been trying experiments with liquid manure, and here he could not avoid observing that in the course of his rides about the country he had too frequently seen this kind of manure allowed to run into the road, where it was of no use, instead of being carefully preserved, and regarded by the farmer as one of his best friends. Now his friend Edward (the tenant alluded to) was too sensible to be guilty of such extravagance, for he had put down a pump in front of his house to draw up the liquid manure, and he should like to know how his experiments with it had answered. He was greatly interested in agriculture, and in thanking them for the compliment they had just paid him, begged to couple with that acknowledgment his heartfelt wishes for their prosperity as agriculturists.—Mr. WILSON proposed the health of their chairman.—The CHAIRMAN replied to the toast, and concluded by proposing "Prosperity to the Lunesdale Association."—The awards of the judges and inspectors were then read.—Mr. SAUNDERS then rose, and said the pleasing duty had been assigned to him of proposing the health of a body of men whom the High Sheriff of the county palatine had trully called the right hand of Great Britain, though he was sorry to say their value was not appreciated in a certain quarter as it ought to be. If they would bear with a young agriculturist, he would offer a few observations in connection with the toast. They related chiefly to those arts which had been applied to manufactures, and might be applied to agriculture. He had lately visited a farm belonging to the Earl of Derby, at Heywood, and rented by a tenant-farmer, under lease. All the known aids that mechanism and chemistry could supply had been brought to bear on that farm. The tenant's name was Neilson, and his crops were magnificent, and his cattle among the finest that he had ever seen. His labour also was so economised that it was diminished to the lowest degree. He (Mr. Saunders) wished to be distinctly understood that he did not mean to run down labour, because he thought that landlords did not employ labourers enough. All he meant was, that this farmer proceeded [on a systematic] plan, and did not keep one man running first to one field and back, and then to another, but allotted to each a certain task. He expended 200*l.* a-year in labour, and he (the Speaker) had made a calculation of his gross profits for four years on 30 acres, and found that after deducting 200*l.* for manure they amounted to 2000*l.* But it was right to state that Mr. Neilson had some advantages which the farmers in this district could not have, because he was in the neighbourhood of large towns where manure was at hand. There was one point, notwithstanding, that should not be forgotten. His farm was within the scope of his capital, and he (Mr. Saunders) wished to impress upon the farmers present that although, by adopting this plan, they would have less acreage, both their comforts and profits would be increased; and until they got rid of the grasping system of occupying more land than they could manage, they would give that body of men who had agitated the country so long just cause of complaint. Though politics were very properly excluded at these meetings, he might be permitted to observe that if the object of this body of men was carried out, not only would the supply of Potatoes be stopped, but the supply of corn. Holland and Belgium had just bought 20,000 quarters of wheat in this country, and if part of our land had been thrown out of cultivation 30 years ago, what would have become of us now? Let them show the League, for he had no doubt they knew he was referring to that confederacy, that they were determined to bring every assistance which mechanism and science could afford to the support of agriculture. Let them say to each other, "If we cannot manage 30 acres, let us come down to three, but let us not take more than we can manage." He begged to propose "The Farmers of this county."—The CHAIRMAN then gave "The Inspectors."—Mr. JACKSON, of Austwick, returned thanks. He would state a few facts relative to their survey, and would begin with one, which the Chairman was kind enough to afford him an opportunity of stating, by giving a premium for draining. He need not tell them that draining was among the first and foremost in agricultural improvements, for without dry land it was useless their attempting to grow good crops. The successful candidate for this premium, Henry Macreth, had cut 316 roods of drain on land which was bog before, and taken up 1130 cart-loads of stone. He had done all this in the most scientific manner, and got in the first year a splendid crop of Oats. He had also drained 240 roods of meadow, which cost 3*d.* per rood. The landlord gave him the stone, and he led it, and this was just as it ought to be. He had no lease; but he (Mr. Jackson) believed there was a distinct understanding between him and his landlord, that if he went on judiciously improving, he should stop on the farm as long as he lived, and his family after him. One of their vice-presidents (Mr. Atkinson) had also drained 300 roods with sods. There was not so much merit in this as in the other plan, but still it was very good in its way, as showing a desire on the part of landlords to co-operate with their tenants; and he hoped this would be the case, for it was from the head of that table that farming must be encouraged. The landlords must open their purse-strings. They had made some good speeches that night, but they did not go quite so far as he wished. They ought to go hand in hand; to join the landlord's purse with the tenant's industry. And now he thought he had said sufficient about draining. He was anxious to see whether the premiums offered by this Society for the last seven years had stimulated farmers to improvements which their fathers had not known, and with this view he had been down as far as Hornby, and he was happy to inform them that great improvements had been made. It was not much of a Wheat growing country, but there were plenty of Barley and Oats, and from what he had observed, he did not see much reason to despair of the harvest. As to the Potato disease, many were anxious to know whether it had extended into the north. Whatever it might have done it had extended into the north. Whatever it might have done with the early and second Potatoes he could not tell, but he was glad to have it in his power to inform them that it had not touched the winter ones. This would be a great blessing to the north of England through the long and dreary winter.—Mr. CARUS WILSON then rose, and was greeted with deafening cheers. He said he had a toast to propose, which lay at the foundation of all the rest, though it was only an humble one. He meant, "The Labourer," which was drank amidst loud cheers.—Mr. JACKSON hoped some practical farmer would give them his opinion on the cultivation of the soil. There were plenty around him who had speech and ability enough, but they were so very modest that he could not prevail on them to get up. Perhaps the tenant of the worthy member for Lancaster would come forward, if his landlord called upon him [roars of laughter].—Mr. GREENE was quite willing to do so if he thought his influence would avail [much laughter].—After a pause, Mr. Alderman THOMPSON said that as they had called in vain on that excellent farmer, Mr. Asquith, to get up and state his opinions on agricultural matters, the president had called on him to propose a toast, though he could not tell why he had done so, unless it was because it was his (Alderman Thompson's) lot to be connected with the manufactures of the country; and whatever might be the opinions of any man, whether he thought that trade should be free as air, or subject to certain restrictions, he must agree that the trade, commerce, manufactures, and agriculture of this country combined, had made it the most powerful in the civilised world. He hoped that this connection between them would always continue, for their interests were identical, and linked in one common bond of union. There had been many disputes, by various writers, as to the amount of population engaged in trade and agriculture respectively. But no matter to which side the preponderance inclined, they had before them the broad and incontrovertible fact, that at least ten millions were dependent on agriculture, of whom the manufacturers had the clothing. And as a manufacturer himself, and not an inconsiderable one, he spoke the sentiments of a majority of the manufacturers, when he stated that they looked upon their home trade as the best, and were grateful for the protection which was bestowed on them in their infancy. He would also add that they were anxious to see agriculture fostered by the legislature. Could there be a greater proof of the benefit conferred by agriculture on trade, than that afforded by the import of guano, which employed 200 vessels? and he could tell them that he knew it for a positive fact, that but for the guano trade, the greater part of these vessels would have been broken up, because they were not able to carry dry cargoes. Nor was this all. They carried from 8000 to 10,000 seamen; and it should not be forgotten that the merchant marine was the right arm of this country; for without disparagement to our brave defenders in the army, it was to our ships that we must look for our safety in time of war. He trusted he had said enough to show the impolicy of elevating one great industrial interest at the expense of another, and would conclude by proposing "Prosperity to the Manufacturing, Agricultural, and Commercial interests of the country."—Mr. ASQUITH (the tenant spoken of by Mr. Greene) then rose, and explained his experiments with tank manure. He had used it, but not to the extent he intended to do. Where he first applied it, he saw strips of green much sooner than in other places where it had not been tried, which showed its good effects. But next year he intended to use it on a large scale, and hoped to be able to give them more satisfactory information.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—The annual meeting of the Northumberland Agricultural Society was held on the 7th inst. After the usual prizes had been awarded, the annual dinner took place, the Hon. M. LIDDELL in the chair.—Sir GEORGE GREY, Bart., M.P., proposed the toast, "The Northumberland Agricultural Society." He said he felt some apology was due to the meeting for presenting himself so early to their notice, he being comparatively a stranger, and so short a time resident in the county. He felt, however, that the toast was one which required no recommendation from him in order to ensure for it a welcome and hearty reception. Although this was necessarily the first occasion on which he had had the happiness of appearing before them, it had been his good fortune, in other parts of the country, to attend anniversary meetings of that character, and to have opportunities of participating in the advantages which societies of that kind were calculated to confer upon that great interest, the promotion of which all of them had in view, in the improved cultivation and increased productiveness of the land. The show which they had seen that morning, and the attendance in that room, proved that those advantages were duly appreciated by the yeomanry of Northumberland—advantages which he considered were promoted by meetings of that kind, as one man's experience and enterprise became available for the benefit of his neighbour. The principle upon which these societies was founded was their chief recommendation—that was the principle of self-dependence; not the isolated self-dependence, by which one man depended upon his own exertions, and rejected the lights of science and knowledge which in those days were diffused throughout the land, and brought home to every man's door, but that dependence upon the development of the resources which Providence had placed within every man's reach, by which alone the success of anything worthy of human intellect can be accomplished. It was by a dependence on those resources—by making an enlightened use of those advantages which societies such as these afforded, the application of capital to land, and by the zealous and enlightened co-operation of landlord and tenant, that they must look for success, be other aids given or withheld; and by this means no doubt the British agriculturist would not only maintain his position, but be enabled to compete with all the world in this great branch of national industry. Before he sat down, perhaps he might be allowed to express the satisfaction which he felt since he had resided in the county at the manifest signs of improvement which met the eye on every side. Whether it was the improvement of the soil by drainings, which he believed to be at the bottom of every improvement, or whether in the improvement of farm building, or, what was of equal importance, the improvement of the dwellings of the poor—in whatever direction he went from his own house the signs of improvement that met his eye were of the most gratifying character. He would take that opportunity of referring to a very important document with respect to draining which had been lately printed—he meant a report of a committee of the House of Lords, which sat towards the end of the last session of Parliament, of which the Duke of Richmond was chairman, upon the improvement of entailed estates. That committee received information from tenant farmers, who stated their own experience in draining, and it was so full of information that it ought to be circulated as widely as possible. It was a great satisfaction to him to find the funds of the society in so prosperous a state, and he would venture to suggest that a portion of those funds should be expended in printing in a cheap form the information contained in that document, as well as in other publications of a similar kind. Parliamentary documents were not generally accessible to the public, but the most important parts might be culled and given for the information of all; and he considered the surplus funds of the society could not be better employed than in disseminating the valuable information they contained. The hon. baronet concluded by stating that, believing, as he did, that the society was calculated to promote the objects they had in view, he most cheerfully proposed "Success to the Northumberland Agricultural Society." The toast was drunk with great enthusiasm.—After several other toasts had been drunk, including the patron, the county members, the Royal Agricultural Society, &c., Mr. LAMBERT, of Alnwick, proposed the health of the tenantry of the county, a class of men with whom he had had an opportunity of associating during a long life-time, and he was therefore capable of estimating their private worth, their great industry and integrity. The tenantry, he might say with truth, were the pride of England. They had heard of the exertions of landlords, but those exertions would have accomplished small results, if they had not been supported by the exertions of the tenantry. It had been said that if the tenantry were bad men, it must be in consequence of their having bad landlords. Let the landlords only stand forward and give encouragement to the tenantry, and he would be bound to say that prosperity would attend agriculture.—Mr. PHILIP NAIRN, in returning thanks, said he had the pleasure of being a tenant under very good landlords. He agreed with Mr. Lambert, that unless they had good landlords they could not expect good tenants. The country was now in that situation that they could not do without good landlords. It might be asked what did the tenants want? They wanted this. If the landlords did advertise their farms, and put the tenants in competition with each other, they must not take the highest bidder always; but they must take the most substantial farmer—the man who was possessed of capital, and who had spirit to lay that capital out. The landlords must grant their tenants leases for 21 years. The landlords must drain the land, and allow their tenants the benefit of the improvement at prime cost. Unless something of this kind were done, depend upon it they would be unable to keep pace with the increased consumption of the country.

Newcastle-under-Lyne.—The annual meetings of the North Staffordshire Agricultural Society took place last week. After the usual ploughing matches, the committee of the Society were entertained at dinner by the mayor and corporation of the town. The dinner of the Society was presided over by Ralph Sneyd, Esq., of Keele Hall, supported by about 400 gentlemen. After the usual routine toasts, Lord SANDON proposed "Prosperity to Agriculture, Manufactures, and Commerce." The toast offered a very fertile topic, a very considerable volume might be occupied in its discussion, but the subject had been so exhausted, that it would only tire the meeting to hear more concerning it. Had they lived in some obscure corner of the land, where the blessings of commerce and the bustles of manufactures were unknown, he might have profitably shown how both were necessary to the success of agriculture; but here, in this county, agriculture, manufactures, and commerce, are well known to each other. They live comfortably side by side, and flourish together. When manufactures and commerce were thriving, the farmers well knew that they soon felt a re-action in the price of their own produce. Although that re-action might not be immediate, it was undoubtedly certain, and came as a natural result. They had been told by the excellent representative for the Potteries (Mr. Ricardo), whom he was sorry not to see on this occasion, that they must look to the tall chimnies if they wished to find customers. That was undoubtedly true—a cloud of smoke throwing its dark canopy over their fields, was a sure sign of commercial and manufacturing activity, and the manufacturers were the farmers' best customers. Were not the farmers the manufacturers' best customers? Manufacturers and farmers must stand or fall together. Some time since he had mentioned incidentally at a meeting one instance in which agriculture has been found very serviceable to commerce. That one little adventitious circumstance was worthy of grave consideration. Freights were low at Liverpool—the broom was displayed at the masthead of scores of vessels—hundreds of ships lay idle in dock, when some one or other, all at once discovered that certain islands in the Pacific contained vast quantities of sea-birds' manure, which manure was found to be one of the most powerful fertilisers hitherto known. Speculation was instantly afloat, and his (Lord Sandon's) constituents were never behind-hand when a little speculation was to be made; 600 vessels sailed in search of the manure: their freights paid them 50 per cent. profit, and an activity was then imparted to commerce which has ever since been maintained. Why should there be any distinction between farmers and manufacturers? They were all manufacturers. The farmer manufactured what the other ate; and the latter manufactured what the farmer wore. The landlords might aid much in working out the most expensive experiments: the tenant might reap the benefit by carrying them out. He firmly believed that if the population of this country were double, the land would then produce sufficient for home consumption. In 1800 the increase of population was looked upon as a frightful thing; it had since that time increased 6,000,000 or 8,000,000, and the culture of the land would keep pace with it, if the people of the present day ate as much bread, as the people did 45 years ago. He would conclude by proposing "Prosperity to Agriculture, Manufactures, and Commerce."—Mr. Edward Buller, M.P., proposed "The Labouring Classes," in a speech full of good feeling, many of his remarks being directed to the employers of labourers.—In the course of the evening the health of the chairman was drunk with great enthusiasm, as were also the healths of the Duke of Sutherland and the Earl Talbot, the former nobleman being a near neighbour, and patron of the society, the latter lord-lieutenant and president elect.—In reply to the toast of his health, Mr. Minton, a considerable farmer on the Duke's estate, near Trentham, spoke of the evils and disadvantages under which the occupiers of land laboured. He had enumerated the want of subsoil ploughs and drain-tiles, and was proceeding to the subject of hedge-row timber, when a disturbance—as if by concert—commenced at the upper end of the room, and rendered his observations quite inaudible to most of the company.

Sedbergh.—The first autumn Show of the Sedbergh Agricultural Society took place last week. Mr. Fawcett, the president, took the chair at the dinner, supported by a large number of gentlemen and tenant farmers. After the usual loyal toasts, Mr. Upton proposed the health of the Chairman.—The Chairman, in responding to the compliment, observed that he was very glad, although the day was wet and unfavourable, to see so much good stock exhibited, especially young cattle, which was a proof that, by proper care and attention, a really good breed might be raised in that district in the course of a few years. He had, however, a fault or two to find with them, which might be remedied. In the first place they allowed a parcel of filthy weeds to grow in their yards and fields, and these afterwards got into their neighbours' yards and fields. Now he intended to propose, at the next meeting, that no one should have a premium for the best managed farm who suffered weeds and rubbish of that description to grow about his premises. That would be enough for them to do, he thought, for one year. Another thing he had to find fault with about them was, that they went on a Midsummer's day, and filled up their gaps with live thorns, instead of coming to him at Garsdale to buy larch poles. This plan of sticking in thorn branches, which soon withered, and gave the hedge an unsightly appearance, was a sad slovenly one, and foolish into the bargain. It was something like putting a dead man's hand on a living man's body, and expecting them to grow together. Wherever there was a gap they ought to stick a rail on each side of it, and by thus admitting plenty of sun and air, the hedge would soon unite of its own accord. When they had got these two lessons off, he would have another ready for them next year. He thanked them for the honour they had done him, and proposed in return, "The Vice-Chairman."—The Vice-Chairman said that, as a manufacturer, he did not know that he had any right to the post he was then occupying, but knowing and feeling that the prosperity of the agricultural and manufacturing interests was closely connected, he had great pleasure in attending on that occasion. It was now generally felt and acknowledged that they must stand or fall together, and he hoped this feeling, so essential to their mutual welfare, would ever continue to prevail.

Stowmarket.—The annual meeting of the Central Suffolk Agricultural Society was held in this town on Thursday week. The members dined together in the evening, including the two representatives for the division (H. S. Waddington, Esq., and R. Benett, Esq.,) and the High Sheriff, Henry Wilson, Esq. Three remarkable speeches were made, on leases, increased production of land, and the education of farmers' sons. The Rev. Coppinger Hill said he was desirous of making a long speech. He wished to take part in the discussion of agricultural questions. He looked at the newspapers and found nothing but speeches on leases, the education of farmers, and of confusion to the game. In compliance, therefore, with the custom, he must make a speech on each of these subjects. What did leases offer to the farmer? It was said they allowed him the chance of getting back the capital expended on the land during his occupation in the way of improvements. Leases might afford a chance to the farmer, but they gave him no certainty. But though leases would not secure the farmer from loss, there existed a well-devised system of compensatory clauses, which might be placed in action, capable of saving the farmers from any loss at the close of his term of occupation, and also averting loss to the landlord by a change of tenant. He had considered this subject deeply for a lengthened period of time, and his opinion was this—that it was preferable to the occupier to have six months notice to quit, with compensation for the value of the improvements he had made on the land, than trust to security the best lease could afford him. (Cries of "No, no.") Look at Scotland, the country to which it was now the fashion and habit to turn on all questions of agriculture, where the lease expired and the tenant quitted at the same time. Look, again, at Lincolnshire, where it would be found that six month's notice to quit, with the compensatory clauses in the agreement, worked well, both for tenant and landlord. He was therefore of opinion, as he said previously, a six months' notice to quit, with a compensation for outlay and improvement - the sum, of course, settled by valuation properly made—was more remunerative and fair to a farmer than the uncertainty of a lease. With respect to another subject—the education of the farmer—he thought that class as well educated, proportionately, as other classes. Still they must keep pace with the times, and provide intellectually for those that followed in a coming generation. One plan he would at once recommend: to send their sons from home, for and to take advantage of those institutions established for their benefit. As respected the game question, he begged to say that, when improperly preserved, game was an insufferable nuisance—he had heard of a plan, however, to reduce the evil. He was himself fond of the trigger, and, therefore, did not think he ought to give it tongue, but he wished to adopt a counter irritant—a St. John Long system—with respect to game. Let the landlords preserve the game as they pleased, but if the farmers would not cultivate vulpecidal propensities, the nuisance would soon be put down.—Mr. F. Hobbs, replied to the observation of the Rev. C. Hill relative to a six months' tenancy. His opinion was that an enterprising tenant would not be satisfied by a holding that might expire at the end of six months. There were improvements made and money expended on a farm which no valuer could detect, or detecting, appreciate, and though the occupier were paid for improvements, still the uncertain tenure by which he would hold under Mr. Hill's plan would be a bar to his prosperity and comfort. The landlord on his part ought to have a good and remunerative rent for his land, but he thought he would not do his duty if he did not afford to his tenant a fixity of tenure. Before he sat down, he would allude to the observations made by Captain Rous, M.P. for Westminster, on the subject of the Corn Laws. That gentleman had said, alluding to the Ministers, that no man ought to have laid his head on his pillow, without attempting something to remedy the existing state of things, and he (Mr. Hobbs) presumed that Captain Rous held the opinion that the country must, or should, look towards other countries for support, because of the increase of the population, and the want of corresponding increase in the productiveness of the land. If Capt. Rous had consulted Mucculloch's Statistics, he would have found that corn had increased in a two-fold ratio with the population. And the land would do more than this. If confidence existed between the landlord, the farmer, and the Legislature, he fully believed the land would produce greater abundance than it yet yielded. Could anybody visit one particular parish in the kingdom, where, if the land were managed by a good Suffolk bailiff, one bushel an acre could not be grown more than at present? Well, then, put the land into a sound state of cultivation such as this possible increase indicated, and a vast increase would be the effect. The waste lands, also, amounting to several millions of acres, could be made productive in time. All these things proved that England might become, by her sons' energy, an exporting instead of an importing country. The High Sheriff proposed "The Health of the Chairman." He also alluded to the fair prospects now before the West District of Suffolk, in the railway in progress of construction, observing that the realisation of the means to forward stock to Smithfield without deterioration in flesh would be accomplished. He wished to speak of another subject, not new, but which had occupied the mind of Mr. Mapletoft, and, indeed, himself, long ago, and had recently been revived by the Earl of Stradbroke—he meant the subject of the education of the farmers. He was of opinion that agriculturists as a class had not equal opportunities with others, of properly educating their sons according to the advancement of the times. He did not wish that the sons of farmers should be made masters of the classics—he did not desire that the sons of agriculturists should sow dragons' teeth, so that soldiers might spring from them, or that they should think, by extracting the cube of any given number, they might have an extended knowledge of agricultural implements. He desired only that a farmer's son should have the means afforded him of obtaining a good, sound, and practical education. It was not the mere accident of birth which made men, but education. It ought to be the object of all, that whatever profession they followed, an attempt should be made for improvement—that an effort should be made to create better sailors, better soldiers, better philosophers, and to instil into all the fullest sense of the responsibility of mankind, and of their high position as moral creatures. He only wished the members of the association to talk over the subject among themselves, for surely it could but be of the greatest advantage to procure such an education as he had understood could be obtained at Cirencester and in Hertfordshire, and at an equally moderate expense. If the opinions of the farmers of the county were in unison on the subject, the thing was done. Public opinion was then obtained in its favour — public opinion, which only spoke with a whisper at first, but at length rose into a voice which reached every ear—a voice which Government ought at all times to respect. Other topics were introduced, which called forth keen arguments, and the whole proceedings may be characterised as remarkable, compared with the usual run of such meetings.

"The homely keeping youth was ever homely wedded,"

Tenterden.—The annual ploughing match of this Association took place last week. The field labours having been finished, about 60 gentlemen sat down to dinner. The chair was taken by Virgil Pomfret, Esq., one of the vice-presidents of the association, and Mr. Turley, of Rolvenden, officiated as vice-chairman. On "The Archbishop of Canterbury and the Clergy," being given, the Rev. P. Ward returned thanks:—Agriculture, if from no other motive, should be respected for its antiquity: for, in looking to the sacred volume, it would be found that our forefathers were tillers of the earth, and no reflecting mind could see the ploughman at his labour without thinking of that plough to which, if a man put his hand, he could not turn back; nor could he see the shepherd tending his charge without thinking of that Heavenly Shepherd to whose flock we belonged; neither could we view the sower at his task, without thinking of the seed sown in the parable. But, independently of respecting agriculture for its antiquity, it was entitled to respect for its great usefulness; and we should look at it as the nurse of the English nation. He really thought if our political economists would view it in that light, they would do a great deal before they would injure it. If there must be competition let it be a fair one. With regard to the manufacturers, he was greatly thankful to them for the benefits they conferred; but whilst they thought of the outside clothing, let them look to what was provided for the inside, and they would acknowledge that they were greatly indebted to the agriculturists. A few simple home truths would upset the flimsy cobwebs of theory. They knew the fable of the belly and rebellious members, which might be compared to agriculture: that was, if he might so speak it, the belly of the nation. They heard a cry of "cheap bread," but to be a reasonable cry, it must be a just cry; and we must remember this, that before corn passes through the mill to be made flour, or is given to the baker to make bread, it must be grown by the agriculturists. He would conclude by saying, "May God Speed the Plough." The successful candidates were then introduced into the room, and the several prizes awarded were handed to them by the chairman.—The next toast was their president, "Mr. Schreiber." Mr. Schreiber said—The foundation of agriculture rested upon ploughing, and on the ability of the labourer to assist in the improvement of the land. He daily saw improvement, and their neighbour, Mr. Peel Croughton, had come forward to assist in draining, which he hoped would be general throughout the weald. There were also indications of open fences—whether they would succeed or not he would not say, but he was rather sanguine in his expectations of the result. With respect to artificial manures, he had tried fertilisers, and was sorry to report unfavourably of them. He had tried them on turnips, and they had certainly killed the vermin, but the crops were very bad as compared with guano. He had tried them on grass—they had killed the moss and the grass also. On the health of "The Judges," Mr. Barnes observed: With respect to the general improvement of agriculture, he could not help observing the march of agricultural improvement. Each class of society was moving forward with railway speed, and he was happy to say that the agricultural class was not standing still whilst the others were advancing. He would offer, with all respect, one suggestion to the landlord, and that was, to remove everything that tended to damp the aspiring energies of the tenant farmers. There was one thing they were subject to—the wide and extensive hedge-rows which were calculated to do so great injury. Some landlords had broken the chain by removing the obnoxious hedges, and throwing two or three small fields into one. Mr. Barnes then minutely showed the disadvantages of small fields with hedge-rows with respect to the cultivation of crops, and urged that although in former times it was essential to grow timber, it was not necessary now, and that no man deserving the name of patriot would encourage great hedge-rows to overshadow his tenant's crops, and thus prevent him from bringing his energies into play. If the landlord would remove every obstacle, and give every encouragement to his tenants, if the tenant did not avail himself of the opportunity to cultivate his farm properly, let him remove him and get another, but do not call on the tenant to do almost impossibilities, without affording him such assistance as he may require.—The Chairman gave "The Vice Presidents."—Captain Pattenson returned thanks. They had heard many able remarks on various agricultural subjects from gentlemen well qualified to discuss them, he should therefore not touch upon them. But one thing he must mention. When they met last year it was after a bad crop of Hops, and they thought the labourer must suffer severely in the winter. He was happy to say that had not been the case: they had been found in employment through the winter and up to the present time. He hoped they would not again hear of a surplus or pauper population, but that the labourer would be always well employed. And his opinion was, that if the British farmer brought his energies into play, he had nothing to fear from foreign competition. In speaking of the labouring population, he would mention one thing that was deserving of encouragement—a great many of them belonged to benefit societies, for relief in sickness, and he should be happy to see prizes awarded to men who had subscribed for the longest periods, and paid the largest amount of money. In spite of the sufferings to which the working classes had been subjected, those societies increased. He would not offer the rewards to them as paupers, but as a testimony of their meritorious conduct. An allusion had been made to landlords assisting their tenants by removing hedge-rows and timber. He thought the timber on a farm was a weed which paid the landlord, and if the tenant wished to remove it and grow corn, he should have his permission.

Wokingham.—The annual meeting of the Wokingham Agricultural Society took place on Wednesday week. Sir John Conroy, of Arborfield, presided at the dinner, and after the usual routine toasts, proposed the health of the County Members. Mr. Palmer and Lord Barrington returned thanks. Lord Barrington said his friend Mr. Pusey was a practical farmer, and his other honourable colleague, Mr. Palmer, was so likewise; but as he (Lord Barrington) was not, it would ill become him to attempt to instruct those whom he saw around him, who must be so much better acquainted with agriculture than he was. He would now allude to certain paragraphs and pamphlets which had appeared respecting their sowing or dibbling of wheat. Upon his mentioning it at the meeting last year some gentlemen had treated it contemptuously, while others thought it would be a failure. He then said it was the owners of land and not occupiers who ought to try experiments, because if they succeeded the tenants would be too happy to follow in their steps, and if not the loss would not be theirs. He had made a trial of dibbling of wheat, and early in the year it looked better than that which had been sowed. It had, however, been reaped at the beginning of the fine weather, and when it was rather green; it would therefore not be thrashed until the spring, and consequently he was not able to tell the result. He had received a letter from a gentleman who lived in the neighbourhood of Bristol, named Jones, who might, perhaps, be known to some who were present. It referred to the subject of dibbling wheat, and gave the results of that system. With their permission he would read the letter to the meeting. "Redland, August 21st, 1845.—Will your lordship allow me to engage your lordship's attention to the result of my experiments in the sowing, or rather planting of grain. Your lordship will notice that from two grains but little more is obtained than from one in the ear of Wheat; but two appears to be preferable, it being possible that one might fail, and, as the balance is in favour of the former, there can be no objection to its adoption. The product your lordship will observe to be extraordinary, and it is worthy of remark that the outward rows were more productive than the inward, proving to demonstration that the vegetating powers of grain require more space than the present system allows it. I am, &c., George Jones." The following is the statement accompanying the letter:—

"Chittim.

1 grain	32 ears—49 grains	1603 grains.
2 grains....	32 ears—52 grains	1664 grains.

"Spalding.

"The Wheat planted in holes 1½ inches deep—6 inches apart in rows— and 12 inches between the rows. The outside rows yield more than the interior from 20 to 30 per cent. If 1-10th of this could be obtained in the general culture of Wheat, importation would be out of the question; indeed, the saving of seed would be equal to our importations."—Mr. Palmer proposed the health of the Chairman.—Sir John Conroy returned thanks. He had pitched his tent among them as a farmer—he hoped in time to be a practical farmer—and he trusted he should be allowed to take his place among them as one. When he had quitted the public duties in which he had been engaged, and became a country gentleman, he had determined to adopt the habits, pursuits, and feelings of a country gentleman, and he was ready to take upon himself the duties and responsibility which such a step involved. At present he must say he was but an experimental farmer; but he was not yet daunted by Saturday night—and he had no doubt that as he went for double produce he should be successful. The hon. baronet then adverted to the important position occupied by the labourer in this country; it was by the labourers, he said, that we, as landowners and occupiers, must stand or fall. We had undertaken a great duty; we, who cultivate the land, had to supply the nation with bread; its skilful cultivation and increased fertility were therefore indispensable; and we must look for remuneration from plenty, and not from scarcity. The hon. bart. then proceeded to make a few comments on the importance of educating and properly training the labouring classes; it was only by being trained to habits of obedience and order that these great masses of society could be governed. The Wokingham Association had no other object in view but improving the condition of the labourer; they had no prizes for stock, for that could be carried off by some steward of a gentleman. On the contrary, their funds were given to the most skilful husbandman, the best boy driver, or for length of service and good character—in short, they were exclusively devoted to promote the well-being and happiness of the labourer. After paying a high tribute to the ability and impartiality of the committee, Sir J. Conroy resumed his seat amid protracted cheers.—The Chairman, in complimentary terms, proposed the umpires of the ploughing, Messrs. South, Headington, and Goddard, with thanks for the ability and impartiality they had displayed in their decisions.—Mr. South briefly acknowledged the compliment.—Sir J. Conroy next proposed the health of Mr. Dalley, the hon. secretary, which was drunk with great applause.

Railways.

The number of meetings connected with railways have much increased within the last fortnight. They are, however, principally allied with new projects, the promoters of which are endeavouring to push the interest of their several plans. A meeting of the inhabitants of Carmarthen has been held to hear the prospects of the Great North and South Wales line which proposes to commence at a junction with the South Wales, near Carmarthen, and to proceed through South and North Wales to join a line near Chester. The surveys are stated to be in a forward condition, and the traffic tables present a satisfactory appearance.—The shareholders of the Manchester, Bolton, and Bury have agreed to convert their mortgage debt into share capital, and to create 120,000*l.* of new capital, for the completion of the works, and the purchase of the necessary stock, to carry out the objects of the terms of amalgamation entered into with the Manchester and Leeds Company. — The Shrewsbury, Wolverhampton, Dudley, and Birmingham progresses in a favourable manner. The union of interests with the London and Birmingham and the Birmingham Canal Company has enabled the promoters to obtain a railway more beneficial to the district, and cheaper and less hazardous, than the one thrown out on the standing orders last session. The expenditure to the present time has been 29,943*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.*, and upwards of 40,000*l.* remains applicable for the further prosecution of the measure.—The directors of the Liverpool and Bury propose several improvements and extensions; and to support the proper execution of the works they have made a call of 5*l.* per share. An arrangement for amalgamation with the Manchester and Leeds has been effected. The terms of the agreement are that the Liverpool and Bury should have 20,000 shares in the Manchester and Leeds in lieu of their own, which gives them a more advantageous position, as the former allotment was only 16,000.—The Cambridge and Lincoln directors express sanguine hopes of being able successfully to carry their line through Parliament.—The Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth Company have leased their line to be worked by the Great Western upon a minimum dividend, guaranteed from their funds, of four per cent. per annum, with an increase of one-half per cent. in proportion to any dividend exceeding 8*l.* per cent. per annum on the amount of their own capital. Interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum during the construction of the line will be made payable half-yearly. The centre line has been staked out from the Great Western at Thingley to Salisbury, and from the junction with the Weymouth line nearly to Burton, and contracts for the works on the whole line to Salisbury have been agreed to. If there was time between this and the meeting of Parliament to deposit the plans and sections, application would be made next session for powers to make the line from Radstock to Twerton.—The Glasgow, Dumfries, and Carlisle Company have brought before their supporters their several extensions, which it is expected will be opposed by the Caledonian.—The projectors of the Direct London, Exeter, and Penzance have held further meetings, at which they have gained countenance from their friends.—Meetings in favour of the Great Kent Atmospheric; the Brighton, Lewes, and Tunbridge Wells; the Norfolk and Midland Counties; the Herne Bay, Canterbury and Faversham; the Great Leeds and London Direct; the Worcester and Merthyr Tydvil Junction; the South Devon; the Great Grimsby Dock and Railway Companies; have taken place in the several localities connected with the lines proposed, and the opinions advanced by the advocates were generally well received.—The promoters of the Liverpool and Bolton propose to form an extension from the junction of the Huyon Quarry to the Mersey, to afford the coal trade of South Lancashire a better port for the shipment of coals. It is also in contemplation to continue the line to Garston Docks.

Ireland.

Dublin.—The Orange organisation continues to be a prominent topic in the Irish papers. The Warder of the 11th contains an outline of the proceedings of the Orange meeting held at the Town-hall at Enniskillen on the previous day, to receive the report of the committee appointed at the meeting of the 27th August. About 80 gentlemen were assembled, and the Earl of Enniskillen was moved to the chair, Mr. W. A. Dane acting as secretary. There were present, amongst others, Mr. S. Y. Johnstone, the Rev. N. White, the Rev. Mr. Bradshaw, the Rev. J. Graydon, the Rev. H. Hamilton, Colonel Barton, J.P., D.L., the Rev. G. W. Walsh, P. Dane, J.P., C. Faussett, J.P., J. Napier, Q.C., S. Armstrong, J.P., G. Shean, J.P., &c. The committee reported that they had agreed to a certain system of laws and ordinances, which, having been laid before eminent counsel, were pronounced to be perfectly legal. The questions which were submitted to Mr. Napier, Q.C., for his opinion thereon were—1. Whether the Orange Society, retaining its former name, and acting by affiliated branches, can be re-organised consistently with the law as it exists at present. 2. In what manner, if at all, the re-organisation can be effected, and he will please peruse and remodel the rules, so as to render them conformable to law? 3. Is it lawful for a magistrate holding the commission of the peace to advise or encourage such re-organisation?—Mr. Napier replied to these questions in a written opinion of great length. The substance of the opinion was:—1. That the Orange Society may be organised consistently with law, retaining its former name, and acting by affiliated branches. 2. That this can be done in two ways, which are detailed in the opinion, and that the rules and ordinances, as now settled by counsel, are lawful. 3. That it is the constitutional privilege of every magistrate to advise and encourage the proposed organisation.—The report of the committee set forth the reasons which induced them to retain the name of Orange, and asserted strongly the purely religious character of the union which they designed to promote by their proposed system. The use of signs, passwords, and oaths having been ascertained to be illegal, are not included in the proposed plan. They believed on the basis of the plan now proposed a great and loyal confederacy could be formed, uniting all ranks and sections of Protestants cordially and effectively. In concluding their report they expressed a fervent hope that unanimity might prevail at this important crisis, and that no impediment might prevent the formation of an association, loyal, constitutional, and religious. The following resolutions were then passed:—Moved by Colonel Barton, and seconded by Mr. Paul Dane, "That the report of the committee be now received and adopted."—Moved by Mr. C. Faussett, and seconded by Mr. Edward Archdall,—"That it is the opinion of this meeting that immediate steps should be taken to reorganise the Grand Lodge of Ireland, pursuant to counsel's opinion." Moved by the Rev. Mr. Graydon, and seconded by Mr. W. C. Espy,—"That the thanks of the meeting be given to Mr. Joseph Napier, Q.C., for his kindness in attending this meeting, and his promptitude in writing upon the case sent to him." Some discussion took place on the course pursued towards the meeting by the Grand Lodge of Ulster, and all parties seemed to feel deeply the publication of the report of the representation of that body as being premature, and calculated to create a division in the ranks at this crisis. There was an unanimous feeling among all the speakers in favour of a union with the Grand Lodge of Ulster, and measures will be taken to bring that Lodge and the Grand Lodge of Ireland into an harmonious junction. It was contemplated to go into an election of grand officers for the formation of the Grand Lodge of Ireland after the business had been gone through; but, as there were some points to be settled by counsel, it was postponed until the 28th of this month, on which day the dinner to be given to Capt. Archdall is to take place at the Town-hall. It is understood that the Earl of Enniskillen would be elected Grand Master of Ireland, and the Marquis of Downshire, Lord Roden, Colonels Verner and Blacker, the Marquis of Ely, &c., had consented to take offices under the new organisation. A letter appeared in the Freeman of last week, bearing the signature of "A Celt," which, according to the Repeal organ, is the production of the son of a peer of the realm. The writer states that he has been for some time on his travels, and that he comes home a "sadder and a wiser man," thoroughly convinced that the Repeal leaders at Conciliation-hall are the fittest and most proper persons to legislate for Ireland. Some curiosity has been excited by this letter, and it is now stated that the new convert to Repeal is the Hon. Mr. Lawless, son of Lord Cloncurry.

The weekly meeting of the Repeal Association took place on Monday, and was very thinly attended. Mr. M'Kenna was in the chair. The following letter was read from Lord Cloncurry, acknowledging the receipt of a copy of the "Repeal Prize Essays:"—"Dear Sir—I beg you will thank the Loyal National Repeal Association, in my name, for the very handsome volume they have so kindly presented to me, assuring them that I shall preserve it as containing the most able expositions of the wants, wishes, and just claims of the great body of my countrymen, loved by me, if not wisely, at least full well. I am, &c."—Mr. J. O'CONNELL opened the business of the day with a long speech against the new colleges scheme, the German reformation, and other matters, which he insisted on treating as extremely dangerous to Catholic faith and morals.—Capt. BRODERICK followed in the same line of argument.—Mr. J. O'CONNELL alluded to M. Thiers, the historian of the French Revolution, as a friend to this new infidel system of education, and denounced his history as one that palliated murder, and every conceivable atrocity committed in the name of liberty. Mr. O'Connell also denounced the detective police system, and promised that it should be altogether abolished.—The week's rent was 218*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.*
